With a DEFINITION of its TERMS; and the HISTORY of its RISE and PROGRESS.

JACK, A kind of defensive coat-armour formerly worn by horsemen in war, not made of solid iron, but of many plates fastened together; which some persons by tenure were bound to find upon any invasion. Walsingham. It was called lorica, because at first it was made with leather. Cowel.

JACTITATION OF MARRIAGE, Is one of the first and principal matrimonial causes in the Ecclesiastical Courts; as, when one of the parties boasts or gives out that he or she is married to the other, whereby a common reputation of their marriage may ensue. On this ground the party injured may libel the other; and, unless the defendant undertakes and makes out a proof of the actual marriage, he or she is enjoined perpetual silence upon that head: which is the only remedy those courts can give for this injury. 3 Comm 93.

JACTIVUS, Lat.] He that loseth by default; Formul. Solen. 159.

JAMPNUM, Furze or gorse, and gorsy ground; a word used in fines of lands, &c. when law proceedings were in Latin, and which seems to be taken from the Fr. jaune, i. e. yellow; because the blossoms of furze or gorse are of that colour. Cro. Car. 179.

JANNUM, or JAUN, Heath, whins, or furze. Placita, 23 H. 3. No man can cut down furze, or whins in the forest without licence. Manwood, cap. 25. num 3.

JACQUES, Small money. Staundford's P. C. c. 30.

JAR, Span. Jarro, i. e. an earthen pot.] An earthen pot or vessel of oil, containing twenty gallons.

JARROCK, A kind of cork, or other ingredient, prohibited to be used in dying cloth. Stat. 1 R. 3. c. 8.

JAUN, Fr. Jaune, i. e. yellow colour.] Furze or gorse, in law-latin called jampnum, and anciently jaunum. Pl. Assi. 22 H. 3. Cowell.

IBERNAGIUM, hibernagium, ybernagium.] Season for sowing winter-corn. Cart. Antiq. MSS.

ICENI, The ancient name for the people of Suffolk, Norfolk, Cambridgeshire, and Huntingdonshire. Law Lat. Dict.

ICH DIEN, From the German.] The motto belonging to the arms of the Prince of Wales, signifying I serve: It was formerly the motto of John, king of Bohemia, slain in the battle of Cressy, by Edward the Black Prince; and taken up by him to shew his subjection to his father King Edward III.

ICONA, Icona.] A figure or representation of a thing. Mat. Paris. 1461. Hoveden 670.

ICTUS ORBUS, A maim, bruise, or swelling; any hurt without cutting the skin and shedding of blood, which was called plaga: it is mentioned in Bracton, lib. 2. tract. 2. cap. 5 & 24; and in the laws of Henry 1. c. 34.

IDENTITATE NOMINIS, An ancient, and now obsolete, writ that lay for one taken and arrested in any personal action, and committed to prison for another man of the same name; which writ was in nature of a commission to enquire, whether he were the same person against whom the action was brought; and if not, then to discharge him. Reg. Orig. 194: F. N. B. 267.

By Stat. 37 E. 3. c. 2, this writ is given for wrongfully seising lands or goods of a person outlawed, for want of a good declaration of his surname; and officers shall take security, to answer the value of what is seized, if the party cannot discharge it, on pain of double damages. And this writ shall be maintainable by executors, &c. by Stat. 9 H. 6. c. 4. Vide 3 Com. Dig: 14 Vin. Abr. title Identitate Nominis.

Where one person is by mistake arrested for another, the person so arrested, may maintain an action for false imprisonment, against the officer to recover damages, though he sue this writ, for immediate relief, from the imprisonment. See title Arrest. False imprisonment.

IDENTITY OF PERSON. Where a person convicted of, or outlawed for a criminal offence, being asked what he hath to alledge why execution should not be awarded against him, pleads diversity of person, a jury

ſhall be impannelled to try this collateral iſſue, viz. the identity of the perſon. See 4 Comm. 396: and this Dictionary, title Execution and Reprieve.

IDEOTS. See Idiots.

IDES, Idus.] With the antient Romans were eight days in every month, ſo called; being the eight days immediately after the Nones. In the months of March, May, July, and October, theſe eight days begin at the eighth day of the month, and continue to the fifteenth day: in other months they begin at the ſixth day, and laſt to the thirteenth. But it is obſervable, that only the laſt day is called Ides, the firſt of theſe days is the eighth Ides, the ſecond day the ſeventh, the third the ſixth, i. e. the eighth, ſeventh, or ſixth day before the Ides, and ſo it is of the reſt of the days; wherefore when we ſpeak of the Ides of any month in general, it is to be taken for the fifteenth or thirteenth of the month mentioned. See title Calends.

IDIOTS AND LUNATICKS.

The Law relating to perſons labouring under the infirmities of idiocy and lunacy, being in many reſpects the ſame, and in all caſes depending on ſimilar reaſoning, is here reduced to one head; under which we may conſider:

I. The Diſtinction between Idiots and Lunaticks; and the Effects of that Diſtinction.
II. How they are to be found ſuch.
III. Of the Care of Lunaticks; of appointing Committees or Curators; and of their Power and Duty
IV. The Effect of Idiocy or Lunacy, on the civil Acts of Perſons under thoſe Infirmities.
V. Of their Effect in criminal Caſes.

I. An Idiot, [derived originally from the Greek Ἰδιώτης, a private individual,] or Natural Fool, is one that hath had no underſtanding from his nativity, and therefore is by law preſumed never likely to attain any. For which reaſon the cuſtody of him and his lands were formerly veſted in the lord of the fee. Flet. l. 1, c. 11. § 10. And therefore ſtill, by ſpecial cuſtom in ſome manors, the lord ſhall have the ordering of idiot and lunatic copyholders. Dy. 302: Hutt. 17: Noy, 27. But by reaſon of the manifold abuſes of this power by ſubjects, it was at laſt provided by common conſent, that it ſhould be given to the king as the general conſervator of his people; in order to prevent the Idiot from waſting his eſtate, and reducing himſelf and his heirs to poverty and diſtreſs. F. N. B. 232. This fiſcal prerogative of the king is declared in parliament by Stat. 17 E. 2. c. 9; which directs, in affirmance of the common law, that the king ſhall have ward of the lands of Natural Fools, taking the profits without waſte or deſtruction, and ſhall find them neceſſaries; and after the death of ſuch Idiots, he ſhall render the eſtate to the heirs; in order to prevent ſuch Idiots from aliening their lands, and their heirs from being diſinherited. 4 Rep. 126.

Lord Coke, in 4 Co. Beverley's caſe, ſays, that this prerogative was by the common law, and that the ſtatute de prærogativâ Regis, 17 Ed. 2. c. 9, above mentioned is only declarative thereof. 2 Inſt. 14: 4 Co. 126.

A man is not an Idiot if he hath any glimmering of reaſon, ſo that he can tell his parents, his age, or the like common matters. F. N. B. 233. But a man who is born deaf, dumb, and blind, is looked upon by the law as in the ſame ſtate with an Idiot; he being ſuppoſed incapable of any underſtanding, as wanting all thoſe ſenſes which furniſh the human mind with ideas. Co. Litt. 42: Fleta, l. 6. c. 40.

A Lunatick, or Non Compos Mentis, Is one who hath had underſtanding, but by diſeaſe, grief, or other accident hath loſt the uſe of his reaſon. A Lunatick is, indeed, properly one that hath lucid intervals, ſometimes enjoying his ſenſes, and ſometimes not; and that frequently depending upon the change of the moon. But under the general name of non compos mentis, and which is the moſt legal term, are comprized not only Lunaticks, but perſons under phrenzies, or who loſe their intellects by diſeaſe; thoſe that grow deaf, dumb, and blind, not being born ſo, or ſuch in ſhort as are judged by the Court of Chancery incapable of conducting their affairs. See Poſt. II. To theſe alſo, as well as Lunaticks, the king is guardian, but to a very different purpoſe. For the law always imagines, that theſe accidental misfortunes may be removed; and therefore only conſtitutes the Crown a truſtee for the unfortunate perſons, to protect their property, and to account to them for all profits received if they recover, or after their deceaſe to their repreſentatives. And therefore it is declared by Stat. 17 E. 2. c. 10, that the king ſhall provide for the cuſtody and ſuſtentation of Lunaticks, and preſerve their lands and the profits of them for their own uſe when they come to their right mind: and the king ſhall take nothing to his own uſe; and if the parties die in that ſtate, the reſidue ſhall be diſtributed for their ſouls by the advice of the Ordinary; and of courſe, by the ſubſequent amendments of the law of adminiſtration, ſhall now go to their executors or adminiſtrators. 1 Comm. 304.

The diſtinction, eſtabliſhed by this ſtatute, between the king's intereſt in the lands of an Idiot and thoſe of a Lunatick, is laid down and admitted in all the books which ſpeak of this matter; and on this foundation it hath been reſolved, that the king may grant the cuſtody of an Idiot and his lands to a perſon, his heirs and executors, and that he had the ſame intereſt in ſuch a one as he had in his ward by the common law. Bro. Idiot, 4, 5: Dyer, 25: Moor, 4. pl. 12: 1 And. 23: 4 Co. 127: Co. Litt. 247.

The more general deſcription of a perſon, who, from his want of reaſon and underſtanding, comes within the protection of the law, is that of Non compos mentis. Co. Lit. 246: 4 Co. 124: Skin. 177.

There are, ſays Coke, four kinds of men who may be ſaid to be non compos: 1. An Idiot who is non compos from his nativity. 2. One made ſuch by ſickneſs. 3. Lunatick, qui aliquando gaudet lucidis intervallis; who is non compos only for the time that he wants underſtanding. 4. One that is drunk; which laſt is ſo far from coming within the protection of the law, that his drunkenneſs is an aggravation of whatever he does amiſs. Co. Lit. 247: 4 Co. 124: See 1 Hale Hiſt. P. C. 30—37: 3 P. Wms. 130: and this Dictionary, title Drunkenneſs.

1. An Idiot is a fool or madman from his nativity, and one who never has any lucid intervals; therefore the king has the protection of him and his eſtate, during his life, without rendering any account; becauſe it cannot be preſumed that he will be ever capable of taking care of himſelf himself or his affairs: and such a one is described a person that cannot number twenty, tell the days of the week, does not know his father or mother, his own age, &c. But these are mentioned as instances only; for idiot, or not, being a question of fact, must be tried by jury, or inspection. Dyer, 25: Moor 4. pl. 11: Bro. Idiots: F. N. B 233.

But though an Idiot must be so à nativitate, yet, if by inquisition it be found, that A. is an Idiot not having any lucid intervals per spatium octo annorum, this is a sufficient finding; for the inquisition having found the party an Idiot, the adding spatium octo annorum is surplusage, and shall be rejected. 3 Mod. 43, 44: 2 Show. 171: Skin. 5. 177. S. C. Prodgers and Lady Frazier.

2. One made such by sickness, which Lord Hale calls Dementia accidentalis vel adventitia, and which he again distinguishes into a total and a partial insanity, from its being more or less violent, is such a madness as excuseth in criminal cases; and though the party also in every thing else be entitled to the same protection with an Idiot; and though his disorder seems permanent and fixed, yet as he had once reason and understanding, and as the law sees no impossibility but what he may be restored to them again, it makes the king only a trustee for the benefit of such a one, without giving him any profit or interest in his estate. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 30.

3. A Lunatick; this is also Dementia accidentalis vel adventitia, and though such a one hath intervals of reason, yet during his phrenzy he is entitled to the same indulgence as to his acts, and stands in the same degree with one whose disorder is fixed and permanent. 4 Co. 125: Co. Lit. 247: 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 31.

4. One made mad by drunkenness, which is called Dementia effectata; and though, as has been said, such a person be not entitled to the protection of the law, yet if a person by the unskilfulness of his physician, or by the contrivance of his enemies, eat or drink such a thing as causeth phrenzy, this puts him in the same condition with any other phrenzy, and equally excuseth him; also if by one or more such practices an habitual or fixed phrenzy be caused, though this madness was contracted by the vice and will of the party, yet this habitual and fixed phrenzy thereby caused puts the man in the same condition, as if the same was contracted involuntarily at first. Plowd. 19. a.: Co. Lit. 247: 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 23.

But though this subject of madness may be branched into several kinds and degrees, yet it appears that the prevailing distinction in law is between Idiocy and Lunacy; the first a fatuity à nativitate, vel dementia naturalis: the other accidental or adventitious madness, which, whether permanent and fixed, or with lucid intervals, goes under the general name of lunacy. 4 Co. 125. a.

II. Every person of the age of discretion is in law presumed to be of sound mind and memory, unless the contrary appear; and this rule holds as well in civil as criminal cases. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 33.

By the old common law there is a writ de idiotâ inquirendo, to enquire whether a man be an Idiot or not; which must be tried by a jury of twelve men; and if they find him purus idiota, the profits of his lands, and the custody of his person may be granted by the king to some subject who has interest enough to obtain them. F. N. B. 232. This branch of the royal revenue hath been long considered as a hardship upon private families: and so long ago as 8 Jac. I, it was under the consideration of Parliament, to vest this custody in the relations of the party, and to settle an equivalent on the crown in lieu of it; it being then proposed to share the same fate with the feodal tenures which have been since abolished. 4 Inst. 203: Com. Journ. 610. Yet few instances can be given of the oppressive exertion of it, since it seldom happens that a jury finds a man an Idiot, à nativitate, but only non compos mentis from some particular time; which has an operation very different in point of law. 1 Comm. 304.

The method of proving a person non compos is very similar to that of proving him an Idiot. The Lord Chancellor, to whom, by special authority from the king, the custody of Idiots and Lunaticks is entrusted, upon petition or information grants a commission in nature of the writ de idiota inquirendo, to enquire into the party's state of mind; and if he be found non compos, the chancellor usually commits the care of his person, with a suitable allowance for his maintenance, to some friend, who is then called his Committee. See Post. III.

The Stat. 2 E. 6. c. 8. § 6, also provides, that "if any be or shall be untruely found lunatic, &c. that every person or persons grieved or to be grieved by any such office or inquisition, shall and may have his or their traverse to the same immediately, or after, at his or their pleasure, and proceed to trial therein, and have like remedy and advantage as in other cases of traverse upon untrue inquisitions or offices founden." It has been doubted, however, whether the party aggrieved by the inquisition must not apply to Chancery, notwithstanding this provision of the statute. Ley. 26, 27. Certain it is, that he must apply in order to suspend the grant of the custody of the person, which regularly is immediate upon the return of the inquest; though according to Stat. 18 H. 6. c. 6, the custody of the land ought not to be granted till a month after; in order that the parties affected by it may have time to traverse it: ex parte Roberts, 3 Atk. 5. For the doctrine of traversing an inquisition, see the cases referred to in ex parte Roberts, 3 Atk. 7, 311.* The Stat. 2 E. 6, gives the right of traverse to all persons aggrieved by the inquisition; yet the heir may not traverse it, but is bound upon the traverse by the Lunatick, or his alienee, who may traverse it: Ex parte Roberts, 3 Atk. 308: 1 Ch. Ca. 113.

If by inquisition a person be found a Lunatick, and the custody granted to J. S., and the party thus found bring a scire facias to set aside the inquisition, the Committee of the Lunatick cannot plead nor join issue in such scire facias; for he can have no interest in the estate of the Lunatick, being only in the nature of a bailiff to the king, and therefore his duty is to inform the king's attorney-general of the nature of the affair, who is the proper person to contest the matter in behalf of the king. 2 Sid. 124.

The rules of judging upon the point of insanity, being the same at law and in equity, the Court of Chancery cannot assume any kind of discretion upon the subject; and therefore the return of an inquest, stating that W. B. was, at the time of taking the inquisition, from the weakness of his mind, incapable of governing himself and his lands and tenements, was held illegal and void; and many adjudged cases being cited to the same effect, Lord Hardwicke congratulated himself, that, upon search of precedents, the Court had not gone further, in departing from the legal definition of a Lunatick, than in allowing returns of non compos mentis, or insanæ mentis, or, since the proceedings had been in English, of unsound mind, which amounts to the same thing. And in Lord Donegal's case upon the same principle, a commission of lunacy was refused, though it was admitted that the weakness of Lord Donegal's understanding was extreme. See 3 P. Wms. 130: 2 Atk. 327: 3 Atk. 168: 2 Vez. 407.

But though a court of equity, in judging upon the point of insanity, is governed by the rules of law, yet, if a man, by age or disease, is reduced to a state of debility of mind, which, though short of lunacy, renders him unequal to the management of his affairs, the court will, in respect of his infirmities, if the demand in question be but small, appoint a guardian to answer for him, or to do such other acts as his interest, or the rights of others, may require. 3 P. Wms. 111. n. B. As to the general rules of determining what shall be considered a lucid interval, where previous lunacy has been proved or admitted; See Attorney-General v. Parnther, 3 Bro. C. R.

If a man be found by a jury an Idiot, à nativitate, he may come in person into the Chancery before the Chancellor, or be brought there by his friends, to be inspected and examined whether idiot or not; and if upon such view and enquiry it appears he is not so, the verdict of the jury, and all the proceedings thereon, are utterly void and instantly of no effect. 9 Rep. 30, 1: 4 Co. 126.

In case of the Lunatick's recovery, he must petition the Chancellor to supersede the commission; upon the hearing of which, the Lunatick must attend in person, that he may be inspected by the Chancellor: it is also usual for the physician to attend, and to make an affidavit that the Lunatick is perfectly recovered. Fonblanque Treat. Eq. c. 2. § 3. in not.

As to the authority of the court, to enforce the production of persons suspected to be Idiots or Lunaticks, it seems clearly established, that upon the commission being sued out, the person having the Lunatick, must, when required, produce him. 1 P. Wms. 701: 2 P. Wms. 638. And though it was formerly doubted, it now seems to be settled, that a commission may be sued out against a Lunatick resident abroad, and may be executed where his mansion house was; ex parte Southcote, Amb. 109.

III. As the King, being parens patriæ, hath the protection of all his subjects, so is he in a more peculiar manner to take care of all those who, by reason of their imbecillity and want of understanding, are incapable of taking care of themselves; this, in some books, is called a prerogative in the crown, and in others a regium munus, or duty which the King owes to his subjects in return for their subjection and allegiance to him. Staund. Prærog. cap. 9. fol. 33: 2 Inst. 14: 4 Co. 126. a. Dyer, 25.

On the first attack of lunacy, or other occasional insanity, while there may be hopes of a speedy restitution of reason, it is usual to confine the unhappy objects in private custody under the direction of their nearest friends and relations; who by law may beat or use such other methods as are necessary for their cure. 2 Ro. Ab. 546. And the Legislature, to prevent all abuses incident to such private custody, hath thought to proper to interpose its authority, by Stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 49, continued by 19 Geo. 3. c. 15, and made perpetual by Stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 91, for regulating private mad-houses. By these acts, no person shall confine more than one Lunatick in a house kept for the reception of Lunaticks, without an annual licence from commissioners appointed by the College of Physicians, or the justices in sessions, under a penalty of 500*l.*: and if the keeper of a licensed house receive any person as lunatick without a certificate from a physician, surgeon, or apothecary, that he is a fit person to be received as a Lunatick, he shall forfeit 100*l.* No person to keep two houses; commissioners to visit houses once a year, or when required by Chancellor, or either chief justice, or when they think fit, and examine persons confined.

But when the disorder is grown permanent, and the circumstances of the party will bear such additional expence, it is proper to apply to the royal authority, as delegated to the Chancellor, to warrant a lasting confinement. 1 Comm. 305.

In the case of absolute madmen, as they are not answerable for their actions, they should not be permitted the liberty of acting, unless under proper controul; and in particular they ought not to be suffered to go loose, to the terror of the King's subjects. It was the doctrine of our ancient law, that persons deprived of their reason might be confined till they recovered their senses, without waiting for the forms of a commission, or other special authority from the Crown: and now by the vagrant acts a method is directed to be pursued for imprisoning, chaining, and sending them to their proper houses. 4 Comm. 25: see Stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. § 20, 21; and this Dictionary, titles Poor; Vagrants.

Although the statutes respecting Idiots and Lunaticks, Stat. 17 E. 3. cc. 9, 10, refer only to the lands of the Idiot or Lunatick, yet it seems that the prerogative extends to the custody of his person, goods, and chattels. Beverley's case, 4 Co. 126: F. N. B. 232. As to the manner in which this branch of the prerogative is vested in the Chancellor; before the Court of Wards was erected, the jurisdiction, both as to Idiots and Lunaticks, was in Chancery, and therefore all such commissions were taken out and returned in Chancery; and after the Court of Wards was abolished by act of parliament, it reverted back to the Court of Chancery, and the sign manual is a standing warrant to the Lord Chancellor to grant the custody of Lunaticks, and is a beneficial one in case of idiocy, because the King could not only grant the custody of Idiots, but also the rents and profits of their lands. 2 Atk. 553. And the power of the Chancellor extends to making grants from time to time of the Idiot's and Lunatick's estates. 3 Atk. 635. And as this power is derived under the sign manual, in virtue of the prerogative of the crown, the Chancellor, who is usually invested with it, is responsible to the crown alone for the right exercise of it; and therefore an appeal will not lie to the House of Lords, from an order made in lunacy, but must be made to the King in Council. 3 P. Wms. 107: Rochfort v. Ely, (E) Bro. P. C. Though the King may, by scire facias, or by information, avoid all acts done during the incapacity, yet his right to the mesne profits shall have relation only to the time of the office. 8 Rep. 170, a. The doubt, whether the King could grant the custody of an Idiot to one and his executors, proceeded on the possibility of the executorship devolving on an infant, who, being held incapable of managing his own estate, could scarcely be thought a proper person to be intrusted with the charge charge of the perſon and lands of another. The Court of King's Bench, however, did, upon an iſſue directed, adjudge the grant to be good, holding it to be a truſt coupled with an intereſt, of which an infant is capable. 3 Mod. 43: Skin. 177: ſee 1 Vern. 9.

Though in ſtrictneſs the guardianſhip of the King may be ſaid to be determined by the death of the Lunatick, yet it has been held, that the Chancellor may make an order in a Lunatick's affairs, after the death of the Lunatick. Amb. 706: ſee alſo 3 Bro. C. R. 238.

The cuſtody of Lunaticks being a branch of the prerogative, the appointment of the Committees muſt neceſſarily be in the diſcretion of the perſon to whom that branch of the prerogative is intruſted; but in the exerciſe of this diſcretion, certain rules have been regarded, as beſt calculated to protect the perſon and intereſts of the unfortunate Lunatick.

To prevent ſiniſter practices, the next heir is ſeldom permitted to be the Committee of the perſon of a Lunatick, becauſe it is his intereſt that the party ſhould die; but it hath been ſaid there lies not the ſame objection againſt his next of kin, provided he be not his heir; for it is his intereſt to preſerve the Lunatick's life, in order to increaſe the perſonal eſtate, by ſavings (out of the rents and profits of the real) which he or his family may hereafter be entitled to enjoy. 2 P. Wms. 638. The heir is generally made the manager or Committee of the eſtate, it being clearly his intereſt, by good management, to keep it in condition; accountable however to the Court of Chancery, and to the non compos himſelf if he recovers, or otherwiſe to his adminiſtrators. 1 Comm. 305.

This diſtinction was, however, very ſeverely reprobated by Lord Chancellor Macclesfield, in Juſtice Dormer's caſe, 2 P. Wms. 264, as founded in barbarous times, before the nation was civilized; but it may be obſerved in defence of it, that it gives the cuſtody of the perſon to thoſe who, in point of nearneſs of blood, have equal pretenſions to the charge, without the ſame temptation, in point of intereſt, to abuſe it. Lord Chancellor Finch, in Lady Mary Cope's caſe, 2 Ch. Ca. 239, appears indeed to have ſtrained the rule beyond its original extent, in deciding that a half-ſiſter ſhould not be Committee of the perſon of the Lunatick, becauſe concerned to outlive her. A reaſon which, in fact, does not apply; for the perſonal eſtate may increaſe, and probably will, by good management, during the life of the Lunatick; thus, the longer the Lunatick lives, it will be the better for the next of kin. 2 P. Wms. 638, 544.

Though no Committee ſhould get any thing by his appointment, yet the allowance for the ſupport of a Lunatick ſhould be liberal and honourable; and, if neceſſary, the court will allow the yearly value of the Lunatick's eſtate. See 2 Ch.C. 239: Amb. 78: 2 P. Wms. 262: 3 P. Wms. 110.

So ſtrictly does the court conſider the committeeſhip a mere authority without any intereſt, that where the cuſtody of the Lunatick's eſtate was granted to huſband and wife, the wife being next of kin to the Lunatick, Lord Talbot held, that the huſband's right was determined by the death of the wife, the grant being joint. Forreſter 143. It muſt not, however, be inferred from this caſe, that the huſband was neceſſarily joined in the grant. Lord Parker having held (ex parte Kingſmill, Mich. T. 1720,) that the cuſtody of a Lunatick may be granted to a feme covert, though not ſui juris; and, indeed, the court will ſeldom grant the cuſtody to two, and in its choice is influenced by the ſex of the parties applying, as well as by other circumſtances. Therefore, where two perſons equally a-kin to a feme Lunatick, the one a man, the other a woman, applied for the cuſtody, the woman was preferred as being of the ſame ſex, and better knowing how to take care of her. 2 P. Wms. 635.

With reſpect to the powers with which the Committee of a Lunatick is intruſted, they are neceſſarily reſtrained by the object of the truſt; and as a diſcretionary power might, in ſome inſtances, endanger that object, the Committee cannot make leaſes, nor incumber the Lunatick's eſtate, without ſpecial order of the court, though the profits be not ſufficient to maintain the Lunatick; therefore, where the Lunatick when ſane had mortgaged his eſtate for 50*l.*, and the Committee had afterwards taken up more upon it, the court refuſed to allow the mortgage to ſtand, as a ſecurity for more than the 50*l.*, or to charge the heir of the Lunatick with the improvements made by the Committee. 1 Vern. 262.

The court, however, will allow the Committee of a real eſtate of a Lunatick to exerciſe the ſame power over it, in regard to cutting timber for repairs, as any diſcreet perſon who was the abſolute owner of it might do. 2 Atk. 407. Though it has been ſtated as a rule never departed from, not to vary or change the property of a Lunatick, ſo as to effect any alteration as to the ſucceſſion to it; it has been decreed, that incumbrances paid off in the life-time of the Lunatick, out of ſavings of the eſtate, ſhould be aſſigned to attend the inheritance, and not in truſt for the next of kin; the ruling principle in the management of a Lunatick's eſtate, being conſidered to be the doing of that which is moſt beneficial to the Lunatick. And it is upon this principle, that the court will order part of the Lunatick's perſonal eſtate to be laid out in repairs, or even upon improvements of his real eſtate, if the intereſt of the Lunatick requires it, and the next of kin cannot ſhew good cauſe againſt it. See Amb. 81. 706: 2 Atk. 414.

IV. An Idiot, or perſon non compos, may inherit; becauſe the law, in compaſſion to their natural infirmities, preſumes them capable of property. Co. Lit. 2, 8.

It was formerly adjudged, that the iſſue of an Idiot was legitimate, and conſequently that his marriage was valid. A ſtrange determination! ſince conſent is abſolutely requiſite to matrimony, and neither Idiots nor Lunaticks are capable of conſenting to any thing; and therefore the civil law judged more ſenſibly when it made ſuch deprivations of reaſon a previous impediment; though not a cauſe of divorce if they happened after marriage. And modern reſolutions have adhered to the reaſon of the civil law, by determining that the marriage of a Lunatick, not being in a lucid interval, was abſolutely void. But as it might be difficult to prove the exact ſtate of the party's mind at the actual celebration of the nuptials, the Stat. 15 Geo 2. c. 30, has therefore provided that the marriage of Lunaticks and perſons under phrenzies, (if found Lunaticks under a commiſſion, or committed to the care of truſtees by any act of parliament,) before they are declared of ſound mind by the Lord Chancellor, or majority of ſuch truſtees, ſhall be totally void. 1 Comm. 438.

If an Idiot or Lunatick marry, and die, his wife ſhall be endowed; for this works no forfeiture at all, and the King has only the cuſtody of the inheritance in one caſe, and the power of providing for him and his family in the other; but in both caſes the freehold and inheritance is in the Idiot or Lunatick; and therefore if lands deſcend to an Idiot or Lunatick after marriage, and the King, on office found, takes thoſe lands into his cuſtody, or grants them over to another, as Committee, in the uſual manner; yet this ſeems no reaſon why the huſband ſhould not be tenant by the curteſy, or the wife endowed; ſince their title does not begin to any purpoſe till the death of the huſband or wife, when the King's title is at an end. Co. Lit. 31. a.: 4 Co. 124, 125. Yet ſee Plow. 263. b. 1 Vern. 10.

A Lunatick ſhall be tenant by the curteſy, and ſhall have dower; ſo though a woman, being a Lunatick, kill her huſband, or any other, yet ſhe ſhall be endowed, becauſe this cannot be felony in her, who was deprived of her underſtanding by the act of God. Perk. 365.

If a perſon non compos be diſſeiſed, and a deſcent caſt, this, it is ſaid, takes away his entry, but not the entry of the heir; for regularly the non compos in this caſe cannot alledge the diſability in himſelf, becauſe he cannot be ſuppoſed conſcious of it, nor is he allowed ever, at any time, to alledge it; for when he is once non compos, there is no certain time when he can be adjudged to recover that diſability, unleſs where he is legally committed, and then the acts during his lunacy will be ſet aſide and diſcharged, and afterwards the commiſſion ſuperſeded; for in no other way can the non compos be legally reſtored to his right, and to his capacity of acting. Lit. § 405: Co. Lit. 247.

A perſon non compos, being lord of a copyhold manor, may make grants of copyhold eſtates, for ſuch eſtates do not take their perfection from any power or intereſt in the lord, but from the cuſtom of the manor, by which they have been demiſed and demiſable time out of mind. 4 Co. 23. b: Co. Copyholder, 79, 107.

Idiots and Lunaticks are, both by the civil law and likewiſe by the common law, incapable of being executors or adminiſtrators; for theſe diſabilities render them not only incapable of executing the truſt repoſed in them, but alſo by their infanity, and want of underſtanding, they are incapable of determining whether they will take upon them the execution of the truſt or not. Godolph. Orph. Leg. 86.

Therefore it hath been agreed, that if an executor become non compos, that the ſpiritual court may (on account of this natural diſability) commit adminiſtration to another. 1 Salk. 36.

An Idiot can have no executor; for, being non compos à nativitate, he could at no time make a will; but a Lunatick may have an executor, for lunacy is not a revocation of a will made when compos. 4 Co. 61. b. But equity will not entertain a ſuit to perpetuate the teſtimony of witneſſes to ſuch a will in the life-time of the Lunatick. 1 Vern. 105. In ſupporting the validity of the will, notwithſtanding the ſubſequent lunacy, the rule of the common law is conformable to the civil law, which provides that "neque teſtatum rectè factum, neque ullum aliud negotium rectè geſtum, poſtea furor interveniens perimit." Inſt. l. 2. t. 12. § 1.

Diſtinction muſt be made between acts done by Idiots and Lunaticks in pais, and in a court of record. As to thoſe ſolemnly acknowledged in a court of record, as Fines and Recoveries, and the uſes declared on them, they are good, and can neither be avoided by themſelves nor their repreſentatives; for it is to be preſumed, that had they been under theſe diſabilities, the judges would not have admitted them to make theſe acknowledgments. 4 Co. 124: 2 And. 145: Co. Lit. 247.

Therefore, if a perſon non compos acknowledges a fine, it ſhall ſtand againſt him and his heirs, for though the judges ought not to admit of a fine from a madman under that diſability, yet when it is once received, it ſhall never be reverſed, becauſe the record and judgment of the court being the higheſt evidence that can be, the law preſumes the conuzor at that time capable of contracting; and therefore the credit of it is not to be conteſted, nor the record avoided by any averment againſt the truth of it, though an office find him an Idiot à nativitate. 4 Co. 124: 2 Inſt. 483: Bro. tit. Fines. 75: Co. Lit. 247: 2 And. 193: 4 Co 124.

The rule of law in theſe caſes is fieri non debet, ſed factum valet; and Mansfield's caſe, 12 Co. 123. furniſhes a ſtriking inſtance of the extreme anxiety of courts of law to protect the authority of their records; for though in that caſe a fine was levied by a man obviouſly an Idiot, and by a moſt groſs contrivance, and though Lord Dyer obſerved, that the judge who had taken it, ought never to take another, yet he allowed it to prevail. As by the common law a fine might be avoided on account of fraud, or even on account of infancy, by inſpection during the infancy; (Bracton 436. b; 437. a: Co Litt. 380 b;) it ſeems remarkable, that idiocy or lunacy ſhould not have been held entitled to the ſame effect; but Mansfield's caſe abundantly proves that the groſſeſt imbecillity of mind was not at law, a ground of annulling the record. But, in equity, a remainder-man has been relieved againſt a fine levied by an Idiot, even againſt a purchaſer. Toth. 42: ſee alſo 2 Vern. 678. The Court of Chancery, however, in the caſe of fraud, does not abſolutely ſet aſide or vacate the fine; but, conſidering thoſe who have taken it under ſuch circumſtances as truſtees, decrees a reconveyance of the eſtate to the perſons prejudiced by the fraud; and though this does not diſtinctly appear to be the practice, in the caſe of fines levied by Idiots or Lunaticks, yet, from the argument in Day v. Hungat, 1 Rolle's Rep. 115, ſuch may be inferred to be the rule of proceeding. See this Dict. tit. Fines of Lands.

If an Idiot or Lunatick enter into a recognizance, or acknowledge a ſtatute, neither they themſelves, nor their heirs nor executors can avoid them; for theſe are ſecurities of a higher nature than ſpecialties and obligations, which yet they themſelves cannot avoid, and being matters of record, and equivalent to judgments of the ſuperior courts, neither they themſelves, their heirs nor executors, can avoid them. 4 Co. 124. a: 10 Co. 42. b.: 2 Inſt. 483: Bro. Fait. Inrol. 14.

As to acts in pais; Idiots and perſons of nonſane memory, are not totally diſabled either to convey or purchaſe, but ſub modo only; for their conveyances and purchaſes are voidable, but not actually void. The King, indeed, on behalf of an Idiot, may avoid his grants, or other acts. 1 Inſt. 247. But it hath been ſaid, that a non compos himself, though he be afterwards brought to a right mind, shall not be permitted to allege his own insanity, in order to avoid such grant; for that no man shall be allowed to stultify himself, or plead his own disability. The maxim, however, that a man shall not stultify himself has been handed down as law from very loose authorities, which Fitzherbert does not scruple to reject as contrary to reason; and later opinions, feeling the inconvenience of the rule, have in many points endeavoured to restrain it. F. N. B. 202: Litt. § 405: Cro. Eliz. 398: 4 Rep. 123: Jenk. 40: Comb. 469: 3 Mod. 310, 311: 1 Eq. Ab. 279: See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. c. 2. § 1, and Stra. 1104: 2 Vent. 198. there cited.

Though the principles upon which Courts of Equity in general relieve, appear to entitle a Lunatick to a remedy in such cases, there does not appear a single case in which the plea of non compos by the Lunatick himself before inquisition has been allowed; on the contrary, in Toth. 130, it is said, that Chancery will not retain a bill to examine the point of lunacy. But after the Lunatick is so found by inquisition, his Committee may avoid his acts from the time he is found to have been non compos. See 2 Vern. 412, 678; 1 Eq. Ab. 279. Courts of Equity were formerly so anxious to adhere to the rule of law, that the Lunatick was not allowed to be a party to a suit, to be relieved against an act done during his lunacy; 1 C. C. 112; though he might be party to a suit, to enforce performance of an agreement entered into prior to his lunacy. 1 C. C. 153.

And clearly the next heir or other person interested may, after the death of the Idiot or non compos, take advantage of his incapacity, and avoid his grant. Perk. § 21. So too, if he purchases under this disability, and does not afterwards upon his recovering his senses agree to the purchase, his heir may either waive or accept the estate at his option. 1 Inst. 2.

The Guardians or Committees of a Lunatick also are powered by stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 20, to renew in his right, under the directions of the Court of Chancery, any lease for lives or years, and apply the profits of such renewals for the benefit of such Lunatick, his heirs or executors. See 2 Comm. 291.

By statute 4 Geo. 2. c. 10, Lunaticks being trustees or mortgagees, are empowered by themselves, or by their Committees, to convey the estates of which they are seized in trust or mortgage: but it is doubtful whether the words of the act include all Lunaticks, as well such as are at large, as those of whom custody has been granted under the great seal. Amb. 80.

If Parceners of nonsane memory make partition, unless it be equal, it shall only bind the parties themselves, but not their issue: and the reason it binds the parties themselves is the same that all other contracts bind them, viz. because no man is admitted to stultify himself: and the reason their issue may avoid such partition is the same likewise, for which they may avoid all other contracts made by such ancestors during their insanity, viz. because they may be admitted to shew the incapacity of their ancestors, and so avoid all acts done by them during that time. Co. Lit. 166. a.

Courts of equity will not only sustain contracts completed by the Lunatick while sane; but, under certain circumstances, will enforce performance of such as were entered into before, but were not complete at the time of the lunacy; for the change of the condition of a person entering into an agreement, by becoming lunatick, will not alter the rights of the parties, which will be the same as before, provided they can come at the remedy: as, if the legal estate be vested in trustees, a court of equity ought to decree a performance; but, if the legal estate be vested in the Lunatick himself, that may prevent the remedy in equity, and leave it at law. 1 Ves. 82.

As to the effect of a defendant becoming insane after an arrest at law, it seems to be now settled, that such circumstance is not a reason for discharging him out of custody, on filing common bail. 2 Term Rep. 390. Nor will a court of law interpose, though the party be insane at the time of arrest. 4 Term Rep. 121.

It seems that, even at law, the contracts of Idiots and Lunaticks, after office found, and the party legally committed, are void, and it must be at the peril of him who deals with such a one; and that if afterwards the commission of lunacy be superseded or discharged, the non compos shall be restored to his legal right: but this, it seems, must be at the suit and application of his Committee. 4 Co. 125.

When an Idiot doth sue or defend he shall not appear by guardian, prochein amy, or attorney, but he must be ever in proper person. Co. Lit. 135. b.: F. N. B. 27. The statute of Westm. 2. cap. 15, extends not to an Idiot. 2 Inst. 390.

But otherwise of him who becomes non compos mentis; for he shall appear by guardian, if within age, or by attorney if of full age. 4 Co. 124. b.: Palm. 520. & vid. 2 Saund. 335.

If a trespass be committed in the lands of a Lunatick who is legally committed, the Committee cannot bring an action of trespass; but this must be brought in the name of the Lunatick. 2 Sid. 125.

If a Lunatick be sued, he must have a Committee assigned to him to defend the suit. 1 Vern. 106.

V. One case of a deficiency in will, which excuses from the guilt of crimes, arises from a defective, or vitiated understanding; viz. in an Idiot or Lunatick. For the rule of law as to the latter, which may be easily adapted also to the former, is, furiosus furore solum punitur. In criminal cases, therefore, Idiots and Lunaticks are not chargeable for their own acts, if committed under these incapacities; no, not even for treason itself. 3 Inst. 6. Also if a man in his sound memory commits a capital offence, and before arraignment for it he becomes mad, he ought not to be arraigned; if after pleading, he shall not be tried; if after trial, he shall not receive judgment; if after judgment, execution shall be stayed. See this Dictionary, title Execution and Reprieve.

It seems to have been anciently holden, (in respect of that high regard which the law has for the safety of the King's person,) that a madman might be punished as a traitor for killing, or offering to kill, the King; but this is now contradicted by better and later opinions. Fitz. Coron. 351: Regist. 309: 4 Co. 124. b: 1 Roll. Rep. 324. In the reign of Henry VIII. a statute was made, 33 H. 8. c. 20, that if one compos mentis should commit high treason, and after fall into madness, he might be tried in his absence, and should suffer death as if he were of perfect memory; but this was repealed by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10: see 3 Inst. 6. But if there be any doubt whether whether the party be compos or not, this ſhall be tried by a jury; and if he be ſo found, a total idiocy or abſolute inſanity excuſes from the guilt, and of courſe from the puniſhment, of any criminal action committed under ſuch deprivation of the ſenſes: but if a Lunatick hath lucid intervals of underſtanding, he ſhall anſwer for what he does in thoſe intervals, as if he had no deficiency. 1 Hal. P. C. 31.

It is laid down as a general rule, that Idiots and Lunaticks being, by reaſon of their natural diſabilities, incapable of judging between good and evil, are puniſhable by no criminal proſecution whatſoever. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

And therefore a perſon who loſes his memory by ſickneſs, infirmity, or accident, and kills himſelf, is no felo de ſe. 3 Inſt. 54.

So if a man give himſelf a mortal ſtroke while he is non compos, and recovers his underſtanding, and then dies, he is not felo de ſe; for though the death complete the homicide, the act muſt be that which makes the offence. But it is not every melancholy or hypochondriacal diſtemper that denominates a man non compos, for there are few who commit this offence, but are under ſuch infirmities; but it muſt be ſuch an alienation of mind that renders them to be madmen, or frantic, or deſtitute of the uſe of reaſon. 1 Hal. P. C. 412.

And as a perſon non compos cannot be a felo de ſe by killing himſelf; ſo neither can he be guilty of homicide in killing another, nor of petit treaſon. 1 Hawk. P. C. 2.

The great difficulty in theſe caſes is, to determine where a perſon ſhall be ſaid to be ſo far deprived of his ſenſe and memory, as not to have any of his actions imputed to him; or where, notwithſtanding ſome defects of this kind, he ſtill appears to have ſo much reaſon and underſtanding as will make him accountable for his actions, which Lord Hale diſtinguiſhes between, and calls by the name of total and partial inſanity; and though it be difficult to define the indiviſible line that divides perfect and partial inſanity, yet, ſays he, it muſt reſt upon circumſtances, duly to be weighed and conſidered both by the judge and jury; leſt on the one ſide there be a kind of inhumanity towards the defects of human nature, or, on the other ſide, too great an indulgence given to great crimes; and the beſt meaſure he can think of is this: ſuch a perſon, as labouring under melancholy diſtempers, hath yet ordinarily as great underſtanding as a child of fourteen years commonly hath, is ſuch a perſon as may be guilty of treaſon or felony. 1 Hale Hiſt. P. C. 30.

He who incites a madman to do a murder, or other crime, is a principal offender, and as much puniſhable as if he had done it himſelf. Keilw. 53: Dalt. cap. 95: 1 Hawk. P. C: ſee titles Acceſſary: Murder.

And here we muſt obſerve a difference the law makes between civil ſuits that are terminated in compenſationem damni illatæ, and criminal ſuits or proſecutions, that are ad pœnam & in vindictam criminis commiſſi; and therefore it is clearly agreed, that if one who wants diſcretion commits a treſpaſs againſt the perſon or poſſeſſion of another, he ſhall be compelled in a civil action to give ſatiſfaction for the damage. 2 Roll. Abr. 547: Hob. 134: Co. Lit. 247: 1 Hawk. P. C. 2: 1 Hal. Hiſt. 15, 16, 38.

As to Idiocy, Lunacy, or Madneſs, (the latter of which is defined by Hale to be a total alienation of the mind,) which excuſes in capital caſes, it is not neceſſary that it was found by inquiſition that the party was a Madman, Idiot, or Lunatick, previous to the commitment of the fact; for if he was actually mad at the time of the fact committed, this ſhall excuſe; and this regularly is to be tried by an inqueſt of office to be returned by the ſheriff of the county wherein the court ſits for the trial of the offence; and if it be found that he was actually mad, he ſhall be diſcharged without any other trial; but if they find that the party only feigns himſelf mad, and he refuſes to anſwer or plead, he ſhall be dealt with as one who ſtands mute. 26 Aſſ. pl. 27: Bro. Cor. 101: 1 And. 107, 154: Sav. 50, 57: 1 Hawk. P. C. 2: 1 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 35.

Theſe defects whether permanent or temporary muſt be unequivocal and plain; not an idle frantic humour or unaccountable mode of action, but an abſolute diſpoſſeſſion of the free and natural agency of the human mind. 8 S. T. 322: 1 Hal. P. C. c. 4: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 1. in n.

If a man in a frenzy happy by ſome overſight, or by means of the gaoler, to plead to his indictment, and is put upon his trial, and it appears to the court upon his trial that he is mad, the judge in diſcretion may diſcharge the jury of him, and remit him to gaol to be tried after the recovery of his underſtanding, eſpecially in caſe any doubt appear upon the evidence touching the guilt of the fact, and this in favorem vitæ; and if there be no colour of evidence to prove him guilty, or if there be a pregnant evidence to prove his inſanity at the time of the fact committed, then, upon the ſame favour of life and liberty, it is fit it ſhould be proceeded in the trial, in order to his acquittal and enlargement. 1 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 33, 36.

So if a perſon during his inſanity commits a capital offence, and recovers his underſtanding, and being indicted and arraigned for the ſame, pleads Not guilty, he ought to be acquitted; for, by reaſon of his incapacity, he cannot act felleo animo. 1 Hal. Hiſt. P. C. 36.

JEWS, Judæi.] In former times the Jews and all their goods were at the disposal of the chief lord where they lived; who had an absolute property in them; and they might not remove to another lord without his leave: and we read that king Henry III, sold the Jews for a certain term of years to earl Richard his brother. They were distinguished from the Christians in their lives, and at their deaths; for they wore a badge on their outward garments, in the shape of a table, and were fined if they went abroad without such badges; and they were never buried within the walls of any city, but without the same, and anciently not permitted to burial in the country. *Matt. In the 16th year of Edward I, all the Jews in England were imprisoned; but they redeemed themselves for a vast sum of money: notwithstanding which, anno 19 of that king, he banished them all. Stow's Surv. b. 3. p. 54. And they remained in banishment 364 years; till at the time of the grand rebellion they were again allowed in the kingdom.

A plaintiff had leave given him by the court to alter the Venue from London to Middlesex, because all the sittings in London were on a Saturday, and his witness was a Jew, and would not appear that day. 2 Mod. 271.

A Jew brought an action, and the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was a Jew, and that all Jews are perpetual enemies of the king and our religion. But, by the court, a Jew may recover as well as a villain, and the plea is but in disability so long as the king shall prohibit them to trade; and judgment for the plaintiff. L. P. R. 4. cites Mich. 36 Car. 2. B. R.

A Jew was ordered to swear his answer upon the Pentateuch, and that the plaintiff's clerk should be present to see him sworn. 1 Vern. 263.

The Jews, it has been said, are here by an implied licence, but on a proclamation of banishment, they are in the same situation as alien enemies on a determination of letters of safe conduct. Arg. 2 Show. 371. See further, as to the privileges and incapacities of Jews, this Dictionary, title Alien.

In the beginning of this century an instance occurred, where a Jew of immense riches, turned out of doors his only daughter who had embraced Christianity; and on her application for relief, it was held he could not be compelled to afford her any. Lord Raym. 699. But, to prevent such inhumanity in future, the statute 1 Anne, c. 30, ordains, that if Jewish parents refuse to allow their protestant children a fitting maintenance suitable to the fortune of the parent, the Lord Chancellor on complaint may make such order therein as he shall see proper. See 1 P. Wms. 524: 2 Eq. Ab. 513. c. 2.

IGNIS JUDICIUM, Purgation by fire, or the old judicial fiery trial. Blount. See Ordeal.

IGNORAMUS, We are ignorant.] The words formerly written on a bill of indictment by the Grand Jury impanelled on the inquisition of criminal causes, when they rejected the evidence as too weak or defective to make good the presentment against a person so as to put him on the trial; the effect whereof was, that all farther inquiry and proceedings against that party on that bill, (for the words now used are, not a true bill, or not found,) for the fault wherewith he is charged, is thereby stopped, and he is delivered without further answer. 3 Inst. 30. See this Dictionary, title Indictment.

IGNORANCE, Ignorantia.] Want of knowledge of the law, shall not excuse any man from the penalty of it. Every person is bound at his peril to take notice what the law of the realm is; and Ignorance of it though it be invincible, where a man affirms that he hath done all that in him lies to know the law, will not excuse him. Doct. & Stud. 1. 46: Plowd. 343.

And an infant of the age of discretion shall be punished for crimes, though he be ignorant of the law; but infants of tender age, have Ignorance by nature to excuse them; so persons non compos have Ignorance by the hand of God. Stud. Comp. 83, 84.

Though Ignorance of the law excuseth not, Ignorance of the fact doth: as if a person buy a horse or other thing in open market, of one that had no property therein, and not knowing but he had right; in that case he hath good title, and the Ignorance shall excuse him. Doct. & Stud. 309. But if the party bought the horse out of the market, or knew the seller had no right, the buying in open market, would not have excused. Ibid.: 5 Rep. 83. Also where a man is to enter into land or seize goods, &c. he must see that what he does be rightly done, or his Ignorance shall be no excuse. Wood's Inst. 608.

Ignorance of fact is a defect of will, when a man intending to do a lawful act, does that which is unlawful. For here the deed and the will acting separately, there is not that conjunction between them which is necessary to form a criminal act; as if a man intending to kill a thief or housebreaker in his own house, by mistake, kills one of his own family. This is no criminal action. Cro. Car. 538. But if a man thinks he has a right to kill a person excommunicated or outlawed wherever he meets him, and does so, this is murder, as it proceeds from a criminal Ignorance of the law. 4 Comm. 27.

IKENILD-STREET, One of the four famous ways that the Romans made in England, called Stratum Icenorum, because it took its beginning among the Iceni, which were the people that inhabited Norfolk, Suffolk, and Cambridgeshire. Cam. Brit.: Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 12. See title Watling-Street.

ILET, By contraction ight, corruptly eight; a little island. Blount.

ILLEVIABLE, A debt or duty that cannot or ought not to be levied; as nihil set upon a debt is a mark for illeviable.

ILLITERATE. If an illiterate man be to seal a deed, he is not bound to do it, if none be present to read it, if required; and reading a deed falsely will make it void. 2 Rep. 3. 11. See post. A man may plead non est factum to a deed read false; as where a release of an annuity was read to an illiterate person, as a release of the arrears only, &c. agreed to be released. Moor, 148. If there is a time limited for a person to seal a writing, in such case illiteracy shall be no excuse, because he might provide a skilful man to instruct him; but when he is obliged to seal it upon request, &c. there he shall have convenient time to be instructed. 2 Nels. Abr. 946.

If a man for great age cannot see to read, and seals an obligation upon false reading, he shall avoid it. 11 Rep. 28. Resolved, though he was lettered; for now he has all his intelligence by hearing. Also vide 9 H. 6. 59. b: 10 H. 6. 6. 10: 2 Rep. 9: Skin. 159: 47 E. 3. 3. b, 17: 44 Ed. 3. 23: 44 Ass. 30: 3 Ed. 3. 31. b. 38. a: 11 Rep. 27. b: Piggot's case. See title Deed.

ILLUMINARE, To illuminate, to draw in gold and colours the initial letters and the occasional pictures in manuscript books.—See Brompton, sub anno 1076. Those persons who particularly practised this art, were called illuminatores, whence our limners.

IMAGES, How to be defaced, stat. 3 & 4 Ed. 6. c. 10. See title Papist.

IMAGINING (or compassing, &c.) the king's death, is high treason, 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. A Queen regnant is within the words of the act. 1 Hal. P. C. 101. The terms compassing and imagining are synonymous. And there must be sufficient proof of an overt act to convict. See this Dictionary, title Treason.

IMBARGO, Span. Navium detentio.] A stop, stay, or arrest upon ships or merchandize, by public authority. See statute 18 Car. 2. c. 5. This arrest of shipping is commonly of the ships of foreigners in time of war and difference with States to whom they are belonging: but, by an ancient statute, foreign merchants in this kingdom are to have forty days' notice to sell their effects and depart, on any difference with a foreign nation. 27 Ed. 3. c. 17. See title Merchant. This term has also a more extensive signification, for ships are frequently detained to serve a prince in an expedition; and for this end have their lading taken out without any regard to the colours they bear, or the government to whose subjects they belong. The legality of such a measure has been doubted by some, but it is certainly conformable to the law of nations, for a prince in distress to make use of whatever vessels he finds in his ports that may contribute to the success of his enterprize Parke on Insurance, c. 4. p. 78. The king may grant Imbargoes on ships, or employ the ships of his subjects, in time of danger, for the service and defence of the nation; but a warrant to stay a single ship, on a private account, is no legal Imbargo. Moor. 892: Carth. 297 Prohibiting commerce in the time of war, or of plague, pestilence, &c. is a kind of Imbargo on shipping.

Imbargoes laid on shipping in the ports of Great Britain, by royal proclamation, in time of war, are strictly legal, and are equally binding as an act of parliament; because such proclamation is founded on a prior law, namely, that the king may prohibit any of his subjects from leaving the realm. But in times of peace the power of the king to lay such restraints is doubtful; and therefore where a proclamation issued in the year 1766, to prevent the exportation of corn against the words of a statute, (22 C. 2. c. 13,) then in force, although the measure was absolutely necessary to prevent a dearth, it was thought prudent to procure an act of the legislature, (stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 7,) to indemnify all who advised or acted under that proclamation. See Parke on Ins. 79: 1 Comm. 270: 4 Mod. 177, 9. And further this Dictionary, title Insurance.

IMBASING of Money. Mixing the species with an allay below the standard of sterling; which the king by his prerogative may do, and yet keep it up to the same value as before: Inhansing of it, is when it is raised to a higher rate, by proclamation. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 192. See title Coin.

IMBEZZLE, To steal, pilfer, or purloin; or where a person entrusted with goods, wastes and diminishes them. The word imbezzle is mentioned in several statutes, particularly relating to workers of wool, &c. Stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 7: 1 Ann. stat. 2. c. 18. See title Manufacturers.

If any servant imbezzles, purloins, or makes away his master's goods, to 40 s. value, it is made felony without benefit of clergy, by stat. 12 Ann. c. 7. See titles Felony; Robbery; Servant; Apprentice.

Imbezzling the king's armour or stores is felony without clergy, by 31 El. c. 4. As to naval stores, the benefit of clergy is taken away by 22 Car. 2. c. 5. Other inferior imbezzlements and misdemeanors, that fall under this denomination, are punished, by stat. 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 25, with fine and imprisonment.

Imbezzling

Imbezzling the public money. If committed by high officers, is usually punished by impeachment in parliament. At common law the offender is subject to a discretionary fine and imprisonment. 4 Comm. 121, 2.

Imbezzling or vacating records, is a felonious offence against public justice, by statute 8 Hen. 6. c. 12. See titles Records; Felony; Fine; Deeds.

IMBRACERY. See Embracery.

IMBROCUS, A brook, a gut, a water-passage. Somner of Ports and Forts, p. 43.

IMBROIDERY. See Embroidery.

IMMUNITIES. King Henry III, by charter granted to the citizens of London, a general Immunity from all tolls, &c except customs and prisage of wine. Cit. lib. 91. See titles King; Prerogative; London.

IMPALARE, To put in a pound. Ll. Hen. I. c. 9.

IMPANEL, Impanellare vel impanulare Juratis] Signifies the writing and entering into a parchment schedule, by the sheriff, the names of a jury.

IMPARLANCE, Interlocutio, vel licentia interloquendi, from the Fr. parler, to speak.] In the common law, is taken for a petition, in court, of a day to consider or advise what answer the defendant shall make to the action of the plaintiff; being a continuance of the cause till another day, or a longer time given by the court.

Imparlance is said to be when the court gives the party leave to answer at another time, without the assent of the other party. Com. Dig. title Pleader, D. 1. But the more common signification of Imparlance is, time to plead, 2 Show. 310: 2 Mod. 62. And it is either general without saving to the defendant any exception, which is always to another term, Mod. 28; or special, which is sometimes to another day in the same term, 6 Mod. 8. The general Imparlance is of course where the defendant is not bound to plead the same term; but a special Imparlance is not allowed, without leave of the court. R. E. 5 Ann. A special Imparlance is with a saving of all exceptions to the writ or count, which may be granted by the prothonotary; or they may be still more special with a saving of all exceptions whatsoever, which are granted at the discretion of the court, and are called general special Imparlances. 12 Mod. 529.

A general Imparlance is set down and entered in general terms, without any special clause, thus; And now at this day, to wit, on Thursday next after the Octave of St. Hilary, in the same term, until which day the aforesaid C. D. the defendant had licence to imparle to the bill aforesaid, and then to answer, &c.

Special Imparlance, is where the party desires a farther day to answer, adding also these words; Saving all advantages, as well to the jurisdiction of the court, as to the writ and declaration, &c. Kitch. 200. This Imparlance is had on the declaration of the plaintiff; and special Imparlance is of use where the defendant is to plead some matters which cannot be pleaded after a general Imparlance. 5 Rep. 75.

Imparlance is generally to the next term; and if the plaintiff amend his declaration after delivered or filed, the defendant may imparl to the next term, if the plaintiff do not pay costs; but if he pay costs, which are accepted, the defendant cannot imparl. Also if the plaintiff declares against the defendant, but doth not proceed in three terms after, the defendant may imparl to the next term. 2 Lill. Abr. 35.

If the writ be returnable on the last day of term, the defendant is of course entitled to an Imparlance, but must plead in four days of the next term, provided a rule be given either in a town or country cause.

On a declaration delivered of Hilary, there may be an Imparlance to Trinity term, if the defendant has not pleaded before; for it is the course of the court to give Imparlance or declaration till the day of pleading. If a writ be returnable in one term, and the declaration is not delivered before the essoign-day of the second term, the defendant is not obliged to plead in the same term, but is entitled to an Imparlance. Impey, K. B.

As to causes of Imparlance. The not delivering a declaration in time is sometimes the cause of Imparlance of course: and where the defendant's case requires a special plea, and the matter which is to be pleaded is difficult, the court will, upon motion, grant the defendant an Imparlance, and longer time to put in his plea, than otherwise by the rules of the court he ought to have: if the plaintiff keeps any deed or other thing from the defendant, whereby he is to make his defence, Imparlance may be granted till the plaintiff delivers it to him, or brings it into court, and a convenient time after to plead. Hil. 22 Car. 1. B. R.

An Imparlance being prayed on a defendant's appearing to answer an information, it was said, Imparlance was formerly from day to day, but now from one term to another, in criminal proceedings; and it was ruled that the defendant should have the same time to imparl that the process would have taken up, if he had stood out till the attachment or capias; for when he comes in upon that, he must plead instanter. 1 Salk. 367: Mod. Cases, 243. And if process had been continued, he might have been brought in the same term upon an attachment; and then there could be no Imparlance, but he ought to plead instanter. 2 Nels. Abr. 947.

There are many cases wherein Imparlances are not allowed; no Imparlance is granted in an homine replegiando; or in an assise, unless on good cause shewn: nor shall there be an Imparlance in an action of special clausum fregit; though it is allowed in general actions of trespass. Hil. 9 W. 3: 3 Salk. 186. Where an attorney, or other privileged person of the court, sues another, the defendant cannot imparl, but must plead presently: if the plaintiff sues out a special original, wherein the cause of action is expressed, and the defendant is taken on a special capias, he shall not have an Imparlance, but shall plead as soon as the rules are out. 2 Lil. 35, 36. See title Practice.

Of Pleadings afterwards. A plea to the jurisdiction may not be pleaded after general Imparlance. Raym. 34. Dilatory pleas also cannot be pleaded after a general Imparlance, which is an acknowledgment of the propriety of the action. 3 Comm. 301: Tidd's Pract. After Imparlance, the defendant cannot plead in abatement; if he doth, and the plaintiff tenders an issue, whereupon the defendant demurs, and the plaintiff joins in demurrer, such plea is not peremptory; because the plaintiff ought not to have joined in demurrer, but to have moved the court, that the defendant might be compelled to plead in chief. Allen 65. Though a defendant may not plead in abatement after a general Imparlance; yet, if it appear by the record that the plaintiff hath brought his action before he had any cause, the court ex officio will abate the writ. 2 Lev. 197. See this Dictionary, titles Abatement; Practice.

The defendant cannot have oyer of a deed in a common case, after Imparlance: and a tender after Imparlance is naught. 2 Lev. 190: Lutw. 238. If it appears upon the record, that an Imparlance was due, and denied, it is error; but then such error must appear on the record. 3 Salk. 168. It has been held, that if the defendant doth not appear on a dies datus, the plaintiff shall not have judgment by default, as he may on Imparlance, because the dies datus is not so strong against him as an Imparlance; and therefore the plaintiff must take process against the defendant for not appearing at the time. Moor 79: 2 Nelf. 947.

After a general special Imparlance, the defendant may not only plead in abatement of the writ, bill, or count, but also privilege. 1 Lev. 54: 12 Mod. 529: 5 Mod. 335. But it seems that such plea must be intitled of the term the declaration is filed. Impey, K. B.

It is ordered that a special Imparlance shall not be allowed the defendant, without the leave of the court first obtained. R. E. 5 Ann.

If the writ be returnable before the last return of any term, and the declaration not filed, and notice given four days exclusive before the end of such term, the defendant is entitled to an Imparlance. R. Trin. 22 Geo. 3.

Where a defendant is arrested by process out of B. R. in which the cause of action is specially expressed; or a copy of process is delivered, and the plaintiff hath declared; the defendant shall not have liberty of imparlance, without leave first granted, but shall plead within the time allowed a defendant prosecuted by original writ. R. Hil. 2 Geo. 2. And upon all processes, returnable the first or second return of any term, the declaration shall be delivered with notice to plead in eight days after delivery, where the defendant lives above twenty miles from London, &c. without any Imparlance; and, on default of pleading, the plaintiff may sign judgment. R. Trin. 5 & 6 Geo. 2. See further on this subject, and as to obtaining time to plead, this Dictionary, titles Pleading; Practice.

IMPARSONEE, A parson Imparsonee, Persona impersonata, is he that is inducted, and in possession of a benefice. Dyer, fol. 40. num. 72, says a Dean and Chapter are parsons Imparsonees of a benefice appropriate unto them. Cowel.

IMPEACHMENT, from Lat. impetere.] The accusation and prosecution of a person for treason, or other crimes and misdemeanors. Any member of the House of Commons may not only impeach any one of their own body, but also any Lord of parliament, &c. And thereupon articles are exhibited on behalf of the Commons, and managers appointed to make good their charge and accusation; which being done in the proper judicature, sentence is passed, &c. And it is observed, that the same evidence is required in an Impeachment in parliament, as in the ordinary courts of justice; but not in bills of attainder. See index to State Trials, vol. 6. tit. Evidence.

An Impeachment before the Lords by the Commons of Great Britain, in parliament, is a prosecution of known and established law, and hath been frequently put in practice; being a presentment to the most high and supreme court of criminal jurisdiction, by the most solemn grand inquest of the whole kingdom. 1 Hal. P. C. 150. A commoner cannot however be impeached before the Lords for any capital offence, but only for high misdemeanors: Rot Parl. 4 Ed. 3. n. 2 & 6: 2 Brad. Hist. 190: Selden Judic. in Parl. ch. 1.

A peer may be impeached for any crime. The articles of Impeachment are a kind of bills of indictment, found by the House of Commons, and afterwards tried by the Lords; who are in cases of misdemeanors considered not only as their own peers, but as the peers of the whole nation. This is a custom derived to us from the constitution of the ancient Germans; who in their great councils sometimes tried capital accusations relating to the public: "Licet apud concilium accusare quoque "et discrimen capitis intendere." Tac. de mor. Germ. 12.

By statute 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, it is enacted, that no pardon under the Great Seal shall be pleadable to an Impeachment by the Commons in parliament. But the king may pardon after conviction on an Impeachment. 4 Comm. 400, and see ib. 259—261; and this Dictionary, title Pardon.

On the Impeachment of Warren Hastings for malconduct as Governor-general of India, the trial of which lasted, by adjournment, for seven years, from 1787 to 1794, it was solemnly determined that an Impeachment is not abated, or put an end to, by the prorogation or dissolution of parliament. And a statute was passed to prevent prorogation or dissolution from having the effect of putting a stop to the previous proceedings in the House of Commons.

IMPEACHMENT OF WASTE, Impetitio vasti, from Fr. empeschement, i. e. impedimentum.] Signifies a restraint from committing of waste upon lands or tenements; or a demand of recompence for waste done by a tenant who hath but a particular estate in the land granted. He that hath a lease to hold without Impeachment of Waste, hath by that such an interest given him in the land, &c. that he may make waste without being impeached for it; that is, without being questioned, or any demand of recompence for the waste done. 11 Rep. 82. b. See title Waste.

IMPECHIARE, Fr. empecher; Lat. impetere.] To impeach, to accuse and prosecute, for felony, or treason. Spelman and Somner say, that it is derived from the Lat. impetere, which is to accuse, or in jus vocare; from whence impetitio signifies an accusation, viz. fine impetitione vasti, is without impeaching or accusing him of waste. See Impeachment.

IMPEDIATUS, Expeditatus; impediati canes, Dogs lawed and disabled from doing mischief in the forests, and purlieus of them. Cowel. See Expeditate.

IMPEDIENS, A defendant, or deforciant. Cowel.

IMPEDIMENTS IN LAW. Persons under Impediments are those within age, under coverture, non compos mentis, in prison, beyond sea, &c. who, by a saving in several laws, have time to claim and prosecute their rights, after the Impediments removed, in case of fines levied, &c. See title Limitation of Actions.

IMPERIALE, A sort of very fine cloth. Cowel.

IMPESCATUS, Impeached, or accused. Pat. 18 E. 1.

IMPETITIO, See ante, Impeachment.

IMPETRATION, Impetratio.] An obtaining any thing by request and prayer: and in our statutes it is a pre-obtaining of church benefices in England from the court court of Rome, which belonged to the gift and disposition of the king, and other lay-patrons of this realm; the penalty whereof was the same with that inflicted on provisors. See statutes 25 E. 3. st. 6: 38 E. 3. st. 2. c. 1.

IMPIERMENT, Impairing or prejudicing, "to "the Impierment and diminution of their good names." Stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 9.

IMPLEAD, from Fr. Plaider.] To sue or prosecute by course of law.

IMPLEMENTS, from Lat. impleo, to fill up.] Things necessary in any trade or mystery, without which the work cannot be performed; also the furniture of an house, as all houshold goods, Implements, &c. And Implements of houshold are tables, presses, cupboards, bedsteads, wainscot, and the like. In this sense, we find this word often in gifts and conveyances of moveables. Terms de Ley.

IMPLICATION, A necessary inference of something not directly declared; between parties in deeds, agreements, &c. arising from what is admitted or expressed. When the law giveth any thing to a man, it giveth, implicitly (or rather impliedly) whatsoever is necessary for the enjoying the same.

It is a general rule, that where an estate is to be raised by Implication, it must be a necessary and inevitable Implication, and such as that the words can have no other construction whatsoever. Talb. 3.

An Implication cannot be intended by deed, unless there are apt words; but otherwise in a will. Brownl. 153.

An implied intent must not, without clear expression, alter the equitable general law. 1 Chan. Caf. 297.

An estate by Implication was never thought of in a deed, nor in a will but in case of necessity. 4 Mod. 156.

No Implication shall be allowed against an express estate limited by express words. 1 Salk. 226.

An express estate for life cannot be enlarged by Implication, but by express words it may. 2 Vern. 449.

The want of words in some cases may be helped by Implication; and so one word or thing, or one estate given, shall be implied by another. There is an Implication in wills and devises of lands, whereby estates are gained; as if a husband devises the goods in his house to his wife, and that after her decease his son shall have them, and his house; though the house be not devised to the wife by express words, yet it has been held, that she hath an estate for life in it by Implication, because no other person could then have it, the son and heir being excluded, who was to have nothing till after her decease. 1 Ventr. 223.

Estates for life, and estates tail, may be raised by Implication in wills: a testator had three sons, the eldest son dying, leaving his wife with child, to whom the father devised an annuity, in ventre sa mere, and if his middle son died before he had any issue of his body, remainder over, &c. And it was resolved, that such son had an estate-tail by Implication. Moor 127. It is said a fee-simple estate shall not arise by Implication in a will; though there is a perpetual charge imposed by the devisor on the devisee, &c. Bridgm. 103. Also it hath been adjudged, that where a particular estate is devised by will expresly, a contrary intent shall not be implied by any subsequent clause. See title Will.

Implication is either necessary or possible, and wherever an estate is raised by that means in a will, it must be by a necessary Implication; for the devisee must necessarily have the thing devised, and no other person can have it. 1 Salk. 236: 2 Nelf. Abr. 494.

No Implication shall be allowed against an express estate, limited by express words, to drown the same. Salk. 266. There are conditions and covenants, implied by law, in deeds and grants: and Implication will sometimes help law proceedings, and supply defects. See titles Intendment; Use; Deed; Covenant; Estate; Limitation, &c.

IMPORTATION, Importatio.] The bringing goods and merchandize into this kingdom from other nations. See this Dictionary, title Navigation Acts.

IMPOSSIBILITY. A thing which is impossible in law, is all one with a thing impossible in nature: and if any thing in a bond or deed is impossible to be done, such deed, &c. is void. Yet where the condition of a bond becomes impossible by the act of God, in such case, it is held the obligor ought to do all in his power towards a performance: as when a man is bound to enfeoff the obligee and his heirs, and the obligee dies, the obligor must enfeoff his heir. 2 Co. Rep. 74. See titles Bond; Condition; Deed.

IMPOST, from Lat. impono.] The tax received by the prince, for such merchandizes as are brought into any haven within his dominions, from foreign nations. It may in some sort be distinguished from customs, because customs are rather that profit the prince maketh of wares shipped out; yet they are frequently confounded. Cowel. See this Dictionary, title Customs on Merchandize.

IMPOSTORS, Religious. Those who falsely pretend an extraordinary commission from heaven; or terrify and abuse the people with false denunciations of judgments. They are punishable by the Temporal Courts with fine, imprisonment, and infamous corporal punishment. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 5.

IMPOTENCY, Is a canonical disability to avoid marriage in the Spiritual Court. The marriage is not void ab initio, but voidable only by sentence of separation, but to be actually made during the life of the parties. See title Marriage.

IMPOTENCY, Property by reason of. A qualified property may subsist with relation to animals feræ naturæ, ratione impotentiæ, on account of their own inability. As when hawks, herons, or other birds build in my trees, or conies or other creatures make their nests or burrows in my land, and have young ones there; I have a qualified property in those young ones, till such time as they can fly or run away, and then my property expires. Carta de forestâ; (9 Hen. 3. c. 13;) but till then it is in some cases trespass, and in others felony, for a stranger to take them away. 7 Rep. 17: Lamb. Eiren. 274: 2 Comm. 394. See title Game.

IMPRESSING SEAMEN. The power of impressing men for the sea service by the king's commission, has been a matter of some dispute, and submitted to with great reluctance; though it hath very clearly and learnedly been shewn by Sir Michael Foster, that the practice of impressing, and granting powers to the Admiralty for that purpose, is of very ancient date, and hath been uniformly continued, by a regular series of precedents, to the present time: whence he concludes it to be part of the common law. The difficulty arises from hence, that no statute has expresly declared this power to be in the crown, though many of them very strongly imply it. The statute 2 Ric. 2. c. 4, speaks of mariners being arrested arrested and retained for the king's service, as of a thing well known, and practised without dispute; and provides a remedy against their running away. By statute 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 16, if any waterman, who uses the river Thames, shall hide himself during the execution of any commission of pressing for the king's service, he is liable to heavy penalties. By statute 5 Eliz. c. 5, no fisherman shall be taken by the queen's commission to serve as a mariner; but the commission shall be first brought to two justices of the peace, inhabiting near the sea coast where the mariners are to be taken, to the intent, that the justices may choose out, and return such a number of able-bodied men as in the commission are contained, to serve her majesty. And, by others, (7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21: 2 Ann. c. 6: 4 & 5 Ann. c. 19: 13 Geo. 2. c. 17, &c.) especial protections are allowed to seamen in particular circumstances, to prevent them from being impressed. All which do most evidently imply a power of impressing to reside somewhere; and, if any where, it must from the spirit of our constitution, as well as from the frequent mention of the king's commission, reside in the crown alone. 1 Comm. 419: Comb. 245: Fost. 154.

The legality of pressing is so fully established, that it will not now admit of a doubt in any court of justice. In the case of The King v. Tubbs, Lord Mansfield said, "The power of pressing is founded upon immemorial usage allowed for ages. If not, it can have no ground to stand upon; nor can it be vindicated or justified by any reason but the safety of the State. The practice is deduced from that trite maxim of the constitutional law of England, That private mischief had better be submitted to, than public detriment and inconvenience should ensue. Though it be a legal power, it may, like many others, be abused in the exercise of it." Cowp. 517. In that case the defendant was brought up by habeas corpus, upon the ground that he was entitled to an exemption; but the court held, that the exemption was not made out, and he was remanded to the ship from whence he had been brought. 1 Comm. 420. n. See also 5 Term Rep. 276; and further this Dictionary, titles Mariners; Seamen; Murder.

None shall be imprisoned but by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. Magna Charta, c. 2: stat 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. c. 4. All Imprisonment must be according to law, or the custom of England; or by process and course of law. 2 Inst. 46, 50, 282. And no person is to be imprisoned, but as the law directs, either by command and order of a court of record, or by lawful warrant, or the king's writ; by which one may be lawfully detained to answer the law. 2 Inst. 46: 3 Inst. 209.

At common law, a man could not be imprisoned in any case, unless he were guilty of some force or violence; for which his body was subject to Imprisonment, as one of the highest executions of the law; but Imprisonment is inflicted by statute in many cases. 3 Rep. 11. Whenever the common law, or any statute, gives power to imprison, there it is lawful and justifiable; but he who doth it in pursuance of a statute, must be sure exactly to follow the statute in the order and manner of doing thereof. Dyer 204: 13 E. 1. The like offences of firing houses and sending letters demanding money of persons, &c. is made felony, by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. See titles Arson; Black Act; Burning.

INCEPTION. The same person is patron and incumbent, and he devises the next avoidance; it was objected, that by his death the church is void, and then the presentation is a chose en action, and not grantable, and the devise takes not effect till after the death of devisor, and therefore void; but held a good devise, because it has Inception in his life. *Rol. INCEST. In the year 1650, when the ruling powers found it for their interest to put on the semblance of a very extraordinary strictness and purity of morals, Incest and wilful adultery were made capital crimes. But at the Restoration, when men, from an abhorrence of the hypocrisy of the late times, fell into a contrary extreme, of licentiousness, it was not thought proper to renew a law of such unfashionable rigour. And these offences have been ever since left to the feeble coercion of the Spiritual Court, according to the rules of the Canon law. 4 Comm. 64. See title Lewdness.

INCH OF CANDLE, Is the manner of selling goods by merchants; which is done thus: First, Notice is to be given upon the Exchange, or other public place, of the time of sale; and, in the mean time, the goods to be sold or divided into lots, printed papers of which, and the conditions of sale, are also forthwith published; and when the goods are exposed to sale, a small piece of wax-candle, about an inch long, is burning, and the last bidder when the candle goes out, is entitled to the lot or parcel so exposed. If any difference happens in adjusting to whom a lot belongs, where several bid together, the lot is to be put up again; and the last bidder is bound to stand to the bargain, and take the lot, whether good or bad. In these cases, the goods are set up at such a price; and none shall bid less than a certain sum, more than another hath before, &c. Merch. Dict. See title Auction.

INCIDENT, incidens.] A thing necessarily depending upon, appertaining to, or following another that is more worthy or principal. A court-baron is inseparably incident to a manor; and a court of piepowder to a fair: these are so inherent to their principals, that by the grant of one, the other is granted; and they cannot be extinct by release, or saved by exception, but in special cases. Kitch. 36: Co. Lit. 151.

Rent is incident to a reversion; timber trees are incident to the freehold, and also deeds and charters, and a way to lands; fealty is incident to tenures; distress to rent and amercements, &c. *Co. INDICTMENT.

INDICTAMENTUM, from the Fr. enditer, i. e. indicare, to shew.] A bill or declaration of complaint drawn up in form of law, exhibited for some offence criminal or penal, and preferred to a grand jury; upon whose oath it is found to be true, before a judge, or others, having power to punish or certify the offence. Terms de Ley.

I. Of the Nature of an Indictment; how found, presented, and prosecuted.
II. Of the Locality of an Indictment.
III. Of Certainty, and the other Requisites in an Indictment; and of Errors, and Amendments thereof.
IV. For what Offences Indictment will lie.

I. LAMBARD says, An Indictment is an accusation, at the suit of the King, by the oaths of twelve men of the same county wherein the offence was committed, returned to inquire of all offences in general in the county, determinable by the court into which they are returned, and their finding a bill brought before them to be true: but when such accusation is found by a grand jury, without any bill brought before them, and afterwards reduced to a formed Indictment, it is called A Presentment; and when it is found by jurors returned to inquire of that particular offence only, which is indicted, it is properly called An Inquisition. Lamb. lib. 4 cap. 5.

By Poulton, an Indictment is an inquisition taken and made by twelve men, at the least, thereunto sworn, whereby they find and present, that such a person, of such a place, in such a county, and of such a degree, hath committed such a treason, felony, trespass, or other offence, against the peace of the King, his crown and dignity. Pult. 169. An Indictment, according to Lord Chief Justice Hale, is only a plain, brief, and certain narrative of an offence, committed by any person, and of those necessary circumstances, that concur, to ascertain the fact and its nature. 2 Hale's Hist. P.C. 168, 169.

An Indictment seems to be thus shortly well defined: "A written accusation, of one or more persons, of a crime or a misdemeanor, preferred to, and presented on oath by, a grand jury." 4 Comm. 302.

A bill of Indictment is said to be an accusation, for this reason; because the jury that inquire of the offence doth not receive it, until the party that offers the bill, appearing, subscribes his name, and offers his oath for the truth of it. Staundf. P.C. lib. 2. cap. 23.

To this end the sheriff of every county is bound to return to every session of the peace, and every commission of oyer and terminer, and of general gaol delivery, twenty-four good and lawful men of the county, some out of every hundred, "to inquire, present, do, and execute execute all those things which on the part of our lord the king shall then and there be commanded them." As many as appear upon this pannel are sworn of the Grand Jury to the amount of twelve at least, and not more than twenty-three; that twelve may be a majority. See title Jury. This grand jury are previously instructed in the articles of their inquiry, by a charge from the judge on the bench. They then withdraw from court to sit and receive Indictments, which are preferred to them in the name of the king, but at the suit of any private prosecutor: and they are only to hear evidence on behalf of the prosecution: for the finding an Indictment is only in the nature of an inquiry or accusation, which is afterwards to be tried and determined; and the grand jury are only to inquire upon their oaths whether there be sufficient cause to call upon the party to answer it.

When the grand jury have heard the evidence, if they think it a groundless accusation, they used formerly to indorse on the back of the bill, ignoramus, i.e. 'we know no nothing of it;' intimating, that though the facts might possibly be true, the truth did not appear to them: but now, they assert in English, more absolutely, not a true bill; or (which is the better way) not found; and then the party is discharged without farther answer. But a fresh bill may afterwards be preferred to a subsequent grand jury. If they are satisfied of the truth of the accusation, they then indorse upon it, a true bill; antiently, billa vera. The Indictment is then said to be found, and the party stands indicted. But to find a bill, there must at least twelve of the jury agree: for so tender is the law of England of the lives of the Subject, that no man can be convicted at the suit of the king for any capital offence, unless by the unanimous voice of twenty-four of his equals and neighbours; that is, by twelve at least of the grand jury, in the first place, assenting to the accusation; and afterwards by the whole petit jury, of twelve more, finding him guilty upon his trial. But if twelve of the grand jury assent, it is a good presentment, though some of the rest disagree. 2 Hal. P. C. 161. And the Indictment when so found, is publicly delivered into court.

Although a bill of Indictment may be preferred to a grand jury upon oath, they are not bound to find the bill, if they find cause to the contrary; and though a bill of Indictment be brought unto them without oath made, they may find the bill if they see cause; but it is not usual to prefer a bill unto them before oath be first made in court, that the evidence they are to give unto the grand inquest to prove the bill is true. 2 Lill. Abr. 44. The grand jury are to find the whole in a bill, or reject it, and not find specially for part, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 2. This rule relates only to cases where the grand jury take upon themselves to find part of the same Indictment to be true, and part false; and do not either affirm or deny the facts submitted to their inquiry. But where there are two distinct counts, viz. one for a riot, and the other for an assault, and the grand jury find a true bill as to the assault, and indorse ignoramus as to the riot, this finding leaves the Indictment as to the count found, just as if there had been originally only that one count. Cowp. 325.

Any one under prosecution for a crime, before he is indicted, may except against or challenge any of the persons returned on the grand jury; as being outlawed, returned at the instance of the prosecutor, or not returned by the proper officer, &c. 2 Hawk. c. 25. § 16. No Indictment shall be made but by inquest of lawful men returned by sheriffs, &c. And if a person not returned by the sheriff on a grand jury, procures his name to be read among those of others who were actually returned, whereupon he is sworn of the jury, he may be indicted for it and fined, and the Indictment found by such a jury shall be void. Stat: 11 Hen. 4. c. 9: 12 Rep. 98: 3 Inst. 33.

Sheriffs had formerly power to take Indictments; which they did by roll indented, one part whereof remained with the indictors. 13 Ed. 1: 1 Ed. 3. Justices of peace have no power relating to Indictments for crimes, but what is given them by act of parliament: And it is said justices of peace in sessions cannot, on an Indictment, try and determine the offence in one and the same sessions in which the offenders are indicted. Hill. 11 Car.: Cro. Car. 430, 448. And Indictments before justices of peace, &c. may be removed into the court of B. R. by certiorari. But an Indictment removed by certiorari into B. R. may be sent back again into the county or place whence removed, if there be cause to do it. See title Certiorari.

An Indictment is the king's suit; for which reason the party who prosecutes, is a good witness to prove it: And no damages can be given to the party grieved upon an Indictment, or other criminal prosecution, unless particularly grounded on some statute; but the court of B. R. by the king's privy seal may give to the prosecutor a third part of the fine assessed for any offence; and the fine to the king may be mitigated, in regard to the defendant's making satisfaction to a prosecutor for costs of prosecution, and damages sustained by the injury received. 2 Hawk. c. 25. § 3.

No man may be put upon his trial for a capital offence, except on an appeal or Indictment, or something equivalent thereto. H. P. C. 210. All Indictments ought to be brought for offences committed against the common law, or against some statute; and not for every slight misdemeanor. 2 Lill. 44. Where a statute appoints a penalty to be recovered by bill, plaint, or information, it cannot be by Indictment, but as directed to be recovered: An Indictment will not lie where only another remedy is provided by statute. Cro Jac. 643: 3 Salk. 187.

Husband and wife may commit a trespass, felony, &c. and be indicted together; so for keeping a bawdy-house, though the house be the husband's. Hob. 65: 1 Salk. 382. See title Baron and Feme.

If an offence wholly arises from any joint act that is criminal of several defendants, they may be all charged in one Indictment, jointly and severally, or jointly only; and some of the defendants may be convicted, and others acquitted; for the law looks on the charge as several against each, though the words of it purport a joint charge against all: In other cases, the offences of several persons must be laid several, because the offence of one cannot be the offence of another; and every man ought to answer severally for his own crime. And three offences may be joined in an Indictment, and the party convicted of one offence, though he is found Not guilty of the others. On penal statutes, several things shall not be joined in the Indictment, &c. except it be in respect of some one thing, to which all of them have relation. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 89: 1 Hal. P. C. 561, 610.

Several defendants cannot be joined in one Indictment for perjury; for perjury is a separate act in each; and one may be desirous to have a certiorari, and the other not;

not; and the jury on the trial of all, may apply evidence to all, that is but evidence against one. Stra. 921. So also in the King v. Clendon & al. where two were joined in the same Indictment for an assault, the court held they were distinct offences. Stra. 870: Lord Raym. 1572. But in another case, on an information against two for the same libel, it was held good; and the case of the King v. Clendon held not to be law. Burr. 980.

A person indicted of felony, &c. may plead generally misnomer, or wrongful addition; a former acquittal or conviction; a pardon, or other special plea; or the general issue; or may plead any plea in abatement of the Indictment, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 150. One indicted for felony may have counsel assigned him to speak for him in matter of law only. See titles Trial; Treason; Abatement, &c.

After a person is indicted for felony, the sheriff is commanded to attach his body by a capias; and on return of a non est inventus, a second capias shall be granted, and the sheriff is to seize the offender's chattels, &c. And if on that writ a non est inventus is returned, an exigent shall be awarded, and the chattels be forfeited, &c. stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 2.

If an innocent person be indicted of felony, and will not suffer himself to be arrested by the officer who has a warrant for it, he may be killed by the officer, if he cannot otherwise be taken; for there is a charge against him upon record, to which at his peril he is bound to answer. Fitz. Coron. 179, 261. See title Arrest.

A person may be indicted twice at the same time, where he hath committed two felonies, and if he hath his clergy for one, he may be hanged for the other. And if there is an Indictment and inquisition against one for the same offence, one found by the coroner's inquest, and another by the grand jury, he may be tried on both at the same time: But if he be tried and acquitted upon the one, it may be pleaded in bar on trial for the other. Kel. 30, 108: 1 Salk. 382.

When a person is convicted upon an Indictment for trespass or misdemeanor, he is to appear in court, on judgment pronounced; and the court having set a fine upon him, will commit him in execution, &c. 2 Lil. Abr. 41.

II. The Grand Jury are sworn to inquire only for the body of the county; and therefore they cannot regularly inquire of a fact done out of the county for which they are sworn, unless particularly enabled by statute. At common law, therefore, where a man was wounded in one county and died in another, the offender was indictable in neither, because no complete act of felony was done in either county; but by stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 24, the offender is now indictable in the county where the party died; and by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 21, if the stroke or poisoning be in England, and the death upon the sea or out of England, or vice versâ, the offenders and their accessories may be indicted in the county where either the death, poisoning, or stroke shall happen. So in some other cases: as particularly, where treason is committed out of the realm, it may be inquired of in any county within the realm, as the king shall direct, in pursuance of stats. 26 Hen. 8. c. 13: 33 Hen. 8. c. 23: 35 Hen. 8. c. 2: 5 & 6 E. 6. c. 11. Counterfeiters, washers, or minishers of the current coin, together with all manner of felons and their accessories, may by stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 6, (confirmed and explained by stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 26. § 75, 76,) be indicted and tried for those offences, if committed in any part of Wales, before the justices of gaol delivery, and of the peace, in the next adjoining county of England, where the king's writ runneth; that is, at present in the county of Hereford or Salop; and not, as it should seem, in the county of Chester or Monmouth: the one being a county palatine where the king's writ did not run, and the other a part of Wales in the time of Henry VIII. Str. 533: 8 Mod. 134: See Hardr. 66. Murders also, whether committed in England or in foreign parts, may by virtue of stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 23, be inquired of and tried by the king's special commission in any shire or place in the kingdom. By stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 25, all robberies and other capital crimes, committed in Newfoundland, may be inquired of and tried in any county of England. Offences against the black act, 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, may be inquired of and tried in any county of England, at the option of the prosecutor. So felonies in destroying turnpikes, or works upon navigable rivers, erected by authority of parliament, may, by stats. 8 Geo. 2. c. 20: 13 Geo. 3. c. 84, be inquired of and tried in any adjacent county. By stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 19, plundering or stealing from any vessel in distress or wrecked, or breaking any ship contrary to 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 18, may be prosecuted either in the county where the fact is committed, or in any county next adjoining; and, if committed in Wales, then in the next adjoining English county: by which is understood to be meant such English county as, by stat. 26 Hen. 8. c. 6, above-mentioned, had before a concurrent jurisdiction with the great sessions on felonies committed in Wales. Felonies committed out of the realm, in burning or destroying the king's ships, magazines, or stores, may, by stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 24, be inquired of and tried in any county of England, or in the place where the offence is committed. By stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 63, misdemeanors committed in India may be tried upon information or Indictment in the court of King's Bench in England; and a mode is marked out for examining witnesses by commission, and transmitting their depositions to the court.

But, in general, all offences must be inquired into as well as tried in the county where the fact is committed. Yet, if larceny be committed in one county, and the goods carried into another, the offender may be indicted in either; for the offence is complete in both. 1 Hal. P. C. 507. Or, he may be indicted in England, for larceny in Scotland, and carrying the goods with him into England, or vice versâ, or for receiving in one part of the united kingdoms goods that have been stolen in another, stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 31. But, for robbery, burglary, and the like, an offender can only be indicted where the fact was actually committed: for, though the carrying away and keeping of the goods is a continuation of the original taking, and is therefore larceny in the second county, yet it is not a robbery or burglary in that jurisdiction. And if a person be indicted in one county for larceny of goods originally taken in another, and be thereof convicted or stands mute, he shall not be admitted to his clergy; provided the original taking be attended with such circumstances as would have ousted him of his clergy by virtue of any statute made previous to the year 1691. Stats. 25 Hen. 8. c. 3: 3 W. & M. c. 9.

If no town or place be named where the fact was done, the Indictment shall be void; though a mistake of the place place in laying the offence is of no signification on the evidence, if the fact is proved at some other place in the same county. H. P. C. 264. See stat. 1 Hen. 5. cap. 5.

If, upon not guilty pleaded, to an Indictment, it shall appear that the offence was done in a county different from that in which the Indictment was found,* the defendant shall be acquitted. H. P. C. 203: Kel. 15.

If there be an accessory in one county, to a felony committed in another, the accessory may be indicted and tried in the same county wherein he was accessory. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24.

An Indictment being found in the proper county, may (in some cases) be heard and determined in any other county, by special commission. 3 Inst. 27.

In the two last rebellions, statutes passed empowering the crown to try the traitors in any county.

III. INDICTMENTS must have a precise and sufficient certainty. By stat. 1 Hen. 5. c. 5, all Indictments must set forth the christian name, surname, and addition of the state and degree, mystery, town, or place, and county of the offender; and all this to identify his person. The time and place are also to be ascertained, by naming the day and township in which the fact was committed; though a mistake in these points is in general not held to be material, provided the time be laid previous to the finding of the Indictment, and the place to be within the jurisdiction of the court; unless where the place is laid, not merely as a venue, but as part of the description of the fact. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. But sometimes the time may be material, where there is any limitation in point of time assigned for the prosecution of offenders, as by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3; which enacts, that no prosecution shall be had for any of the treasons or misprisions therein mentioned, (except an assassination designed or attempted on the person of the king,) unless the bill of Indictment be found within three years after the offence committed. Fost. 249. And, in case of murder, the time of the death must be laid within a year and a day after the mortal stroke was given.

The offence itself must also be set forth with clearness and certainty; and, in some crimes, particular words of art must be used, which are so appropriated by the law to express the precise idea which it entertains of the offence, that no other words, however synonymous they may seem, are capable of doing it. Thus, in treason, the facts must be laid to be done, treasonably, and against his allegiance; antiently, proditoriè et contra ligeantiæ suæ debitum; else the Indictment is void. In Indictments for murder, it is necessary to say, that the party indicted, murdered, not killed or slew, the other, which was expressed in Latin by the word murdravit. In all Indictments for felonies, the adverb feloniously [felonicè] must be used; and for burglaries also, burglariter, or in English, burglariously, and all these to ascertain the intent. In rapes, the word rapuit or ravished is necessary, and must not be expressed by any periphrasis, in order to render the crime certain. So in larcenies also, the words felonicè cepit et asportavit [feloniously took and carried away] are necessary to every Indictment; for these only can express the very offence.

Also in Indictments for murder, the length and breadth of the wound should in general be expressed, in order that it may appear to the court to have been of a mortal nature; but if it goes through the body, then its dimensions are immaterial, for that is apparently sufficient to have been the cause of the death. Also, where a limb, or the like, is absolutely cut off, there such description is impossible. 5 Rep. 122.

Lastly, In Indictments the value of the thing, which is the subject or instrument of the offence, must sometimes be expressed. In Indictments for larcenies this is necessary, that it may appear whether it be grand or petit larceny, and whether entitled or not to the benefit of clergy. In homicide, of all sorts, it is necessary, as the weapon with which it is committed is forfeited to the king as a deodand. See 4 Comm. c. 23.

Indictments ought to be more certain than common pleadings in law, because they are more penal, and to be answered with more precision. Hil. 23 Car. B. R. They must be precise and certain in every point, and charge some offence in particular, and not a person as an offender in general, or set down goods, &c. stolen, without expressing what goods; and it ought to be laid positively, not by way of recital, &c. or be supplied by implication. Cro. Jac. 19: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25.

If an Indictment be generally of offences at several times, without laying any one of them on a certain day, as if it be laid between such a day and such a day, it hath been adjudged, that the Indictment is void: but a mistake in not laying an offence on the very same day, on which it is afterwards proved upon the trial, is not material upon evidence. 2 Hawk. c. 25. § 82. And it is said, the crown is not bound to set forth the very day, when treason, &c. was committed: evidence may be given of a treasonable conspiracy, &c. at any time before or after the time alleged in the Indictment, where it is laid on such a day, and divers other days, as well before as after; because the time is only a circumstance, and of form some day must be alleged, but it is not material. 1 Salk. 168.

When an Indictment is drawn upon a statute, it ought to pursue the words of it, if a private act; but it is otherwise on a general statute: it is best not to recite a public statute; the recital is not necessary, for the judges are bound ex officio to take notice of all public statutes, and mis-recitals are fatal; so that it is the surest way only to conclude generally "against the form of the "statute." 4 Rep. 48. Though there be no necessity to recite a public statute in an Indictment, yet if the prosecutor take upon him to do it, and materially vary from the substantial part of the purview of the statute, and conclude contra formam statut' prædict' he vitiates the Indictment. Plowd. 79, 83: Cro. Eliz. 236. But many mis-recitals may be saved by a general conclusion contra formam statuti, without adding prædict', &c. And mistakes may be helped by the constant course of precedents upon such statutes. 2 Hawk. c. 25. § 101. An Indictment is to bring the fact making an offence, within all the material words of the statute, or the words, contra formam statuti, will not make it good. 2 Hawk. c. 25. § 115. If a word of substance be omitted in the Indictment, the whole Indictment is bad; but it is otherwise where a word of form is omitted, or there is an omission of a synonymous word, where the sense is the same, &c. Judgment shall not be given by statute, upon an Indictment which doth not conclude contra formam statuti: and judgment by statute shall never be given out an Indictment at common law, as every Indictment which doth not thus conclude shall be taken to be. But where persons are indicted on the statute of stabbing, and the evidence is not sufficient to bring them within the statute, they may be found guilty of general manslaughter at common law, and the words contra formam statut' be rejected as useless: in other cases the same has been also adjudged; though formerly it was held, that an Indictment grounded on a statute, which would not maintain it, could not in any case be maintained as an Indictment at common law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 4.

The omission of vi & armis & contra pacem, is helped by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. False Latin, antiently, did not hurt an Indictment, if by any intendment it could be made good; but if any word was not Latin, or allowed by law as a word of art; or if it had been insensible in a material point, the Indictment was insufficient. 5 Rep. 121: 2 Cro. 108: 3 Cro. 465. An Indictment should not be set aside for a false concord between the substantive and the adjective, &c. the expressions being significant to make the sense appear. 5 Co. Rep. 121.

But an Indictment against two or more, laying the fact in the singular number, as if against one, hath been held insufficient for the incertainty. 2 Hawk. c. 25. A misnomer of the defendant's surname, will not abate the Indictment, as it will in case of the name of baptism; and if there be a mistake in spelling, if it sounds like the true name, it is good. 1 Hen. 5. A person may be indicted for felony against an unknown person; and when the name of one killed is unknown, or goods are stolen from a person that cannot be known, it is sufficient to say in the Indictment that one unknown was killed by the person indicted, or that he stole the goods of one unknown. Wood's Inst. 624. But though an Indictment may be good for stealing the goods cujusdam ignoti, of a person unknown, yet a property must be proved in somebody at the trial; otherwise it shall be presumed to be in the prisoner by his pleading not guilty. Mod. Cas. in L. & E. 249. Where a person injured is known, his name ought to be put into the Indictment. 2 Hawk. c. 25.

Indictments may be amended the same term wherein brought into court, and not after. But criminal prosecutions are not within the benefit of the statutes of amendments; so that no amendment can be made to an indictment, &c. but such only as is allowed by the common law. 2 Lil. 45. The body of a bill of Indictment removed into B. R. may not be be amended, except from London, where the tenor only of a record is removed; though the caption of an Indictment from any place may, on motion, be amended by the clerk of the assizes, &c. so as to make it agree with the original record. Captions of Indictments ought to set forth the court in which, and the jurors by whom, and also the time and place at which, the Indictment was found; and that the jurors were of the county, city, &c. Also they must shew that the Indictment was taken before such a court as had jurisdiction over the offence indicted. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. While the jury who found a bill of Indictment is before the court, it may be amended by their consent in matter of form, the name, or addition of the party, &c. Keb. 37. Clerks of the assize and of the peace, &c. drawing defective bills of Indictment, shall draw new bills without fee, and take but 2 s. for drawing any Indictment against a felon, &c. on pain of forfeiting 5 l. Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. cap. 23.

If one material part of an Indictment is repugnant to or inconsistent with another, the whole is void; but where the sense is plain, the court will dispense with a small impropriety in the expression. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25.

Many objections to Indictments are over-ruled. 5 Rep. 120. Where an Indictment is void for insufficiency, or if the trial is in a wrong county, another Indictment may be drawn for the same offence, whereby the insufficiency may be cured: and the Indictment may be laid in another county, (it is said,) though judgment be given. See 4 Rep. 45. a. Sed qu. If the judgment should not be reversed for error, before the party be arraigned, upon a second Indictment? By the common law, the court may quash any Indictment for such insufficiency as will make the judgment thereon erroneous: but the court may refuse to quash an Indictment preferred for the public good, though it be not a good Indictment, and put the party to traverse, or plead to it. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. Also the court will grant time for the king's counsel to maintain an Indictment, if they desire it.

Judges are not bound ex debito justitiæ to quash an Indictment; but may oblige the defendant either to plead or demur to it; and where Indictments are not good, the parties indicted may avoid them by pleading. 2 Lil. 42: 2 Hawk. 258. The court doth not usually quash Indictments for forgery, perjury, and nuisances, notwithstanding the Indictments are faulty; and it is against the course of the court to quash an Indictment for extortion. 2 Lil. 411: 5 Mod. 31.

If an Indictment be good in part, though the other part of it is bad, the court will not quash it; for if an offence sufficient to maintain the Indictment be well laid, it is good enough, although other facts are ill laid. Latch. 173: Poph. 208: 1 Salk. 384. One that is convicted upon an erroneous Indictment, cannot after the conviction move to have the Indictment quashed; but must bring his writ of error to reverse the judgment given against him upon the Indictment. 2 Lil. 43.

If the party indicted is outlawed upon the Indictment, the court will not quash the Indictment, though erroneous; but will force the party outlawed to bring his writ of error to reverse the outlawry. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

The stat. 7 W. 3. cap. 3. ordains, That no Indictment for treason, &c. or any process thereon, shall be quashed, on motion of the prisoner, or his counsel, for mis-writing, false Latin, &c. unless exception be made before evidence given in court; nor shall any such defects, &c. after conviction, be caused to arrest judgment; though any judgment given upon such Indictment may be reversed on a writ of error, &c.

Counts in an Indictment cannot be struck out as they may in an information; for the court cannot strike out that which the grand jury have found. Hardr. 203.

IV. All capital crimes whatsoever, and also all kinds of inferior crimes of a public nature, as misprisions and all other contempts, all disturbances of the peace, all oppressions, and all other misdemeanors whatsoever, of a public evil example against the common law, may be indicted; but no injuries of a private nature, unless they some way concern the king. And where an offence is made punishable by statute, the true rule seems to be, that if the offence was punishable before the statute prescribed a particular method of punishing it, then such particular remedy is cumulative, and does not take away the former remedy; but where the statute only enacts, That the doing an act not punishable before shall for the future be punishable in a certain particular manner, there it is necessary to pursue such particular method, and not the common law method of Indictment. 2 Burr. 799, 805, 854: Cowp. 524, 650. And it hath been adjudged, that if a statute give a recovery by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, or otherwise, it authorises a proceeding by way of Indictment. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 4, and note. See ante III.

Indictments are for the benefit of the Commonwealth and the public good; and to be preferred for criminal not civil matters; they may be of high treason, petit treason, felony, trespass, and in all sorts of pleas of the crown; but not of injuries of a private nature, which do not concern the king, and the public. Co. Lit. 126, 303: 4 Rep. 44. An Indictment lies against one for assaulting and stopping another on the highway, being a breach of the peace. Hil. 22 Car. It lies for cheating a person at play, with false dice, or any other cheating: but it is not indictable for one man to make a fool of another, in the case of cheats getting money, &c. though action may be brought. 2 Lill. 44: 1 Salk. 479. Except in the cases specified in the act of 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, commonly called the statute of False Pretences. See title Cheat.

Indictment will not lie for a private nusance, wherein action on the case only lies; and where a person is indicted for trespass, which is not indictable at law, but for which action should be had; or if a man be indicted for scandalous words, as calling another rogue, &c. such Indictments are not good; for private injuries are to be redressed by private actions. 2 Lill. Abr. 42. But where a person is beaten, he may proceed for this trespass by Indictment, or information, as well as action. Pasch. 24 Car. B. R.

Where, in an action on the case, a defendant justifies for words, as calling the plaintiff thief, &c. if on the trial it be found for the defendant, Indictment may be brought forthwith to try the plaintiff for the felony. 2 Lill. 44. If a civil action of trover be brought for goods taken, after recovery the party may be indicted for trespass or felony, for the same taking: but if the first prosecution had been criminal, as an Indictment for trespass, &c and the crime appears to be felony; there you cannot have verdict or judgment on the Indictment for trespass till the felony is tried, it being the inferior offence. Mod. Cas. 77.

It is said that trover lies not for goods stolen, until the offender is convicted, &c. on Indictment of felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 546. A parson may be indicted for preaching against the government of the church, the civil and ecclesiastical government being so incorporated together, that one cannot subsist without the other; and both center in the king; wherefore to speak against the church, is within the statute 13 Car. 2. Sid. 69: 2 Nels. Abr. 959. And a parson was indicted for pronouncing absolution to persons condemned for treason, at the place of execution, without shewing any repentance. 5 Mod. 363. Also a parson hath been indicted, and fined, &c. for drinking healths to the memory of traitors. 3 Mod. Rep. 52.

It is not an indictable offence to impede the public intercourse by delivering hand-bills in the streets. 1 Bur. 516. Nor to throw down skins into a public way, which accidentally occasions a personal injury. Stra. 190. Nor to kill a hare. Stra. 679. Nor can one be indicted for an offence made penal by statute, without it directs to whom the penalty is payable. Stra. 828. Nor for acting unqualified as a justice of peace. Cro. Jac. 643. Nor for entering a yard, erecting a shed, unthatching a house, or by numbers keeping another out of possession, if unattended with violence or riot, &c. 3 Burr. 1698, 1706, 1727, 1731. Nor for selling short measure. 1 Wils. 301: 3 Burr. 1697. Nor for excluding commoners by enclosing. Cro. Eliz. 90. Nor for an attempt to defraud, if neither by false tokens or conspiracy. Stra. 793, 866: 6 Mod. 105. Nor for secreting another. 2 Ld. Raym. 1368. Nor for bringing a bastard child into a parish. Stra. 644: 3 Burr. 1645: 2 Vez. 450; but see this Dictionary, titles Churchwardens; Bastard.

See further on the subject of Indictments at length. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25.

INDICTOR, He that indicteth another man for any offence; as indictee is the party that is indicted.

INDISTANTER, Without delay. Mat. Westm. Anno 1244.

INDIVISUM, What two persons hold in common without partition; as where it is said he holds pro indiviso, &c. Kitch. 241.

INDOLIS, A studious young man, or a youth. Mon. Angl. 3 tom. p. 120.

INDOMIT, Boisterous and ungovernable. Law Fr. Dictionary.

INDORSEMENT, Indorsamentum.] Any thing written on the back side of a deed; thus, receipts for consideration-money, and the sealing and delivery, &c. on the back of deeds, are called Indorsements. West Symb. par. 2. s. 157. On sealing of a bond any thing may be indorsed or subscribed upon the back thereof, as part of the condition, and the Indorsement and that shall stand together. Moor, 679. See titles Bond; Condition. There is also an Indorsement of bills or notes, of what part thereof is paid, and when, &c. And in another sense it is a writing a man's name only on the back of bills of exchange, &c. See title Bills of Exchange.

INDOWMENT. See Endowment.

INDUCEMENT, What is alleged as a motive or incitement to a thing; the term is used specially in several cases, viz. Inducement to actions, to a traverse in pleadings, a fact or offence committed, &c. Inducements to actions need not have so much certainty as in other cases: a general indebitatus is not sufficient, where it is the ground of the action; but where it is but the Inducement to the action, as in consideration of forbearing a debt till such a day, (for that the parties are agreed upon the debt,) this being but a collateral promise, is good without shewing how due. Cro. Jac. 548: 2 Mod. 70.

A man ought to induce his traverse when he denies the title of another, because he should not deny it till he shew some colourable title in himself; for if the title traversed be found naught, and no colour of right appears for him who traversed, there can be no judgment given: but an Inducement cannot be traversed, because that would be a traverse after a traverse, and quitting a man's own pretence of title, and falling upon another. Cro. 265, 266: 3 Salk. 357. An Inducement to a traverse must be such matter as is good and justifiable in law. Cro. Eliz. 829. There is an Inducement to a justification, when what is alleged against it is not the substance of the plea, &c. Cro. Jac. 138: Moor 847: 2 Nels. Abr. 986. See title Pleading.

INDUCTION, Inductio. i. e. a leading into.] The giving a Parson possession of his church: after the bishop hath granted institution, he issues out his mandate to the archdeacon to induct the clerk, who thereupon either does it personally, or usually commissions some neighbouring clergyman for that purpose; which is compared to livery and seisin, as it is a putting the minister in actual possession of the church, and of the glebe lands, which are the temporalities of it. This Induction is done in the following manner: one of the clergymen commissioned takes the parson to be inducted by the hand, lays it on the key of the church, and pronounces these words; By virtue of this commission, I induct you into the real and actual possession of the rectory of, &c. with all its appurtenances. Then he opens the church door, and puts the parson into possession thereof, who commonly tolls a bell, &c. and thereby shews and gives notice to the people that he hath taken corporal possession of the said church: if the key of the church door cannot be had, the clerk to be inducted may lay his hand on the ring of the door, the latch of the church-gate, on the church-wall, &c. and either of these are sufficient: also Induction may be made by delivery of a clod, or turf of the glebe, &c. Ordinarily the bishop is to direct his mandate to the archdeacon, as being the person who ought to induct or give possession unto the clerks instituted to any churches within his archdeaconry: but it is said, the bishop may direct his mandate to any other clergyman to make Induction. See stat. 38 Ed. 3. st. 2. cap. 3. And by prescription, others as well as archdeacons may make Inductions. Pars. Counsel. 8. See 1 Comm. 391.

An Induction made by the patron of the church, is void; but bishops and archdeacons may induct a clerk to the benefices of which they are patrons, by prescription, &c. 11 H. 4. 7. The dean and chapter of cathedral churches are to induct prebends; though it hath been held, if the bishop doth induct a prebend, it may be good at the common law. 11 Hen. 4. 7: 11 Hen. 6. In some places a prebend shall be in possession, without any Induction: as at Westminster, where the king makes collation by his letters patent. If the king grants one of his free chapels, the grantee shall be put in possession by the sheriff of the county, and not by the bishop.

But no Induction is necessary to a donative, where the patron by donation in writing puts the clerk into possession, without presentation, &c. 11 Hen. 4. 7. If the authority of the person who made the mandate for Induction, determines by death or removal, before the clerk is inducted, the Induction afterwards will be void; as where, before it is executed, a new bishop is consecrated, &c. But if the archbishop, during the vacancy of a see, as guardian of the spiritualities, issue a mandate to induct a clerk to a church, it is good though not executed before there is a new bishop. 2 Lev. 299: 1 Ventr. 309.

Induction is a temporal act; and if the archdeacon refuse to induct a parson, or to grant a commission to others to do it, action on the case lies against him, on which damages shall be recovered; he may likewise be compelled, by sentence in the Ecclesiastical Court, to induct the clerk, and shall answer the contempt. 12 Rep. 128.

It is Induction which makes the parson complete incumbent, and fixes the freehold in him; and a church is full by Induction, which cannot be avoided but by quare impedit at common law. 4 Rep. 79: Plowd. 529: Hob. 15. A bishop sued in the court of audience, to repeal an institution, after Induction had, and a prohibition was granted; because an institution is not examinable in the Spiritual Court after Induction, but then a quare impedit lies. Moor 860. It is not the admission and but the Induction to a second benefice, which makes the first void, in case of pluralities, &c. Moor 12. See this Dictionary, title Advowson II; Parson.

INDULGENCES, According to the doctrine of the Romish church, all the good works of the Saints, over and above those which were necessary towards their own justification, together with the infinite merits of Jesus Christ, are deposited in one inexhaustible treasury. The keys of this were committed to St. Peter, and to his successors the Popes, who may open it at pleasure, and by transferring a portion of this superabundant merit to any particular person, for a sum of money, may convey to him either the pardon of his own sins, or a release for any one in whom he is interested, from the pains of purgatory. Such Indulgences were first invented in the eleventh century by Urban II. Robertson's Char. V. ii. 79. See the stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 21. sec. 27.; and this Dictionary, titles Rome; Papists.

IN ESSE, In being.] The learned make this distinction between things in esse and in posse; as a thing that is not, but may be, they say is in posse, or in potentiâ; but what is apparent and visible, they allege is in esse, viz. that it has a real being, whereas the other is casual, and but a possibility. A child, before he is born, is a thing in posse; after he is born, and for many legal purposes after he is conceived, he is said to be in esse, or actual being. See titles Posthumous Children; Limitation; Estates; Wills, &c.

INEWARDUS, Inwardus.] A guard, a watchman, one set to keep watch and ward. Lib. Domesday. Chenth. Heref.

INFALISTATUS, This word occurs only in Ralph de Hengham, Summa parva, cap. 3, recapitulating the several punishments for felony. Mr. Selden, in his notes on that author, says, "It appears that several "customs of places made in those days capital punish- "ments several. But what is Infalistatus? In regard of "its being a custom used in a port-town, I suppose it was "made out of the Fr. word falize, which is fine sand by "the water side, or a bank of the sea. In this sand "or bank it seems their execution at Dover was." The elaborate Du Fresne condemns this derivation and this sense of the word, but yet gives no better. Therefore (till we have more authority) we may conclude that infalistatus did imply some capital punishment inflicted flicted on the sands or sea-shore: perhaps infalistatio was exposing the malefactor to be laid bound upon the sands, till the next full tide carried him away; of which custom, there is some dark tradition. The penalty took its name from the Norman falese, falesia, which signified not only the sands, but rather the rocks and cliffs adjoining or impending on the sea-shore. Cowel. See the like use of falesia in Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 165. b.

INFAMY, Which extends to forgery, perjury, gross cheats, &c. disables a man to be a witness, or juror; but a pardon of crimes restores a person's credit to make him a good evidence. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 46. s. 19. Judgment of the pillory induces Infamy by the common law; but, by the civil and canon law, if the cause for which the person was convicted was not infamous, it infers no Infamy. 3 Lev. 426. See titles Evidence; Witness.

INFANGTHEF, INFANGENETHEOF, from Sax. Fang or Fangen, i. e. capere, and Theof, Fur.] A privilege or liberty granted unto lords of certain manors, to judge any thief taken within their fee. Bract. lib. 3. c. 35. In some antient charters, it appears that the thief should be taken in the lordship, and with the goods stolen, otherwise the lord had not jurisdiction to try him in his court; though by the laws of king Edward the Confessor, he was not restrained to his own people or tenants, but might try any man who was thus taken in his manor: it is true afterwards, the word infangthef signified Latro captus in terra alicujus seisitus de aliquo Latrocinio de suis propriis hominibus. See stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 15. The franchises of infangthef and outfangthef, to be heard and determined in court-barons, are antiquated, and long since gone. 2 Inst. 31. The word is sometimes preceded by an H.

INFANT, Infans.] A person under twenty-one years of age; whose acts are in many cases either void, or voidable. Co. Lit. lib. 1. cap. 21: lib. 2. cap. 28.

I. The several Ages distinguished by Law for various Purposes.
II. Who are subject to, or free from, the Incapacities of Minors; and how far the Law regards Infants in ventre sa mere.
III. Of the Trial of Infancy.
IV. Of what Offices, Trusts, and Functions an Infant is capable.
V. What an Infant may do for his own Advantage; how far his Acts are good, void, or voidable, &c. Of Contracts for Necessaries, Judicial Acts, and Acts in Pais.

I. Though a person is stiled in law an Infant, till attaining the age of twenty-one years, which is termed his full age, yet there are many actions which he may do before that age, and for which various times or ages are appointed. Thus, a Male at twelve years old may take the oath of allegiance; at fourteen he is at years of discretion, and therefore may disagree or consent to marriage; may choose his guardian; and if his discretion be actually proved, may make his testament of his personal estate; at seventeen may be an executor; and at twenty-one is at his own disposal, and may alien his lands, goods, and chattels. A Female also, at seven years of age may be betrothed or given in marriage; at nine is entitled to dower; at twelve is at years of maturity, and therefore may consent or disagree to marriage, and if proved to have sufficient discretion, may bequeath her personal estate; at fourteen is at years of legal discretion, and may choose a guardian; at seventeen may be executrix; and at twenty one may dispose of herself and her lands: so that full age, in male or female, is twenty-one years; which age is completed on the day preceding the anniversary of a person's birth. Salk. 44. 625: Ld. Raym. 480, 1096: 1 Bro. P. C. 468. (8vo. edit.) Toner v. Sansam. If, therefore, one is born on the 1st of January, he is of age to do any legal act on the morning of the last day of December, though he may not have lived twenty-one years by near forty-eight hours; the reason is, that in law there is no fraction of a day, and if the birth were on the first second of one day, and the act on the last second of the other, then twenty-one years would be complete; and in law it is the same, whether a thing is done upon one moment of the day or another: and hence probably originated the distinction of a year and a day, &c. by which is meant a year complete in common acceptation.

From the observations made on the daily actions of Infants, as to their arriving at discretion, the laws and customs of every country have fixed upon particular periods, on which they are presumed capable of acting [illegible] reason and discretion; in our law the full age of [illegible] or woman is twenty-one years. 3 New Abr. 118.

Therefore, if one under the age of twenty one years makes his will, and thereby devises his lands, and after attains the age of twenty-one years, and dies, without making a new publication thereof, this devise is void. Dyer 143: Raym. 84: 1 Sid. 162.

Though a person under the age of twenty-one cannot directly dispose of his lands, yet as one under that age may (pursuant to the statute of 12 Car. 2. cap. 24,) dispose of the custody of his infant child, it is said, such disposition draws after it the land, &c. as incident to the custody. Vaugh. 178.

The reason why an Infant male at fourteen, and female at twelve, may dispose of their personal estate at those ages is, that the common law has appointed no time, being a matter cognizable in the Spiritual Court, which herein proceeds according to the civil law; by which law, Infants at those ages are presumed to have sufficient discretion to make such disposition; therefore their testaments in these cases are not to be set aside, or controlled in Chancery, or the temporal courts. 2 Mod. 315: 2 Jones 210: Comb. 50: 1 Vern. 469: Preced. Chan. 316.

Though the age of consent to a marriage in an Infant male is fourteen, and in a female twelve; yet they may marry before, and if they agree thereto when they attain these ages, the marriage is good; but they cannot disagree before then; and if one of them be above the age of consent, and the other under such age, the party so above the age may as well disagree as the other; for both must be bound, or neither. Co. Lit. 33, 78, 79. 2 Inst. 434: 3 Inst. 88, 89: 6 Co. 22: 7 Co. 43: 1 Rol. Abr. 340, 341.

But though the party above age may as well disagree as the other, yet it is said that the party cannot do it before the other arrives at the proper age: also it is said to have been adjudged, that if a man marries a woman that is within the age of twelve years, and after the woman at eleven years of age disagrees to the marriage, and after the husband takes another wife, and hath hath issue by her, that this is a bastard; for the first marriage continues notwithstanding the disagreement of the woman; for she cannot disagree within the age of twelve years, and so her disagreement is void. Co. Lit. 79: 1 Rol. Abr. 341.

If a man marries a woman who is within the age of twelve years, and after the feme covert within the age of consent disagrees to the marriage, and after the age of twelve years marries another, the first marriage is absolutely dissolved, so that he may take another wife; for though the disagreement within the age of consent was not sufficient, yet her taking another husband, after the age of consent, affirms the disagreement, and so the marriage avoided ab initio. 1 Rol. Abr. 341.

See the case of Mr. Fitzgerrard, Lord Decius, and Mr. Villers, 3 New Abr. 119, 120. See also, 1 Inst. 33: 1 Rol. Abr. 340: Dyer 369: Moor 575: 1 Rol. Abr. 341: 1 Inst. 79: 7 Co. Keen's case: 6 Co. Ambrosia George's case: 7 H. 6. 11: 6 Co. 22.

At common law an Infant at fourteen was out of ward of guardian in socage, to choose a guardian; and at fifteen to have had aid pur fair Fitz Chevalier. Co. Lit. 98. b: Hob. 225.

The authority of a guardian in socage, ceases at the age of fourteen, at which age the Infant may call his guardian to an account, and may choose a new guardian. Lit sect. 103; Co. Lit. 75: 2 Inst. 135.

One within the age of twenty-one years may do homage, but not fealty; because, in doing of fealty he ought to be sworn, which an Infant cannot be. Co. Lit. 65. b: 2 Inst. 11.

An Infant at the age of seventeen, may be a procurator as well as executor; and in this both the civil and common law agree. 5 Co. 29. b: Off. Ex. 307: 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 17.

Infancy is a good cause of refusal of a clerk; also by the statutes 13 Eliz. cap. 12, and 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4, none is to be admitted a deacon, unless he be twenty-three at least, nor a priest, unless he be twenty-four. Gibs. Cod. 168: 3 Mod. 67.

By the custom of gavelkind, an Infant at the age of fifteen is reckoned at full age to sell his lands; and this seems to have been taken from the civil law, which reckons fourteen the ætas pubertatis; for they reckoned that though the Infant had ended his years of guardianship at fourteen, yet he might not have completed his account with his guardian till the age of fifteen, and that was esteemed to be the age when he was completely out of guardianship; therefore at this age he was allowed to sell the lands descended to him: but in this the customs of England differ from the civil law; for the civil law does not allow of this disposition till the age of twenty-five; therefore this must have been allowed by the old Saxon law, because they thought that much time was lost, if the Infant could only use his own estate without being able to dispose of it in a way of traffick, or in marriage, till twenty-five; therefore they allowed the Infant to sell (but under great limitations and restrictions, that he might not be defrauded); and by this means they thought there was sufficient provision made for the necessity of commerce. Lamb. 624, 625. See title Gavelkind.

Also by custom in some places, an Infant seised of lands in socage may, at the age of fifteen years, make a lease for years, which shall bind him after he comes of age; for the custom makes fifteen his full age to that purpose. Co. Lit. 45. b.

Also, by the custom of London, an Infant unmarried, and above the age of fourteen, if under twenty-one, may bind himself apprentice to a freeman of London, by indenture with proper covenants; which covenants, by the custom of London, shall be as binding as if he were of full age. Moor 134: 2 Bulst. 192: 2 Rol. Rep. 305: Palm. 361: 1 Mod. 271. See stats. 5 Eliz. c. 4: 43 Eliz. c. 2: and this Dictionary, title Apprentice.

In Criminal Cases, the law of England does in some cases privilege an Infant under the age of twenty-one, as to common misdemeanors, so as to escape fine, imprisonment, and the like; and particularly in cases of omission, as not repairing a bridge, or a highway, and other similar offences; for, not having the command of his fortune till twenty-one, he wants the capacity to do those things which the law requires. But where there is any notorious breach of the peace, a riot, battery, or the like, (which Infants when full-grown, are at least as liable as others to commit,) for these an Infant above the age of fourteen is equally liable to suffer, as a person of the full age of twenty-one. 1 Hal. P. C. 20, 21, 22.

With regard to capital crimes, the law is still more minute and circumspect, distinguishing with greater nicety the several degrees of age and discretion. By the antient Saxon law the age of twelve years was established for the age of possible discretion, when first the understanding might open. L. L. Athelstan, Wilk. 65. From thence till the offender was fourteen, it was ætas pubertati proxima, in which he might or might not be guilty of a crime, according to his natural capacity or incapacity. This was the dubious stage of discretion: but, under twelve, it was held that he could not be guilty in will, neither after fourteen could he be supposed innocent of any capital crime which he in fact committed. But by the law as it now stands, and has stood at least ever since the time of Edward III, the capacity of doing ill, or contracting guilt, is not so much measured by years and days, as by the strength of the delinquent's understanding and judgment. For one lad of eleven years old may have as much cunning as another of fourteen; and in these cases our maxim is, that "malitia supplet ætatem." Under seven years of age indeed an infant cannot be guilty of felony; Mir. c. 4. § 16: 1 Hal. P. C. 27: Plowd. 19: for then, by presumption in law, he cannot have discretion; and, in fact, a felonious discretion is almost an impossibility in nature, and no averment shall be received against that presumption; but at eight years old he may be guilty of felony. Dalt. Just. c. 147. Also, under fourteen, though an Infant shall be primâ facie adjudged to be doli incapax; yet if it appear to the court and jury that he was doli capax, and could discern between good and evil, he may be convicted and suffer death. Thus a girl of thirteen has been burnt for killing her mistress; and one boy of ten, and another of nine years old, who had killed their companions, have been sentenced to death, and he of ten years actually hanged, because it appeared upon their trials, that the one hid himself, and the other hid the body he had killed; which hiding manifested a consciousness of guilt, and a discretion to discern discern between good and evil. 1 Hal. P. C. 26, 7. And there was once an instance, where a boy of eight years old was tried at Abingdon for firing two barns: and, it appearing that he had malice, revenge, and cunning, he was found guilty, condemned, and hanged accordingly. Emlyn on 1 Hal. P. C. 25. Thus also, at the assizes for Bury, in the year 1748, one William York, a boy of ten years old was convicted on his own confession of murdering his bed-fellow; there appearing in his whole behaviour plain tokens of a mischievous discretion; and, as sparing this boy merely on account of his tender years might be of dangerous consequence to the public, by propagating a notion that children might commit such atrocious crimes with impunity, it was unanimously agreed by all the Judges, that he was a proper subject of capital punishment. Foster, 72. But, in all such cases, the evidence of that malice, which is to supply age, ought to be strong and clear beyond all doubt and contradiction. 4 Comm. 22, 24.

Lord Hale lays down the following further cautions on this subject:

If the party be above twelve, though under fourteen, and appears to be doli capax, and could discern between good and evil at the time of the offence committed, he may be convicted, and undergo judgment and execution of death, though he hath not attained the age of fourteen; but herein, according to the nature of the offence and circumstances of the case, the Judge may, or may not, in discretion reprieve him, before or after judgment, in order to obtain the king's pardon. If an Infant be above seven, and under twelve years, and commit a capital offence, primâ facie he is to be judged not guilty, and to be found so; because he is supposed not of discretion to judge between good and evil: yet if it appear, by strong and pregnant evidence and circumstances, that he had discretion to judge between good and evil, judgment of death may be given against him; for malitia supplet ætatem; but herein the circumstances must be inquired of by the jury, and the Infant is not to be convict upon his confession: also herein, my Lord Hale says, that it is prudent after conviction to respite judgment, or at least execution; but that if he be convicted the Judge cannot discharge, but only reprieve him from judgment, and leave him in custody till the king's pleasure be known. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 26, 27.

II. The privilege or incapacity of Infancy does not extend to the King; for the political rules of government have thought it necessary, that he who is to govern the whole kingdom should never be considered as a minor, incapable of governing himself and his affairs. Co. Lit. 43: Dyer 209. b.

Therefore if the King within age make any lease or grant, he is bound presently, and cannot avoid them, either during his minority, or when he comes of full age. Plowd. 213. a: 5 Co. 27: 7 Co. 12. So, if the king aliens land which he had by descent from his mother, he shall not defeat it, by reason that he was within age at the time of the alienation; for his body politic, which is annexed to his body natural, takes away the imbecility of the natural body, and draws it, and all the effects thereof, to itself; quia magis dignum trahit ad se minus dignum. See Plowd. 213, 14.

So if the King consent to an act of parliament during his minority, yet he cannot after avoid this act; because the king, as king, cannot be a minor; for as king he is a body politic. Co. Litt. 43: 1 Roll. Abr. 728.

Also the acts of a mayor, and commonalty, shall not be avoided, by reason of the nonage of the mayor. Cro. Car. 557: 5 Co. 27.

Although a duke, earl, or the like, be but a minor, or not above ten years of age, in the custody and in the family of another nobleman, who may and doth retain chaplains, yet he may qualify chaplains to hold two benefices with cure, as if he was of full age. 4 Co. 119.

An Infant in gavelkind shall have his age, and all other privileges of the Infant at common law; because though he hath the privilege of alienation at fifteen, yet that doth not take from him any privilege he had before at common law. 1 Rol. Abr. 144.

A bastard being impleaded shall have his age: for the dilatory plea must be determined before the pleas in chief can come on; so that the plea of infancy will stay the suit before it can be inquired, whether he is or is not a bastard. Co. Litt. 244. b.

An Infant in ventre sa mere, or in the mother's womb, is supposed in law, to be born for many purposes. It is capable of having a legacy, or, a surrender of a copyhold estate made to it. (See Post this division.) It may have a guardian assigned to it; and it is enabled to have an estate limited to its use, and to take afterwards by such limitation, as if it were then actually born. Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 16: 1 Comm. 130. See this Dictionary, title Posthumous Children.

A child in ventre sa mere may be appointed executor; also if there are two or more at a birth, they shall be joint executors, or joint legatees of the thing bequeathed. Godolph. Orph. Leg. 102.

If there be bastard eigne and mulier puisne, and the bastard enters, and dies seised, his issue shall inherit the lands, and exclude the mulier for ever; but in this case if the bastard had died leaving issue in ventre sa mere, and the mulier had entered, and then a son is born, yet he cannot enter upon the mulier: herein our law differs from the civil law: for our law requires an immediate descent, which cannot be before the person is in esse; also by our law the freehold cannot be in abeyance. Co. Litt. 244.

A devise of lands to an Infant in ventre sa mere is good, and the freehold shall not be in abeyance, but shall descend to the heir at law in the mean time. Though formerly it was doubted. Vide 11 Hen. 6. 13: Bro. Devise 32: Moor 177, 637: 2 Bulst. 273: Cro. Eliz. 423: 1 Lev. 135: 1 Sid. 153: Raym. 163: 1 Keb. 85: 1 Salk. 231: 2 Mod. 9.

However all the books agree, that a devise to an Infant when he shall be born, or when God shall give him birth, is good, as an executory devise, and that the freehold shall descend to the heir at law in the mean time. 1 Sid. 153: 1 Lev. 135: Raym. 163. S. C. Snow v. Cutler. It may be devised to trustees.

So it is clear, that if land be devised for life, the remainder to a posthumous child, that this is a good contingent remainder; because there is a person in being to take the particular estate; and if the contingent remainder vests during the continuance of the particular estate, estate, or eo instante that it determines, it is sufficient. Moor. 637: 3 Lev. 408: 4 Mod. 359: 1 Salk. 227: Carth. 309. See this Dictionary, titles Remainder; Estate; Posthumous Child; Executory Devise.

Also it seems agreed, that a man may surrender copyhold lands immediately to the use of an Infant in ventre sa mere; for a surrender is a thing executory, and nothing vests before admittance; and therefore, if there be a person to take at the time of the admittance, it is sufficient, and not like a grant at common law, which putting the estate out of the grantor must be void, if there be nobody to take. 1 Roll. Rep. 109, 138: 2 Bulst. 273: Co. Copyh. 9; and see Moor 637.

If an usurpation be had on one in ventre sa mere; at the next turn after his birth, he shall be relieved on the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 5: Hob. 240.

An Infant in ventre sa mere may have a distributive share of intestate property even with the half blood. 1 Ves 81. It is capable of taking a devise of land. See ante and 2 Atk. 117: 1 Freem. 244, 293. It takes, under a marriage settlement, a provision made for children living at the death of the father. 1 Ves. 85. And it has lately been decided, that marriage, and the birth of a posthumous child, amount to a revocation of a will executed previous to the marriage. 5 Term. Rep. 49. It takes land by descent, though, in that case, the presumptive heir may enter and receive the profits for his own use till the birth of the child, which seems to be the only interest it loses by its situation. 3 Wils. 526. See this Dictionary, titles Descent; Posthumous Children.

III. INFANCY is to be tried by inspection of the court, or by jury: and herein it is laid down as a rule in some books, that wheresoever it is alleged upon the pleading, that the party was and yet is under age, there it shall be tried by inspection; but where the Infant is of full age at the time of the plea, there it shall be tried per pais. 1 Lev. 142: 1 Sid. 321: 1 Keb. 796: Cro. Jac. 59, 581.

But as to judicial acts, or acts done by an Infant in a court of record, and which he is allowed to avoid, the trial thereof must be by inspection; therefore if an Infant levies a fine, he must reverse it by writ of error: and this must be brought during his minority, that the court may by inspection determine the age of the Infant. Co. Lit. 380: Moor 76: 2 Rol. Abr. 15: 2 Inst. 483: 2 Bulst. 320: 12 Co. 122.

If an Infant brings a writ of error to reverse a fine for his nonage, and, after inspection and proof of infancy by witnesses, dies before the fine is reversed, his heir may reverse it; because the court having recorded the nonage of the cognizor, ought to vacate his contract when he appeared to be under a disability at the time he entered into it. Co. Lit. 380: Moor. 884.

An Infant acknowledged a fine, and the cognizees omitting to have the fine ingrossed till he came of age, in order to prevent the infant from bringing a writ of error; yet the court upon view of the conuzance produced by the Infant, and upon his prayer to be inspected and his age examined, recorded his nonage, to give him the benefit of his writ of error, which he must otherwise lose, his nonage determining before the next term. Moor 189; & vide Cro. Jac. 230, 1.

So if an Infant suffer a common recovery by appearing in person, this must be reversed during his minority by inspection of the Judges. But it is said, that if an Infant suffers a recovery, in which he appears by attorney, he may reverse it after his full age, as it may be discovered whether he was within age when the recovery was suffered; because it may be tried per pais whether the warrant of attorney was made by him when he was an Infant. 1 Sid. 321; 1 Lev. 142.

It is said, that in all cases where the party pleads that he was within age at B. and alleges a place, that there the trial may be well enough where it is alleged; where no place is alleged, there, in personal actions, where the writ is brought; and in real actions where the right of the land depends upon infancy, there the trial is to be where the land lies, and if not, where the action is brought. Skin. 10, 11: Cro. Eliz. 818. S. P.

In case of a suit to reverse a fine for nonage of the cognizor, or to set aside a statute or recognizance entered into by an Infant; here, and in other cases of the like sort, a writ shall issue to the sheriff, commanding him that he constrain the said party to appear, that it may be ascertained by the view of his body by the king's justices, whether he be of full age or not; per aspectum corporis sui constare poterit justiciariis nostris prædictus A sit plenæ ætatis necne." 9 Rep. 31. This question of nonage was formerly, according to Glanvil, (l. 13. c. 15,) tried by a jury of eight men; though now it is tried by inspection. If however the court has, upon inspection, any doubt of the age of the party, (as may frequently be the case,) it may proceed to take proofs of the fact, by witnesses, church books, &c.; and particularly, may examine the Infant himself upon an oath of voire dire (veritatem dicere), that is, to make true answer to such questions as the court shall demand of him, or the court may examine his mother, his godfather, or the like. 2 Roll. Abr. 573.

IV. AN INFANT it seems, is capable of such offices as do not concern the administration of justice, but only require skill and diligence; and there he may either exercise them himself when of the age of discretion, or they may be exercised by deputy; such as the offices of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, &c. Plowd. 379, 381: 9 Co. 48, 97: See title Offices.

But it is said, that an Infant is not capable of the stewardship of a manor, or of the stewardship of the courts of a bishop; because by intendment of law he hath not sufficient knowledge, experience, and judgment to use the office, and also because he cannot make a deputy. Co. Lit. 3. b: 1 Rol. Abr. 731: 2 Rol. Abr. 153: March 41, 43: Cro. Eliz. 636: Cro. Car. 556.

An Infant cannot be an attorney, bailiff, factor, or receiver. F. N. B. 118: 1 Rol. Abr. 117: Co. Lit. 172: Cro. Eliz. 637. An Infant cannot exercise an office in a corporation. Hardw. 8, 9.

An Infant cannot be a common informer; for stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5, directs that such shall sue in proper person, or by attorney, which an Infant cannot do. Bull. N. P. 196.

As to Infants being witnesses, there seems to be no fixed time in which children are excluded from giving evidence; but it will depend in a great measure on the sense and understanding of the child, as it shall appear on examination in court. See Bull. N. P. 293. And, where they are admitted, concurrent testimony seems peculiarly desirable. 4 Comm. 214.

If an Infant, being master of a ship at St. Christopher's beyond sea, by contract with another, undertakes to carry certain goods from St. Christopher's to England, and there to deliver them; but does not afterwards deliver them according to agreement, but wastes and consumes them, he may be sued for the goods in the court of Admiralty, though he be an Infant; for this suit is but in nature of a detinue, or trover and conversion at the common law. 1 Rol. Abr. 530.

If an Infant keeps a common inn, an action on the case upon the custom of inns will not lie against him. 1 Rol. Abr. 2. cited Carth. 161.

So if an Infant draws a bill of exchange, yet he shall not be liable on the custom of merchants, but he may plead infancy in the same manner that he may to any other contract of his. Carth. 160. Or he may in this, as in all cases, give it in evidence on the general issue, but the fairest way is to plead it. Bull. N. P. 152. An Infant cannot be a juror. Hob. 325.

An Infant, or one under the age of twenty-one years, cannot be elected a member of the House of Commons; nor can any lord of parliament sit there until he be of the full age of twenty-one years. 2 Inst. 47. See title Parliament. As to Infant trustees, see Post V.

If an Infant be lord of a manor, he may grant copyholds, notwithstanding his nonage; for these estates do not take their perfection from the interest or ability of the lord to grant, but from the custom of the manor by which they have been demised, and are demisable time out of mind. 4 Co. 23. b: Co. Copyholder 79, 107: Noy 41: 8 Co. 65.

An Infant may present to a church; and here it is said, that this must be done by himself, of whatsoever age he be, and cannot be done by his guardian, for the guardian can make no advantage thereof, consequently has nothing therein whereby he can give an account, therefore the Infant himself shall present. Co. Lit. 17. b. 89. a: 29 Ed. 3. 5: 3 Inst. 156.

V. Infants have various privileges, and various disabilities; but their very disabilities are privileges, in order to secure them from hurting themselves, by their own improvident acts. An Infant cannot be sued but under the protection, and joining the name of his guardian; for he is to defend him against all attacks as well by law as otherwise; but he may sue either by his guardian, or prochein amy, his next friend who is not his guardian. Co. Litt. 135. This prochein amy may be any person who will undertake the Infant's cause; and it frequently happens, that an infant, by his prochein amy, institutes a suit against a fraudulent guardian.

With regard to estates and civil property, an Infant hath many privileges, which will be better understood on farther investigation: but this may be said in general, that an Infant shall lose nothing by non claim or neglect of demanding his right; nor shall any other laches or negligence be imputed to an Infant, except in some very particular cases; viz. in case of a fine where the time begins in the life of the ancestor; or of an appeal of death of his ancestor, where he brings not his appeal within a year and a day, &c. 1 Inst. 246, 380: Wood's Inst. 13. Laches shall prejudice an Infant, if he presents not to a church in six months. Lit. 402. It is generally true, that an Infant can neither alien his lands, nor do any legal act, nor make a deed, nor indeed any manner of contract that will bind him. But still to all these rules there are some exceptions; part have been mentioned (see Ante I.) in reckoning up the different capacities which they assume at different ages; and there are others, a few of which when mentioned will serve as a general specimen of the whole. And, first, it is true, that Infants cannot alien their estates; but Infant trustees, or mortgagees, are enabled to convey, under the direction of the Court of Chancery or Exchequer, or other courts of equity, the estates they hold in trust or mortgage, to such person as the court shall appoint. Stats. 7 Ann. c. 19: 4 Geo. 3. c. 16. An Infant also may purchase lands, but his purchase is incomplete, for, when he comes to age, he may either agree or disagree to it, as he thinks prudent and proper, without alleging any reason; and so may his heirs after him, if he dies without having completed his agreement. Co. Litt. 2. It is farther generally true, that an Infant under twenty-one can make no deed but what is afterwards voidable; yet in some cases he may bind himself apprentice by deed indented, or indentures for seven years; and he may by deed or will appoint a guardian to his children, if he has any. See stats. 5 Eliz. c. 4: 43 Eliz. c. 2: Cro. Car. 179: stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24: and this Dictionary, titles Apprentice; Guardian. See also, stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. § 5; as to Infants contracting to serve in the plantations.

To enter more particularly into the subject.—An Infant is capable of inheriting, for the law presumes him capable of property; also an Infant may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and the freehold is in him till he disagree thereto; because an agreement is presumed, it being for his benefit, and because the freehold cannot be in the grantor contrary to his own act, nor can be in abeyance, for then a stranger would not know against whom to demand his right; and if at his full age the Infant agrees to the purchase, he cannot afterwards avoid it; but if he dies during his minority, his heirs may avoid it; for they shall not be bound by the contracts of a person who wanted capacity to contract. Co. Lit. 2, 8: 2 Inst. 203.

If an Infant take a lease for years rendering rent; if he enter upon the land he shall be charged with an action during his minority, because the purchase is intended for his benefit; but he may waive the term, and not enter, and if more rent be reserved upon the lease than the land is worth, he may avoid it. 2 Bulst. 69. If an Infant make a lease for years with remainder over, rendering rent, and, at full age, accepts the rent of the tenant for years, this shall be an assent to him in remainder, so that he shall not oust him after. Plowd. 546.

As to Contracts for necessaries, made by Infants, it is to be observed that, (strictly speaking,) all contracts made by Infants, are either void or voidable; because a contract is the act of the understanding, which during their state of infancy they are presumed to want; yet civil societies have so far supplied that defect, and taken care of them, as to allow them to contract for their benefit and advantage, with power, in most cases, to recede from and vacate it, when it may prove prejudicial to them; but in this contract for necessaries they are absolutely bound, and this likewise is in benignity to Infants, for if they were not allowed to bind themselves for necessaries nobody would trust them, in which case they would be in worse circumstances than persons of full age. 10 H. 6. 14: 18 Ed. 4. 2: 1 Rol. Abr. 729.

Therefore it is clearly agreed, that an Infant may bind himself to pay for his necessary meat, drink, apparel, physick, and such other necessaries, and likewise for his good teaching and instruction, whereby he may profit himself afterwards. Co. Lit. 172. a. &c. This binding means by parol: in fact, for necessaries, if there is not an actual promise the law implies a promise, but the Infant will not be bound by any bond, note, or bill, which he gives, though for necessaries, therefore a tradesman's best security will be the actual or implied promise. With respect to schooling, &c. it must be in cases where the credit was given, bona fide, to the Infant. But where an Infant is sub potestate parentis, and living in the house with his parents, he shall not then be liable even for necessaries. 2 Black. Rep. 1325.

It must appear that the things were actually necessary, and of reasonable prices, and suitable to the Infant's degree and estate, which regularly must be left to the jury; but if the jury find that the things were necessaries, and of reasonable price, it shall be presumed they had evidence for what they thus find; and they need not find particularly what the necessaries were, nor of what price each thing was; also if the plaintiff declares for other things, as well as necessaries, or alleges too high a price for those things that are necessary, the jury may consider of those things that were really necessaries, and of their intrinsick value, and proportion their damages accordingly. Cro. Jac. 360: 2 Rol. Rep. 144: Poph. 151: Palm. 361: Goulf. 168: Godb. 219: 1 Leon. 114.

If an Infant promises another, that if he will find him meat, drink and washing, and pay for his schooling, that he will pay 7 l. yearly, an action upon the case lies upon this promise; for learning is as necessary as other things, and though it is not mentioned what learning this was, yet it shall be intended what was fit for him, till it be shewn to the contrary on the other part; and though he to whom the promise was made does not instruct him, but pays another for it, the promise of re-payment thereof is good; if it appears that the learning, meat, drink, and washing could not be afforded for a less sum than 7 l. 1 Rol. Abr. 729: Palm. 528: 1 Jon. 182.

Assumpsit, for labour and medicines in curing the defendant of a distemper, &c. who pleaded infancy; the plaintiff replied, it was for necessaries generally; and upon a demurrer to this replication it was objected, that the plaintiff had not assigned in certain how, or in what manner, the medicines were necessary: but it was adjudged, that the replication in this general form was good. Carth. 110.

If an Infant be a mercer, and hath a shop in a town, and there buys and sells, and contracts to pay a certain sum to J. S. for wares sold to him by J. S. to resell, yet he is not chargeable upon this contract, for this trading is not immediately necessary ad victum & vestitum; and if this were allowed, Infants might be infinitely prejudiced, and buy and sell, and live by the loss. 1 Rol. Abr. 729: Cro. Jac. 494: 2 Rol. Rep. 45.

And as the contract of an Infant for wares, for the necessary carrying on his trade, whereby he subsists, shall not bind him; so neither shall he be liable for money which he borrows to lay out for necessaries; therefore the lender must, at his peril, lay it out for him, or see that it is laid out in necessaries. 5 Mod. 368: 1 Salk. 386-7.

In debt upon a single bill, the defendant pleaded that he was within age; the plaintiff replied, that it was for necessaries, viz. 10 l. for clothes, and 15 l. money lent for and towards his necessary support at the university; the defendant rejoined, that the money was lent him to spend at pleasure; absque hoc, that it was lent him for necessaries; and issue hereupon was found for the plaintiff, who had judgment in C. B., but was reversed in B. R. on a writ of error; for the issue only being, whether this money was lent the Infant for necessaries, not whether it was laid out in necessaries, it cannot bind the Infant whichever way it is found; for it might have been borrowed for necessaries, and laid out in a tavern; and the law will not intrust the Infant with the application and laying of it out. 1 Salk. 386. See Contra as to a single bill given for necessaries; 1 Lev. 86: 1 Keb. 382, 416, 423. S. C: Co. Lit. 172. S. P: Sed qu? See post.

So if one lends money to an Infant, who actually lays it out in necessaries, yet this will not bind the Infant, nor subject him to an action; for it is upon the lending that the contract must arise, and after that time there could be no contract raised to bind the Infant, because after that he might waste the money, and the Infant's applying it afterwards for necessaries will not, by matter ex post facto, entitle the plaintiff to an action. 1 Salk. 279.

Although an Infant shall be liable for his necessaries, yet if he enters into an obligation with a penalty for payment thereof, this shall not bind him; for the entering into a penalty can be of no advantage to the Infant. Cro. Eliz. 290: Moor 679. pl. 929: Co. Lit. 172: 1 Rol. Abr. 729. But a bond or single bill for the exact amount of necessaries furnished will be valid. Esp. N. P. 164.

It is also said, that an Infant cannot either by parol-contract, or a deed, bind himself, even for necessaries, in a sum certain, and that should an Infant promise to give an unreasonable price for necessaries, that would not bind him; and that therefore it may be said that the contract of an Infant for necessaries, as a contract, does not bind him any more than his bond would; but only since an Infant must live as well as a man, the law gives a reasonable price to those who furnish him with necessaries. Cases in Law and Equity 85. And in a case where a warrant of attorney was given by an Infant and another, and judgment entered up thereon, the court on motion ordered the name of the Infant to be struck out, and set aside the judgment as against him. 2 Black. Rep. 1133.

If an Infant becomes indebted for necessaries, and the party takes a bond from the Infant, this shall not drown the simple contract, because the bond has no force. Cro. Eliz. 920.

But it is agreed, that an action on an account stated will not lie against an Infant, though it be for necessaries; for he not having discretion, is not to be liable to false accounts. Co. Lit. 172: Lamb. 169: Noy 87: 1 Term Rep. 40.

If an Infant comes to a stranger, who instructs him in learning, and boards him, there is an implied contract in law, that the party should be paid as much as his board and schooling are worth; but if the Infant at the time of his going thither was under the age of discretion, or if he he were placed there upon a ſpecial agreement with ſome of the child's friends, the party that boards him has no remedy againſt the Infant, but muſt reſort to them with whom he agreed for the Infant's board, &c. Allen 94.

Neceſſaries for an Infant's wife are neceſſaries for him; but if provided only in order for the marriage, he is not chargeable, though ſhe uſe them after. Stra. 168. An Infant ſhall be liable for the nurſing his child. Eſp. N. P. 161.

Debts contracted during infancy, form however a good conſideration to ſupport a promiſe made to pay them when a perſon is of full age. 2 Lev. 144: 2 Leon. 215. And where the defendant pleads infancy, and the plaintiff replies that the defendant confirmed the promiſe or contract when he was of age, the plaintiff need only prove the promiſe, and the defendant muſt diſcharge himſelf by proof of the infancy. 1 Term Rep. 648.

Though a promiſe by an Infant will not bind him unleſs for neceſſaries, yet he ſhall take advantage of any promiſe made to him, though the conſideration were his promiſe when an Infant. And an Infant plaintiff has been allowed to recover on mutual promiſes of marriage. Stra. 937.

As to Judicial Acts, and acts done by an Infant in a court of record, they regularly bind the Infant and his repreſentatives, with the following ſavings and exceptions; as if an Infant levies a Fine, though the Judges ought not to admit the acknowledgment of one under that diſability, yet having once recorded his agreement as the judgment of the court, it ſhall for ever bind him and hi repreſentatives, unleſs he reverſes it by writ of error, which muſt be brought by him during his minority, that the court by inſpection may determine his age. Co. Lit. 380: Moor 76: 2 Rol. Abr. 15: 2 Inſt. 483: 2 Bulſ. 320: 12 Co. 122: Yelv. 115: 3 Mod. 229.

So if an Infant levies a Fine, he is enabled by law to declare the uſes thereof, and if he reverſeth not the fine during his nonage, the declaration of uſes will ſtand good for ever; for though that be a matter in pais, and all ſuch acts an Infant may avoid at any time after his full age, if he do not conſent, yet being made in purſuance of the fine levied, which fine muſt ſtand good for ever, (unleſs reverſed in the manner as has been mentioned,) ſo will the declaration of uſes too. 2 Co. 58. a: 10 Co. 42: Moor 22: Dal. 47: 2 Leon. 159: Goulſ. 13: 1 Jones 390: Winch. 103.

If there be tenant for life, the remainder to an Infant in fee, and they two join in a fine, the Infant may bring a writ of error, and reverſe the fine as to himſelf; but it ſhall ſtand good as to the tenant for life; for the diſability of the Infant ſhall not render the contract of the tenant for life, who was of full age, ineffectual. 1 Leon. 115, 317: 2 Sid. 55: 2 Jones 182.

If an Infant brings a writ of error to reverſe a fine for his nonage, and his non-age, after inſpection, is recorded by the court, but before the fine reverſed he levies another fine to another, the ſecond fine ſhall hinder him from reverſing the firſt; becauſe the ſecond having entirely barred him of any right to the land, muſt alſo deprive him of all remedies which would reſtore him to the land. 1 Rol. Abr. 788. See Moor 74; and further this Dictionary, title Fine of Lands.

As to Recoveries ſuffered by Infants, when theſe were improved into a common way of conveyance, it was thought reaſonable that thoſe whom the law had judged incapable to act for their own intereſt, ſhould not be bound by the judgment given in recoveries, though it was the ſolemn act of the court; for where the defendant gives way to the judgment, it is as much his voluntary act and conveyance, as if he had transferred the land by livery, or any other act in pais; therefore if an Infant ſuffers a recovery, he may reverſe it, as he may a fine, by writ of error, during his minority: and this was formerly taken to be law, as well where the Infant appeared by guardian, as by his attorney, or in perſon: but now the diſtinction turns upon this point, that if an Infant ſuffers a recovery in perſon, it is erroneous, and he may reverſe it by writ of error; but even in this caſe the writ of error muſt be brought during his minority, that his infancy may be tried by the inſpection of the court; for at his full age it becomes obligatory and unavoidable: but in caſes of neceſſity the court has admitted the Infant to appear by guardian, and to ſuffer a recovery, or come in as a vouchee; but this, too, is ſeldom allowed by the court, unleſs upon emergencies, when it tends to the improvement of the Infant's affairs, or when lands of equal value have been ſettled on him, and when he has had the king's privy ſeal for that purpoſe; and thoſe recoveries have been allowed and ſupported by the Judges, and the Infant could not ſet them aſide; beſides, if ſuch recoveries be to the prejudice of the Infant, he has his remedy for it againſt his guardian, and may reimburſe himſelf out of his pocket to whom the law had committed the care of him. 1 Rol. Abr 731, 742: Co. Lit: 381. b: 2 Rol. Abr. 395: 10 Co. 43 a: Cro. El. 471: Hob. 196-7: Cro. Car. 307: 2 Bulſ. 235. 1 Sid. 321-2: 1 Lev. 142: 2 Saund. 94: 1 Vern. 461: 2 Salk. 567. See further this Dictionary, title Recovery.

Partition, by writ de partione faciendâ, binds Infants, becauſe by judgment in a court of juſtice, to which no partiality can be imputed. Co. Lit. 171. b.

If an Infant acknowledge a recognizance or ſtatute, it is only voidable; and the Infant at his peril muſt avoid them by auditâ querelâ, as he muſt a Fine or Recovery by writ of error, during his minority; for ſuch conveyances or other acts of record become obligatory and unavoidable, if they be not ſet aſide before the Infant comes of age; the reaſon is, becauſe theſe contracts being entered into under the inſpection of the Judge, (who is ſuppoſed to do right) the Infant cannot againſt them aver his diſability, but muſt reverſe them by a judgment of a ſuperior court, who, by inſpection has the ſame means to determine whether the inferior juriſdiction has done right, that firſt received the contract. Moor pl. 206: 2 Inſt. 483, 673: Co. Lit. 380: Keilw. 10: Reg. 149: 10 Co. 43. a.

If an Infant bargain and ſell his land by deed indented and inrolled, yet he may plead nonage; for notwithſtanding the ſtatute 27 Hen. 8. cap. 16, makes the inrolment in a court of record neceſſary to complete the conveyance; yet the bargainee claims by the deed as at common law, which was, and therefore is, ſtill defeaſible by non-age. 2 Inſt. 673.

An Infant confeſſed judgment in an action of debt brought againſt him; and it was held, audita querela did not not lie upon this judgment, though it would on a statute or recognisance; but the party ought to bring a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, by virtue of the statute 27 Eliz.: Moor 460. See 3 Salk. 196: 1 Inst. 233, 380: Moor 189. Where an Infant may levy a fine, he may declare the uses of it also by deed: and the Infant's declaration of uses shall be good and binding to the Infant and his heirs, so long as the fine continues unreversed. Hob. 224: 2 Leon. 193: 2 Rep. 58: 10 Rep. 42. It was formerly held that an Infant appearing by guardian, could not suffer a Common Recovery, 10 Rep. 42; though it hath since been allowed in many cases, and by all the Judges, that an Infant may suffer a common recovery by guardian, and he shall not avoid it; for by intendment he shall have recompence in value; and if it is not for the good of the Infant, he may have recompence over against his guardian. 2 Danv. Abr. 772. A common recovery may be had against an Infant, being examined solely & secretly; and he may suffer a recovery by guardian in open court. Hob. 169: 2 Bulst. 255: 2 Nels. Abr. 994. and see Sid. 321: 2 Nels. 995: and this Dictionary, title Recovery.

An Infant is to prosecute a suit by his guardian or best friend, though the term used is prochein amy; i. e. next friend; but he cannot defend by such next friend, but must defend only by guardian, because the law supposes, that where he demands or sues for any thing, it is for his benefit. The power for Infants to sue by prochein amy, was first introduced by the statute West. 2.

If an Infant be joined with others, in suing in the right of another, the action may be brought by attorney, for they all make but one person in law. 3 Cro. 377.

But in all cases where an Infant is defendant, though it be in another's right, and though joined with others, he must defend by guardian. 2 Cro. 289: 1 Lev. 294.

In all actions real, personal, or mixed against an Infant, if he appears by attorney, it is error. 8 Co. b: 9 Co. 30. b.

If an attorney undertakes to appear for an Infant, and enters it per attornatum, it may be amended and made per guardianum. Str. 114, 445.

The plaintiff's attorney should apply to the defendant to name a guardian; and if he does not, in six days, the plaintiff may apply to the court who will oblige him to do it. 2 Wils. 50.

If an Infant appear and plead by attorney, and the plaintiff finds it out, he may in vacation-time apply to a Judge for a summons (or in term to the court), for a rule to shew cause "why common bail filed should not be struck out, and the plea be set aside, and that the defendant may be obliged to appear by a guardian;" and if no one is named within six days, the plaintiff may name one for him, which will be ordered of course. Vid. Str. 1076.

The Infant plaintiff, who sues by prochein amy is not liable to costs, because he cannot, while under age, disavow the suit; but the prochein amy is liable. Str. 548. James v. Hatfield, Barnes 128. And if it appears to the court that he is not of sufficient ability to pay the costs, the court will order another who is. But an Infant defendant (although he names a guardian,) is liable to costs if the verdict be against him. Dyer 104: 1 Bulst. 209: Str. 708.

If an Infant appearing by guardian comes of age pending the suit, he may then plead by attorney. Moor 665.

If baron and feme, where the feme is an Infant, appear by attorney, it is error. 5 Mod. 209. When the defendant in an action is an Infant, the plaintiff shall have six years to bring his action in, after the defendant comes of age: and if the plaintiff be an Infant, he hath six years likewise after his age, to sue by the statute of limitations. Lutw. 243. See title Limitation of Actions.

As to Acts in pais, Infants are regularly allowed to rescind and break through all contracts in pais made during minority, except only for schooling and necessaries, be they never so much to their advantage; and the reason hereof is, the indulgence the law has thought fit to give Infants, who are supposed to want judgment and discretion in their contracts and transactions with others, and the care it takes of them in preventing their being imposed upon, or over-reached by persons of more years and experience. 39 Ed. 3. 20. b: 1 Rol. Abr. 729: Co. Lit. 172, 381.

And for the better security and protection of Infants herein, the law has made some of their contracts absolutely void; i. e. all such in which there is no apparent benefit, or semblance of benefit, to the Infant; but as to those from which the Infant may receive benefit, and which were entered into with more solemnity, they are only voidable; that is, the law allows them, when they come of age, and are capable of considering over again what they have done, either to ratify and affirm such contracts, or to break through and avoid them. Cro. Car. 502: 1 Jones 405: 3 Mod. 310.

Hence an Infant may purchase, because it is intended for his benefit, and at his full age he may either agree or disagree to the same. Co. Lit. 2, 8: 2 Vern 203.

Also the feoffment of an Infant is not void, but only voidable, not only because he is allowed to contract for his benefit, but because there ought to be some act of notoriety to restore the possession to him, equal to that which transferred it from him. Co. Lit. 380: Dyer 104: 2 Rol. Abr. 572: 4 Co. 125 a.

Therefore if an Infant make a feoffment and livery in person, he shall have no assise, &c. but must avoid it by entry; for it is to be presumed in favour of such solemnity, that the assembly of the county then present would have prevented it, if they had perceived his non-age, and therefore the feoffment shall continue till defeated by entry, which is an act of equal notoriety. 8 Co. 42.

But if the Infant had made a letter of attorney to deliver seisin, he might have an assise, &c. because the letter of attorney, (like all other acts or agreements made by an Infant to his prejudice,) must be void; therefore whoever claims under it, or by virtue of its authority, must be a wrong-doer. 2 Rol. Abr. 2: Noy 130: Palm. 237.

Also as to the acts of Infants being void, or voidable, there is a diversity between an actual delivery of the thing contracted for, and a bare agreement to deliver it only; that the first is voidable, but the last absolutely void; as if an Infant deliver a horse, or a sum of money, with his own hands, this is only voidable, and to be recovered back in an action of account. Perk. § 12, 19: 1 Rol. Abr. 730: 2 Rol. Rep. 408: Latch. 10: Rol. 736: 3 Rep. 13: Hob. 96.

But

But if an Infant agrees to give a horse, and does not deliver the horse with his hand, and the donee take the horse by force of the gift, the Infant shall have an action of trespass; for the grant was merely void. Perk. § 12, 19: 1 Mod. 137.

In trespass, wherefore with force and arms the defendant made an assault, and cut off all the hair of the plaintiff, the defendant as to all the trespass, except cutting the hair, pleads not guilty, and as to that, pleads that the plaintiff was of the age sixteen years, and for a certain sum of money gave licence to the defendant to cut off two ounces of hair; upon demurrer to this plea the court held, that the contract was absolutely void, and consequently the tonsure unlawful, and gave judgment accordingly for the plaintiff. 3 Keb. 369.

And as an Infant is not bound by his contract to deliver a thing; so if one deliver goods to an Infant upon a contract, &c. knowing him to be an Infant, he shall not be chargeable in trover and conversion, or any other action for them; for the Infant is not capable of any contract, but for necessaries; therefore such delivery is a gift to the Infant: but if an Infant without any contract wilfully takes away the goods of another, trover lies against him; also it is said, that if he take the goods under pretence that he is of full age, trover lies; because it is a wilful and fraudulent trespass. 1 Sid. 129: 1 Lev. 169: 1 Keb. 905, 913

Also it seems, that if an Infant, being above the age of discretion, be guilty of any fraud in affirming himself to be of full age, or if, by combination with his guardian, &c. he make any contract or agreement with an intent afterwards to elude it, by reason of his privilge of infancy, that a court of equity will decree it good against him according to the circumstances of the fraud; but in what cases in particular a court of equity will thus exert itself is not easy to determine. See 1 Vern. 132: 2 Vern. 224, 5.

All gifts, grants, &c. of an Infant, which do not take effect by delivery of his hand, are void; and if made to take effect by delivery of his own hand, are voidable by himself, and his heirs, and those which shall have his estate. And privies in blood (as the heir-general or special) may avoid a conveyance made by their ancestor during his infancy. But privies in estate, such as the donor of an estate-tail where the tenant in tail dies without issue; or privies in law, as the lord by escheat where there is no heir, shall not avoid a conveyance made by an Infant.

If a man within age, seised in right of his wife, makes a feoffment and dies, his heir cannot enter and avoid it, because no right descends to him; for the baron, if he had lived, could have entered only in right of his wife. And no person shall take advantage of the infancy of his ancestor, but he who hath a right descending to him from that ancestor; though the heir may take the benefit of a condition, notwithstanding no right descended to him from his ancestor. 8 Rep. 42, 3, 4. and see 3 Rep. 35.

If husband and wife are both within age, and they by indenture join in a feoffment, and the husband dies, the wife may enter and avoid the deed, or have a dum fuit infra ætatem. 1 Inst. 337. Though if there be two joint-tenants within age, and one of them makes a feoffment in fee of the moiety during his infancy, and dies, the survivor cannot enter; but the heir of the feoffor may enter into the moiety, &c. 8 Rep. 43. If an Infant exchanges lands with another, and the other enters, the Infant may have assise. 18 Ed. 4. 2. And where an Infant leases for years, he may affirm the lease, or bring trespass against the lessee for the occupation. 18 Ed. 4: Bro. Trespass 338.

A lease made by an Infant reserving rent is voidable; but if there be no rendering rent, it is absolutely void. Latch 199. But if an Infant make a lease paying rent, and after his coming of age he accepts the rent, the voidable lease is made good; and an Infant's lease in ejectment is good, 2 Lil. Abr. 55: 3 Salk. 196; though in such case he must give a security for the costs. 1 Wils. part 1. p. 130. An Infant cannot surrender a future interest, by taking a new lease; his surrender by deed, and by acceptance of a second lease, are void, except there be an increase of the term, or a decrease of the rent; for where no benefit comes to him, his acts are merely void. Cro. Car 502.

All acts of necessity bind Infants; as presentations to benefices, admittances, and grants of copyhold estates, and assenting to legacies, &c 3 Salk. 190. So dower is demandable of an Infant heir. Bull. N. P. 117. So an Infant is compellable to pay a copyhold fine. Burr 1717. Conditions annexed to lands, whether the estate come by grant or descent, bind Infants: and where the estate of an Infant is upon condition to be performed by the Infant, if the condition is broken during the minority, the land is lost for ever. 1 Inst. 233, 380. Though a statute is not extendible against an Infant, yet Chancery will give relief against Infants. 1 Lev 198.

An Infant is much favoured by law; therefore it gives him many privileges above others: if an Infant make default in a real action, he shall not lose his land as another man shall do; one who is an Infant shall not be amerced, nor find pledges like one of full age; and if he be bail, he may be discharged by audita querela, &c. 1 Inst. 272: 8 Rep. 61 On his default at the grand cape, the Infant by writ of error may reverse the judgment given against himself; unless it be in case of a judgment in dower. Dyer 104: Jenk. Cent. 47, 319. But an Infant may be disseised of his lands, and a warranty that descendeth upon an Infant, may bar him of his entry; so a remitter upon him; contra of a descent: and if an Infant hath franchises or liberties, and do abuse, or disuse them, he shall forfeit them as a man of full age may. 1 Inst. 3, 133: 1 And. 311: Bro. 48.

A person gave a note, a few days after he was of age, for things had during his infancy; on extraordinary circumstances, equity set it aside: though it is true, if an Infant takes up goods, or borrows money, and, after he comes to age, give his note or promise for the money, that is good at law: but to prevent the ruin of Infants, it may be convenient to give relief. Barn C. 4. 6. If an Infant delivers money with his own hand, it is voidable, and to be recovered by action of account. The Infant sells goods to another; he may make the sale void, or have debt, &c. for the money. Hob. 77: 18 Ed. 4. 2.

If a trespass be done to an Infant, and he submits to an award, it is said the award shall not be binding on him.

him. 2 Danv. 770. See title Award. An Infant is not bound by his consent not to bring a writ of error; for though the judgment binds him, yet it binds but as a judgment reversable. Rep. Hardw. 104. Agreements &c. made by an Infant, although he be within a day of his full age, shall not bind him. Plowd. 364. Where an Infant enters into bond, pretending to be of full age, though he may avoid it by pleading his infancy, yet he may be indicted for a cheat. Wood's Inst. 585.

INFINITY OF ACTIONS. The lord of the soil may have a special action against him who shall dig soil in the king's highway: but one subject may not have his action against another for common nuisances; for if he might, then every man would have it, and so the actions would be infinite, &c. 2 *Co. INFORMATION FOR THE KING.

Informatio pro Rege.] An accusation or complaint exhibited against a person for some criminal offence, either immediately against the King, or against a private person; which, from its enormity or dangerous tendency, the public good requires should be restrained and punished. It differs from an indictment principally in this, that an indictment is an accusation found by the oath of twelve men, whereas an Information is only the allegation of the officer who exhibits it. 3 New Abr. 164.

I. Of the various kinds of Information generally; and the Antiquity of the Practice.
II. In what cases Information will lie.
III. Of filing and compounding Information.
IV. How to be laid; the Proceedings and Provisions by Statute Law.

I. INFORMATIONS are of two sorts: first, those which are partly at the suit of the King, and partly at that of a Subject: and secondly, such as are only in the name of the King. The former are usually brought upon penal statutes, which inflict a penalty upon conviction of the offender, one part to the use of the King, and another to the use of the informer, and are a sort of qui tam actions, only carried on by a criminal instead of a civil process; upon which therefore it is sufficient in this place to observe, that by stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5, no prosecution upon any penal statute, the suit and benefit whereof are limited in part to the King and in part to the prosecutor, can be brought by any common informer after one year is expired since the commission of the offence; nor on behalf of the Crown after the lapse of two years longer; nor, where the forfeiture is originally given only to the King, can such prosecution be had after the expiration of two years from the commission of the offence. Cro. Jac. 366.

The Informations that are exhibited, in the name of the King alone, are also of two kinds: first, those which are truly and properly his own suits, and filed ex officio by his own immediate officer, the Attorney General; secondly, those in which, though the king is the nominal prosecutor, yet it is at the relation of some private person, or common informer, and they are filed by the king's coroner and attorney in the court of king's bench, usually called the Master of the crown-office, who is for this purpose the standing officer of the public. The object of the King's own prosecutions, filed ex officio by his own Attorney General, are properly such enormous misdemesnors, as peculiarly tend to disturb or endanger his government, or to molest or affront him in the regular discharge of his royal functions. For offences so high and dangerous, in the punishment or prevention of which a moment's delay would be fatal, the law has given to the Crown the power of an immediate prosecution, without waiting for any previous application to any other tribunal; which power thus necessary, not only to the ease and safety, but even to the very existence of the executive magistrate, was originally reserved in the great plan of the English constitution; wherein provision is wisely made for the due preservation of all its parts. The objects of the other species of Informations, filed by the Master of the crown office upon the complaint or relation of a private subject, are any gross and notorious misdemesnors, riots, batteries, libels, and other immoralities of an atrocious kind, not peculiarly tending to disturb the government, (for those are left to the care of the Attorney-General) but which, on account of their magnitude or pernicious example, deserve the most public animadversion. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. And when an Information is filed, either thus, or by the Attorney-General ex officio it must be tried by a petit jury of the county where the offence arises: after which, if the defendant be found guilty, the court must be resorted to for his punishment. See Post, II. III.

This mode of prosecution, by Information (or suggestion) filed on record by the king's Attorney-General, or by his Coroner, or Master of the Crown-office in the court of King's Bench, seems to be as antient as the common law itself. 1 Show. 118. For as the king was bound to prosecute, or at least to lend the sanction of his name to a prosecutor, whenever a grand jury informed him upon their oaths, that there was a sufficient ground for instituting a criminal suit; so, when these his immediate officers were otherwise sufficiently assured that a man had committed a gross misdemesnor, either personally against the king or his government, or against the public peace and good order, they were at liberty, without waiting for any farther intelligence, to convey that Information to the Court of King's Bench by a suggestion on record, and to carry on the prosecution in his majesty's name. But these Informations (of every kind) are confined by the constitutional law to mere misdemesnors only: for, wherever any capital offence is charged, the same law requires that the accusation be warranted by the oath of twelve men, before the party shall be put to answer it. And as to those offences in which Informations were allowed as well as indictments, so long as they were confined to this high and respectable jurisdiction, and were carried on in a legal and regular course in his majesty's court of King's Bench, the Subject had no reason to complain. The same notice was given, the same process was issued, the same pleas were allowed, the same trial by jury was had, the same judgment was given by the same judges, as if the prosecution had originally been by indictment. But when the stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 1, had extended the jurisdiction of the court of Star-chamber, the members of which were the sole judges of the law, the fact, and the penalty, and when the stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 3, had permitted Informations to be brought by any informer upon any penal statute, not extending to life or member, at the assizes, or before the justices of the peace, who were to hear and determine the same according to their own discretion; then it was, that the legal and orderly jurisdiction of the court of King's Bench fell into dis-use and oblivion; and Empson and Dudley, the wicked instruments of king Hen. VII. by hunting out obsolete penalties, and this tyrannical mode of prosecution, with other oppressive devices, continually harassed the subject, and shamefully enriched the crown. 1 And. 157. The latter of these acts was soon indeed repealed by stat. 1 Hen. 8. c. 6; but the court of Star-chamber continued in high vigour, and daily increasing its authority, till finally abolished by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10.

Upon this dissolution the old common-law authority of the court of King's Bench, as the Custos morum of the nation, being found necessary to reside somewhere for the peace and good government of the kingdom, was again revived in practice. 5 Mod. 464: Styl. Rep. 217, 245: Styl. Pract. Reg. title Information, p. 187 (edit. 1657): 2 Sid. 71: 1 Sid. 152. And it is observable that, in the same act of parliament which abolished the court of Star-chamber, a conviction by Information is expressly reckoned up, as one of the legal modes of conviction of such persons as should offend a third time against the provisions of that statute. 16 Car. 1. c. 10. § 6. Sir Matthew Hale, who presided in this court soon after the time of such revival, is said to have been no friend to this mode of prosecution; most probably because the power of filing Informations without any control then resided in the breast of the Master; and, being filed in the name of the king, they subjected the prosecutor to no costs, though on trial they proved to be groundless. 5 Mod. 460: 1 Saund. 301: 1 Sid. 174. This oppressive use of them, in the times preceding the revolution, occasioned a struggle, soon after the accession of King William, to procure a declaration of their illegality by the judgment of the court of King's Bench; but sir John Holt, who then presided there, and all the Judges, were clearly of opinion that this proceeding was grounded on the common law, and could not then be impeached. 5 Mod. 459: Comb. 141: 7 Mod. 361: 1 Show. 106. In a few years afterwards a more temperate remedy was applied in parliament, by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, which enacts, that the clerk of the crown shall not file any Information without express direction from the court of King's Bench: and that every prosecutor, permitted to promote such Information, shall give security by a recognizance of twenty pounds (which now seems to be too small a sum) to prosecute the same with effect; and to pay costs to the defendant, in case he be acquitted thereon, unless the Judge, who tries the Information, shall certify there was reasonable cause for filing it; and, at all events, to pay costs, unless the Information shall be tried within a year after issue joined. But there is a proviso in this act, that it shall not extend to any other Informations than those which are exhibited by the Master of the Crown Office; and, consequently, Informations at the King's own suit, filed by his Attorney-General, are no way restrained thereby.

There is one species of Informations, still farther regulated by stat. 9 Ann. c. 20; viz. those in the nature of a writ of Quo warranto, which are a remedy given to the Crown against such as may have usurped or intruded into any office or franchise. The modern Information tends to the same purpose as the antient writ, being generally made use of to try the civil rights to such franchises; though it is commenced in the same manner as other Informations are, by leave of the court, or at the will of the Attorney-General; being properly a criminal prosecution, in order to fine the defendant for his usurpation, as well as to oust him from his office; yet usually considered at present as merely a civil proceeding. See this Dictionary, title Quo Warranto; and 4 Comm. 308, 312.

An Information on behalf of the Crown filed in the Exchequer by the King's Attorney-General, is a method of suit for recovering money or other chattles, or for obtaining satisfaction in damages for any personal wrong committed in the lands or other possessions of the Crown. Moor 375. It differs from an Information filed in the court court of King's Bench, in that this is instituted to redress a private wrong, by which the property of the crown is affected; that is calculated to punish some public wrong or heinous misdemesnor in the defendant. It is grounded on no writ under seal, but merely on the intimation of the King's officer the Attorney-General, who "gives the court to understand and be informed of" the matter in question: upon which the party is put to answer, and trial is had, as in suits between Subject and Subject. The most usual Informations are those of intrusion and debt. Intrusion for any trespass committed on the lands of the crown, as by entering thereon without title; holding over after a lease is determined; taking the profits; cutting down timber; or the like. Cro. Jac. 212; 1 Leon. 48: Savil. 49. Debt upon any contract for monies due to the King, or for any forfeiture due to the Crown upon the breach of a penal statute. This latter is most commonly used to recover forfeitures occasioned by transgressing those laws, which are enacted for the establishment and support of the Revenue; others, which regard mere matters of police and public convenience, being usually left to be inforced by common informers, in qui-tam Informations or actions. But, after the Attorney-General has informed upon the breach of a penal law, no other Information can be received. Hardr. 201.

There is also an Information in rem, when any goods are supposed to become the property of the Crown, and no man appears to claim them, or to dispute the title of the King. As antiently in the case of treasure-trove, wrecks, waifs, and estrays seized by the King's officer for his use. Upon such seizure an Information was usually filed in the King's Exchequer, and thereupon a proclamation was made for the owner (if any) to come in and claim the effects; and at the same time there issued a commission of appraisement to value the goods in the officer's hands: after the return of which, and a second proclamation had, if no claimant appeared, the goods were supposed derelict, and condemned to the use of the Crown. And when in later times, forfeitures of the goods themselves, as well as personal penalties on the parties, were inflicted by act of parliament for transgressions against the laws of the customs and excise, the same process was adopted in order to secure such forfeited goods for the public use, though the offender himself had escaped the reach of justice. 3 Comm. 261, 2.

An Information is, in many respects, the same as what, for a common person, is called a declaration. It ought to be certain, that the party may perfectly know what he is to answer to, and the court what they are to give judgment on. Plowd. 329.

Informations qui-tam will not lie on any statute, which prohibits a thing, as being an immediate offence against the public good in general, under a certain penalty, unless the whole or part of such penalty be expresly given to him who will sue for it, because otherwise it goes to the king, and nothing can be demanded by the party. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

It has been said, that the King shall put no one to answer for a wrong done principally to another, without indictment or presentment; but this does not seem a principle adhered to; and of common right, Informations, or actions in the nature thereof, may be brought for offences against statutes, whether mentioned or not in such statutes, where other methods of proceeding are not particularly appointed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 1, 2. And wherever a matter concerns the public government, and no particular person is entitled to an action, there an Information will lie. 1 Salk. 374.

II. It is every day's practice, agreeable to numberless precedents, either in the name of the King's Attorney-General, or of the Master of the Crown-office, to exhibit Informations for batteries, cheats, seducing a young man or woman from their parents, in order to marry them against their consent, or for any other wicked purpose, spiriting away a child to the plantations, rescuing persons from legal arrests, perjuries, and subornations thereof, forgeries, conspiracies; (whether to accuse an innocent person, or to impoverish a certain set of lawful traders, &c. or to procure a verdict to be unlawfully given, by causing persons bribed for that purpose to be sworn on a tales;) and other such like crimes, done principally to a private person; as also for offences done principally to the King; as for libels, seditious words, riots, false news, extortions, nuisances; (as in not repairing highways, or obstructing them, or stopping a common river, &c.;) contempts, as in departing from the parliament without the King's license, disobeying his writs, uttering money without his authority, escaping from legal imprisonment on a prosecution for contempt, neglecting to keep watch and ward, abusing the King's commission to the oppression of the Subject, making a return to a mandamus of matters known to be false; and in general any other offences against the public good, or against the first and obvious principles of justice and common honesty, 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 1, and the several authorities there cited, and see Finch L. 240: Show. 109.

The Court will grant an Information for reproaching the office of magistracy, or defaming the character of magistrates. Carth. 14, 15: 1 Wils. 22. See 12 Mod. 514. For taking away a young woman from her guardian, although Chancery has committed the offender for a contempt. Str. 1162: Andr. 310: Or from her putative father. Str. 1162. For seducing a woman, habituated to drinking, to make her will. 2 Burr. 1099. For voluntary absenting by a Justice, from sessions. Str. 21. For refusing to put a statute in execution Str. 413. For bribing persons to vote at corporation elections. Ld. Raym. 1377. For publishing an obscene book. Str. 788. For blasphemy. Str. 834. For a Justice making order of removal, and not summoning the party. And. 238, 273. For impressing a captain as a common seaman maliciously. 1 Black. 19. For illegal impressing and confining a recruit. See Str. 404. For speaking treasonable words, although the offender has been previously punished; viz. in an academical way, by the Vice Chancellor. 1 Black. 37. For contriving the escape escape of French prisoners. 1 Black. 286. For giving a ludicrous account of a marriage between an actress and a married man. 1 Black. 294. For contriving pretended conversations with a ghost, with intention to accuse another of having murdered the body of the disturbed spirit. 1 Black. 392, 401. For procuring a female apprentice to be assigned, though with her own consent, to another, for the purposes of prostitution. 1 Black. 439.

Information was granted against an attorney for examining persons on oath, upon an arbitration, without putting the same in writing. Against one for practising as an attorney, while he was under-sheriff. 1 Wils. 93.—Against a gaoler for suffering one taken upon an excom. capiend. to go at large. 12 Mod. 434. Against certain persons for that they, as enemies, &c. to the government, hired a boat during a war with France, in order to go thither, intending to aid and assist the King's enemies, though they did not actually go thither, but only intended it. [illegible] 8 W. 3. B. R. The King v. Cooper [illegible].—Against one for building of locks in the river Thames to the obstruction of navigation. 12 Mod. 615.

An Information was exhibited by the Attorney General for conspiring to destroy the King's revenue of the excise; that the defendants and others ignot', &c. illicite, factiose, & seditiose, consultaverunt & conspiraverunt ad destruend' & depauperand' firmarios excisæ prædict', &c. and many other facts were laid in the Information tending to destroying the excisemen, depauperating them, destroying the King's revenue of excise, pulling down the excise-house, raising a tumult amongst the poor people, &c. But the jury that were to try the issue were unwilling to find this matter, though expressly proved, fearing it might be construed no less than treason; and so would only find that such and such of the defendants illicite, factiose, & seditiose se assemblaverunt, & illicite factiose & seditiose consultaverunt, & conspiraverunt ad depauperand' firmarios Dom' Regis excisæ prædict', prout prædict' attornat' gen' Dom' Regis, &c Et quoad totam aliam materiam in informatione contentam, find them not guilty, and find J. S. not guilty of the whole. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is no offence found. The court unanimously concurred, that judgment ought to be given for the King, though as to the offence found there was some variety of opinion: Twisden held, that vi et armis was not necessary, and that they were found guilty of an unlawful assembly, and in that the Ld. Ch. Just. Hyde concurred; as also that the intention of defrauding and depriving the King of his said rent is implicitly found within the modo et forma prout, &c. for so shall the machinantes, be applied. Twisden and Keeling concurred, that for a conspiracy alone, without any prosecution, Information lay: and they all agreed, that the King's revenue being concerned did highly aggravate the offence; 26 Ass. 44. was cited to prove, that whatever concerns the King's revenue is public; and for this reason (2 H. 4. 7. pl. 26,) it is determined, that a monk by being farmer is made capable to sue. The Lord Ch. Just. cited old Magna Charta, where there is an article, to inquire of such as seek to diminish the King's revenue of wards and marriages, which shews it is a public treasure. Judgment was therefore given for the King. 1 Lev. 125: 1 Sid. 174: 1 Keb. 650, 665, 675, 682.

A Coroner having sworn the jury to inquire of the death of one supposed a felo de se, and finding the evidence very strong, took off some of the inquest; and though it was said, that this coroner was a weak silly man, yet Holt said there was no reason why an Information should not be against him. 12 Mod. 493.

An Information was granted against one for counterfeiting and pretending himself to be bewitched by a poor woman, who was thereupon indicted for witchcraft, and acquitted, and the whole discovered to be a cheat. 12 Mod. 556.

Information for a scandalous narrative licensed by the defendant, speaker of the House of Commons, being Dangerfield's narrative, reflecting on a nobleman, (the E. of Peterborough); the defendant pleaded, that he did it by order of the House of Commons, and demanded judgment if this court will take conusance of it. The Attorney General demurred, and afterwards the defendant pleaded the common plea, quod non vult contendere cum Domino Rege, and was fined 10,000 l. Comb. 18.

Leave was given to file an Information against the defendant, by whom the plaintiff's wife was inveigled away, and who procured merchants and tradesmen to sell goods to her, in order to saddle the husband with the debt, he agreeing with the sellers to deliver the goods back again. 12 Mod. 454. For words spoken of a deceased King, which advance pernicious doctrines and evil tenets, and have an influence on the present government, &c. an Information lies, on which the offender may be fined, and also corporally punished. 2 Ld. Raym. 879. If the marshal of B. R. misdemeans himself in his office, he who is prejudiced by it may prefer an Information against him in that court, where he shall be fined and ordered to make satisfaction. Hil. 23 Car. B. R. If a person exhibits his Information only for vexation, the defendant may bring Information against the informer, upon the stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5. 2 Bulst. 18.

The Court will not grant an Information against a private person for reading a pretended proclamation. Black. 2. Nor against a husband for endeavouring to retake his wife contrary to articles of separation. Black. 18. Nor against persons who assemble with a lawful design, notwithstanding some unlawful and irregular acts ensue. Black. 48. Nor against Justices acting improperly in their publick capacity, unless flagrant proof of corruption appears. Str. 1181: Bur. 785, 1162: Black. 432: Douglas 589. Nor against ministers for converting brief-money. Str. 1130: Black. 443. Nor for bribing electors. Black. 541. Nor for a perjured intrusion to a living, upon an affidavit that it was simoniacal. Str. 70: Barnard. K. B. 11. Nor for a libel, if it appears to be true. Str. 498: Doug. 284, 387. Nor for offences committed upon the high seas. Str. 918: 2 Keble, 190. Nor against a dissenter for refusing the office of sheriff. Str. 1193: 1 Wils. 18. Nor against an offender, although the penalty for the offence is vested in the Crown. Str. 1234. Nor for words spoken of a justice in his public character. Str. 1157. Nor for attempting subornation of perjury. Hardw. 24. Nor for sending a challenge, if the informant had previously imparted a challenge. Bur. 316, 402. Nor in favour of one cheat against another cheat. Bur. 548. Nor on a general charge of extortion. Str. 999. Nor for striking a magistrate in the execution of his office, if the magistrate strike first. Hard. 240. Nor for an offence against a private statute. Bur. 385. Nor if a civil suit is depending, upon the same subject. Hardw. 241. And in general the diſcretion of the court in granting Informations is guided by the merits of the perſon applying; by the time of the application; by the nature of the caſe; and by the conſequences which may poſſibly reſult from the granting it. Per Ld. Mansfield, Black. 542. Vide alſo Com. Dig. title Information.

III. It ſeems to be an eſtabliſhed practice, not to admit the filing of an Information, (except thoſe exhibited in the name of His Majeſty's Attorney-General,) without firſt making a rule on the perſons complained of, to ſhew cauſe to the contrary; which rule is never granted but upon motion made in open court, and grounded upon affidavit of ſome miſdemeſnor, which, if true, doth either for its enormity or dangerous tendency, or other ſuch like circumſtances ſeem proper for the moſt public proſecution; and if the perſon, on whom ſuch rule is made, having been perſonally ſerved with it, do not, at the day given him for that purpoſe, give the court good ſatisfaction by affidavit, that there is no reaſonable cauſe for the proſecution, the court generally grants the Information; and ſometimes, upon ſpecial circumſtances, will grant it againſt thoſe who cannot be perſonally ſerved with ſuch rule; as if they purpoſely abſent themſelves, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. But it ſeems that in ſuch caſe the proſecutor ſhould on affidavit of the fact of abſence, move the court for a rule that leaving the ſame at the laſt place of abode ſhould be deemed good ſervice. J. M.

If a defendant ſhew good cauſe to the contrary, as that he has been indicted for the ſame cauſe, and acquitted, or that the intent is to try a civil right, which has not been yet determined, or that the complaint is trifling, or vexatious, &c; or where the motion is for an Information in the nature of a quo warranto, if he can ſhew that his right hath been already determined on a mandamus, or that it hath been acquieſced in many years, or that it depends upon the right of his voters which hath not been tried, or that it doth not concern the public, but is wholly of a private nature, the court will not grant the Information without ſome particular circumſtances, the judgment whereof lies in diſcretion. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

The compounding of Informations upon penal ſtatutes is an offence, in criminal caſes, equivalent to maintenance or barretry in civil caſes; and is, beſides, an additional miſdemeſnor againſt public juſtice, by contributing to make the law odious to the people. At once, therefore, to diſcourage malicious informers, and to provide that offences, when once diſcovered, ſhall be duly proſecuted, it is enacted by ſtat. 18 Eliz. c. 5, that if any perſon informing under pretence of any penal law, make any compoſition without leave of the court, or take any money or promiſe from the defendant to excuſe him, (which demonſtrates his intent in commencing the proſecution to be merely to ſerve his own ends, and not for the public good,) he ſhall forfeit 10 l., ſhall ſtand two hours on the pillory, and ſhall be for ever diſabled to ſue on any popular or penal ſtatute. 4 Comm. 136.

IV. Regularly, the ſame certainty that is required in an Indictment, is required in an Information; but it has been held, not to be neceſſary to repeat the words it gives the court here to underſtand, and be informed," in the beginning of every diſtinct clauſe, if the want of them may be ſupplied by a natural, and eaſy conſtruction. See tit. Indictment. 1 Salk. 375: Raym. 34: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

In an Information againſt Roberts the ferryman over the river Merſey, which parts Angleſey from Caernarvonſhire in Wales, it was moved in arreſt of judgment, that the Information was too general and uncertain, becauſe it did not allege that any particular perſon, or any certain number of cattle, were ferried over within the time laid in the Information; neither did it mention any particular perſon from whom the extorted rates were taken, which it ought to do, that the ſingle offence might certainly appear to the court; after great deliberation, the whole court was of that opinion; and per Holt, Chief Juſtice, in every ſuch Information a ſingle offence ought to be laid and aſcertained, becauſe every extortion from every particular perſon is a ſeparate and diſtinct offence; therefore they ought not to be accumulated under a general charge, as in this caſe, becauſe each offence requires a ſeparate and diſtinct puniſhment according to the quantity of the offence; and it is not poſſible for the court to proportion the fine or other puniſhment, unleſs it is ſingly and certainly laid. Carth. 226.

An Information upon a penal ſtatute muſt be ſued in one of the ſuperior courts, and cannot be brought in any inferior court, becauſe the King's Attorney cannot be there to acknowledge or deny, as he can in a ſuperior court. Cro. Jac. 538. All Informations on penal ſtatutes, brought by an informer, where a ſum certain is given to the proſecutor, muſt be brought in the proper county where the offence was committed; and within a year after the ſame: but a party grieved, who is not a common informer, is not obliged to bring his Information in the proper county, but may inform in what county he pleaſes. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5: Cro Eliz. 645.

Where an Information is given by ſtatute, to be proſecuted at the aſſizes, &c. the informer, on filing his Information, muſt make oath before a judge, that the offence laid in the Information was not committed in any other county than that mentioned in the Information; and that he believes the offence was committed within a year next before the filing of the Information. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. And when an Information is ordered to be filed, upon an affidavit made, the court will not ſuffer the proſecutor to put any more or other matter into the Information than what only is in his affidavit. Mich. 9 W. 3. B. R.

It has been reſolved, that the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4, reſtrains the juriſdiction of B. R. in actions of debt by common informers, and that they cannot bring debt upon the ſtatute in that court, unleſs the cauſe of action ariſe in the county where the King's Bench ſits; but muſt in other caſes proſecute by Information before juſtices of aſſiſe, &c. as the ſtatute directs. 1 Salk. 373. Sed qu. as to this doctrine, as the juriſdiction of the King's Bench extends over the greateſt part of the kingdom in all caſes where an action may be brought? J. M.

Offences created ſince the ſtatute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4, are not within that ſtatute, to be proſecuted in the county where the fact was done; ſo that Informations on ſubſequent penal ſtatutes are not reſtrained thereby. 1 Salk. 373.

The

The stats. 18 Eliz. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 4, do not extend to Informations of officers, nor on the statutes of maintenance, champerty, concerning concealments of customs, &c. nor to parties grieved, and those to whom any forfeiture is given in certain. 1 Salk. 373.

An Informer upon a popular statute shall never have costs, if not given by statute; but the party grieved in action on the statute shall, where a certain penalty is given. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

In an action qui tam on stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, the plaintiff shall pay costs. Ld. Raym. 1333. But it seems unsettled whether an informer shall be obliged to give security for the payment of costs on account of his poverty. Cowp. 24. It has been refused, for the statute having given him a power to sue, it is a debt due to him; Bull. N. P. 197; but an informer who is gone abroad must give security, Str. 697; and it seems that a foreign informer must do the same. Str. 1206. Vide 1 Wils. 166. Also if a prosecution is brought in a feigned name, the court will oblige the real prosecutor to give security. Shiler v. Roberts, Easter 12 Geo. 2. C. B. The defendant, on motion, may pay the costs and penalty into court. Rex v. Walker, Trin. 31 Geo. 2. B. N. P. Vide Cowper, 367.

If a Prosecutor does not go on to trial he shall pay costs. Hard. 159. But if he gives notice of trial, and neither goes to trial or countermands in time, unless the defendant draws him in to give notice, defendant shall pay costs. 3 Bur. 1304. So where a qui tam informer, in debt on stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 13, is nonsuited, the defendant is entitled to costs. Cowp. 366, where 3 Bur. 1723, is denied to be law. But the court will not stay proceedings in a qui tam action, till costs in a non pros in a former action, by a different plaintiff against the same defendant, be paid. Cowp. 322. If prosecutor qui tam, for killing game, &c. does not reply, defendant shall have costs, for stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5, extends to informers on all penal statutes. 1 Wils. 177.

If an Informer dies, the Attorney-General may proceed in the Information for the King: nonsuit of an informer, is no bar against the King; and if the King's Attorney enter a nolle prosequi, it is not any bar quoad the informer. Cro. El. 583: 1 Leon. 119. If two Informations are had on the same day, they mutually abate one another: because there is no priority to attach the right of the suit in one informer, more than in the other. Hob. 138.

If an Information contain several offences against a statute, and be well laid as to some of them, but defective as to the rest, the informer may have judgment for such as are well laid. Hob. 266. After a plea pleaded to an Information for any crime, the defendant, by favour of the court, may appear by attorney; also the court may dispense with the personal appearance before plea pleaded, except in such cases where a personal appearance is required by some statute: and it is the same of Indictments for crimes under the degree of capital. Hob. 273.

If a defendant plead nil debet to an Information qui tam, &c. it is safest to say he owes nothing to the informer, nor the King, which is an answer to the whole. On breach of a statute alleged from a matter in pais, the defendant may plead that he owes nothing, or not guilty, &c. And if there be more than one defendant, they ought to plead severally, and not jointly, not guilty: but if it be alleged from a matter of record, the record not being triable by the country, but by itself, such plea is not good. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 66, &c. Bro. Issues 23.

A replication to an Information on a special plea in the courts at Westminster, is to be made by the Attorney General, and before Justices of Assise, by the Clerk of the Assise: though the replication to a general issue in an Information qui tam in the courts at Westminster, may be made in the name of the Attorney-General only; and in actions qui tam, most of the precedents are, that the replication is to be made by the plaintiff. A demurrer may be to an Information qui tam, without the Attorney General. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26. § 72.

Informations are not quashed for insufficiency, like indictments; but the defendant must demur to them. 2 Lill. 59. Fines assessed in court by judgment on an Information, cannot afterwards be qualified or mitigated. Cro. Car. 251.

In the construction of stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18, it hath been holden,

1. That if process be issued on such Information before such recognizance is given as the statute directs, the same may be set aside and discharged on motion. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

2. That this statute extends to all Informations, except those exhibited in the name of his Majesty's Attorney-General; so that an Information in nature of a quo warranto, though a proper remedy to try a right, in respect of which it may not in strictness come within the words trespasses, &c. yet being also intended to punish a misdemeanor, and also as the proceedings therein may be as vexatious as in any other, the same is within the purview of the statute, which, being a remedial law, shall receive as large a construction as the words will bear. Carth. 503: 1 Salk. 376. S. C.

3. That no costs can be had on this statute on an acquittal by a trial at bar; not only because the clause that gives costs, unless the judge certify a reasonable cause, seems only to have a view to trials at nisi prius, but also because a cause, which is of such consequence as to be thought proper for a trial at bar, cannot well be thought within the purview of the statute; which was chiefly designed against trifling and vexatious prosecutions. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

4. That if there be several defendants, and some of them acquitted, and others convicted, none of them can have costs. 1 Salk. 194.

5. That wherever a defendant's case is such as authorises the court to award him costs, he has a right to them ex debito justitiæ; for it seems a general rule, that where Judges are empowered by statute to do a matter of justice, they ought to do it of course. 2 Chan. Cas. 191: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 26.

INFORMATUS NON SUM, or more properly, non sum informatus. A formal answer made of course by an attorney who is authorised by his client to let judgment pass in that form against him. It is commonly used in warrants of attorney, given for the express purpose of confessing judgment.

INFORMER,

INFORMER, informator.] The person who informs against, or prosecutes in any of the King's courts, those who offend against any law, or penal statute; no man may be an Informer who is disabled by any misdemeanor. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5.

INFORTIATUM, One part of the digests of the civil law; according to Benedict, abbot of the monastery of Peterborough, in the reign of K. Hen. III.

INFUGARE, To put to flight. Leg Canuti. c. 32.

INFULA, Was antiently the garment of a priest, like that which we now call a cassock; sometimes it is taken for a coif.

INGE. This syllable, in the names of places, denotes meadow or pasture; and in the north, meadows are called the Inges; from the Saxon ing, i. e. pratum.

INGENIUM. Any instrument used in war, arte & ingenio confectum; from whence it is said we derive the the word engine.

INGENUITAS. Liberty given to a servant by manumission Leg. H. 1. c. 89.

INGENUITAS REGNI, Ingenui, liberi & legales homines; freeholders, and the commonalty of the kingdom; sometimes this title was given to the barons and lords of the King's council. Eadmer. Hist. 1. Nov. fol. 70.

INGRESS, EGRESS, AND REGRESS, Words in leases of lands, to signify a free entry into, going forth of, and returning from some part of, the lands let; as to get in a crop of corn, &c. after the term expired.

INGRESSU, A writ of entry, whereby a man seeks entry into lands or tenements; and lies in many cases, having many different forms: this writ is also called præcipe quod reddat, because these are formal words inserted in all writs of entry. See title Entry.

INGRESSUS, The relief which the heir at full age paid to the head lord, for entering upon the fee, or lands fallen by the death or forfeiture of the tenant, &c. Blount.

INGROSSATOR MAGNI ROTULI. See Clerk of the Pipe.

IN GROSS. Advowson in gross, villain in gross, &c. see Advowson; Gross; Villain.

INGROSSER. See Forestaller.

INGROSSING OF A FINE. The making of the indentures by the Chirographer, for delivery of them to the party to whom the fine is levied. F. N. B. 147. See title Fine of Lands.

INHABITANT, A dweller or householder in any place, as Inhabitants in a vill, are the housholders in the vill. 2 Inst. 702.

The word Inhabitants includes tenant in fee-simple, tenant for life, years, by elegit, &c. tenant at will, and he who has no interest but only his habitation and dwelling. 6 Rep. 60. a. He who hath a house in his hands in a town, may be said to be an Inhabitant. Carth. 119. Inhabitants have not capacity to take an inheritance, as in 15 Ed. 4, to have common. 12 Rep. 120. See title Poor.

INHERITANCE, hæreditas.] An estate in lands or tenements to a man and his heirs; and the word Inheritance is not only intended where a man hath lands or tenements by descent of heritage; but also every fee-simple, or fee-tail, which a person hath by purchase, may be said to be an Inheritance, because his heirs may inherit it. Lit. § 9. And one may have Inheritance by creation; as in case of the King's grant of peerage, by letters patent, &c.

INHERITANCES; ARE CORPOREAL OR INCORPOREAL. Corporeal Inheritances relate to houses, lands, &c. which may be touched or handled; and incorporeal Inheritances are rights issuing out of, annexed to, or exercised with, corporeal Inheritances; as advowsons, tithes, annuities, offices, commons, franchises, privileges, services, &c. 1 Inst. 9, 49: See title Hereditaments.

There is also several Inheritance, which is where two or more hold lands severally; if two men have lands given to them and the heirs of their two bodies, these have a joint estate during their lives; but their heirs have several Inheritances. Kitch. 155. Without blood none can inherit; therefore he who hath the whole and entire blood, shall have an Inheritance, before him who hath but part of the blood of his ancestor. 3 Rep. 41. The law of Inheritance prefers the first child before all others; the male before the female; and of males the first born, &c. And as to Inheritances, if a man purchases land in fee, and dies without issue, those of the blood of the father's side shall inherit, if there be any; and for want of such, the lands shall go to the heirs of the mother's side: but if it come to the son by descent from the father the heirs of the mother shall not inherit it. Plowd. 132: Lit. 4, 12. Goods and chattles cannot be turned into an Inheritance. 3 Inst. 19, 126. See more fully this Dictionary, titles Descent; Estate.

INHIBITION, inhibitio.] A writ to forbid a judge from further proceeding in a cause depending before him, being in nature of a prohibition. See statutes 9 Ed. 2. c. 1: 24 Hen. 8. c. 12: F. N. B. 39. An Inhibition is most commonly issued out of a higher court christian, to an inferior, upon an appeal: Inhibitions are likewise on the visitations of archbishops and bishops, &c. This Inhibition is either hominis or juris; it is Ne visitationem facies, vel aliquam jurisdictionem ecclesiasticam vel contentionem voluntariam habeas: thus when the archbishop visits, he inhibits the bishop; and when a bishop visits, he inhibits the archdeacon; this is to prevent confusion, and continues till the last parish is visited. Now after such Inhibition by an archbishop, if a lapse happens, the bishop cannot institute, because his power is suspended; but the archbishop is to do it, &c. 2 Inst. 601: 3 Salk. 201. See title Prohibition.

INHOC, or INHOKE, From In, within, and hoke a corner or nook.] Any corner or part of a common field ploughed up and sowed with oats, &c. and sometimes fenced in with a dry hedge, in that year wherein the rest of the same field lies fallow and common. It is called in the north of England an intock, and in Oxfordshire a hitchin; and no such Inhoke is now made without the joint consent of all the commoners, who in most places have their share by lot in the benefit it, except in some manors, where the lord has a special privilege of so doing. Kennett's Paroch. Antiq. 297, &c. and his Glossary.

INJUNCTION, injunctio.] A kind of prohibition granted by Courts of Equity in divers cases; it is generally grounded upon an interlocutory order or decree out of the court of Chancery, or Exchequer on the equity side, to stay proceedings in courts at law; and sometimes it is issued to the Spiritual Courts, West Symb. sect. 25. It is likewise sometimes used to give possession to a plaintiff, for want of the defendant's appearance; and may be granted by the Chancery, or Exchequer, to quiet possession of lands.

An

An Injunction is usually granted for the purpose of preserving property in dispute pending a suit; as to restrain the defendant from proceeding at the common law against the plaintiff, or from committing waste, or doing any injurious act. Mitford's Treatise on Chancery Pleadings.

A Court of Equity will prevent the assertion of a doubtful right in a manner productive of irreparable injury. Therefore, where the tenants of a manor, claiming a right of estovers, cut down a great quantity of growing timber of great value, their title being doubtful, the court entertained a bill at the suit of the lord of the manor to restrain this assertion of it; and, indeed, the commission of waste of every kind, as the cutting of timber, pulling down of houses, ploughing of antient pasture, working of mines, and the like, is a very frequent ground for the exercise of the jurisdiction of courts of equity, by restraining the waste till the rights of the parties are determined. The courts of equity seem to have proceeded upon a similar principle in the very common cases of persons claiming copy right of printed books, and of patentees of alleged inventions; in restraining the publication of the book at the suit of the owner of the copy, and the use of the supposed invention at the suit of the patentees. But in both these cases the bill usually seeks an account, in one of the books printed, and the other of the profits arisen from the use of the invention; and in all the cases alluded to, it is frequently, if not constantly, made a part of the prayer of the bill, that the right if disputed, and capable of trial in a court of common law, may be there tried and determined under the direction of the court of equity; the final object of the bill being a perpetual Injunction to restrain the infringement of the right claimed by the plaintiff. Mitford's Treatise.

A bill of interpleader generally prays an Injunction to restrain the proceedings of the claimants in some other court: and as this may be used to delay the payment of money by the plaintiff, if any is due from him, he ought by his bill to offer to pay the money into court. Mitford's Treatise.

In many cases, the courts of ordinary jurisdiction admit, at least for a certain time, of repeated attempts to litigate the same question. To put an end to the oppression occasioned by the abuse of this privilege, the courts of equity have assumed a jurisdiction. Thus actions of ejectment having become the usual mode of trying titles at the common law, and judgments in those actions not being in any degree conclusive, the courts of equity have interfered; and after repeated trials, and satisfactory determinations of questions, have granted perpetual Injunctions to restrain further litigation; and have thus, in some degree, imposed that restraint in personal, which is the policy of the common law in real, actions. Bath (E) v. Sherwin: Leighton v. Leighton: Bro. P. C.: 1 P. Wms. 671. See this Dictionary, title Ejectment.

When a bill in Chancery is filed in the office of the Six Clerks, if an Injunction be prayed therein, it may be had at various stages of the cause, according to the circumstances of the case. If the bill be to stay execution upon an oppressive judgment, and the defendant does not put in his answer within the stated time allowed by the rules of the court, an Injunction will issue of course; and when the answer comes in, the Injunction can only be continued upon a sufficient ground appearing from the answer itself. But if an Injunction be wanted to stay waste, or other injuries of an equally urgent nature, then upon the filing of the bill, and a proper case supported by affidavits, the court will grant an Injunction immediately, to continue till the defendant has put in his answer, and till the court shall make some further order concerning it: and when the answer comes in, whether it shall then be dissolved, or continued till the hearing of the cause, is determined by the court upon argument, drawn from considering the answer and affidavits together. 3 Comm. 443.

If an attorney proceeds at law, after he is served with an Injunction to stay proceedings, on affidavit made thereof, interrogatories are to be exhibited against him, to which he must answer on oath; and if it appears that he was duly served with the Injunction, and hath proceeded afterwards contrary thereto, the court of Chancery will commit the attorney to the Fleet for the contempt. 2 Lill. Abr. 64. But if an Injunction be granted by the Court of Chancery in a criminal matter, the court of B. R. may break it, and protect any that proceed in contempt of it. Mod. Cas. 16. But a court of law will take such notice of an Injunction, that the defendant shall have no advantage against the plaintiff for not proceeding within the time allowed by the rules of the court, if the delay was occasioned by the defendants obtaining an Injunction. 2 Burr. 660.

If a cause at law be at issue, the Injunction may give leave to go to trial, and stay execution, &c. The writ of Injunction is directed to the party proceeding, and to all and singular their counsellers, attorneys, and solicitors whosoever; and concludes, Injoining, We command that you, and each of you, desist from all further prosecution whatever at common law, for or concerning any matters in the complaint contained, under pain, &c. Vide more on this subject, 3 New Abr: 14 Vin. Abr. title Injunction: Com. Dig. title Chancery D. (8).

INJURY, Injuria.] A wrong or damage to a man's person or goods. The law punisheth Injuries; and so abhors them, that, in certain cases, it grants writs of anticipation for their prevention. But the law will suffer a private Injury rather than a public evil; and the act of God, or of the law doth Injury to none. 4 Rep. 124: 10 Rep. 148.

INLAGARE, To admit or restore to the benefit of the law. Annal. Waverl. sub anno 1074.

INLAGATION, Inlagatio, from the Saxon In lagian, i. e. Inlagare.] A restitution of one outlawed, to the protection of the law, and benefit of a Subject. Bract. lib. 3. tract. 2. c. 14: Leg. Canut. par. 1. c. 2.

INLAGH, Inlagatus, vel homo sub lege.] He who was of some frank-pledge, and not outlawed. It seems to be the contrary to Utlagh. Bract. tract. 2. lib. 3. c. 11.

INLAND, Is said to be terra dominicalis, pars manerii dominica, terra interior vel inclusa; for that which was let to tenants was called Outland. In an antient will there are these words; To Wulfee I give the Inlands or demeans, and to Elsey the utlands or tenancy. Testam. Britberico. This word was in great use among the Saxons, and often occurs in Domesday-book. See Inlantal.

INLAND BILLS. See Bills of Exchange.

INLAND TRADE, A Trade wholly managed at home, in one country. Merc. Dict. It is properly used in contradistinction to Commerce, and so is the word Trade generally; though the words Trade and commerce are frequently confounded, especially with respect to the former being used for the latter.

INLANTAL, INLANTALE, Demesne or inland, to which was opposed delantal, land tenanted or outlawed. Cowell.

INLEASED, From Fr. enlass.] Intangled or insnared; the word we may read in the champion's oath. Co. Inst. 2 par. fol 247.

INLEGIARE. When a delinquent has satisfied the law, and is again rectus in curiâ, he is said se inlegiare. Leg. Hen. I. cap. 11. See Inlagare.

INMATES, Persons who are admitted to dwell with and in the house of another, and not able to maintain themselves. Kitch. 45. These Inmates are generally idle persons harboured in cottages; wherein it hath been common for several families to inhabit, by which the poor of parishes have been increased; but suffering this was made an offence by statute, 31 Eliz. c. 7, repealed by stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 32, liable to a forfeiture of 10*s.* a month, inquirable of in the court leet, &c. If one have a house wherein he dwells, and lets part of it, so that there are several doors into the street, it is as two houses, and the under-tenant shall not be accounted an Inmate: But it is otherwise if there be but one outer door for both families. 2 Co. Inst. 378. A man keeps his daughter that is married, and her husband, &c. by covenant, and they have some rooms in his house, they are not Inmates; though if they live in one cottage, and part the house between them, and diet themselves severally, they will be Inmates within the statute. If a person take another to table with him; or let certain rooms to one to dwell in, if he be of ability, and not poor, he is no Inmate. Kitch. 45: See titles Poor; Vagrants.

INNAMIUM FOR NAMIUM, A pledge. Du Cange.

INNATURALITAS, Unnatural usage. Hen. de Knyghton, in Edw. 3. p. 2572.

INNINGS, Lands recovered from the sea in Romney Marsh, by draining: antient records mention the Innings of archbishops Becket, Boniface, and others; and at this day there is Elderton's Innings, &c. Where they are rendered profitable, and termed Gainage lands. Law of Sewers, 31.

INNONIA, From Sax. innan, i. e. intus.] An inclosure. Spelm. Gloss.

INNOTESCIMUS. The same as videmus; it signifies letters patent, so called, which are always of a charter of feoffment, or some other instrument, not of record, concluding Innotescimus per præsentes, &c.

INNOVATIONS, Are thought dangerous by our laws; and the antient Judges of the law have ever suppressed them, lest the certainty of the common law should be disturbed. In the reign of King Ed. III. the judges said, we will not change the law, which always hath been used; and in the time of King Hen. IV. they declared it would be better that it should be turned to a default, than that the law should be changed, or any Innovation made. 1 Inst. 379, 303.

INNOXIARE, To purge one of a fault, and make him innocent. Leg. Ethelred, c. 10.

INNS AND INNKEEPERS. Common Inns are instituted for passengers; for the proper Latin word is diversorium, because he who lodgeth there is quasi divertens se à viâ. 8 Rep. Cayle's case. Cowel.

Inns were instituted for lodging and relief for travellers; and, at common law, any man might erect and keep an Inn, or alehouse, to receive travellers, but now they are to be licensed. See title Alehouses.

Every Inn is not an alehouse, nor every alehouse an Inn; but if an Inn uses common selling of ale, it is then also an alehouse; and if an alehouse lodges and entertains travellers, it is also an Inn. Burn. J.

If the keeper of an Inn harbours thieves, or persons of scandalous reputation, or suffers frequent disorders in his house; or sets up a new Inn, in a place where there is no manner of need of one, to the hindrance of other antient and well-governed Inns, or keep it in a situation wholly unfit for such a purpose, he may by the common law be indicted and fined. H. P. C. 146: Dalt. 33, 34: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 78.

By the commission of the peace, two Justices (one of the quorum,) may inquire of Innholders, and of all and singular other persons who shall offend in the abuse of weights and measures, or in the sale of victuals, against the form of the ordinances in that behalf. Burn. J.

Innkeepers not selling their hay, oats, beans, &c. and all kinds of victuals for man and beast, at reasonable prices, having respect to the price sold in the markets adjoining, without taking any thing for litter, they shall be fined for the first offence, and for the second be imprisoned for a month, and for the third stand on the pillory. Rates and prices may be set on all the commodities sold by Innkeepers: and if they extort any unreasonable rates, they may be indicted. 2 Cro. 609: Carthew 150. See also stats. 12 E. 2. c. 6: 3 Hen. 8. c. 8: and this Dictionary, title Victuallers.

If any Innkeeper, alehouse-keeper, victualler, or sutler, in giving any account or reckoning in writing, or otherwise shall refuse or deny to give in the particular number of quarts or pints, or shall sell in measures unmarked, it shall not be lawful for him, for default of payment of such reckoning, to detain any goods, or other thing, belonging to the person or persons from whom such reckoning shall be due, but he shall be left to his action at law for the same, any custom or usage to the contrary notwithstanding. Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 15. § 2.

If one who keeps a common Inn, refuse to receive a traveller as guest into his house, or to find him victuals, or lodging, upon his tendering a reasonable price for the same; the Innkeeper is liable to render damages, in an action at the suit of the party grieved, and may also be indicted and fined at the suit of the King: it is said, he may be compelled by the constable of the town, to receive and entertain such a person as his guest; and that it is not material whether he have any sign before his door or not, if he make it his common business to entertain travellers. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 78: 1 Vent. 333: Dalt. c. 7.

Action on the case on an implied assumpsit will lie against the guests for things had, where the Innkeeper is obliged by law to furnish him with meat, drink, &c. And, when a guest calls for any thing at an Inn, the Innkeeper may justify detaining the person of the guest, or a horse, or other thing, till he is paid his just reckoning. Dyer 30:

Bac. Abr. title Inns. By the custom of the realm, if a man lies in an Inn one night, the Innkeeper may detain his horse until he is paid for the expences; but if he gives the party credit for that time, and lets him depart without payment, he hath waived the benefit of the custom, and must rely on his other agreement, having given credit to the person. 8 Mod. 172.

By the custom of London and Exeter, if a man commit a horse to an Innkeeper, and he eat out his price, the Innkeeper may take him as his own, upon the reasonable appraisement of four of his neighbours; which was, it seems, a custom arising from the abundance of traffick with strangers, that could not be known to charge them with the action; but the Innkeeper hath no power to sell the horse by the general custom of the realm. Bac. Abr. title Inns.

A person brings his horse to an Inn, and leaves him in the stable there; the Innkeeper may keep him till the owner pay for the keeping: and, it is said, if he eat out as much as he is worth, the master of the Inn, after a reasonable appraisement, may sell the horse and pay himself. Yelv. 66. But if one bring several horses to an Inn, and afterwards takes them all away, but one; the Innkeeper may not sell this horse for payment of the debt for the others, but every horse is to be sold to satisfy what is due for his own meat. 1 Bulst. 207, 217.

If an Innkeper receives a stage coach, and from time to time suffers the coach and horses to depart without payment, he gives credit to the owners, and cannot afterwards detain the coach and horses for what was formerly due. Stra. 556.

A guest in a common Inn arising in the night time, and carrying goods out of his chamber into another room, and from thence to the stable, intending to ride away with them, is guilty of felony, although there was no trespass in the taking of them; which is yet generally required in cases of felony. Dalt. c. 40: Burn. J: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 18. So a guest who hath a piece of plate set before him in an Inn, may be guilty of felony in fraudulently taking away the same. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 6.

Inns were allowed for the benefit of travellers, who have certain privileges whilst they are in their journies, and are in a more peculiar manner protected by the law: it is for this reason that the Innkeeper shall answer for those things which are stolen within the Inn; though not delivered to him to keep, and though he was not acquainted that the guests brought the goods to the Inn; for it shall be intended to be through his negligence, or occasioned by the fault of him or his servants. 8 Rep. Caley's case. Soldiers billetted are guests. Clayt. 97.

If an attorney hires a chamber in an Inn for a whole term, the host is not chargeable with any robbery in it, because the party is, as it were, a lessee. Mo. 877.

If one comes to an Inn, and makes a previous contract for lodging for a set time, and doth not eat or drink there, he is no guest, but a lodger, and so not under the Innkeeper's protection; but if he eats and drinks, or pays for his diet, it is otherwise. 12 Mod. 255.

If any theft be committed on a guest that lodgeth in an Inn, by the servants of the Inn, or by any other persons (not the guest's servant or companion), the Innkeeper is answerable in action on the case: but if the guest be not a traveller, but one of the same town, the master of the Inn is not chargeable for his servant's theft; and if a man is robbed in a private tavern, the master is not chargeable. 8 Rep. 32, 33.

One came to an Innkeeper and requested him to take charge of goods till a future day, which the Innkeeper refused, because his house was full of parcels; the person bringing the goods then sat down in the Inn, had some liquor, and put the goods on the floor immediately behind him, when he got up the goods were missing. Held, that the Innkeeper was liable, the goods being lost during the time the plaintiff staid as a guest. 5 Term Rep. 273.

In this action the Innkeeper shall not answer for any thing that is out of his Inn, but only for such things as are infra hospitium, the words of the writ being eorum bona & catalla infra hospitia illa existentia, &c. But if the Innkeeper put the guest's horse to grass, without orders, and the horse is stolen, he shall make it good. 8 Rep. 34. The Innkeeper shall not be charged, unless there shall be some default in him or his servant; for, if he that comes with the guest, or who desires to lodge with him, steal his goods, the host is not chargeable: though if an Innkeeper appoint one to lie with another, he shall answer for him. Although the guest deliver not his goods to the Innkeeper to keep, &c. if they be stolen, he shall be charged: but not where the hostler require his guest to put them in such a chamber under lock and key, if he suffers them to be in an outward court, &c. 2 Shep. Abr. 334. See title Bailment. See further as to Inns this Dictionary, titles Alehouses; Drunkenness; Action; Gaming; and 1 Hawk. P. C c. 78, at length.

INNS OF COURT, Hospitia Curiæ.] Are so called, because the students therein, do not only study the law to enable them to practise in the Courts in Westminster, but also pursue such other studies, as may render them better qualified to serve the King in his Court. Fortescue, c. 49. Of these (say, Sir Edward Coke) there are four well known, viz. the Inner Temple, Middle Temple, Lincoln's Inn, and Gray's Inn; which, with the two Serjeant's Inns, and eight Inns of Chancery, viz. Clifford's Inn, Symond's Inn, Clement's Inn, Lyon's Inn, Furnival's Inn, Staple's Inn, Bernard's Inn, and Thaive's Inn, (to which is since added New Inn,) make the most famous university for profession of the Law, or of any one human science in the world.

Our Inns of Court, or Societies of the Law, which are famed for their production of learned men, are governed by Masters, Principals, Benchers, Stewards, and other proper officers; and the chief of them have chapels for divine service, and all of them public halls for exercises, readings and arguments, which the students are [were!] obliged to perform and attend for a competent number of years, before admitted to speak at the bar, &c. The admission and forms for this purpose must be in one of the Inns of Court, not in the Inns of Chancery. These societies or colleges, nevertheless, are no corporation, nor have any judicial power over their members, but have certain orders among themselves, which, by consent, have the force of laws; for light offences, persons are only excommoned, or put out of commons; for greater, they lose their chambers, and are expelled; and when expelled out of one Society, shall never be received by any of the others. All the lesser Inns of Chancery are mostly inhabited by attornies, solicitors, and clerks, and belong to some or other of the principal Inns of court, who who have been used to send yearly some of their barristers to read to them. Fortescue. Clifford's Inn, Clement's Inn, and Lyon's Inn belong to The Inner Temple; New Inn to The Middle Temple; Furnival's Inn and Thaive's Inn to Lincoln's Inn; and Staple's Inn and Barnard's Inn to Gray's Inn. Dugd. Orig. 320.

INNUENDO, From innuo, to nod or beckon with the head.] A word used in declarations, indictments, and other pleadings, to ascertain a person or thing which was named before; as to say, he (innuendo, i. e. meaning, the plaintiff) did so and so, when there was mention before of another person, 4 Rep. 17. An Innuendo is in effect no more than a prædict, and cannot make that certain, which was uncertain before; and the law will not allow words to be enlarged by an Innuendo, so as to support an action on the case for speaking of them. Hob. 2, 6, 45: 5 Mod. 345. An Innuendo may not enlarge the sense of words, nor make supply, or alter the case where the words are defective. Hut. Rep. 44. In slander, both the person and scandalous words ought to be certain, and not want an Innuendo to make them out: if a plaintiff declares that the defendant said these words, Thou art a thief, and stolest a mare, &c. (Innuendo the plaintiff,) without an averment that the words were spoken to the said plaintiff, this is not good; because it doth not certainly appear of whom they were spoken, and the Innuendo doth not help it. 1 Danv. Abr. 158. The usual method of declaring is, if the words were spoken to the plaintiff, the defendant said the words to, of, and concerning the plaintiff. If said to a third person, the word to is omitted. A man shall not be punished for perjury, by the help of an Innuendo. 5 Mod. 342. And an Innuendo will not make an action for a libel good; if the matter precedent imports not scandal, &c. to the damage of the party. Mich. 5 Ann. Where action lies without an Innuendo, an Innuendo shall be repugnant and void; see 1 Danv. 158. See titles Indictment; Libel; Action; Perjury.

INOPERATIO. Of the legal excuses to exempt a man from appearing in court, one is, inoperationis causâ, viz. on the days in which all pleadings are to cease, or in diebus non juridicis. Leg. H. 1. c. 61.

INORDINATUS. One who died intestate. Mat. Westm. 1246.

INPENY AND OUTPENY. Money paid by the custom of some manors, on the alienations of tenants, &c. Regist. Prior. de Cokesford, p. 25.

INPRISII. Adherents or accomplices. Claus. 18 Hen. 3. in Brady Hist. Engl. Append. p. 180.

INQUEST, inquisitio.] An inquisition of jurors, in causes civil and criminal, on proof made of the fact on either side, when it is referred to their trial, being impanelled by the sheriff for that purpose; and as they bring in their verdict, judgment passeth. Staundf. P. C. lib. 3. c. 12.

AN INQUEST OF OFFICE, or Inquisition, is an inquiry made by the King's officer, his sheriff, coroner, or escheator, virtute officii, or by writ to them sent for that purpose; or by commissioners specially appointed, concerning any matter that entitles the King to the possession of lands or tenements, goods, or chattles. Finch, L. 323, 4, 5. This is done by a jury of no determinate number, being either twelve, or less, or more. As, to inquire, whether the King's tenant for life died seised, whereby the reversion accrues to the King; whether A., who held immediately of the Crown, died without heirs, in which case the lands belong to the King by escheat; whether B. be attainted of treason, whereby his estate is forfeited to the Crown; whether C. who has purchased lands be an alien, which is another cause of forfeiture; whether D. be an idiot, à nativitate, and, therefore, together with his lands, appertains to the custody of the King; and other questions of like import, concerning both the circumstances of the tenant, and the value or identity of the lands. These Inquests of Office were more frequently in practice than at present, during the continuance of the military tenures amongst us; when, upon the death of every one of the King's tenants, an Inquest of Office was held, called an inquisitio post mortem, to inquire of what lands he died seised, who was his heir, and of what age, in order to entitle the King to his marriage, wardship, relief, primer seisin, or other advantages, as the circumstances of the case might turn out. To superintend and regulate these inquiries the Court of wards and liveries was instituted by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 46, which was abolished at the Restoration, together with the tenures upon which it was found.

With regard to other matters, the Inquests of Office still remain in force, and are taken upon proper occasions, being extended not only to lands, but also to goods and chattels personal, as in the case of wreck, treasure-trove, and the like; and especially as to forfeitures for offences. For every jury which tries a man for treason or felony, every Coroner's Inquest that sits upon a felo de se, or one killed by chance-medley, is, not only with regard to chattels, but also to real interests, in all respects an Inquest of Office; and if they find the treason or felony, or even the flight of the party accused, (though innocent,) the King is thereupon, by virtue of this Office found, entitled to have his forfeitures; and also, in the case of chance-medley, he or his grantees are entitled to such things by way of deodand, as have moved to the death of the party. See titles Deodand; Forfeiture.

Whether a criminal be a lunatick, or not, shall be tried by an Inquest of Office, returned by the sheriff of the county; and if it be found by the jury that he only feigns himself lunatick, and he refuses to plead, he shall be dealt with as one standing mute. H. P. C. 226: 1 And. 107. Where a person stands mute without making any answer, the court may take an Inquest of Office, by the oath of any twelve persons present, if he do so out of malice, from a perverse or obstinate disposition, &c. But after the issue is joined, when the jury are in court, if there be any need for such inquiry, it shall be made by them, and not by an Inquest of Office. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 5. If a person attainted of felony escape, and, being retaken, denies he is the same man, Inquest is to be made of it by a jury before he is executed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 51. See 1 Bur. 18; 19. Inquisition on an untimely death, may be taken by Justices of gaol-delivery, oyer and terminer, or of the peace; if omitted by the Coroner. But it must be done publicly and openly, otherwise it shall be quashed. By Magna Charta, nothing is to be taken for Inquest of life or member. Stat. 9 Hen. 3. c. 26.

It is said, there are two sorts of Inquisitions, one to inform the King, the other to vest an interest in him; the one need not be certain, but the other must; and where an an Inquisition finds some parts well, and nothing others, it may be helped by melius inquirendum. 2 Salk. 469.

There is also a judicial writ ad inquirendum, to inquire by a jury into any thing touching a cause depending in court: Inquisition may also be had upon extents of land, writs of elegit, where judgment is had by default, and damages and costs are recovered, &c. Finch 484: 2 Lil. Abr. 65.

These Inquests of Office were devised by law, as an authentic means to give the King his right by solemn matter of record; without which he in general can neither take, nor part with any thing. Finch, L. 82. For it is a part of the liberties of England, and greatly for the safety of the subject, that the King may not enter upon or seise any man's possessions upon bare surmises without the intervention of a jury. Gilb. Hist. Exch. 132: Hob. 347. It is however particularly enacted by stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 20, that, in case of attainder for high treason, the King shall have the forfeiture instantly without any Inquisition of Office. And, as the King hath (in general) no title at all to any property of this sort before office found; therefore, by stat. 18 Hen. 6. c. 6, it was enacted, that all letters patent or grants of lands and tenements before office found, or returned into the Exchequer, shall be void. And by the Bill of Rights at the Revolution, 1 W.& M. stat. 2. c. 2, it is declared, that all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction, (which is here the Inquest of Office,) are illegal and void; which indeed was the law of the land in the reign of Edward the Third. 2 Inst. 48. See title Forfeiture.

With regard to real property, if an office be found for the King, it puts him in immediate possession, without the trouble of a formal entry, provided a Subject in the like case would have had a right to enter: and the King shall receive all the mesne or intermediate profits from the time that his title accrued. Finch, L. 325, 6. As, on the other hand, by the articuli super cartas, 28 Ed. 1. st. 3. c. 19, if the King's escheater or sheriff seize lands into the King's hand without cause, upon taking them out of the King's hand again, the party shall have the mesne profits restored to him.

There is not such nicety required in an Inquisition as in pleading; because an Inquisition is only to inform the court how process shall issue for the King, whose title accrues by the attainder, and not by the Inquisition; yet, in the cases of the King and a common person, Inquisitions have been held void for incertainty. Lane 39: 2 Nels. Abr. 1008.

In order to avoid the possession of the Crown acquired by the finding of such office, the Subject may not only have his petition of right, which discloses new facts not found by the office, and his monstrans de droit, which relies on the facts as found; but also he may (for the most part) traverse or deny the matter of fact itself, and put it in a course of trial by the common-law process of the Court of Chancery; yet still, in some special cases, he hath no remedy left but a mere petition of right. Finch, L. 324. These traverses, as well as the monstrans de droit, were greatly enlarged and regulated for the benefit of the Subject, by the statutes before-mentioned, and others stats. 34 Ed. 3. c. 13: 36 Ed. 3. c. 13: 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 8. And in the traverses thus given by statute, which came in the place of the old petition of right, the party traversing is considered as the plaintiff. Law of Nisi Prius 201, 2: and must therefore make out his own title, as well as impeach that of the crown, and then shall have judgment quod manus Domini Regis amoveantur, &c. 3 Comm. 258, 260.

Some of these Inquisitions are in themselves convictions, and cannot afterwards be traversed or denied; and therefore the Inquest or Jury, ought to hear all that can be alledged on both sides. Of this nature are all Inquisitions of felo de se; of flight in persons accused of felony; of deodands, and the like; and presentments of petty offences in the sheriff's tourn or court leet, whereupon the presiding officer may set a fine. Other Inquisitions may be afterwards traversed and examined; as particularly the Coroner's Inquisition of the death of a man, when it finds any one guilty of homicide; for in such cases the offender so presented must be arraigned upon this Inquisition, and may dispute the truth of it, which brings it to a kind of indictment, the most usual and effectual means of prosecution. 4 Comm. 301.

INQUIRENDO. An authority given in general to some person, or persons, to inquire into something for the King's advantage. Reg. 72.

INQUIRY, WRIT OF. See Writ.

INQUISITION. See title Inquest.

INQUISITION, Ex officio mero, Is one way of proceeding in Ecclesiastical Courts. Wood's Inst. 596. And formerly the oath ex officio was a sort of Inquisition.

INQUISITORS, inquisitores.] Sheriffs, Coroners super visum corporis, or the like, who have power to inquire in certain cases; and by the statute of Westm. 1, inquirors or Inquisitors are included under the name of Ministri. 2 Inst. 211.

INROLLMENT, Irrotulatio.] The registering or entering in the rolls of the Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas, or Exchequer, or by the Clerk of the Peace in the records of the Quarter Sessions, of any lawful act; as a statute or recognizance acknowledged, a deed of bargain and sale of lands, &c.

An Inrollment of a deed, may be either by the common law, or according to the statute: and Inrollment of deeds ought to be made in parchment, and recorded in court, for perpetuity's sake. Trin. 23 Car: Pasch. 24 Car. 1 B. R. But the inrolling a deed doth not make it a record, though it thereby becomes a deed recorded: for there is a difference between matter of record, and a thing recorded to be kept in memory; a record being the entry in parchment of judicial matters controverted in [illegible] of record, and whereof the court takes notice; whereas an Inrollment of a deed is a private act of the parties concerned, of which the court takes no cognizance at the time of doing it, although the court permits it. 2 Lil. Abr. 69.

Every deed, before it is inrolled, is to be acknowledged to be the deed of the party before a Master of the Court of Chancery, or a Judge of the court, wherein inrolled; which is the officer's warrant for inrolling of the same: and the Inrollment of a deed, if it be acknowledged by the grantor, will be good proof of the deed itself upon a trial. A deed may be inrolled without the examination of the party himself; for it is sufficient if oath is made of the execution. If two are parties, and the deed is acknowledged by one, the other is bound by it: and if a man lives in New York, &c. and would pass land in England, a nominal person may be joined with him in the deed, who may acknowledge it here, and it will be binding. 1 Salk. 389.

If the party dies before it is inrolled, it may be inrolled afterwards; and Inrollments of deeds operate by virtue of the statute of Inrollments; but if livery and seisin, &c. be had before the inrolling, it prevents the operation of the Inrollment, and the party shall be in by that, as the more worthy ceremony to pass estates. 1 Leon 5: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1010. Although Inrollment, or matter of record, shall not be tried per pais, yet the time, when the Inrollment of a deed was made, shall. 2 Lil. 68.

An indorsement on the back of the deed by the proper officer is sufficient evidence of the Inrollment. Doug. 56, 8. And by stat. 10 Ann. c. 18, where a bargain and sale enrolled shall be pleaded with a profert, a Copy of the Inrollment signed by the proper officer, and proved on oath to be a true copy, shall be of the same force as the deed itself. See titles Bargain and Sale; Deed; Conveyance; Annuity.

Inrollment is ordained in divers cases by statute; of bargains and sales by stat. 27 H. 8 c. 16.—Deeds in corporations, &c. stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 22. Of writings in the counties of Lancaster and Chester, &c. stat. 5 Eliz. c. 26. Grants from the Crown of felon's goods, &c. stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 22. Of deeds and wills made of lands of Papists. See title Papists: and further on this subject, title Registry of Deeds.

INSCRIPTIONES. Written instruments by which any thing was granted. Blount.

INSECTATOR. A prosecutor or adversary at law. Paroch. Antiq. 388.

INSERVIRE. To reduce persons to servitude. Du Cange.

INSETENA, Sax.] An inditch. Ordin. Romn. Marisf. p. 72.

INSIDIÆ, The same with Vigiliæ or Excubiæ. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 4. par. 3.

INSIDIATORES VIARUM. Way-layers; which words are not to be put in indictments, appeals, &c. by stat. 4 H. 4. c. 2. And before this statute, clergy might be denied felons charged generally as Insidiatores Viarum, &c. See stat. 23 Car. 2. c. 1; and title Clergy, Benefit of.

INSIGNIA, Ensigns or arms. See Arms and Gentility.

INSILIUM, Evil advice or counsel. Hence, Insiliarius, an evil counsellor. Sim. Dunelm.

INSIMUL COMPUTASSET, Is a writ or action of account, which lies not for things certain, but only for things uncertain. Bro. Acco. 81. Also, in assumpsit, a count is often added to the declaration, called an Insimul computasset, i. e. setting forth an account stated, wherein the defendant was found indebted to the plaintiff in so much, as a consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the sum found in arrear. See this Dictionary, titles Actions; Pleading; Assumpsit.

INSIMUL TENUIT. One species of the writ of formedon brought against a stranger by a coparcener on the possession of the ancestor, &c. See Formedon.

INSINUATION, insinuatio.] A creeping into a man's mind or favour covertly; mentioned in the stat. 21 H. 8. c. 5. Insinuation of a Will is, among the civilians, the first production of it; or leaving it in the hands of the Registrar, in order to its probate.

INSOLVENT. Till of late the Chancery would not put out an insolvent trustee; for that he was intrusted by the donor; an insolvent person made executor cannot be put out by the Ordinary; for he is intrusted by the testator. Comb. 185: Carth. 457. But Chancery granted an injunction against him, not to intermeddle with the assets, any further than to satisfy the legacy given to himself; for in equity he is but a trustee for the other legatees; (who in this case were infants;) and where a trustee is insolvent, the Court of Chancery will compel him to give security before he shall enter upon the trust. Carth. 458. See titles Chancery; Trustees; Bankrupt; Executor.

INSOLVENT DEBTORS, See titles Debtors; Execution.—Many acts have been from time to time made for the relief of these; the last before these leaves went through the press was stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 69, by which persons actually in custody on the 12th of February 1794, and whose whole debts did not exceed the sum of 1000 l. were released, on making affidavit of the surrender of all their estate and effects, and signing a schedule thereof, delivered to the Clerk of the Peace at the sessions next following their respective notices, of their name, trade, and two last places of abode (if so many); which were to be given in the London Gazette, and in the county newspaper nearest to the gaol where confined, (if out of London or the bills of mortality,) three times; the first notice to be at least twenty-one days before the said sessions. The estate and effects of discharged Debtors, are vested in the clerk of the peace, who is directed by the statute to assign the same to such creditors as the court shall direct; when the assignees are to use their best endeavours to receive and collect the estate and effects of every such Debtor, and with all convenient speed make sale thereof; and if the Debtor be interested in, or entitled to any real estate, either estates-tail, or in possession, reversion, or expectancy, the same to be sold by public auction within two months after the assignment, being first advertised in the Gazette, some daily paper, or country paper, if out of the bills of mortality, thirty days previous to such sale; and, at the end of three months after such assignment, an equal dividend of the Debtor's effects was ordered to be made, and, if a surplus, the same to be paid to the Debtor. Mortgages to take place of claims of an inferior nature. Prisoners not to be discharged of debts subsequent to February 12, 1794.—Attornies, or servants, imprisoned for embezzling money received for their employers, or any persons who have obtained money, or bills of exchange, under false pretences, or removed goods to defraud landlords, or fraudulently assigned their effects, are excluded from the benefit of the statute. Prisoners in custody for fees, on contempt for not obeying awards, not paying costs, or on excom. cap., to be discharged; but the statute does not extend to Debtors to the Crown or Revenue; 20*l*. per cent. to be allowed as a reward for discovering any part of a Debtor's estate not comprised in the schedule; and the discharge of fraudulent Debtors to be void. Perjury of prisoners to be punishable as in other cases of perjury.

INSPECTION. See Age; Infancy; Trial.

Trial by Inspection, or examination, is, when for the greater expedition of a cause, in some point or issue, being either the principal question, or arising collaterally out of it, but being evidently the object of sense, the Judges of the court, upon the testimony of their own senses, decide the point in dispute. See 3 Comm. 331.

INSPEXIMUS. A word used in letters patent giving name to them, being the same with exemplification, and called inspeximus, because it begins, Rex omnibus, &c. Inspeximus irrotulamentum quarund', literar', patent', &c.

INSTALL-

INSTALLMENT. A settlement, establishing, or sure placing in; as Installment into dignities, &c. See Stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 2.

In ecclesiastical promotions, where the freehold passes to the persons promoted, corporal possession is required, to vest the property completely in the new proprietor; who, according to the distinction of the Canonists, acquires the jus ad rem, or inchoate and imperfect right, by nomination and institution; but not the jus in re, or complete and full right, unless by corporal possession. Therefore in dignities possession is given by Installment; in rectories and vicarages by induction, without which no temporal rights accrue to the minister, though every ecclesiastical power is vested in him by institution. 2 Comm. 312.

Installment signifies also either the payment, or the time appointed for payment, of different portions of a sum of money; which, by agreement of the parties, in stead of being payable in the gross, at one time, is to be paid in parts, at certain stated times; such as are frequently specified in conditions to bonds, &c. or defeasances, or warrants of attorney to confess judgments.

INSTANT, Lat. instans, instanter.] An indivisible moment of time; which, though it cannot be actually divided, yet in intendment of law it may, and be applied to several purposes: he who lays violent hands upon himself commits no felony till he is dead, and when dead he is not in being so as to be termed a felon; but he is so adjudged in law eo instante, at the very Instant of this fact done. See title Forfeiture. And there are many other like cases where the Instant of time that is not divisible in nature, in the consideration of the mind is divided. Plowd. 258. b.: and vide Co. Lit. 185. b: Vin. Abr. title Instant. A. pl. 2.

An Instant is not to be considered in law, as in logick, as a point of time, and no parcel of time; but in our law, things which are to be done in an Instant, have in consideration of law a priority of time in them. Vide Co. Lit. and Plowd. as cited before. And in several cases, a difference is allowed in our law in an Instant, as per mortem & post mortem, &c. See Show. 415

INSTANTER, Lat.] Instantly or presently. Law Lat. Dict.

Trial shall be had instanter where a prisoner between attainder and execution, pleads that he is not the same that was attainted. In such a case a jury is to be impanelled to try this collateral issue, viz. the identity of his person, and in such collateral issue, the trial shall be instanter. See Staundf. P. C. 163: Co. Lit. 157: 3 Burr. 1809 - 1812, where an issue on the identity of the person was joined, and the several points following were determined. First, It is to be tried instanter, unless the court (upon circumstances) give time. 2dly, The award of the execution is to be by the second judge, if the sentence before pronounced was for felony. 3dly, The defendant is not entitled to a copy of the record. 4thly, The court will not name the day of execution, but leave it to the sheriff. See also this Dictionary, title, Execution of Criminals; Inquisition.

INSTAURUM, Is used in ancient deeds for a stock of cattle; Staurum and instauramentum, signify young beasts, store or breed. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 548. Instaurum was commonly taken for the whole stock upon a farm, as cattle, waggons, ploughs, and all other implements of husbandry. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 72. Instaurum ecclesiæ is applied to the books, vestments, and all other utensils belonging to a church Synod. Exet. ann. 1287.

INSTIRPARE, To plant or establish. Brompt. 935.

INSTITUTION, Institutio.] Is when the bishop says to a clerk, who is presented to a church living, Instituo te rectorem talis ecclesiæ, cum curâ animarum, & accipe curam tuam & meam: or it is a Faculty made by the Ordinary, whereby a Parson is approved to be inducted to a rectory or parsonage. If the bishop upon examination finds the Clerk presented capable of the benefice, he admits and institutes him; and Institution may be granted either by the bishop under his episcopal seal; or it may be done by the bishop's vicar-general, chancellor or commissary; and if granted by the vicar-general, or any other substitute, their acts are taken to be the acts of the bishop: also the instrument or letters testimonial of Institution may be granted by the bishop, though he is not in his diocese; to which some witnesses should subscribe their names. 1 Inst. 344. The bishop by Institution transfers the cure of souls to the clerk; and if he refuseth to grant Institution, the party may have his remedy in the court of audience of the archbishop, by duplex querela, &c; for Institution is properly cognizable in the Ecclesiastical Court: where Institution is granted, and suspected to be void for want of title in the patron, &c. a superinstitution hath been sometimes granted to another, to try the title of the present incumbent by ejectment. 2 Rol. Abr. 220. 4 Rep. 79.

Taking a reward for Institution incurs a forfeiture of double value of one year's profit of the benefice, and makes the living void. Stat. 31 Eliz c 6. On Institution the clerk hath a right to enter on the parsonage house and glebe, and take the tithes; but he cannot grant, let, or do any act to charge them, till he is inducted into the living: he is complete parson as to the spiritualty, by Institution; but not as to the temporalty, &c. By the Institution he is only admitted ad officium, to pray and preach; and is not entitled ad beneficium, until formal induction. Plowd. 528. See Installment. The Church is full by Institution against all common persons, so that if another person be afterwards inducted, it is void, and he hath but a mere possession; but a church is not full against the King till induction. 2 Inst. 358: 1 Rol. Rep. 151. When a bishop hath given Institution to a clerk, he issues his mandate for induction; and if the archbishop should inhibit the archdeacon to induct the clerk thus instituted, he may do it notwithstanding. The first beginning of Institutions to benefices, was in a national synod held at Westminster, anno 1124. For patrons did originally fill all churches by collation and livery; till this power was taken from them by canons. Seldon's Hist. of Tithes, cap. 6 & 9 p. 375. See further, titles Parson; Advowson; Simony, &c.

INSUPER, Is used by auditors in their accounts in the Exchequer; as when so much is charged upon a person as due on his account, they say so much remains insuper to such an accountant. See titles Accounts-Publick.

INSURANCE or ASSURANCE.

A Security given, in consideration of a sum of money paid in hand of so much per cent to an Assurer or Insurer, to indemnify the Insured from such losses as shall be specified cified in the policy, or instrument of Assurance, subscribed by the Insurer or Insurers for that purpose. Dict. Tr. and Com. 135: Savary's Dict. title Assurance & Police d' Assurance.

It has been conceived, from a passage in Suetonius, that Claudius Cæsar was the first who invented this custom of Assurance; but, with greater probability, Savary, in his Dictionaire de Commerce, title Assurance, thinks this custom was first introduced by the Jews in the year 1182; but whoever was the first contriver, or original inventor of this useful branch of business, it has been many ages practised in this kingdom, and is supposed to have been introduced here by some Italians from Lombardy, who at the same time came to settle at Antwerp, and among us: and this being prior to the building of the Royal Exchange, they used to meet in a place where Lombard-street now is, at a house they had called the Pawn House, or Lombard, for transacting business; and as they were then the sole negociators in Insurance, the policies made by others in after-times had a clause inserted, that those latter ones should have as much force and effect as those formerly made in Lombard-street.

This latter opinion is adopted by Mr. Parke, in his "System of the Law of Marine Insurances, &c." a book long wanted by the profession, and containing information the most necessary to the commercial part of the community. It is founded almost solely on the decisions of the late venerable Chief Justice Mansfield; a name that will ever be inestimably dear to all lovers of Equity, and to none more than to the Merchants of London.

From Mr. Parke's excellent Digest of the Law on this subject, (2d. edition, 1790) the following abridgment has been compiled.

Varying a little from the order in which Mr. Parke has disposed his matter, the subject may, for our present purpose, be aptly divided as follows:

I. Of MARINE INSURANCES. First, considering,

1. The Policy, its Nature.
2. The Construction to be put on it.
3. Warranties in Policies.
4. The Proceedings on Policies.
5. Of Re-assurances, and Double Insurances.

II. Of Losses under such Policies.

1. Of total Losses, by Peril of the Sea.
2. By Capture.
3. Detention.
4. Barratry, &c.
5. Of general or gross Average; Average or partial Loss; and Adjustment.
6. Of Salvage.
7. Of Abandonment.

III. Of Fraud, Illegality, or Irregularity; which either vitiate the Policy, or prevent a Recovery, though a Loss happen.

1. Of direct Fraud in Policies.
2. Of changing the Ship.
3. Deviation in the Voyage.
4. Sea-worthiness.
5. Of Wager Policies.
6. Of illegal Voyages, and Enemies' Ships, &c.
7. Of prohibited Goods.
8. Of the Return of Premium; in Cases of void or fraudulent Policies.

IV. Of Bottomry and Respondentia.

V. Of INSURANCES on LIVES.

VI. Of INSURANCES against FIRE.

Previous to entering into this detail it may be proper to say a few words as to who may be Insurers or Underwriters; and what property may in general be insured.

At common law, and by the usage of merchants, any person whatever might be an Insurer: but this having led to dangerous confidence on the one hand, and unprincipled fraud on the other, the stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 18, was passed, authorizing his Majesty to grant charters to the Royal Exchange Assurance Company, and the London Assurance Company; and which statute prohibited any other Society or Partnership from underwriting policies of Insurance. Policies therefore are now either underwritten by those Companies, or individual underwriters; a policy subscribed by any Society, or Partnership, being absolutely void. Parke 5, 9.

The most frequent subjects of Insurance are, 1st, Ships, goods, merchandizes; the freight or hire of ships. 2d, Houses, warehouses, and the goods in them from danger by fire. And 3d, Lives. (Of the two latter, see Post V. VI.) Bottomry and Respondentia are also particular species of property which may be insured; but which must be particularly expressed in the policy. 3 Burr. 1394: 1 Black. Rep. 405; unless by the usage of the trade it is understood. Parke 11. See post IV. And the lien of a factor upon goods is included in the term goods. 1 Burr. 489. Insurance on seamen's wages is prohibited. Parke 12. A governor of a fort may insure it against the attacks of an enemy. 3 Burr. 1905. Insurance on enemies' property is now prohibited by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 27. § 4. See post III. 5, 7.

I. 1. Policy is the name given to the instrument by which the contract of indemnity is effected between the Insurer and the Insured; and it is not, like most contracts, signed by both parties, but only by the Insurer, [the party who takes on him the risk,] who, on that account, it seems, is called The Underwriter.—Of Policies there are two kinds, valued and open; the difference is, that, in the former, property insured is valued at prime cost at the time of effecting the policy; in the latter, the value is not mentioned. In the case of an open policy the real value must be proved; in the other it is agreed, and it is just as if the parties had admitted it at the trial. 2 Burr. 1117.

They are only simple contracts, but of great credit, and ought not to be altered when once they are signed; unless there be some written document to shew that the meaning of the parties was mistaken, or unless they be altered by consent. 1 Vez. 317: 1 Atk. 545: Salk. 444.

A Policy is a species of property for which trover will lie at the instance of the Insured, if it be wrongfully withheld from him. Parke 4.

The form of the policy now used, is two hundred years old, and is very irregular and confused, and often ambiguous. It is partly printed, to serve for general purposes common to all policies, and partly written, for the purpose of inserting the names of the parties, and to express express their meaning; and the written clauses shall accordingly control the printed words. See 3 Burr. 1555: Parke 5, 15.

There are nine requisites of a policy. First, The name of the person Insured. It was formerly much the practice to effect policies of Insurance in blank without naming the persons on whose account they were made; this was found both mischievous and inconvenient: to remedy which, the stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 44, directed the name of all persons interested, or if they resided abroad, the name of their agents in this kingdom to be inserted in the policy. The provisions of this act however, not being without their attendant evils, (see 1 Term Rep. 313, 464,) it was repealed by stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 56; which enacts, that it shall not be lawful for any person to make Assurance on ships or goods, without inserting the name or firm of one or more of the parties interested; or the name or firm of the consignor or consignee; or, of the person receiving the order for, or effecting, the policy; or, of the person giving directions to effect the same. All policies without one or other of these requisites to be null and void.

Secondly, The names of the ship and master; unless the Insurance be general, on any ship or ships. Parke, 19.

Thirdly, Whether the Insurance be made on ships, goods, or merchandizes. We may here observe, that a policy on goods generally does not include goods lashed on deck, the captain's clothes, or the ship's provisions. Parke 21. But a policy on the ship and furniture includes provisions sent out in a ship for the use of the crew. 4 Term Rep. 206. See post II. 1, 5.

Fourthly, The name of the place at which the goods are laden, and to which they are bound. A policy, therefore, from London to ——— is void. Moll. b. 2. c. 7. §. 14. It is also usual to state at what ports or places the ship may touch or stay; to avoid questions on deviation. Parke 22.

Fifthly, The time when the risk commences, and when it ends. On the goods it usually begins from the lading on board the ship, and continues till they are safely landed; on the ship, from her beginning to lade at A, and continues till she arrive at the port of destination, and be there moored in safety twenty-four hours. See post II.

Sixthly, The various perils against which the Underwriter insures. The words now used in policies are so comprehensive that there is scarcely any event unprovided for. The Insurer undertakes to bear "all perils of the seas, men of war, fire, enemies, pirates, rovers, thieves, jettisons, letters of mart and countermart, surprisals, takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of Kings, Princes, and People of what nation, condition, or quality soever, barratry of the master and mariners; and all other perils, losses, and misfortunes that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage of the said goods and merchandizes, and ship, or any part thereof."

The policy is frequently made with the words lost or not lost in it; which are peculiar to English policies, and add greatly to the risk: as though the ship be lost at the time of the Insurance made, the Underwriter is liable, if there be no fraud. Parke 24. See 5 Burr. 2083.

Seventhly, The Premium or consideration for the risk, which is always expressed in the policy to be received at the time of underwriting; but policies in general are effected by the intervention of a broker, between whom and the Insurers open accounts are kept by the usage of trade; and who are therefore, it seems, liable, in an action, to the Insurers, notwithstanding such admission by the words of the policy. Parke 26.

Eighthly, The day, month, and year on which the policy was executed.

Ninthly, The policy must be duly stamped, viz. on a policy for 1000*l.* and under, with a 6*s.* stamp, and above that sum with a stamp of 11*s.*

By stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30, When an Insurance is made, a policy must be made out within three days under a penalty of 100*l.*; and by the same statute, promissory notes for Insurances are void.

It is stated above, that policies are generally effected by the intervention of a Broker, and that the name of the agent of an Insurer residing abroad must be mentioned in the policy. It seems therefore the proper place here to mention, that such agent or correspondent is liable to an action for not insuring, which is to be tried on the same principles as an action on a policy; and the defendant is entitled to every benefit of which the Underwriter might take advantage. The whole law on this subject is laid down in Smith v. Lascelles, where Buller, J. mentioned three instances in which such order to insure must be obeyed. 1. Where a merchant abroad has effects in the hands of his correspondent here. 2. Where, though the merchant has no effects in the hands of his correspondent, yet the course of dealing has been such, that the one has been used to send orders for Insurance, and the other to comply with them. 3. If the merchant abroad send bills of lading to his correspondents here, and ingrafts on them an order to insure, as the implied condition on which the bills of lading shall be accepted. 2 Term Rep. 187. and note.

2. A Policy being considered as a simple contract of indemnity, must always be construed, as nearly as possible, according to the intention of the contracting parties, and not according to the strict meaning of the words. And, in questions on such construction, no rule has been more frequently followed, than the usage of trade, with respect to the voyage insured. 1 Burr. 347, 8: See also 2 Salk. 443, 5: 2 Str. 1265, and post III. 3.

A Policy on a ship generally from A. to B. was construed to mean till the ship was unladen. Skinn. 243. But if it contain the usual words till moored twenty-four hours in safety, the Insurers shall be answerable for no loss, that does not actually happen before the expiration of the time. Even though the loss was occasioned by an act (of barratry by the master) committed during the voyage insured. 1 Term. Rep. 252.

Under a policy containing those words, the Underwriters were held liable for a subsequent loss; because the Captain, the very day on which the ship arrived at her moorings, was served with an order from Government to return in order to perform quarantine; and therefore the ship could not be said to have moored twenty-four hours in safety, although she did not go back for some days. 2 Stra. 1243.

In a policy upon freight, if an accident prevent the ship fro[illegible]g, the Insured cannot recover the freight, which he [illegible]d have earned if she had completed her voyage.

voyage. 2 Stra. 1251. But if the policy be a valued policy, and part of the cargo be on board, when such accident happens, the Insured may recover to the whole amount. 3 Term Rep. 362.

When an Insurance is at and from any place the ship is protected, from her first arrival during her preparation for the voyage; but if all thoughts of the voyage be laid aside, the Insurer is discharged. 1 Atk. 548: 2 Atk. 359: and see 1 Black. Rep. 417, 8.

The great and leading cases on questions of construction are two, Tiernay v. Etherington, and Pelly v. Royal Exchange Company. See 1 Burr. 341, 8. In these cases, the principles to be observed in the construction of policies, are fully considered; and in the latter of them, Lord Mansfield observed, that "the Insurer, at the time of underwriting, has under his consideration the nature of the voyage, and the usual manner of doing it; and what is usually done by such a ship, with such a cargo, in such a voyage, is understood to be referred to by every policy." The same principles were adhered to in a subsequent case, where the same learned Judge remarked that every Underwriter is presumed to be acquainted with the practice of the trade he insures; and if he does not know it, he ought to inform himself. Dougl. 510—513. So in the construction of a policy upon time, the same liberality prevails as in other cases; and an attention to the meaning of the contracting parties has always been paid. Dougl. 527—531.

The usage of trade with respect to East-India voyages has been more notorious than in any other, the question having more frequently occurred. The charter-parties of the India Company give leave to prolong the ship's stay in India for a year, and it is common by a new agreement to detain her a year longer. The words of the policy too are very general, without limitation of time or place. These charter-parties are so notorious, and the course of the trade is so well known, that the Underwriter is always liable for any intermediate voyage, upon which the ship might be sent while in India, though not expressly mentioned in the policy. These principles were fully laid down and settled in the nine causes tried upon the ship, Winchelsea, East Indiaman; the nine verdicts in which were ultimately uniform, for the plaintiffs the Insured, against the Underwriters. 3 Burr. 1707: & seqq. They have been since recognized and allowed in subsequent cases. See Parke 49, 51.

However, the parties may, by their own agreement, prevent such latitude of construction: nor need this be done by express words of exclusion; but if, from the terms used, it can be collected, that the parties meant so, that construction shall prevail. Dougl. 27. And the equitable principles of construction shall never be carried so far as that when a man has insured one species of property, he shall recover a damage which he has suffered by the loss of a different species. Thus, one who has insured a cargo of goods cannot, under that Insurance, recover the freight paid for the carriage; nor can an owner who insures the ship merely demand satisfaction for the loss of merchandize laden thereon, or extraordinary wages paid to seamen, or the value of provisions by reason of detention of the ship at any port. Parke 52—61. See also 1 Term Rep. 127, 130 and post [illegible]

3. A Warranty, in a policy of Insurance, is a condition, or a contingency, that a certain thing shall be done or happen, and unless that is performed, there is no valid contract. 1 Term Rep. 345. It is immaterial for what end, if any, the warranty is inserted in the contract; but, being inserted, it becomes a binding condition upon the Insured, and he must shew a literal compliance with it. Parke 318. So on the contrary warranties shall be strictly construed in favour of the Insured. As where a ship is warranted well on any day certain, though she be lost by eight in the morning of the day when the policy was effected at noon, the Underwriter shall be liable. 3 Term. Rep. 360. It is no matter whether the loss happened in consequence of the breach of warranty or not, for the very meaning of inserting a warranty is to preclude all inquiry about its materiality. 1 Term Rep. 346. It is also immaterial to what cause the non-compliance is to be attributed; for although it might be owing to the merest accident, or to the most wise and prudential reasons, the policy is avoided. Cowp. 607.

In this strict and literal compliance with the terms of a Warranty consists the difference between a Warranty and a Representation; the latter of which need only be performed in substance, while a Warranty must always be complied with strictly. In a Warranty the person making it takes the risk of its truth or falsehood on himself; in a Representation, if the Insured assert that to be true which he either knows to be false, or about which he knows nothing, the policy is void on account of fraud; but a Representation made without fraud, if not false in a material point, does not vitiate the policy. Cowp. 787: Parke, c. 18: See post III. 1.

In order to make written instructions binding as a Warranty they must appear on the face of, and make a part of, the policy. Cowp. 790. For though a written paper be wrapt up in the policy, and shewn to the Underwriters at the time of subscribing, or even if it be wafered to the policy, it is not a Warranty, but a Representation. Dougl. p. 12. in n. But a Warranty written in the margin (transversely, or otherwise) of the policy is considered to be equally binding, and liable to the same strict construction as if written in the body of the policy. Doug. 11, 12. n. 4. 13, n. If the Underwriter pay the loss on a policy, and after find that such Warranty was not strictly complied with, he may recover back the money again by action: See 1 Term Rep. 343; which was also a case arising on a Warranty in the margin of a policy.

The various kinds of Warranties are too numerous to be mentioned; depending generally upon the particular circumstances of each case. The three cases of Warranty, on which most questions have arisen, are, as to the time of sailing, convoy, and neutrality of property.

As to the first of these: if a man warrant to sail on a parcular day, and be guilty of a breach of that Warranty, the Underwriter is no longer answerable. Parke 325. c. 18. And a detention by Government, previous to the proposed day of sailing, is no excuse for not complying with the Warranty, nor a peril within the terms of the policy. Cowp. 784. So if the Warranty be to sail after a specific day, and the ship sail before, the policy is equally avoided as in the former case. Parke 326. c. 18.

But

But when a ship leaves her port of lading, having a full and complete cargo on board, and having no other view but the safest mode of sailing to her port of delivery, for which purpose she touches at any particular place of rendezvous for convoy, &c. her voyage must be said to commence from her departure from that port, and though she be detained at such place of rendezvous by an embargo, she has complied with the Warranty. Cowp. 601—8: and see Thellusson v. Fergusson, Dougl. 361. acc. What shall be a departure from the port of London, or rather what is the port of London, remains yet undecided. It seems, however, that Gravesend is the limit of that port, where vessels receive the Custom-house cocket, their final clearance, on board, and from whence they must depart on the day mentioned in the Warranty. Parke, c. 18.

As to Warranty of sailing with convoy. If the Insured warrant that the vessel shall depart with convoy, and it do not, the policy is defeated, and the Underwriter is not responsible. A convoy means a naval force under the command of that person whom Government, or any authorized by them, may happen to appoint. Parke, c. 18.

A sailing with convoy from the usual place of rendezvous, as Spithead for the port of London, is a departure with convoy within the meaning of such a Warranty. 2 Salk. 443: 2 Str. 1263, 5. And although the words used are generally to depart with convoy, or to sail with convoy, yet they extend to sailing with convoy throughout the voyage. 3 Lev. 320. And this point was unanimously confirmed by the whole Court in more modern times. Dougl. 72. Lilly v. Ewer.

But an unforeseen separation from convoy is a peril to which the Underwriter is liable. 3 Lev. 320: 2 Salk. 443: Carth. 216: 1 Show. 320: 4 Mod. 58: S. C. And even where the ship has without any neglect, by tempestuous weather, been prevented from joining the convoy at all; at least, so as to receive the orders of the commander of the ships of war; if she do every thing in her power to effect it, it shall be deemed a satisfaction of the Warranty to sail with convoy. 2 Str. 1250. The duty of officers appointed for convoy to merchant ships is prescribed by stat. 13 Car 2. st. 1. c. 9. art. 17. confirmed by stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 33. § 2. art. 17. Parke 350, n. See post II. 4.

The last species of Warranty above mentioned is that of neutrality; or that the ship and goods insured are neutral property. This is different from the two former; for, if this Warranty be not complied with, the contract is not merely voided as for a breach, but it is absolutely void, ab initio, on account of fraud, being a fact at the time of insuring within the knowledge of the Insurer; an error in which must therefore arise from a deliberate falsehood on his part. 4 Burr. 1419: 1 Black. Rep. 427. And see post III. But if the ship, &c. is neutral at the time the risk commences, the Insurer takes upon himself the chance of war and peace during the continuance of the policy. Dougl. 732. Eden v. Parkinson.

4. The oldest case in the books on a marine policy of Insurance is in 7 Rep. 47. b, which only serves however to shew that this contract was at that time very little understood. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, a statute was passed, (43 Eliz. c. 12,) to erect a particular court for the trial of Insurance causes in a summary way, by a commission to the Judge of the Admiralty, the Recorder of London, two Doctors of the civil law, two common Lawyers, and eight Merchants, with an appeal by bill to the Court of Chancery. This statute was explained by stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 23; but the court erected by them is now entirely disused; for this among many other reasons, that its jurisdiction was not sufficiently extensive. See Str. 166: 1 Show. 396: 2 Sid. 121. Insurance causes are now therefore decided, like all other questions of property, by a trial by jury in a court of common law; and which, on due consideration, will appear the most safe, eligible, and (as now regulated) expeditious, mode that could be adopted. Parke Introd.

Courts of Equity have no jurisdiction over such questions, because the demand is plainly a demand at law, and the damage as much the object of proof by witnesses, as any other species of damage whatever. De Ghetoff v. London Assur. Comp., Bro. P. C. If, indeed, the trustee in a policy of Insurance actually refuse his name to the Cestuy que trust, in an action, or a commission is necessary to examine witnesses residing abroad; or where fraud is suspected, and a disclosure of circumstances is to be procured upon the oath of the Insured; in these cases, application may be to a Court of Equity. But, in all other cases, a court of common law is the proper forum. See 1 Atk. 547: 2 Atk. 359: Parke, c. 20. And even if the parties, by a clause in the policy, should agree to refer any dispute to arbitration, that will not be a sufficient bar to an action at law, unless a reference is in fact made, or is depending. 1 Wils. 129.

In order to recover upon a policy against either of the Insurance Companies, (the Royal Exchange, or London Assurance,) the action must be Debt, or Covenant, as their policies are under seal; from hence arose an inconvenience, as under the plea of a general issue in those actions the true merits of the case could seldom come in question; to remedy this, the stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 30. § 43, enables the jury to give such part only of the sum demanded in debt, or so much damages in covenant, as on the evidence it appears the plaintiff in justice ought to have.

In order to recover against a private Underwriter upon the policy, who merely subscribes his name without any seal, the form of action is a special Indebitatus assumpsit, founded upon the express contract, which action may be brought in the name of the broker, effecting the policy; and by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. § 6, within fifteen days after action brought, the plaintiff, on request in writing, must declare the amount of all Insurances on the same ship. Parke, c. 20.

It was formerly usual for the Insured to bring separate actions against each of the Underwriters (how many soever) on a policy, and proceed to trial on all. This was found to be expensive, and, in fact, unjust; and the Court of King's Bench intimated, that in such a case they would grant imparlances in all the actions but one, till that could be tried. 2 Bar At length Lord Mansfield introduced the present Consolidation-Rule, which is now admitted in general practice, by which the proceedings in all the actions but one are staid; and in consequence of this convenience the defendant undertakes not to file any bill in equity, or bring a writ of error for delay, and to produce all books and papers material to the point in issue. Parke Introd.

The stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. § 7, also enables defendants to pay money into court in all such actions; after which, if the plaintiff proceeds, and has not a verdict for more than the money paid in, he shall pay costs to the defendant.

When money has been paid by mistake to the Insured, or where the Insured wishes to recover back the premium, the proper remedy is by action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use. 1 Salk. 22: Skinn. 412: 1 Show. 156.

The declaration on a policy of Insurance must set out the policy, and aver that it was signed by the defendant, and, that in consideration of the premium, he undertook to indemnify the Insured: it must then state the interest of the Insured, and shew the loss to have happened by one of the perils mentioned in the policy, which must always be stated according to the truth of the fact. Parke, c. 20.

More particularly as to the manner of alledging the loss to have happened within the perils of the policy.—To aver that the loss happened by the fraud and negligence of the master, has been held a sufficient averment of barratry, 2 Ld. Raym. 1349: 1 Str. 581; though it is now usual to aver precisely, in terms, that the loss happened by the barratry of the master or mariners. Parke, c. 20. Though the declaration alledge a total loss, the Insured may recover for a partial one; for in actions for damages merely, the plaintiff may always recover less, but not more, than the sum laid in the declaration. 2 Burr. 904: 1 Black. Rep. 198. So though the plaintiff appear in proof to have a larger interest than is averred in the declaration, yet he is entitled to recover to the amount alledged. Parke 402. c. 20.

In order to entitle the Insured to recover expences of salvage, it is not necessary to state them in the declaration, as a special breach of the policy. They may be given in evidence, because an Insurance is against all accidents, and salvage is an immediate and necessary consequence of some of those stated in a policy. Hardw. 304.

The general issue, non assumpsit, is the usual plea to a declaration upon a policy against private persons; and under this plea and the general issue, pleadable by corporations, the defendant has a right to take advantage of all those circumstances which either render the policy void, or make it of no effect; such as fraud, want of interest, not being sea-worthy, deviation, non-performance of Warranties, &c. Parke 404. c. 20.

The evidence to be given, and the proof necessary in actions on policies of Insurance, may be collected from the statement of the allegations requisite in the plaintiff's declaration. It may, in addition, be shortly observed on this part of the subject, that the first piece of evidence is proof of the defendant's hand-writing to the policy, which, however, is most generally admitted. Though the general usage of trade is allowed to be given in evidence to control, or extend the words, yet no parole evidence shall be given which directly tends to contradict the terms, of a policy. Skinn. 54. In an action against the Underwriter, the policy is evidence that the premium was paid; the Insured however must prove his interest by a production of all the usual documents, bills of sale, bills of parcels, of lading, &c. See 2 Str. 1127: 2 Term Rep. 187. And, in the last place, the plaintiff must prove that the loss happened by the very means stated in the declaration. 1 Term Rep. 304. See Hardw. 304.

Sentences of foreign Courts of Admiralty are frequently brought forward in Insurance causes. It may be requisite therefore, to remark, that wherever the ground of such sentence is manifest, and it appears to have proceeded expressly upon the point in issue between the parties, or wherever the sentence is general, and no special ground is stated, there it shall be conclusive and binding; and the Courts here will not take upon themselves, in a collateral way, to review the proceedings of a forum, having competent jurisdiction of the subject-matter. But if the sentence be so ambiguous and doubtful, that it is difficult to say on what ground the decision turned, or if there be colour to suppose, that the Court abroad proceeded upon matter not relevant to the matter in issue, there evidence will be allowed in order to explain; and if the sentence upon the face of it be manifestly against law and justice or be contradictory, the Insured shall not be deprived of his indemnity; because any detention, by condemnation under particular ordinances or decrees, which contravene or do not form apart of the law of nations, is a risk within a policy of Insurance. Parke, c. 18. ad fin. And see Dougl. 554!(574). Bernardi v. Motteux. See post II. 3.

5. Re-assurance is a contract, which the first Underwriter enters into, in order to relieve himself from those risks which he has previously undertaken; by throwing them upon other Underwriters, who are called Re-assurers. It is a species of contract still countenanced in most parts of Europe, and which was admitted in England till it was found productive of glaring and enormous frauds, which rendered it destructive of the benefits it was originally intended to promote. The Legislature, therefore, found it necessary to interpose, by an act which permitted only such contracts of Re-assurance as tended to the advancement of commerce, or the real benefit of an individual. For this purpose the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37. § 4, declares it to be unlawful to make Re-assurance, "unless the Assurer or Underwriter should be insolvent, become a bankrupt, or die; in either of which cases such Assurer, his executors, administrators, or assigns, may make Re-assurance to the amount before by him assured, expressing in the policy that it is a Re-assurance;" which statute extends to Re-assurances on foreign ships previously insured by foreign Underwriters. 2 Term Rep. 161.

In France, as in other countries, it was formerly allowed to the Insured to insure the solvency of the Underwriter; but this practice is not allowed in England; and, though no express notice is taken of it in the above statute, it seems that such a policy would be looked on as a wager policy, and treated accordingly. See post III. 5.

Double Insurance is totally different from Re-assurance. It is where the same man is to receive two sums instead of one, or the same sum twice over, for the same loss, by reason of his having made two Insurances upon the same property. 1 Burr. 496. It makes no difference whether such Insurances are both or either made in the name of the Insurer, or of another person, if actually made on his account. Parke 285.

These double Insurances are not void. The person insuring, however, shall receive only one satisfaction to the the real amount of his loss, and no more, which he may recover against which set of Underwriters he pleases. And when one set of Underwriters pay the loss, they may call upon the other Underwriters to contribute in proportion to the sums they have insured. 1 Black. Rep. 416: 1 Burr. 492. But though a double Insurance cannot be wholly supported, so as to enable a man to recover a two-fold satisfaction; yet various persons may insure various interests on the same thing, and each to the whole value, as the master for wages, the owner for freight, one person for goods, and another for bottomry, &c. See Godin v. London Assur. Comp. 1 Burr. 489. 1 Black. Rep. 103: In which case the defendants were expressly apprised that there might probably be another Insurance than that which they under wrote.

II. 1. THE Loss must always be a direct and immediate consequence of the peril insured, and not a remote one, in order to entitle the Insured to recover. 1 Term Rep. 130. n. a.

A total loss in Insurances does not always mean that the property insured is irrecoverably lost or gone; but that, by some of the perils mentioned in the policy, it is in such a condition as to be of little use or value to the Insured, and to justify him in abandoning his right to the Insurer, and calling upon him to pay the whole of his Insurance. Parke 98, 143.

The Insured may call upon the Underwriter for a total loss, if the voyage be absolutely lost, or not worth pursuing; if the salvage be high, as half the value; or if further expence be necessary, and the Underwriter will not engage at all events to bear that expence. See Hamilton v. Mendes, 2 Burr. 1198: 1 Black. Rep. 276; and post 7.

In a total loss, properly so called, the prime cost of the property insured, or the value in the policy, must be paid by the Underwriter, according to his proportion of the Insurance. Where the policy is a valid one, it is only necessary to prove that the goods were on board at the time of the loss; unless the defendant can shew that the plaintiff had only a colourable interest, or has greatly overvalued the goods; but, where it is an open policy, the value must also be proved. Parke 103, 111.

Questions as to losses by Perils of the Sea have very seldom arisen; the general rule is, that every accident happening by the force of wind or waves, by thunder and lightening by driving against rocks, or by the stranding of the ship, or any other violence that human prudence could not foresee, nor human strength resist, is to be considered as a peril of the sea; and for such losses the Underwriter is answerable. Parke 61: 1 Show. 323: 2 Rolle's Abr. 248. p. 10: Comb. 56.

An action was brought to recover the value of certain slaves insured by the policy; the facts were, that the captain of the ship missed the island, for which he was bound, (Jamaica,) and their water running short, some of the slaves were thrown overboard to preserve the rest, and the declaration stated the loss to have happened by perils of the sea. But it was held, the mistake of the captain cannot be called a peril of the sea. Gregson v. Gilbert, Pasch. 23 Geo. 3: Parke, c. 3.

A ship which is never heard of after her departure, shall be presumed to have perished at sea. See 2 Stra. 1199: Parke 63. In England no time is fixed within which payment of a loss may be demanded from the Underwriter, in case the ship is not heard of. But a practice prevails among merchants, that a ship shall be deemed lost, if not heard of within six months after her departure for any port of Europe, or within twelve, if for a greater distance. This latter term, however, seems too short with respect to India voyages, and is extended in Spain to a year and a half, and formerly in France to two years; and in case of an adjustment on such supposed loss, if the ship arrives, the Underwriter may recover back the money paid by him. Parke 63—5.

2. Capture, as applied to the subject of Marine Insurances, is a taking of the ships or goods belonging to the Subjects of one country, by those of another, when in a state of public war. Parke, c. 4. As, between the Underwriter and the Insured, a ship is to be considered as lost by the Capture, though she be never condemned at all, nor carried into any port or fleet of the enemy; and the Underwriter must pay the loss actually sustained. If, therefore, either before or after condemnation she be retaken, and the owner have paid salvage, the Insurer must pay the loss sustained in consequence. 2 Burr. 694, 6.

No Capture by the enemy can be so total a loss as to leave no possibility of recovery. If the owner himself should retake at any time he will be entitled: and by stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 34. § 24, if an English ship retake the vessel captured, either before or after condemnation, the owner is entitled to restitution on stated salvage. See post 6. In all such cases, if the loss be paid by the Underwriter before the recovery, he stands in the place of the Insured, and will be entitled to the benefits of the restitution. Parke 66: 2 Burr. 683.

Before the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, which abolished wager-policies, the re-capture had a considerable effect upon the contract of Insurance, and several cases were determined on that question. See 10 Mod. 77: 2 Burr. 695: Com. 360: 1 Wils. 191: 2 Stra. 1250: Parke 73—77; but now the contract is not at all altered between the Underwriter and the Insured by such event. 2 Burr. 695, 1198.

By the marine law of England, as practised in the Court of Admiralty, it was formerly held, that the property was not changed so as to bar the original owner in favour of a vendee or re-captor, till there had been a sentence of condemnation. 2 Burr. 694. And now by stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 34, already mentioned, this right of the original owner, in case of a re-capture, is preserved to him for ever, upon payment of certain salvage, from one-eighth to half the value, to the re-captors. See post 6.

A Capture having been illegal, but the charges and delay being great, the Insured made a compromise bonâ fide for the liberation of the ship; the Underwriters were held to be answerable for the charges of that compromise. Berens v. Rucker, 1 Black. Rep. 313: Parke 67.

On this head it may also be proper to state the following act of parliament, against ransoming captured ships. It is remarkable that this statute is not noticed by Mr. Parke; as previous to its passing, it seems, from the above case, that the Insurers would have been liable to make good sums paid by the master for ransom, particularly as Mr. Parke states, that the Insurers are liable for the charges of such compromise made, bonâ fide, whether the capture was legal or not. And in the case of Yates v. Hall, the circumstances of which took place before the passing of the act, the Court of B. R. determined, that a promise by a captain of a ship on behalf of his owners to pay monthly wages to a sailor, in order to induce him to become a hostage, was binding on the owners, although they abandoned the ship and cargo. 1 Term Rep. 73, 80.

By stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 25, it is made unlawful for any Subject to ransom, or to enter into any contract for ransoming any ship belonging to any Subjects, or any goods on board the same, which shall be captured by the Subjects of any State at war with his Majesty, or by any persons committing hostilities against his Subjects. § 1.

All contracts which shall be entered into, and all bills, notes, and other securities which shall be given by any person for ransom of any ship, or of any goods on board the same, shall be absolutely void. § 2.

If any person shall ransom or enter into any contract for ransoming any such ship, or any goods on board the same, such person shall forfeit 500*l.*, which may be sued for by any one. § 3.

3. On questions of Detention not much difficulty has arisen: the Underwriter, by express words, undertakes to indemnify against all damages arising from the arrests, restraints, and detainments of Kings, Princes, or People. Parke 78.

Under these terms, in a policy, Detention is said to be an arrest or embargo in time of war, or peace, laid on by the public authority of a State. And, therefore, in case of an arrest, or embargo by a prince, though not an enemy, the Insured is entitled to recover against the Underwriter. 2 Burr. 696. See this Dictionary, title Embargo.

In case of Detention by a foreign power, which in time of war may have seized a neutral ship, in order to be searched for enemy's property, the costs and charges consequent thereon must be borne by the Underwriter. Salucci v. Johnson, B. R. Hil. 25 Geo. 3; Parke 79. But a detention for non-payment of customs, or for navigating against the laws of those countries where the ship happens to be, shall not fall upon the Underwriter. 2 Vern. 176.

A detention by particular ordinances which do not form a part of the general law of nations, is a risk within a policy of Insurance. Per Buller, J. Parke 365. It is an undecided question, whether a detention by the governing power of the country to which the ship belongs, is a peril within the policy; though it seems that it is. See 2 Ld. Raym. 840: 2 Salk. 444: Parke 80. But if an armed force board a ship, and take part of the cargo, the Underwriters are not liable, on a count stating the loss to be by people to the plaintiffs unknown; for people in the policy means the governing power of the country. 4 Term Rep. 783.

In all cases of losses by detention before the Insured can recover, he must abandon to the Underwriter whatever claims he may have to the property Insured. Parke 82. See post 7.

4. The derivation of the word Barratry is very doubtful; it comes most probably from the Italian Barratrare, to cheat. Cowp. 154. It may be thus defined: any act of the master or mariners, of a criminal nature, or which is grossly negligent, tending to their own benefit, to the prejudice of the owners of the ship, and without their consent or privity. See 1 Stra. 581: 2 Stra. 1173: Cowp. 143: 1 Term Rep. 323.

It is Barratry in the master to smuggle on his own account. Cowp. 143: 1 Term Rep. 252: 3 Term Rep. 277. And in Robertson v. Ewer, (1 Term Rep. 127,) Buller J. seemed to think the breach of an embargo was an act of Barratry in the master. But if the act of the captain be done for the benefit of his owners, and not with a view to his own interest, it is not Barratry. Some question has been made in certain cases, Who shall be considered as owner? and it has been determined, that if the owner of the ship freight it out for a specifick voyage, the freighter is to be considered as owner pro hac vice; and if the master commit a criminal act, without his privity, though with the knowledge of the original owner, it is Barratry. Cowp. 143, 154.

An act of the captain, with the knowledge of the owners of the ship, though without the privity of the owner of the goods, who happened to be the person insured, is not Barratry, as that crime can only be committed against the owner of the ship, and without his consent. 1 Term Rep. 323. And if the master of the ship be also the owner, he cannot be guilty of Barratry. Parke 94.

In an action by the Assured of goods, against the Underwriters for a loss by the Barratry of the master, proof that the person described in the policy as master, and who was treated with, and acted as such, carried the ship out of her course, for fraudulent purposes of his own, is primâ facie sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to recover, without shewing negatively that he was not the owner, or affirmatively, that any other person was. 4 Term Rep. 33.

It is not necessary, in order to make the Underwriters liable, that the loss should happen in the very act of Barratry; for, in case of a deceitful deviation, the moment the ship is carried from its proper track with an evil intent, Barratry is committed; but the loss, in consequence of the act of Barratry, must happen during the voyage insured, and within the time limited for the expiration of the policy. 1 Term Rep. 252: 4 Term Rep. 33: Cowp. 143: Parke 84—90.

The Underwriters, by express words, undertake generally for the Barratry of the master and mariners, even though the master is appointed by the Insured himself; a circumstance peculiar to the Insurance Law of England. Parke 85.

If a ship take a prize, and, instead of proceeding on her voyage, the captain is forced by the mariners to return to port with the prize, against the orders of his owners, the captain is justified by necessity, and it is not Barratry, because not done to defraud the owners. 2 Stra. 1264.

Barratry in the master is severely punished by the laws of foreign nations; and several statutes have been passed to prevent these crimes in our own country. The stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 9, inflicted the penalty of felony, without benefit of clergy, on any captain, master, mariner, or officer belonging to any ship, who should wilfully burn or destroy her, to the prejudice of the owner or any merchant lading goods thereon. This was extended by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 12, to owners and others guilty of those acts, to the prejudice of Underwriters, as well as merchants: and the stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 29, still further enlarges it to all such persons guilty with intent to prejudice Underwriters, merchants, or owners. The

stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 46, enforces the above acts in Scotland. Provisions are made, that, if the offence be committed within the body of a county, the offender shall be tried in a court of common law; if upon the high seas, he shall be tried according to the directions of stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 15.

To this head may also be referred the provision in stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 66. § 8, which subjects the captain of any merchant-ship under convoy, who shall wilfully disobey the signals or instructions of the commander of the convoy, or deserting the convoy without notice or leave, to prosecution in the Admiralty court, there to be sentenced to a fine not exceeding 500*l.* and imprisonment for not more than one year. See ante I. 3.

5. The word Average is applied in various senses in policies of Insurance, which in this, above all other particulars, are indistinct and confused. It is used as well for a contribution to a general loss as for a particular partial loss. On the present occasion we shall consider the term of general or gross average, in the former sense, and average loss in the latter. Parke 99: 3 Burr. 1555.

Small or Petty Average consists of such charges as the master is obliged to pay, by custom, for the benefit of the ship and cargo; such as pilotage, beaconage, &c. The term is also used for a small duty paid by merchants, who send goods in the ships of other men, to the master, over and above the freight, for his care and attention; none of these charges ever falls upon the Underwriter. Parke 100. See this Dictionary, title Average.

When goods are thrown overboard in a storm to lighten the ship, for the general safety of the ship and cargo, the owners of the ship and of goods saved are to contribute for the relief of those whose goods are ejected; this is called contribution, or general average; and was first used by the Rhodians, and introduced into England by William the Conqueror; against all losses arising from hence, the Underwriter by his contract expressly undertakes to indemnify the Insured. Parke 99, 121, 9: 3 Burr. 1555. Lex. Merc.

Three things, it has been said, must concur to make the act of throwing goods overboard legal. 1st, That what is so condemned to destruction, be in consequence of a deliberate and voluntary consultation between the master and men. 2d, That the ship be in distress, and that sacrificing a part be necessary for the preservation of the rest. 3d, That the saving of the ship and cargo be owing to the means used with that view. But the second seems to be the only material one: if, therefore, this jettison (the throwing over of the goods) do not save the ship, but she perish in the storm, there shall be no contribution of such goods as may happen to be saved; but if the ship, being once preserved by such means, be afterwards lost, the property (if any) saved from the second accident, shall contribute to the loss occasioned by the former jettison. Parke 123. And see 12 Co. 63.

The various accidents and charges, which will entitle the suffering party to call for a contribution, cannot easily be enumerated, but it may be laid down as a general principle, that all losses sustained and expences incurred voluntarily and deliberately, with a view to prevent the total loss of the ship and cargo, ought to be equally borne by the ship and her remaining lading. See Parke 124, 6. Lex. Merc.; 2 Term Rep. 407.

If goods be put on board a lighter to enable the ship to sail into harbour, and the lighter perish, the owners of the ship and remaining cargo are to contribute; but if the ship be lost, and the lighter saved, the owners of the goods preserved are not to contribute, the lightening of the ship being an act of deliberation for the general benefit, but the saving the lighter being accidental, and no way proceeding from a regard for the whole. Parke 124.

Diamonds and jewels, when a part of the cargo, must contribute according to their value; but ship provisions, the persons of the passengers, wearing apparel, and such jewels as merely belong to the person, Bottomry, or respondentia bonds, and the wages of the sailors, shall not any of them contribute. Parke 126, 7, 9, 422: See also this Dictionary, title Carrier.

In order to fix a right sum on which the average or contribution may be computed, and which in general is not made till the ship's arrival at her port of discharge, it is to be considered, what the whole ship, freight, and cargo would have produced net, if no jettison had been made; and then the ship, freight, and cargo are to bear an equal and proportionable part of the loss. According to the custom of merchants in England, the goods thrown overboard are to be estimated at the price for which the goods saved were sold, freight and all other charges being first deducted. Parke 127, 8.

The general rules as to a partial loss, and its consequences, were settled in the case of Lewis v. Rucker, 2 Burr. 1167, & seqq. from whence much of the subsequent information is drawn; but the whole of the law on this part of the subject is more intricate and perplexed than on any other question of Insurance.

Partial Loss then, when applied to the ship, means a damage, which she may have sustained in the course of her voyage, from some of the perils mentioned in the policy; when to the cargo, it means the damage which the goods have suffered from storm, &c. though the whole or greater part thereof may arrive in port. By express stipulation in the terms of the London policies these losses do not fall upon the Underwriters, unless they amount to 3*l. per cent.*; but if a loss, arising from a general average, (i. e. a contribution to a general loss,) should be under 3*l. per cent.* there the Underwriter is liable. And in all cases of a partial loss, the value in the policy can be no guide to ascertain the damage, but it becomes the subject of proof as in case of an open policy. Parke 101—3.

When goods are partially damaged, the Underwriter must pay the owner such proportion of the prime cost or value, in the policy, (or if no value is stated in the policy, then of the invoice price, with all charges and premium of Insurance,) as corresponds to the proportion of diminution in value occasioned by the damage. Where an entire thing, as one hogshead of sugar, happens to be spoiled, if you can fix whether it be a third or fourth worse, then the damage is ascertained; but this can only be done at the port of delivery, where the whole damage is known, and the voyage is completed; and, whether the price of the commodity be high or low, it equally ascertains the proportion of damage; though no regard is to be paid to the rise or fall of the market, as to the sum to be paid by the Insurer, which is, in either case, to be reguregulated only by the prime cost or invoice price. Parke 103, &c.: 2 Burr. 1167.

These rules can only apply to cases where there is a specific description of goods, but where the property is of various kinds, an account must be taken of the value of the whole, and a proportion of that as the amount of the goods lost. Parke 111.

Some goods are of a perishable nature; and, against the losses arising from the principle of corruption inherent in such, the Underwriters of London have exempted themselves, by declaring in a memorandum contained in all their policies, that they will not be answerable for any partial loss happening to corn, fish, salt, fruit, flour, or seed, unless it arise by way of general average, or in consequence of the ship being stranded; against a loss by which latter event, however, in cases of these perishable commodities, the two Insurance Companies already mentioned do not undertake to be answerable. See Burr. 1553.

On this clause it has in several cases been uniformly held, that no loss shall be deemed total so as to charge the Insurers in case of such perishable commodities, as long as the commodity specifically remains, though perhaps wholly unfit for use. 3 Burr. 1550. The case in 2 Stra. 1065, to the contrary, has been since over-ruled by that of Mason v. Skurray, Parke 116; in which it was also held, that the term Corn included peas and beans, and other particulars. See Parke 112—117.

Where, after seizure by an armed mob, the vessel was stranded, and part of the cargo (consisting of corn) taken by the mob at their own price, the loss cannot be recovered as for a general average: but for such part as, in consequence of the stranding, was damaged and thrown overboard, the Insured may recover, on a count, stating the loss to be by stranding. 4 Term Rep. 783.

When the quantity of damage, sustained in the course of the voyage, is known, and the amount, which each Insurer is to pay, is settled, it is usual for the Underwriter to indorse on the policy, "Adjusted this loss at so much per cent." This is called an adjustment; after which, if the Underwriter refuse to pay, the owner has no occasion to go into the proof of his loss, or any of the circumstances, the adjustment being considered as a note of hand. Parke 117, 8. So after judgment by default upon a valued policy, the plaintiff's title to recover is confessed, and the amount of the damage is fixed by the policy. Dougl. 315: Thellusson v. Fletcher. And if a loss be total at the time of the adjustment, and the Insurer pay for a total loss, the Insured is not obliged to refund, if it should afterwards turn out to be partial, but the Insurer will stand in the place of the Insured. 4 Burr. 1966.

6. Salvage is an allowance made for saving a ship or goods, or both, from the danger of the seas, fire, pirates, or enemies; in which sense it is here used, though it is also sometimes incorrectly applied to signify the thing itself which is saved. Parke 131. And the Saver has such a property in the goods, saved by his own exertions and danger, that, in an action of trover, it has been held the defendants might retain the goods till payment of the salvage. 1 Ld. Raym. 393: 2 Salk. 654.

When a ship has been wrecked, the law of England, by various statutes, declares, that reasonable salvage only shall be allowed to those who save the ship or any of the goods; and what shall be a reasonable allowance must be ascertained by three Justices of the Peace. See stats. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 18: (made perpetual by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 12:) stat. 26. Geo. 2. c. 19: and this Dictionary, title Wreck.

The right of Owners on Re-capture has been already noticed, (ante 2.) The salvage in this case is regulated by stats. 13 Geo. 2. c. 4. § 18: 29 Geo. 2. c. 34. § 24: which enact, that if any prize, taken from the enemy, shall appear to have belonged to any of his Majesty's subjects, it shall be restored to the former owner, upon his paying, in lieu of salvage, one-eighth of the value, if retaken at any time by one of his Majesty's ships. If retaken by a privateer, before it has been twenty-four hours in the possession of the enemy, the salvage paid to be one-eighth of the value; if above twenty four and under forty-eight hours one-fifth; if above forty-eight and under ninety-six hours one-third part thereof; and if above ninety-six hours, a moiety or one-half part thereof; or, if the ship so retaken have been fitted out by the enemy as a ship of war, the salvage is in all cases settled at a moiety.

Wearing-apparel of the Master and seamen is always excepted from the allowance of salvage. The valuation of a ship and cargo, in order to ascertain the rate of salvage, may be determined by the policies of Insurance made on them respectively; if there be no reason to suspect they are undervalued. If there be no policy, the real value must be proved by invoices, &c. Parke 140: Lex. Merc.

Underwriters, by their policy, expressly undertake to bear all expences of salvage. It is therefore not necessary to state them in a declaration as a special breach of the policy. Hardw. 304. See ante I. 4. But if the Insurer pay to the Insured such expences, and from particular circumstances the loss be repaired by unexpected means, the Insurer shall stand in the place of the Insured, and receive the sum thus paid to atone for the loss. 1 Vez. 98.

Where the Salvage is high, and the other expences are great, and the object of the voyage is defeated, the Insured is allowed to abandon to the Insurer, and call upon him to contribute for a total loss: which brings us to the subject of,

7. Abandonment.—Before a person insured can demand from the Underwriter a recompence for a total loss, he he must abandon to him whatever claims he may have to the property insured; and when the Underwriter has discharged his Insurance, and the abandonment is made, he stands in the place of the Insured, and is entitled to all the advantages resulting from that situation, in case the ship or property, &c. is not totally lost, or is afterwards restored by re-capture, &c. See Parke, c. 9: 1 Vez. 98.

Abandonment is as ancient as the Contract of Insurance itself: the time, within which it must be made, was not however fixed in England till lately. It is now held, that as soon as the Insured receive accounts of such a loss as entitles them to abandon, they must, in the first instance, make their election whether they will abandon or not; and if they abandon, they must give the Underwriters notice in a reasonable time, otherwise they waive their right to abandon, and can never after recover for a total loss. 1 Term Rep. 608. But if the Insured, hearing that the ship is disabled and has put into port to repair, express his desire to the Underwriters to abandon, and be dissuaded from it by them, and they order the repairs repairs to be made, they are liable to the Owner for all the subsequent damage occasioned by that refusal, though it should amount to the whole sum insured. 2 Term Rep. 407.

When an abandonment is made, it must be total and not partial. And though the Insured may in all cases choose not to abandon, yet he cannot at his pleasure abandon, and thereby turn a partial into a total loss. 2 Burr. 697.

We have already seen (ante II. 1.) that the Insured may abandon to the Underwriter, and call upon him for a total loss, if the damage exceed half the value; if the voyage be absolutely lost or not worth pursuing; if further expence be necessary, and the Insurer will not engage, at all events, to bear that expence, though it should exceed the value, or fail of success. But he cannot abandon unless at some period or other of the voyage there has been a total loss. 1 Term Rep. 187: Parke, c. 9. p. 166. Also, if neither the thing insured, nor the voyage be lost, and the damage does not amount to a moiety of the value, he shall not be allowed to abandon. See 2 Burr. 1211: 3 Atk. 195: and Goss v. Withers, 2 Burr. 683: Which latter was the first case in which the doctrine of Abandonment was gone into at large, and the above principles fully settled; which have ever since been strictly adhered to, and were particularly recognized in Milles v. Fletcher, Dougl. (219.) 231.—And, in Hamilton v. Mendes, it was solemnly determined that the right to abandon must depend on the nature of the case at the time of the action brought, or at the time of the offer to abandon; in that case, therefore, where there was a capture and re-capture, and it was stated, that at the time of the offer to abandon, the peril was over, as the ship was safe in port, and had suffered no damage, the Court held that the Insured had no right to abandon. 2 Burr. 1198: 1 Black. Rep. 276: See also, Parke, c. 9.

III. 1. Policies are annulled by the least shadow of Fraud, or undue concealment of facts; both parties are therefore equally bound to disclose circumstances within their knowledge. And if the Underwriter, at the time he underwrote, knew that the ship was safe arrived, the contract will be equally void, as if the Insured had concealed any accident that had befallen the ship. Parke, c. 10: 2 Comm. 460: 1 Black. Rep. 594: 3 Burr. 1909.

Cases of fraud upon this subject are liable to a threefold division: 1st, The allegatio falsi; 2d, The suppressio veri; 3d, Misrepresentation. The latter is made a separate head; as though, if wilful, it is a direct fraud, yet if it happen by mistake, if in a material point, it will equally vitiate the policy. Parke, c. 10. See Dougl. (247.) 260.

As to the first point, several cases have determined that the policy shall be void, where goods, &c. are insured as the property of an ally, or as neutral property, when in fact they are the goods of an enemy: and such false assertions in a Policy will vitiate the contract, though the loss happen in a mode not affected by that falsity. Parke, c. 10: Skin. 327: 3 Burr. 1419: 1 Black. Rep. 427.

The second species of fraud, concealment of circumstances, vitiates all contracts of Insurance. The facts upon which the risk is to be computed lie, for the most part, within the knowledge of the Insured only. The Underwriter relies upon him for all necessary information; and must trust to him that he will conceal nothing, so as to make him form a wrong estimate; on this ground, where one having an account that a ship, described like his, was taken, insured his own ship, without giving any notice to the Insurers of what he had heard, the Policy was decreed in equity to be delivered up. 2 P. Wms. 170: See 1 Black. Rep. 463, 594: 2 Stra. 1183: Parke, c. 10. But there are many matters as to which the Insured may be innocently silent; 1st, As to what the Insurer knows; however he came by that knowledge; 2d, As to what he ought to know; 3d, As to what lessens the risk. And it may here be remarked, that an Underwriter is bound to know political perils, as to the state of war or peace: He also ought to be acquainted with the nature and danger of every voyage, which may be called natural perils; if he insure a privateer, it is understood that he is not to be informed of its destination; and, as men reason differently from different facts, he needs not be told another's conclusion from known facts. In short, the question, in cases of concealment, must always be, "Whether there was, under all the circumstances, at the time the Policy was underwritten, a fair statement or concealment; fraudulent, if designed, or, if not designed, varying materially the object of the Policy, and changing the risk understood to be run."—The above rules, and the whole doctrine of concealment were laid down in Carter v. Boehm, which was an Insurance by the Governor of Fort Malborough in Bencoolen, against the event of the fort being taken by any European Power in the course of a year. 3 Burr. 1905: 1 Black. 593: And the rules there advanced and illustrated have been confirmed in subsequent cases. Planche v. Fletcher, Dougl. (238.) 251; and see Parke, c. 10.

A Representation is a state of the case, not forming a part of the written instrument or Policy, as a Warranty does. Therefore if there be a misrepresentation it will avoid the Policy, as a fraud, but not as a part of the agreement, as in the case of Warranty. And if a Representation be false in any material point, even through mistake, it will avoid the Policy, because the Underwriter has computed the risk upon circumstances which did not exist. Parke, c. 10. In the case of Pawson v. Watson, Lord Mansfield stated, that "there cannot be a clearer distinction than that which exists between a Warranty, which makes part of the written Policy, and a Collateral Representation which, if false in a point of materiality, makes the Policy void; but if not material it can hardly ever be fraudulent." Cowp. 785. And in Macdowal v. Frazer, the same learned Judge laid down, that "a Representation must be fair and true. It should be true as to all the Insured knows; and if he represents facts to the Underwriter, without knowing the truth, he takes the risk upon himself:" But the difference between the fact, as it turns out, and as represented, must be material. Dougl. (247.) 260: See also Bize v. Fletcher, or Lavabre v. Wilson, Dougl. (271.) 284. and ante I. 3.

The Policy is void if the Broker conceal any material circumstances, though the only ground for not mentioning them should be that the facts concealed appeared immaterial to him. Shirley v. Wilkinson, Dougl. (293.) 306. n. But the thing concealed must be some fact, not a mere speculation or expectation of the Insured. Barber v. Fletcher, Dougl. (292.) 305.

In all these cases of fraud, wherever there has been a an allegation of falsehood, a concealment of circumstances, or a misrepresentation, it is immaterial whether it be the act of the person himself who is interested, or of his agent; for in either case the contract is founded in deception, and the policy is consequently void. And this rule prevails, even though the act cannot be at all traced to the owner of the property insured. Stewart v. Dunlop, in Dom. Proc. 1785: Fitzherbert v. Mather, 1 Term Rep. 12: Parke, c. 10.

A Policy will not however be set aside on the ground of fraud, unless it be fully and satisfactorily proved; and the burden of proof lies on the person wishing to take advantage of the fraud. At the same time, positive and direct proof of fraud is not to be expected, and from the nature of the thing circumstantial evidence is all that can be given. Parke 214. As to the return of premium in cases of fraud, see post 8.

2. It being necessary, except in some special cases, to insert the name of the ship, on which the risk is to be run, in the Policy; it follows as an implied condition, that the Insured shall neither substitute another ship for that mentioned in the Policy before the voyage commences, in which case there would be no contract at all; nor, during the voyage, remove the property insured from one ship to another, without consent of the Insurer, or without an unavoidable necessity, under which every thing possible must be done for the benefit of all concerned; if he do, the implied condition is broken, and he cannot, in case of loss, recover against the Underwriter. Parke, c. 16: See 2 Stra. 1248: 1 Burr. 351: 1 Term Rep. 611, note.

3. Deviation is understood to mean a voluntary departure, without necessity or any reasonable cause, from the regular and usual course of the specific voyage insured. Whenever this happens, the voyage is determined; and the Insurers are discharged from any responsibility: because the ship goes upon a different voyage from that against which the Insurer undertook to indemnify. And it is not material in this case whether the loss be or be not an actual consequence of the deviation: for the Insurers are in no case answerable for a subsequent loss, in whatever place it happen, or to whatever cause it may be attributed. Neither does it make any difference whether the Insured was or was not consenting to the deviation. Parke, c. 17. p. 294: and see Elliot v. Wilson, Bro. P. C.—If therefore the Master of a vessel put into a port not usual, or stay an unusual time, it is a deviation. And if the deviation be but for a single night, or for an hour, it is fatal. But if a merchant ship carry letters of Marque she may chase an enemy, though she may not cruise without being deemed guilty of a deviation. Parke 295—9.

Wherever the deviation is occasioned by absolute necessity; as where the crew force the Captain to deviate, the Underwriters continue liable. 2 Stra. 1264. And the general justifications for a deviation seem to be these: to repair the vessel, to avoid an impending storm, to escape from an enemy, or to seek for convoy.

If therefore a ship is decayed, or hurt by a storm, and goes to the nearest port to refit, it is no deviation, because it is for the general interest of all concerned. 1 Atk. 545: Parke, c. 17. So, whenever a ship, in order to escape a storm, goes out of the direct course, or, when in the due course of the voyage, is driven out of it by stress of weather, this is no deviation. And if a storm drive a ship out of the course of her voyage, and she do the best she can to get to her port of destination, she is not obliged to return to the point from which she was driven. 1 Term Rep. 22. Parke, c. 17.

A deviation may also be justified, if done to avoid an enemy, or seek for convoy; because it is in truth no deviation to go out of the course of a voyage, in order to avoid a danger, or to obtain a protection against it: if in all cases the master of a ship act fairly and bonâ fide according to the best of his judgment. 2 Salk. 445: 2 Stra. 1265: Parke, c. 17.

In all cases of deviation, it may be laid down as a general rule, that, wherever a ship does that which is for the general benefit of all parties concerned, the act is as much within the spirit of the policy as if it had been expressed: and, in order to say whether a deviation be justifiable or not, it will be proper to attend to the motives, end, and consequence, of the act as the true ground of judgment. Cowp. 601. But, to avoid as much as possible any additional risk, in case of a deviation from necessity, the ship must pursue such voyage of necessity, in the direct course, and in the shortest time possible, as nothing more must be done than the necessity requires, otherwise the Underwriters will be discharged. Lavabre v. Walter, Dougl. (271.) 284.

A Deviation merely intended, but never carried into effect, does not discharge the Insurers, and whatever loss happens before actual deviation, or the dividing-point of the voyage, falls upon the Underwriters. 2 Stra. 1249: Thellusson v. Fergusson, Dougl. (346.) 361. See also 2 Ld. Raym. 840: 2 Salk. 444. But if it can be shewn that the parties never intended to sail upon the voyage insured, if all the ship's papers be made out from a different place from that described in the policy, the Insurer is discharged, though the loss should happen before the dividing-point of the two voyages. Wooldridge v. Boydell, Dougl. 16. And, in all cases, Deviation or not is a question of fact to be decided, subject to the above rules, according to the circumstances of the case. Dougl. 781.

4. Every ship insured must, by a tacit and implied Warranty at the time of the Insurance, be able to perform the voyage, unless some external accident should happen; and if she have a latent defect, wholly unknown to the parties, that will vacate the contract, and the Insurers are discharged. But though the Insured ought to know whether she was Sea-worthy or not at the time she set out upon her voyage, yet he cannot tell how long she will remain so; and if it can be shewn that the decay, to which the loss is attributable, did not commence till a period subsequent to the Insurance, the Underwriter will be liable though she should even be lost a few days after her departure. Parke, c. 11: 5 Burr. 2804: Dougl. (708.) 735.

The whole doctrine of Sea-worthiness was settled in the case of The Mills Frigate, where the Insurance was upon a ship which had a latent defect totally unknown to the parties; and it was held, that the Insurers were not liable, because the ship was not Sea-worthy; and that however innocent or unfortunate the Insured sured might be, yet if the ship be not sea-worthy at the time of insuring, there is no contract at all between the parties; because the very foundation of the contract, the ship, was in the same condition as if it did not exist; and the doctrine is the same in Insurance upon goods, as when it is upon the ship itself. See Parke, c. 11.

5. In Wager-Policies, or Policies upon Interest or no Interest, the performance of the voyage in a reasonable time and manner, and not the bare existence of the ship or cargo, is the object of Insurance. But such Policies being contradictory to the real nature of an Insurance, which is a contract of indemnity, seem to have been originally bad, because Insurances were invented for the benefit of trade, and not that persons unconcerned or uninterested should profit by them. Indeed these Wager-Policies were not introduced into England, till after the Revolution, and the Courts of Law looked upon them with a jealous eye; while the Courts of Equity considered them as absolutely void. Parke, c. 14: See 10 Mod. 77: Com. Rep. 360: 2 Vern. 269, 716.

The great distinction between Interest, and Wager, Policies was, that in the former the Insured recovered for the loss actually sustained, whether it was a total or partial loss; in the latter he never could recover but for a total loss. 2 Burr. 683. At length it was found that the indulgence given to these fictitious, or to speak more plainly, gambling Policies, had increased to such an alarming degree as to threaten the very annihilation of that security, which it was the original intent of Insurances to introduce. It was, therefore, enacted by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, that Insurances made on ships or goods, Interest or no Interest, or without further proof of interest than the Policy, or by way of gaming or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the Insurer, should be null and void. The statute, however, contains an exception for Insurances on private ships of war fitted out solely to cruize against his Majesty's enemies: and also provides, that any merchandizes or effects from any ports or places in Europe or America, in the possession of the crowns of Spain or Portugal, may be insured in such way or manner, as if the statute had not been made. And it has been decided, that the statute does not extend to Insurances of foreign property, on foreign ships. Thellusson v. Fletcher; Dougl. (301) 315.

The above provision of the statute relative to Insurances from any ports or places in Europe or America, in the possession of Spain or Portugal, is founded on the regulations of those States to prohibit illicit trade: it is loosely worded, and admits of some latitude of interpretation, perhaps more than the Legislature meant to allow. See Parke, c. 14. ad fin.

A Valued Policy is not a Wager-Policy; it originates from the circumstances of its being sometimes troublesome to the trader to prove the value of his interest, or to ascertain the quantity of his loss: he therefore gives the insurer a higher premium to agree to estimate his interest at a sum certain. In this case the plaintiff must prove some interest, although he need not prove the value of his interest. But if a Valued Policy were used merely as a cover to a wager in order to evade the statute, it would be void. 2 Burr. 1167: 4 Burr. 1966: Parke, c. 14.

Upon a joint capture by the army and navy, the officers and crew of the ships, before condemnation, have an insurable interest, by virtue of the prize-act, which usually passes at the commencement of a war. Parke, c. 14, cites Le Cras v. Hughes.

All contracts of Insurance made by persons having no interest in the event about which they insure, or without reference to any property on board, are merely wagers, and as such void. Cowp. 583. And wherever the court can see upon the face of the Policy that it is merely a contract of gaming, where indemnity is not the object in view, they are bound to declare such Policy void. Lowry v. Bourdieu, Dougl. (451) 468.

6. Whenever an Insurance is made on a voyage expressly prohibited by the common, statute, or maritime law of this country, the Policy is void. And in such a case it is immaterial whether the Underwriter did or did not know that the voyage was illegal; for the Court cannot substantiate a contract in direct contradiction to law. Johnston v. Sutton, Dougl. (241) 254. In like manner, if a ship, though neutral, be insured on a voyage prohibited by an embargo, such an Insurance is void. Parke, c. 12. An Insurance upon a smuggling voyage, prohibited by the revenue laws of this country, is void; but the rule has never been extended to cases against the revenue laws of a foreign State, as no country pays attention to the revenue laws of another. Parke, c. 12: Dougl. 251.

The questions how far trading with an enemy in time of actual war, and how far Insurances upon the goods of an enemy are legal, expedient, or political, have been frequently considered. As to the first it was expressly prohibited, by the laws of ancient France, to the subjects of that country; and it appears scarcely to admit of a doubt in England, though the cases on the subject are very few. See 2 Rol. Ab. 173: 1 Vez. 317. In a very modern case Lord Mansfield said, that by the maritime law, trading with an enemy is cause of confiscation, provided you take him in the fact. But this does not extend to neutral vessels. The common law, however, does not seem directly to forbid such trading; and one argument to show that it does not, is, that several statutes have been specially passed, in order to make such trading illegal. 1 Term Rep. 84. As to the second question, the Insurance of enemies' property; under the common law it has been sanctioned; and Lord Hardwick, in a case before him, observed, that there had been no determination that Insurances on enemies' ships during the war is unlawful, and that there had been several Insurances of this sort during the (then) war, which a determination on the legality of trading with an enemy might hurt. 1 Vez. 319. The Legislature have, however, repeatedly thought it necessary to interfere to prevent these Insurances; and in the war which commenced in 1793, to prevent also all kind of trading with the enemy, (France,) whose proceedings, indeed, were then such as to threaten the dissolution of all civil society. See stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 4, which expired about a twelvemonth after the (then) war; and stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 27, which not only renders Insurances on French property void, during the war, but also subjects the offender to three months' imprisonment, and imposes the penalties of treason on all persons trading with so perfidious a foe. Many strong and ingenious arguments have, however, been urged against what is termed the impolicy of preventing such Insurances. The most forcible arise from the assertions that the the balance of that trade has always been found in favour of England, and that it has been the means of detecting many of the enemy's plans. But as even the advocates for this measure allow that no Insurance can be made upon a voyage to a besieged fort or garrison, with a view of carrying assistance to them; or upon ammunition, warlike stores, or provisions; surely the admitting of any sort of Insurance, is affording a tempting opening to this which is acknowledged to be dangerous; and it may be worthy the consideration of the Legislature to settle both these points in a permanent manner. See at length on this subject, Parke, c. 12.

7. All Insurances upon commodities, the importation or exportation of which is prohibited by law, are void; and the rule prevails in this instance also, whether the Underwriter did or did not know that the subject of the Insurance was a prohibited commodity, Parke, c. 13. And to prevent all such Insurances, the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 15, inflicts a penalty of 500*l.* on any person who, by way of Insurance, shall procure the importation of any uncustomed or prohibited goods, with a like penalty on the Insured. Also by the stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 36, for the protection of the Royal Lustring Company, the importation of any foreign alamodes or lustrings, by way of Insurance, or otherwise, without paying the duties, &c. is expresly prohibited. Wool being the staple manufacture of this kingdom, it was always deemed a heinous offence to transport it out of the realm; (see this Dictionary, title Wool); and as the practice of insuring it tended only to encourage such illicit commerce, it has been restrained by divers statutes; one of which enacts, that whoever, by way of Insurance, undertakes to export Wool from England to parts beyond the seas, shall be liable to pay 500*l*; the like penalty is also inflicted on the Insured; and all Insurances on wool, wool-fells, &c. are declared void. Stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 21. § 29—33. And a subsequent statute declares, that both the Insurer and Insured shall be considered as exporters of Wool, &c. and liable to the penalties inflicted by that statute, viz. 3*l. per* sheep, and three months solitary imprisonment; and 3*s. per lb.* of wool, or 50*l.* in the whole at the election of the offender, and the like imprisonment, and the wool, &c. to be forfeited. Stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 38. § 2, 9, 45, & seqq.

Upon the same principle that voyages prohibited by the common, statute, or maritime law, may not be the subject of Insurance, (see ante 6.) it is, that Insurances are also void, on prohibited or uncustomed goods; or if made in any way to protect smuggling, or to defraud the British revenue laws; to obstruct the effect of the Navigation Acts; or to import or export goods prohibited by Royal Proclamation in time of war; and goods, which, from their nature, are contraband, as arms and ammunition to an enemy, or money, provisions, or ships, according to peculiar circumstances. But Insurances on goods, the exportation or importation of which are forbidden by the laws of other countries, are valid. On the whole of this part of the subject, see Parke, c. 13; and this Dictionary, titles Navigation Acts; Customs.

8. It is a question not decided, whether in cases of fraudulent Insurance, where the Underwriter has run no risk, he shall be liable to return the premium? In some equitable cases, where the Underwriters have been relieved on account of fraud, it has been decreed, that the premium should be returned. 2 Vern. 206: 2 P. Wms. 170: and see Burr. 1361. And it has been laid down as clear law, that if the Underwriter has been guilty of fraud, an action lies against him, to recover the premium. 3 Burr. 1909. On the other hand, if the fraud be on the part of the Insured, and is notoriously palpable and gross in its nature, the Court of B. R. will order the Underwriter to retain the premium. Parke, c. 10, cites Tyler v. Horne. By the stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 38. § 47, to prevent Insurance on exported wool, if the Underwriter informs against the party insuring, he may retain the premium: but if the Insurer inform he shall be entitled to recover it back. When a Policy is void as a Wager-Policy under stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, though the ship arrive safe, the Underwriter may retain the premium. Lowry v. Bourdieu, Dougl. 468. And so he may in the case of a Re-assurance void, by the same statute. 3 Term Rep. 266.

In general, when property has been insured to a larger amount than the real value, the overplus premium, or if goods are insured to come in certain ships from abroad, but are not in fact shipped, the whole premium, shall be returned. If the ship be arrived before the Policy is made, the Insurer being apprized of it, and the Insured being ignorant of it, he is entitled to have his premium restored on the ground of fraud: but if both parties are ignorant of the arrival, and the Policy be lost or not lost, it seems the Underwriter ought to retain it, as if the ship had been lost at the time of underwriting, he would have been liable to pay the amount of his subscription. Clauses are frequently inserted by the parties, that upon the happening of a certain event there shall be a return of premium. These clauses have a binding operation on the parties, and the construction of them is a matter for the Court and not for the Jury to determine. In short, if the ship or property insured was never brought within the terms of the contract, so that the Insurer never ran any risk, the premium must be returned. Parke, c. 19: see 3 Burr. 1240: Cowp. 668: 1 Show. 156: Dougl. (255) 268. Simond v. Boydell.

Two rules are solemnly established, 1st, That whether the cause of the risk not being run is attributable to the fault, will, or pleasure of the Insured, the premium is to be returned. Cowp. 668. And, 2dly, Where the contract is entire, whether for a specified time, or for a voyage, and the risk is once commenced, and there is no contingency on which the risk is to end at any immediate period, there shall be no apportionment or return of premium afterwards. Hence, in cases of deviation, though the Underwriter is discharged he shall retain the premium. So in cases of Insurance for twelve months where the loss happens in two; even though the premium is calculated at so much per month: likewise where different ports are mentioned in the course of an outward and homeward bound voyage, and the ship is lost before setting out on her return; in all these cases also the premium shall be retained. See Cowp. 666: Loraine v. Thomlinson, Doug. (564) 584: Bermon v. Woodbridge, Dougl. (751) 780. But it is otherwise if the Jury find an express usage upon the subject of return of premium; and, indeed, it seems that there never has been an apportionment, unless there be something like an usage found to direct the judgment of the Court. But if there are two distinct points of time, or in effect, two two voyages, either in the contemplation of the parties, or by the usage of trade, and only one of the two voyages was made, the premium shall be returned on the other, though both are contained in one Policy. 3 Burr. 1237: 1 Black. Rep. 318. See Parke, c. 19, for a fuller discussion of the subject.

IV. BOTTOMRY is a contract by which the owner of a ship borrows money to enable him to carry on the voyage, and pledges the keel or bottom of the ship, as a security for the repayment. In which case it is understood, that if the ship be lost the lender loses also his whole money; but if it return in safety, then he shall receive back his principal, and also the premium or interest agreed upon, however it may exceed the legal rate of interest. And this is allowed to be a valid contract in all trading nations for the benefit of commerce, and by reason of the extraordinary hazard run by the lender: and in this case the ship and tackle, if brought home, are answerable (as well as the person of the borrower) for the money lent. But if the loan is not upon the vessel, but upon the goods and merchandize, which must necessarily be sold or exchanged in the course of the voyage, then only the borrower, personally, is bound to answer the contract; who, therefore, in this case, is said to take up money at RESPONDENTIA. It may be added, that in a loan upon Bottomry, the lender runs no risk though the goods should be lost; and on Respondentia, the lender must be paid his principal and interest, though the ship perish, provided the goods are safe. In this consists the chief difference between Bottomry and Respondentia; in most other respects they are the same. 2 Comm. 457, 8: Parke, c. 21.—The term is also spelt thus, Bottomree.

There is a third kind of contract, included in these terms, for the repayment of money borrowed, not on the ship and goods only, but on the mere hazard of the voyage itself; as when a man lends a merchant 1000 l. to be employed in a beneficial trade, with condition to be repaid with extraordinary interest, in case a certain voyage be safely performed: which kind of agreement is sometimes called fœnus nauticum; and sometimes usura maritima. But as this gave an opening for usurious and gaming contracts, especially upon long voyages, it was enacted, by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, that all monies lent on Bottomry, or at Respondentia, on vessels bound to or from the East Indies, shall be expressly lent only upon the ship, or upon the merchandize; that the lender shall have the benefit of salvage; and that if the borrower has not on board effects to the value of the sum borrowed, he shall be responsible to the lender, for so much of the principal as hath not been laid out, with legal interest, and all other charges, though the ship and merchandize be totally lost. See Parke, c. 21.

This statute has entirely put an end to that species of contract which arose from a loan upon the mere voyage itself, as far only as relates to India voyages; but these loans may still be made in all other cases, as at the common law, except in the following instance, which is another statute prohibition. The stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 21. § 2, declares, that all contracts made or entered into by any of his Majesty's subjects, or any person in trust for them, for or upon the loan of any monies by way of Bottomry, on any ship or ships in the service of foreigners, and bound or designed to trade in the East Indies, or places beyond the Cape of Good Hope, (mentioned in the statutes relating to the English East-India Company,) shall be null and void.—This act, it should seem, does not mean to prevent the lending money on Bottomry, on foreign ships trading, from their own country, to their settlements in the East Indies. The purpose of the statute was only to prevent the people of this country from trading to the British settlements in India under foreign commissions; and to encourage the lawful trade thereto. It seems to be allowed that an American ship, since the declaration of American independency, is a foreign ship within the meaning of this statute. See Sumner v. Green, Parke, c. 21.

Bottomry is a contract of more antiquity than that of Insurance, and arose from the power given to the master of a ship, to hypothecate the ship and goods for necessaries in a foreign country. But the ship must be abroad, and in a state of necessity, to justify such an act of the master. See Moor 918: Hob 11: Salk 34: Parke, c. 21.

The principle upon which Bottomry is allowed, is, that the lender runs the risk of losing his principal and interest; and therefore it is not usury to take more than the legal rate. See 2 Vez. 148, 154: Cro. Jac. 208, 508: Hardr. 418: 1 Sid. 27: 1 Lev. 54: 1 Eq. Ab. 372. But if a contract were made by colour of Bottomry, in order to evade the statute against usury, it would then be usurious. 2 Vez. 146. And as the hazard to be run is the very basis and foundation of this contract, it follows, that if the risk be not run, the lender is not entitled to the extraordinary premium. 1 Vern. 263.

The risks to which the lender exposes himself are generally mentioned in the condition of the bond, and are nearly the same as those against which the Underwriter, in a Policy of Insurance, undertakes to indemnify. It has been determined, that piracy is one of these risks. Comb. 56. And if a loss by capture happen, the lender cannot recover against the borrower: but this does not mean a temporary taking, but such as occasions a total loss. Therefore, where a ship was taken and detained for a short time, and yet arrived at the port of destination within the time limited, it was held, that the bond was not forfeited, and the obligee may recover. Joice v. Williamson, Parke, c. 21. In the same case it was also settled, that a lender on Bottomry, or at Respondentia, is neither entitled to the benefit of salvage, nor liable to contribute in case of a general average; for which reason the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, above mentioned, contains a positive provision to allow the benefit of salvage in the cases there mentioned. If, however, a man insure Respondentia-interest on a foreign ship, and be obliged to contribute to an average loss, by the laws of her country, English Underwriters are bound to indemnify. Walpole v. Ewer; Parke, c. 21.

If the ship be lost by a wilful deviation from the track of the voyage, the event has not happened, upon which the borrower was to be discharged from his obligation; as she was not lost by a peril to which the lender agreed to make himself liable. Skin. 152, 345: Holt 126: 1 Eq. Ab. 372: 2 Ch. Ca. 130. And, indeed, it is generally expressly provided against in the bond.

If the borrower becomes bankrupt after the loan of the money, and before the event happens which entitles the lender to repayment, the lender may prove his debt under the commission, after the contingency shall have happened.

happened; as if the event had actually happened before the Commission of Bankruptcy issued. Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 32. § 2. See this Dictionary, title Bankrupt.

Bottomry and Respondentia may be insured, provided it be specified in the Policy to be such interest. And by stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, the Lender alone can make such Insurance; and the Borrower can only insure the surplus value of the goods over and above the money borrowed. But money expended by the Captain for the use of the ship, and for which Respondentia-interest is charged, may be recovered under an Insurance on goods, specie, and effects, provided it is sanctioned by the usage of trade. See Glover v. Black, 3 Burr. 1394: 1 Black. Rep. 405: and Gregory v. Christie, Parke, c. 1. p. 11.—Finally, where a person insures a Bottomry Interest, and recovers upon the Bond, he cannot also recover upon the Policy. Parke, c. 21. p. 428.

V. INSURANCE UPON LIFE, is a contract by which the Underwriter, for a certain sum, proportioned to the age, health, and profession of the person whose life is the object of the Insurance, engages that that person shall not die within the time limited in the policy; or if he do, that he (the Underwriter) will pay a sum of money to the person in whose favour the policy is granted. Parke, c. 22.

These contracts have been found to be attended with so many advantages, to persons whose incomes might otherwise determine with their own lives, or those of others, that a Society obtained a Charter from Queen Anne, for the purpose of granting such annuities, and still subsists, under the name of The Amicable Society for a Perpetual Assurance Office. A similar Society is established, by deed inrolled in the Court of King's Bench, at Westminster, called, A Society for Equitable Assurances on Lives and Survivorships. The two Companies of The Royal Exchange and London Assurance also obtained a charter for the same purpose: and by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 14, the two Companies of The Royal Exchange Assurance for insuring of ships, and for insuring houses, &c. against fire, are authorised to grant annuities for lives or on survivorship; and are incorporated, for that purpose, by the name of The Royal Exchange Assurance Annuity Company. Private Underwriters may also enter into policies of this nature, if an Insured chooses to trust to their single security.

To avoid the iniquitous gambling which had begun to take place upon this, as well as on other Insurances, the stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 48, provides, that "No Insurance shall be made on the life or lives of any person or persons, wherein the person for whose use the policy is made, shall have no interest, or by way of gaming, or wagering, but such Insurance shall be null and void." And, in order more effectually to guard against any imposition or fraud, and to be the better able to ascertain what the interest of the person entitled to the benefit of the Insurance really is, it is further enacted, by the same statute, "That it shall not be lawful to make any policy or policies, on the life or lives of any person or persons, or other event or events, without inserting in such policy or policies, policies, the person's name interested therein, or for whose use or benefit, or on whose account such policy is so made or underwritten. And that in all cases where the Insured has an interest in such life or lives, event or events, no greater sum shall be recovered or received from the Insurer, than the amount or value of the interest of the Insured in such life or other event."

On this statute it has been determined, that the holder of a note for money won at play, has not an insurable interest in the life of the maker of the note. Dwyer v. Edie, Parke 432.

The general rules and maxims which govern Insurances in general, and on which so much has already been said, apply also to this species of them. The following are such as relate more directly to the contract now immediately in question:

As to the Risk.—In a Life-Insurance the Insurer undertakes to answer for all those accidents to which the life of man is exposed, except suicide, or the hands of justice. The death must happen within the time limited by the policy, otherwise the Insurers are discharged: and though a man receives a mortal wound during the existence of the policy, if he does not in fact die till after the expiration of it, the Insurers are not liable. See Willes J.'s opinion in Lockyer v. Offley, 1 Term Rep. 252: but if a man whose life is insured goes to sea, and the ship in which he sailed is never heard of afterwards, the question whether he did or did not die within the time insured, is a fact for the Jury to ascertain from the circumstances. Paterson v. Black, Parke 433.

With respect to the Loss.—This sort of policy being on the life or death of a man, does not admit of the distinction between total and partial losses. Parke 434.—If the Insurer become bankrupt before the loss happens, the person interested may prove the debt, under the commission, as if the loss had happened before it issued, by virtue of the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 32: (See ante IV): Cox v. Liotard, Dougl. (160) 166. n.—A policy was made for one year from the day of the date thereof: the policy was dated September 3, 1697: The person died on September 3, 1698, about one o'clock in the morning, and the Insurer was held liable. 2 Salk. 625: 1 Ld. Raym 480. To prevent disputes, it is now usual to insert in the policy the words, the first and last days included. Parke 436.

Fraud equally vitiates policies on lives, as it does those in Marine Insurances. Pre. Ch. 20: 2 Vern. 206. But where there is a warranty that the person is in good health, it is sufficient that he be in a reasonable good state of health: for it can never mean that he is free from the seeds of disorder. And even if the person, whose life was insured, laboured under a particular infirmity; if it be proved by medical men, that, in their judgment, it did not at all contribute to his death, the warranty of health has been fully complied with, and the Insurer is liable. 1 Black. Rep. 312: Parke 438, 9.

We have already seen (ante III. 8;) that when the risk is entire, and is once begun, there shall be no apportionment of premium: if, therefore, the person whose life was insured, should commit suicide, or be put to death by the hands of justice, the next day after the risk commenced, there would be no return of premium. See Tyrie v. Fletcher, Cowp. 669.

VI. INSURANCE AGAINST FIRE is a contract by which the Insurer undertakes, in consideration of the premium, to indemnify the insured against all losses, which he may sustain in his house, or goods, by means of fire, within the time limited in the policy. Various offices have been instituted for these kind of Insurances: some established by Royal Charter, others by deed inrolled; and others which give security on land for the payment of losses. The rules by which these Societies are governed, are established by their own managers, and a copy given to every person at the time he insures; so that by his acquiescence, he submits to their proposals, and is fully apprised of those rules, upon the compliance or non-compliance with which, he will or will not be entitled to an indemnity. There are not, therefore, many cases on the subject in our law-books. The following are the most requisite to be noticed:

The London Assurance Company insert a clause in their proposals, by which they declare, that they will not hold themselves liable for any damage by fire occasioned by any invasion, foreign enemy, or any military or usurped power whatever. Under this proviso it has been held, that the Insurers were not exempted from, but liable to make good, a loss by fire occasioned by a mob, which arose under pretext of the high price of provisions, and burned down the plaintiff's malting house. 2 Wils. 363.

The SUN Fire-Office, in addition to the above words, adds, civil commotion. It was held, that under these latter words the Company were exempt from, and not liable to satisfy, losses occasioned by rioters, who rose in the year 1780, to compel the repeal of a statute which had passed in favour of the Roman Catholicks. Langdale v. Mason, Parke, c. 23.

When a loss happens, the Insured is bound by the proposals of most of the Societies, and ought, in all cases, to give immediate notice of the loss, and as particular an account of the value, &c. as the nature of the case will admit. He must also produce a certificate of the Minister and Church-wardens as to his character, and their belief of the loss sustained, and the truth of what he advances. Parke 448.

In these Insurances against fire, the loss may be either partial or total, and some of the Offices, if not all, expressly undertake to allow all reasonable charges, attending the removal of goods in cases of fire, and to pay the sufferer's loss, whether the goods are destroyed, lost, or damaged, by such removal. Parke 449

These policies are not, in their nature, assignable, nor can the interest in them be transferred without the consent of the Office; contrary to what has been expressly determined in cases of Marine Insurances. 1 Term Rep 26. It is provided, however, that when any person dies, the interest shall remain to his heir, executor, or administrator, respectively, to whom the property insured belongs; provided they procure their right to be indorsed on the policy, or the premium be paid in their name. Parke 449.

It is necessary that the party injured should have an interest or property in the house insured, at the time the policy is made out, and at the time the fire happens: and therefore, after the lease of the house is expired, the Insured's assigning the policy does not oblige the Insurers to make good the loss to the assignee. Lynch v. Dalzell, Bro. P. C: and see 2 Atk. 554.

The

The Premium upon common Insurances is 2*s. per cent.* for any sum not exceeding 1000*l.*; and 2*s.* 6*d.* from 1000*l.* upwards. Besides which there is a duty to Government under stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 48, of 1*s.* 6*d. per cent.* but which latter does not extend to Insurances upon public hospitals.

By stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 50. § 24, if any person sign a policy of Insurance against fire, not being duly stamped, he shall forfeit 10*l.* and must pay 5*l.* over and above the usual stamp-duties, (see ante I. 1.) before it can be received in evidence.

The same principles as to fraud, and the return of premium, apply to cases in Insurance against fire as to all other contracts of Insurance.

INTAKERS, a kind of thieves in the northern parts of England, so called, because they did take in and receive such booties as their confederates, the outpartners, brought to them from the borders of Scotland; they are mentioned in stat. 9 H. 5. c. 7.

INTENDMENT OF LAW, intellectus legis.] The understanding, intention, and true meaning of law. Lord Coke says, the judges ought to judge according to the common Intendment of law. 1 Inst. 78.

Intendment shall sometimes supply that which is not fully expressed or apparent, and when a thing is doubtful, in some cases, Intendment may make it out; also many things shall be intended after verdict, in a cause, to make a good judgment: but Intendment cannot supply the want of certainty in a charge in an indictment for any crime, &c. 5 Rep. 121.

Sometimes a thing is necessarily intended by what precedes or follows it; and where an indifferent construction may have two Intendments, the rule is to take it most strongly against the plaintiff. Show. 162. Though if a plaintiff declares, that the defendant is bound to him by obligation, it shall be intended that the obligation was sealed and delivered: if one is bound in a bond, and in the solvend' of the bond it is not expressed unto whom the money shall be paid, or if said to the obligor; the law will intend it is to be paid to the obligee: and where no time is limited for payment of the money, it shall be intended to be presently paid. 2 Lill. Abr. 71.

The intent of parties in deeds, contracts, &c. is much regarded by the law: though it shall not take place against the direct rules of law: the law doth not in conveyances of estates admit them regularly to pass by Intendment and implication; in devises of lands they are allowed, with due restrictions. Vaugh. 261, 262. Where seisin of an inheritance is once alledged, it shall be intended to continue till the contrary is shewn. Jones 181. A court pleaded generally to be held secund' consuetud' shall be intended held according to the common law. Goldsb. 111.

By Intendment of law every parson, or rector of a church, is supposed to be resident in his benefice, unless the contrary be proved. Co. Lit. 78. b.

One part of a manor by common Intendment shall not be of another nature than the rest. Co. Lit. 73. b.

Of common Intendment a will shall not be supposed to be made by collusion. Co. Lit. 78. b. The law presumes that every one will act for his best advantage; therefore credits the party in whatever is to his own prejudice. Fin. Law 10: Max. 53. Usury shall not be intended, unless expresly found by the jury. Bridgm. 112: 10 Rep. 59. Covin shall not be intended or presumed in law, unless expressed averred. Bridgm. 112. When one word may have a double Intendment, one according to the law, and another against the law, that Intendment shall be taken which is according to law; and this by a reasonable Intendment. 3 Bulst. 306: Yelv. 50. See further titles Implication; Indictment; Deed; and such other titles as are applicable to this subject.

INTENDMENT OF CRIMES. In antient times felonious attempts, intending the death of another, were adjudged felony; for the will was taken for the fact. Bract. 1 E. 3. But at this day the law does not generally punish Intendments to do ill, if the intent be not executed; except in case of treason, where intention proved by circumstances shall be punished as if put in execution. 3 Inst. 108. And if a person enter a house in the night, with intent to commit burglary, it is felony: and by statute 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 1, maliciously cutting off or disabling any limb or member, with an intent to disfigure, &c. is felony. See also Plowd. 474. Assault, with intent to commit robbery on the highway, is made felony punishable by transportation; stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 21. —Intention of force and violence makes riots criminal. 3 Inst. 9. Where men do evil, and say they intend none; or if the intention be only to beat, and they kill a person, they are to be punished for the crime done. Plowd. 345. If a man entering a tavern, &c. commit a trespass, the law will judge that he originally intended it. 8 Rep. 147. See this Dictionary, titles Homicide; Treason; &c.

INTENT, OR INTENTION. The words of deeds shall be construed according to the Intent of the parties, and not otherwise. The Intent shall be destroyed where it does not agree with the law. Pl. C. 160. b; 162 b.

In every agreement the Intent is the chief thing that is to be considered; and if by the act of God, or other means not arising from the party himself, the agreement cannot be performed according to the words, yet the party shall perform it as near the Intent as he may. Pl. C. 290.

Common usage and reputation frequently govern the matter, and direct the Intention of the parties; as upon sale of a barrel of beer the barrel is not sold, but upon sale of a hogshead of wine it is otherwise. Savil 124: Hardr. 3. The Intention of a man is not always to be pursued in equity; as if a man settles a term in trust for one and his heirs, yet it shall go to the executor. 1 Vern. 164.

All deeds are but in nature of contracts, and the Intent of the parties reduced into writing, and the Intention is to be chiefly regarded. In an act of parliament the Intention appearing in the preamble shall controul the letter of the law; and from the regard which the law itself gives to the Intention of the party, it is, that where there is fine by render, there shall be no dower; and so a rent or recognizance shall not be extinguished by levying a fine to the party. Vern. 58. See 14 Vin. Abr. tit. Intent, and this Dictionary, titles Deed; Limitation; Agreement; Statute; &c.

INTENTIONE, A writ that lies against him who enters into lands after the death of tenant in dower or for life, &c. and holds out him in reversion or remainder. F. N. B. 203.

INTER CANEM & LUPUM, Words formerly used in appeals to signify the crime being done in the twilight. Inter Placita de Trin. 7 Ed. 1: Rot. 12: Glouc. Plac. Cor. apud Novum Castrum. 24 Ed. 6. Rot. 6. This in Herefordshire, they call the mock-shadow, corruptly the mock-shade, and in the north, daylight's-gate; others, betwixt hawk and buzzard. Cowell.

INTERCOMMONING, Is where the commons of two manors lie together, and the inhabitants of both have time out of mind depastered their cattle promiscously in each. Cowell. See title Common.

INTERDICTION, interdictio; interdictum.] An ecclesiastical censure, prohibiting the administration of divine ceremonies. See Walf. Hist. an. 1357. It is a general excommunication of a whole country or province: it is mentioned in some of our historians, viz. Knighton tells us, anno 1208, that the Pope excommunicated King John, and all his adherents, Et totam terram Anglicanam suppofuit interdicto, which began the first Sunday after Easter, and continued six years and one month; during all which time nothing was done in the churches besides baptism and confessions of dying people.

THE ANCIENT FORM OF AN INTERDICT.

IN the name of Christ, We the Bishop, in behalf of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, and of St. Peter, the chief of the apostles, and in our own behalf, do excommunicate and interdict this church, and all the chapels thereunto belonging, that no man from henceforth may have leave to sing mass, or to hear it, or in any wise to administer any divine office, nor to receive God's tithes without our leave; and whosoever shall presume to sing or hear mass, or perform any divine office, or to receive any tithes, contrary to this interdict, on the part of God the Father Almighty, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and on the behalf of St. Peter, and all the saints, let him be accursed and separated from all Christian society, and from entering into Holy Mother Church, where there is forgiveness of sins; and let him be Anathema, Maranatha, for ever, with the devils in hell. Fiat, fiat, fiat. Amen.—DU CANGE.

This severe church-censure has been long disused. See further titles Papist; Rome.

INTERDICTUM, In the civil law, was a prohibition nearly equivalent to the injunction of our Court of Chancery. See title Injunction.

INTERDICTED OF WATER AND FIRE. Were anciently those persons who suffered banishment for some crime; by which judgment, order was given that no man should receive them into his house, but deny them fire and water, the two necessary elements of life, which amounted as it were to a civil death; and this was called legitimum exilium, says Livy.

INTEREST, interesse.] Is commonly taken for a chattel real, as a lease for years, &c. and more particularly for a future term; in which case it is said in pleading, that one is possessed de interesse termini. Therefore an estate in lands is better than a right or interest in them: though, in legal understanding, an interest extends to estates, rights, and titles, that a man hath in, or out of lands, &c. so as by grant of his whole interest in such land, a reversion therein, as well as possession in fee-simple, shall pass. Co. Lit. 345. Because no livery of seisin is necessary to a lease for years, such lessee is not said to be seised, or to have true legal seisin of the land. Nor indeed does the bare lease vest any estate in the lessee, but only gives him a right of entry on the enement, which right is called his interest in the term, or interesse termini: but when he has actually so entered, and thereby accepted the grant, the estate is then and not before vested in him, and he is possessed not properly of the land but of the term of years; the possession or seisin of the land remaining still in him who hath the freehold. 1 Inst. 46: See 2 Comm. 144. b. 2. c. 9. I: and this Dictionary, titles Lease; Term; Estate.

A mortgage is an interest in land, and on non-payment, the estate is absolute in law, and his interest is good in equity to entitle him to receive and enjoy the profits till redemption or satisfaction; and on a foreclosure, he hath the absolute estate both in law and equity. 9 Mod. 196. See title Mortgage.

INTEREST OF MONEY, The legal profit or recompence allowed, on loans of money, to be taken from the borrower by the lender. The rate of legal Interest has varied and decreased, according as the quantity of specie in this kingdom has increased by accessions of trade, the introduction of paper credit, and other circumstances. The stat. 37 H. 8. c. 9, confined Interest to 10 per cent.; and so did the stat. 13 Eliz c. 8. The stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 17, reduced it to 8 per cent.; and the stat. 12. Car. 2. c. 13, to six: and, lastly, by stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 16, it was brought down to five per cent. per annum; which is now the extremity of legal Interest that can be taken on a loan of money. But yet if a contract which carries Interest be made in a foreign country, our courts will direct the payment of Interest, according to the law of the country in which the contract was made. 1 Eq. Ab 289: 1 P. Wms. 395: (See 2 Bro. C. R. 2.) Thus Irish, American, Turkish, and Indian, Interest have been allowed in our courts to the amount of ven 10 or 12 per cent.; for Interest depends on local circumstances, and the refusal to enforce such contracts would put a stop to all foreign trade. And by stat 14 Geo. 3. c. 79, all bonâ fide mortgages and securities on estates or property in Ireland, or the plantations, bearing Interest not exceeding 6 per cent. shall be legal, though executed in Great Britain. 2 Comm 460. c. 30. IX 4. See further this Dictionary, title Usury.

Where an estate is devised for payment of debts, Chancery will not allow Interest for book debts. 3 Ch. Rep 94. Where lands are charged with payment of a sum in gross, they are also chargeable in equity with payment of Interest for such sum. Fin. R. 286. Interest is recovered by way of damages, where damages are recovered ratione detentionis debiti; but not where damages only are recovered. for interest is not recovered occasione dampnorum; per Powel J. 2 Salk. 623. No Interest to be allowed for costs, 14 Vin. Abr. title Interest. In a long unsettled partnership account, rendered intricate by the neglect of a party, he shall have no Interest on the balance when settled. 1 Bro. C. R. 239. See further titles Bankrupt; Account; Damages; Mortgage, &c.

INTEREST ON LEGACIES. In case of a vested Legacy, due immediately, and charged on land, or money in the funds, which yield an immediate profit, Interest shall be payable thereon from the testator's death; but if charged only on the personal estate, which cannot be immediately got in, it shall carry Interest only from the end of the year after the death of the testator. 2 P. Wms. 26, 27. See title Legacy; Executor.

Interest, or no Interest. See title Insurance.

Interested Witness. Interested Witnesses may be examined upon a voir dire, if suspected to be secretly concerned in the event; or their interest may be proved in court. 3 Comm. 370. See titles Evidence; Witness.

INTERLOCUTORY DECREE in CHANCERY. See titles Chancery; Injunction; Decree.

Interlocutory Judgment. Interlocutory judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding on default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. As judgment for the plaintiff in abatement, of respondeat ouster, i. e. that defendant shall answer over, or farther, plead in chief, or put in a more substantial plea.

But the Interlocutory Judgments, most usually spoken of, are those incomplete judgments, whereby the right of the plaintiff is indeed established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained, which is the province of a jury. In such case a writ of enquiry issues to the sheriff, who summons a jury, enquires of the damages, and returns to the court the inquisition so taken, whereupon the plaintiff's attorney taxes costs, and signs final judgment. 3 Comm. 396, 397. See title Judgment, I.

Interlocutory Order. See titles Chancery; Injunction.

INTERLOPERS, Persons who intercept the trade of a company of merchants. Merc. Dict. Applied principally to those who infringe the charters of the East India Company. See that title.

INTERPLEADER, Fr. enterplaider Lat. interplacitare.] To discuss or try a point incidentally happening as it were between, before the principal cause can be determined. Interpleader is allowed, that the defendant may not be charged to two severally, where no default is in him: as if one brings detinue against the defendant upon a bailment of goods, and another against him upon a trover, there shall be Interpleader, to ascertain who hath right to his action. 2 Danv. Abr. 779. If two bring several detinues against A. B. for the same thing, and the defendant acknowledges the action of one of them, without a prayer of Interpleader, they shall not interplead on the request of the other; for the Interpleader is given for the security of the defendant, that he may not be twice charged, and he hath waived that benefit. 18 Ed. 3. 22.

If one brings detinue against B. and counts upon a delivery of goods, &c. to re-deliver to him, and another brings detinue against him also, and counts so likewise; if there be not any privity of bailment between them, yet they shall interplead, to avoid the double charge of the defendant; and also because the court cannot know to whom to deliver the thing detained, if both should recover. Br. Enterplead. 3. And upon such several detinues, if the defendant says that he found it, and traverses the bailment, they shall interplead; for then he is chargeable as well to the one as the other; so if he says that they delivered jointly, absque hoc, that they delivered it as they have counted: but it is otherwise, if the defendant doth not traverse the bailment, because if there was a bailment, he is chargeable only to the bailor, and may plead in bar against the others. 2 Danv. 782.

Where two bring several detinues for one thing, and the defendant prays that he may interplead, and delivers the thing to the court, and before the award of the Interpleader, one discontinues the suit, the other shall not have judgment; but if he discontinues his suit after the Interpleader, the other may have judgment. 11 H. 6. 19.

If a recovery be had upon an Interpleader, judgment shall be given to recover the thing demanded against the defendant; and not against the garnishee, in case of garnishment, &c. 2 Danv. 783. When two have interpleaded in detinue, he that recovers shall recover damage against the other. Br. Damage 68.

There was formerly Interpleader relating to delivery of lands by the King to the right heir, where two persons out of wardship were found heirs, &c. 7 Rep. 45: Staund. Prer. cap. 17: Bro. title Enterplead. And anciently this head (spelt Enterpleader) made a great title in the law.

There are also Bills of Interpleader in a Court of Equity. Thus, where two or more persons claim the same thing by different or separate interests, and another person not knowing to which of the claimants he ought of right to render a debt or duty, or to deliver property in his custody, fears he may be hurt by some of them, he may exhibit a bill of Interpleader against them. In this bill he must state his own rights, and their several claims; and pray that they may interplead, so that the court may adjudge to whom the thing belongs, and he may be indemnified. Mitford's Treat. 47. See Bunb. 303: 1 Eq. Ab. 80: 2 Eq. Ab. 173: 1 Burr. 37: Pract. Reg. 38.

The principles upon which courts of equity proceed in these cases, are similar to those by which the courts of law are guided in the case of bailment: the courts of law compelling interpleader between persons claiming property, for the indemnity of a third person in whose hands the property is, in those cases only where, by agreement of both claimants, the property has been bailed to a third person; and the courts of equity extending the remedy to all other cases (leaving those of bailment to the common law) to which in conscience it ought to extend. Mitf. Treat. 125.

If a bill of Interpleader does not show that each of the defendants, whom it seeks to compel to interplead, claims a right, both the defendants may demur; one because the bill shows no claim of right in him; the other, because (for that very reason) the bill shows no cause of Interpleader. 1 Ves. 248. Or if the bill shows no right to compel the defendants to interplead, whatever rights they may claim, each defendant may demur. As the court will not permit such a bill to be brought in collusion with either claimant, the plaintiff must annex to his bill an affidavit that it is not exhibited in collusion with any of the parties; the want of which affidavit is a cause of demurrer. 1 Ves. 248. A bill of this nature generally prays an injunction to restrain the proceedings of the claimants in some other court; and as this may be used to delay the payment of money by the plaintiff, if any is due from him, he ought by his bill to offer to pay the money due into court. Mitf. Treat. 126.

After a decree on a bill of Interpleader, there is generally an end of the suit as to the plaintiff; and if he dies, the cause may proceed without revivor. 1 Vern. 351. See further titles Chancery; Injunction, &c.

INTERREGNUM. There cannot be any Interregnum in this country, by the policy of the Constitution; for the right of sovereignty is fully vested in the successor to the throne by the very descent of the crown. Hence the statutes passed in the first year after the restoration of Car. II. are always called the acts of the 12th year of his reign: and all the other legal proceedings of that reign are reckoned from the year 1648, and not from 1660.

INTERROGATORIES, Are particular questions in writing, demanded of witnesses brought in to be examined in a cause, especially in the Court of Chancery. These Interrogatories must be exhibited by the parties in the suit on each side; which are either direct for the party that produces them, or counter on behalf of the adverse party: and generally both Plaintiff and Defendant may exhibit direct, and counter, or cross Interrogatories.

They are to be pertinent and only to the points necessary, and either drawn or perused by counsel, and must be signed by them: if they are leading, viz. such as these, Did not you do or see such a thing, &c. the depositions on them will be suppressed; for they should be drawn, Did you see, or did you not see, &c. without leaning to either side; and not only where they point more to one side of the question than the other; but if they are too particular, they will likewise be suppressed. The Commissioners, &c. who examine witnesses on Interrogatories, must examine to one Interrogatory only at a time; they are to hold the witnesses to every point interrogated; and take what comes from them on their examination, without asking any idle questions, or putting down any impertinent answers not relating to the Interrogatories, &c. See titles Depositions; Equity.

If a contempt be committed in the face of the Court, the offender may be instantly apprehended and imprisoned at the discretion of the Judges, without any farther proof or examination. Staundf. P. C. 73. b. In matters arising at a distance, the Court generally grant a rule to show cause why an attachment should not issue, or in very flagrant instances of contempt, an attachment issues in the first instance. Salk. 84: Stra. 185, 564. This process is intended to bring the party into Court, and when there he must either stand committed or put in bail, in order to answer such Interrogatories as shall be administered to him for the information of the Court. These Interrogatories are in the nature of a charge or accusation; and if any of them are improper, the defendant may refuse to answer it, and move the Court to have it struck out. Stra. 444. If the party can clear himself upon oath, he is discharged; but if perjured, may be prosecuted for the perjury. 6 Mod. 73. If the contempt be of such a nature, that, when the fact is once acknowledged, the Court can receive no farther information by Interrogatories than it is already possessed of (as in case of a rescue): the defendant may be admitted to make such simple acknowledgment, and receive his judgment without answering to any Interrogatories; but refusing to answer or answering evasively is punishable as a high and repeated contempt. 4 Comm. 287. c. 20.

With regard to this singular mode of trial, thus admitted in this one particular instance, and so contrary to the genius of the common law in any other, it may be sufficient to observe, that as the process by attachment in general appears to be extremely ancient; (Y. B. 20 H. 6. 37: 22 E. 4. 29;) and has, in more modern times, been recognized, approved, and confirmed by several express acts of parliament; (Statutes 4. Eliz. c. 6. § 3: 13 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 2. § 4: 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 15: 12 An. st. 2. c. 15. § 5.) so the method of examining the delinquent upon oath with regard to the contempt alledged, is at least of as high antiquity, and, by long and immemorial usage, is now become the law of the land. M. 5 E. 4. rot. 75, cited Rast. Ent. 268. pl. 5: 4 Comm. 288. c. 20.

It has been remarked, that the admission of the party to purge himself by oath is more favourable to his liberty, though perhaps not less dangerous to his conscience. Some declamation has also been used against the temptation to perjury afforded by this proceeding; this latter, however, is an argument which can never affect the case of any honest man.

INTESTATES, Intestati.] There are two kinds of Intestates; one who makes no will; another who makes a will, and nominates executors, but they refuse; in which case he dies an Intestate, and the Ordinary commits administration. 2 Par. Inst. fol 397. In former times, he who died Intestate, was accounted damned, because (as Mat. Par. tells us) he was obliged by the canons, to leave at least a tenth part of his goods to pious uses, for the redemption of his soul; therefore, whoever neglected so to do, took no care of his own salvation. They made no difference between a suicide and an Intestate; for as, in one case, the goods were forfeited to the King, so in the other they were forfeited to the chief Lord. But because it was accounted a very wicked thing to die without making any distribution of his goods to pious uses, and such cases often happen by sudden deaths, therefore, by subsequent constitutions, the Bishops had power to make such distribution as the Intestate himself was bound to do; and this was called Eleemosyna rationalilis. And it was by this means that the spiritual courts came first to have jurisdiction in testamentary cases. See this Dict. titles Executors; Will.

INTRARE MARISCUM, To drain any low ground, and by dykes, walls, &c. take in, and reduce it to herbage or pasture; whence comes the word Innings. Wil. Thorn.

INTRUSION, Intrusio.] Is when the ancestor dies seised of any estate of inheritance, expectant upon an estate for life, and then tenant for life dies, between whose death and entry of the Heir, a stranger intrudes. Co. Lit. 277: Bract. lib. 4. cap. 2. Intrusion, therefore, signifieth an unlawful entry into lands or tenements void of a possessor, by him who hath no right to the same; and the difference between an Intruder and an Abator is this, that an Abator entereth into lands void by the death of a tenant in fee; and an Intruder enters into land void by the death of tenant for life or years. F. N. B. 203.

Blackstone ranks Intrusion as a species of injury by ouster, or amotion of possession from the freehold, and states it to be, The entry of a stranger, after a particular estate of freehold is determined, before him in remainder or reversion. It happens, says he, where a tenant for term of life dieth seised of lands and tenements, and a stranger entereth thereon, after such death of the tenant, and before any entry of him in remainder or reversion. The difference between Intrusion and Abatement, he states to be, that an Abatement is always to the prejudice of the heir, or immediate devisee; an Intrusion is always to the prejudice of him in remainder or reversion. So that an Intrusion is always immediately consequent upon the determination of a particular estate: an Abatement is always consequent upon the descent or devise of an estate in fee-simple. 3 Comm. 169. c. 10. (2).

There is a writ of Intrusion, which lies where the tenant for life, &c. dies; but if a man doth intrude after the death of such a tenant, he in reversion in tail shall not have this writ, but is put to his formedon: for it lieth only for him who hath the reversion in fee simple, &c. after the death of tenant for life, or in dower, &c. New Nat. Br. 509. Also one having such a fee-estate in remainder, shall have writ of Intrusion; and the assignee of the remainder may bring it, as well as an heir, &c. New N. B. 509.

As he who enters and keeps the right heir from the possession of his ancestor is an Intruder punishable by common law; so he who enters on the King's land and takes the profits, is an Intruder against the King. Co. Litt. 277. For this Intrusion information may be brought; but before office found, he who occupies the land shall not be said to be an Intruder, for Intrusion cannot be but where the King is actually possessed, which is not before office; though the King is intitled to the mesne profits after the tenant's estate ended. Moor 295. See title Information, I.

By stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 14, the defendants may plead the general issue in informations of Intrusion, brought on behalf of the King, and retain their possession till trial, where the King hath been out of possession, and not received the profits for twenty years: and no scire facias shall issue, whereupon the subject shall be forced to special pleading, &c.

INTRUSION DE GARD, A writ that lay where the infant within age entered into his lands, and held out his Lord. Old Nat. Br. 90.

INTRUSIONE, Is the writ brought against an Intruder, by him that hath fee-simple, &c. New Nat. Br. 453.

INVADIARE, To engage or mortgage lands; Invadiationes, mortgages of land. Mon. Angl. tom. 1. p. 478.

INVADIATUS, One, who having been accused of some crime, not fully proved, is put sub debita fidejussione.

INVASIONES. In the inquisition of serjeancies and knights' fees; anno 12 and 13 of King John, there are some titles called Invasiones; et Invasiones super regem.

INVENTIONES, Is used in antient charters for treasure-trove; money or goods found by any person, and not challenged by the owner; which, by the common law, is due to the King, who grants the privilege or benefit to some particular Subjects. Chart. K. Ed. I. to the Barons of the Cinque Ports: Placit. temp. Edw. I. & Edw. II. MS. f. 89.

INVENTORY, Inventorium.] A list or schedule containing a true description of all the goods and chattels of a person deceased at the time of his death, with their value appraised by indifferent persons; which every executor or administrator ought to exhibit to the Bishop or Ordinary at such time as he shall appoint. West. Symb. lib 2. pag. 696. By stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 5, executors and administrators are required to make and deliver in upon oath to the Ordinary, inventories indented, of which one part shall remain with the Ordinary, and the other part with the executor or administrator. The intention of this statute was for the benefit of the creditors and legatees, that the executor or administrator might not conceal any part of the personal estate from them: though as to the valuation it is not conclusive, but the real value must be found by a jury; if they are under-valued, the creditors may take them as appraised; and if over-valued, it shall not be prejudicial to the executor.

But though generally all the personal estate of the deceased, of what nature or quality soever, ought to be put into the Inventory; yet goods given away in the life-time of the deceased, and actually in the possession of the party to whom given, and the goods to which a husband is entitled as administrator to his wife, are not to be included. 2 Bulst. 355.—Notwithstanding the law requires that the Inventory be exhibited within three months after the death of the person, if it is done afterwards, it is good, for the Ordinary may dispense with the time, and even in some cases, whether it shall be exhibited, or not; as where creditors are paid, and the will performed, &c. Raym. 470. These Inventories proceed from the civil law; and as, by the old Roman law, the heir was obliged to answer all the testator's debts, Justinian ordained, that Inventories should be made of the substance of the deceased, and he should be no further charged. Justin. Inst.

In common parlance, &c. the term Inventory is applied on other and more frequent occasions, as on the sale of goods, by agreement between parties, accounts of the goods sold (supposing them passing with the possession of an house, &c.) are called Inventories. So the accounts taken by sheriffs, of goods levied and sold under executions, under distresses of the goods distrained for rent, are called Inventories, &c. See this Dictionary, title Executor, V. 4; Distress.

IN VENTRE SA MERE, Fr.] In the mother's belly, relating to which there is a writ mentioned in the register of writs; and in stat. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24, infant in ventre sa mere, is applied to the case where a woman is with child at the time of her husband's death; which child, if he had been born, would have been heir to the land of the husband; and this is sometimes privily, and sometimes open and visible. 1 Shep. Abr. 142. The law hath consideration of such a child, on account of the apparent expectation of his birth. He may be vouched in his mother's belly; and action lies for detainment of charters from him as heir, &c. Hob. 222: Dyer 186. When a female comes into land by descent, there the son born after, shall oust her and have the land. 3 Rep. 61: Plowd. 375. But if the daughter and female heir cometh to land in nature of a purchaser; as on a will of lands given to J. S. and his heirs, and he hath a daughter when the devisor dies, his wife being then with child of a son; in this case the daughter shall enjoy the land, and not the after-born son. 3 Rep. 61: 5 Ed. 4. 6: 9 Hen. 7. 24. See titles Infant, II; Posthumous Children; Descent; Limitation.

INVERITARE, To verify or make proof of a thing. Leg. Inæ. c. 16.

To INVEST; INVESTITURE, from the Fr. investir.] The giving possession: some define it thus, Investitura, est alicujus in suum jus introductio; a giving livery of seisin or possession.—Investitures in their original rise were probably intended to demonstrate in conquered countries the actual possession of the lord; and that he did not grant a bare litigious right which the soldier was ill qualified to prosecute, but a peaceable and firm possession. And after conveyance by deed came into use, these Investitures were retained as a public and notorious act, that the country might take notice of and testify the transfer of the estate, and that such as claimed title by other means might know against whom to bring their actions. 2 Comm. 311. c. 20. And see pp. 23, 53, 209: and this Dictionary, titles Feoffment; Conveyance; Tenure; as also titles Advowson; Institution, &c.

The customs and ceremonies of Investiture or giving possession, were long practised with great variety: at first Investitures were made by a form of words; afterwards by such things as had most resemblance to what was to be transferred; as lands passed by the delivery of a turf, &c. which was done, by the grantor, to the person to whom the lands were granted: but in afterages, the things by which Investitures were made were not so exactly observed. Ingulph. p. 901. In the church, it was the custom of old, for princes to promote such as they liked to ecclesiastical benefices, and declare their choice and promotion, by delivery, to the persons chosen, of a pastoral staff and ring; the one a symbolical representation of their spiritual marriage with the church; and the other of their pastoral care and charge, which was termed Investiture; after which they were consecrated by ecclesiastical persons. Hoveden tells us, that King Richard, being taken by the Emperor, gave this kingdom to him, et investivit eum inde per pileum suum; and that the Emperor immediately afterwards returned the gift; et investivit eum per duplicem crucem de auro. Hoved. 724. Walsingham says, that John Duke of Lancaster was invested Duke of Aquitaine, per virgam et pileum, p. 343.

INVITATORIA & VENITARIUM, Those hymns and psalms that were sung in the church to invite the people to prayer: they are mentioned in the statutes of St. Paul's Church. MS.

INVOICE, A particular account of merchandise, with its value, custom, and charges, &c. sent by a merchant to his factor or correspondent in another country. See stat. 12 Car 2. c. 34.

INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER, Differs from homicide excusable by misadventure, in this; that misadventure always happens in consequence of some lawful act, but this species of Manslaughter in consequence of an unlawful act. Yet, in general, when an Involuntary killing happens in consequence of an unlawful act, it will be either murder or Manslaughter, according to the nature of the act which occasioned it. 4 Comm. 192, 3. See title Homicide.

To INURE, To take effect; as the pardon inureth. Staund. Prær. fol. 40. See Enure.

JOBBER, One who buys or sells cattle for others. There are also stock-jobbers, who buy and sell stocks for other persons, and gamble in the funds for themselves. See titles National Debt; Stock-jobbers.

JOCALIA, Fr. joyaux.] Jewels; derived from the Lat. jocus, joculus, and jocula, which comprehend every thing that delighteth; but, in a special and more restrained sense, it signifies those things which are ornaments to women, and which in France they call their own; as diamonds, ear-rings, bracelets, &c. But in this kingdom a wife shall not be entitled to jewels, diamonds, &c. on the death of her husband, unless they are suitable to her quality, and the husband leaves assets to pay debts, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 911. See title Baron and Feme, IV. ad fin.

JOCARI, To contend with pikes. Mat. Paris, anno 1252.

JOCARIUS, A jester. In an ancient deed of Richard, abbot of Bernay, to Henry Lovet, among the witnesses to it was Willielmo tunc jocario Domini Abbatis. In Domesday it is said Berdic was Joculator Regis, the King's Jester.

JOCELET, Sax. Prædiolum, agri colendi portiuncula] A little farm or manor; in some parts of Kent a yoklet, as requiring but a small yoke of oxen to till it. Sax. Dict.

JOCULATOR, See Jocarius.

JOCUS PARTITUS. It is so called when two proposals are made, and a man hath liberty to choose which he will. Bracton, lib. 4. tract. 1. c. 32. p. 2: Hengham Magn. c. 4.

JOINDER IN ACTION, The coupling or joining of two in a suit or action. F. N. B. fol. 118, 201, 221. In all personal things, where two are chargeable to two, the one may satisfy it, and accept of satisfaction, and bind his companion; and yet one cannot have an action without his companion, nor both only against one. 2 Leon. 77. In joint personal actions against two defendants, if they plead severally, and the plaintiff is nonsuit by one before he hath judgment against the other, he is barred (in that suit) against both. Hob. 180. A person, in consideration of a sum of money paid to him by A. and B. promises to procure their cattle distrained to be delivered; if they are not delivered, one joint action lies by the parties; for the consideration cannot be divided. Style 156, 203: 1 Danv. Abr. 5. And where two joint owners of a sum of money are robbed upon the highway, they are to join in one action against the hundred. It is otherwise if they have several properties. Latch. 127: Dy. 307.

Upon a joint grievance all parties may join; as the inhabitants of a hundred, &c. And an action brought against owners of a ship, in case of goods damaged, &c. quasi ex contractu, must be brought against all of them. 3 Lev. 258: 3 Mod. 321: 2 Salk. 440. Though one partner acts in trade, where there are many partners, actions are to be brought against all the partners jointly for his acts. 1 Salk. 292. If two men are partners, and one of them sells goods in partnership, action for the money must be brought in both their names. Godb. 244. But where there are two partners in merchandise, and one one of them appoints a factor, they may have several writs of account against him, or they may join. Moor 188. And if one of the merchants dies, the survivor is to bring the action. 2 Salk. 444.

If one man calls two other men thieves, they shall not join in an action against him; and one joint action will not lie for, or against several persons for speaking the same words; for the wrong done to one is no wrong to the other; and the words of the one are not the words of the other. 1 Danv. 5: Palm. 313.

So, in assault and battery, on a joint trespass, the plaintiff may declare severally; but it remains joint till severed by the declaration. 2 Salk. 454. A man cannot declare in an action against one defendant for an assault and battery, and against another for taking away his goods; because the trespasses are of several natures. But where they are done by two persons jointly at one time, they may be both guilty of the whole. Style 153: 10 Rep. 66. If two men procure another to be indicted falsely of barratry, he may have action against them both jointly; and it is the same if two conspire to maintain a suit, though one only gives money, &c. Latch. 226.

Tenants in common cannot join in an action of waste against their lessee; but it is otherwise in the case of Coparceners or Joint-tenants. Moor 34. See those titles; and farther on this subject, this Dictionary, title Action.

JOINDER OF COUNTIES. There can be no Joinder of Counties for the finding of an indictment: though in appeal of death, where a wound was given in one county, and the party died in another, the jury were to be returned jointly from each county, before the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 24; but by that statute the law is altered; for now the whole may be tried either on Indictment or appeal, in the county wherein the death is. See titles Indictment; Homicide; Trial.—Where several persons are arraigned upon the same indictment or appeal, and severally plead not guilty, the prosecutor may either take out a joint venire or several. But after a joint venire, several ones cannot be taken out. H. P. C. 256.

JOINDER IN DEMURRER. See title Demurrer.

JOINDURE IN BATTEL. See title Battel.

JOINDURE OF ISSUE. When one party denies the fact pleaded by his antagonist who has tendered the issue thus, "And this he prays may be inquired of by the country," or "And of this he puts himself upon the "country," the party denying the fact, may immediately subjoin, "And the said A. B. doth the like." Which done, the Issue is said to be joined. See title Issue.

JOINT ACTIONS. See titles Action; Joinder in Action.

JOINT AND SEVERAL. An interest cannot be granted jointly and severally; as if a man grants the next advowson, or makes a lease for years, to two jointly and severally, those words (severally) are void, and they are joint-tenants. A power or authority may be joint and several. 5 Rep. 19. Joint words of parties shall, by construction of law, be taken respectively and severally. 5 Rep. 7. b.

When it appears by the count, that the several covenantees have, or are to have, several interests or estates, there when the covenant is made with the covenantees, and each of them, these words make the covenant several, in respect of their several interests. 5 Rep. 19. And see Jenk. 262, 263. pl. 63. Grant of the next avoidance to two, and each of them, to present A. to the said church, is good; for the contention is avoided by restraining both to present A. Jenk 263. pl 63 See 14 Vin. Abr. 48, 469, and this Dictionary, titles Covenant; Estate.

JOINT EXECUTORS See title Executor, II. V. 3, 5.

JOINT FINES. If a whole vill is to be fined, a Joint Fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but in other cases, fines for offences are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them. 1 Rol. Rep. 33: 11 Rep. 42: Dyer 211. See title Fines for Offences.

JOINT INDICTMENTS. See title Indictment.

JOINT LIVES. A bond was made to a woman dum sola, to pay her so much yearly as long as she and the obligor should live together, &c. Afterwards the woman married, and debt being brought on this bond by husband and wife, the defendant pleaded that he and the plaintiff's wife did not live together; but it was adjudged, that the money should be paid during their Joint Lives, so long as they were living at the same time, &c. 1 Lutw. 555. Were a person in consideration of receiving profits of the wife's lands on marriage, during their Joint Lives, was to pay a sum of money yearly, in trust for the wife, though it was not paid every year during, &c. it was held, that the payment shall be intended to continue every year also during their Joint Lives. 1 Lutw. 459. Lease for years to husband and wife, if they, or any issue of their bodies should so long live, has been adjudged so long as either the husband, wife, or any of their issue should live; and not only so long as the husband and wife, &c. should jointly live. Moor 339. See titles Agreement; Covenant, &c

JOINTENANTS, As it is frequently written, or rather, as seems most consistent, simul tenentes, or qui conjunctim tenent.] They who hold lands or tenements by joint tenancy.

JOINT-TENANTS,

AN ESTATE IN JOINT TENANCY is where lands or tenements are granted to two or more persons, to hold in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, for years, or at will. In consequence of such grants an estate is called an estate in Joint-tenancy: Litt. § 277: and sometimes an estate in jointure, which word, as well as the other, signifies an union or conjunction of interest; though in common speech the term Jointure is now usually confined to that joint estate, which, by virtue of the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, is frequently vested in the husband and wife before marriage, as a full satisfaction and bar of the woman's dower. See title Jointure.

I. Of the Nature of an Estate in Joint-tenancy, and how created.

II. The Consequences and Incidents of such Estate; and of the Acts of Joint-tenants to alienate or incumber the same.

III. How it may be severed or destroyed.

I. THE CREATION of an estate in Joint-tenancy depends on the wording of the deed or devise, by which the tenant claims title; for this estate can only arise by purchase or grant, that is, by the act of the parties; and never never by the mere act of law. Now if an eſtate be given to a plurality of perſons, without adding any reſtrictive, excluſive, or explanatory words, as if an eſtate be granted to A. and B. and their heirs, this makes them immediately Joint-tenants in fee of the lands; for the law interprets the grant ſo as to make all parts of it take effect, which can only be done by creating an equal eſtate in them both. As therefore the grantor has thus united their names, the law gives them a thorough union in all other reſpects. 2 Com. 180. c. 12.

The eſſential difference between Joint-tenants and tenants in common is, that Joint-tenants have the lands by one joint title, and in one right, and tenants in common by ſeveral titles, or by one title and by ſeveral rights; this is the reaſon, ſays Lord Coke, that Joint-tenants have one joint freehold, and tenants in common have ſeveral freeholds, though this property is common to them both, viz. that their occupation is undivided, and neither of them knoweth his part in ſeveral. Co. Lit. 189. a.

The properties of a joint eſtate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold; the unity of intereſt, of title, of time, and of poſſeſſion; or in other words, Joint-tenants have one and the ſame intereſt accruing by one and the ſame conveyance, commencing at one and the ſame time, and held by one and the ſame undivided poſſeſſion.

Firſt, They muſt have one and the ſame intereſt. One Joint-tenant cannot be entitled to one period of duration or quantity of intereſt in lands, and the other to a different. One cannot be tenant for life, and the other for years; one cannot be tenant in fee, and the other in tail. 1 Inſt. 188. But if land be limited to A. and B. for their lives, this makes them Joint-tenants of the freehold; if to A. and B. and their heirs, it makes them Joint-tenants of the inheritance. Litt. § 277. If land be granted to A. and B for their lives, and to the heirs of A., here A. and B. are Joint-tenants of the freehold during their reſpective lives, and A. has the remainder of the fee in ſeveralty; or if land be given to A. and B. and the heirs of the body of A., here both have a joint eſtate for life, and A. hath a ſeveral remainder in tail. Litt. § 285.

In the creation of a Joint-tenancy in fee, particular care muſt be taken not to inſert the words, and the ſurvivor of them. For the grant of an eſtate to two and the ſurvivor of them, and the heirs of the ſurvivor, does not make them Joint-tenants in fee, but gives them an eſtate of freehold during their joint lives, with a contingent remainder in fee to the ſurvivor. Whether during their joint lives the fee continues in the grantor or remains in abeyance, and whether they can convey their eſtate, and what is the proper mode of conveyance to be uſed, are points which have been much agitated, and which perhaps are not yet quite ſettled: They were all mentioned in the caſe of Vick v. Edwards, 3 P. Wms. 372. In that caſe lands were devised to B. and C and the ſurvivor of them, and the heirs of ſuch ſurvivor, in truſt to ſell. Ld. Talbot held, that the fee was in abeyance, that the truſtees joining in a fine of the premiſes might make a title to a purchaſer by way of eſtoppel, and that the heirs joining might be of uſe, as it would ſupply the want of proving the will; but that in every other reſpect it would be void. In this caſe the word eſtoppel muſt not be underſtood in its ſtrict technical ſenſe; all that is meant by it is, that the fine operates by way of concluſion upon, or bar to the vendors, till the contingency happens upon which the fee is to ariſe, and then it paſſes to the purchaſer. This doctrine is open to objection: (ſee 1 P. Wms. 575: 2 Saund. 380); but it ſeems to be generally acquieſced in, and perhaps the liberality of ſucceeding times may think a common conveyance, by leaſe and releaſe, or bargain and ſale, ſufficient in ſuch caſes to paſs the fee, without a fine or a common recovery. 1 Inſt. 191. a. [illegible]

Secondly, Joint-tenants muſt alſo have a unity [illegible] their eſtate muſt be created by one and the ſame act, whether legal or illegal; as by one and the ſame grant, or by one and the ſame diſſeiſin. Litt. § 278. Joint-tenancy cannot ariſe by deſcent or act of law; but, as has been already ſaid, merely by purchaſe or acquiſition, by act of the party; and unleſs that act be one and the ſame, the two tenants would have different titles; and if they had different titles, one might prove good, and the other bad, which would abſolutely deſtroy the Joint-tenancy. 2 Comm.

Thirdly, There muſt alſo be an unity of time; their eſtates muſt be veſted at one and the ſame period, as well as by one and the ſame title. As in caſe of a preſent eſtate made to A. and B. or a remainder in fee to A. and B. after a particular eſtate; in either caſe A. and B. are Joint-tenants of this preſent eſtate, or this veſted remainder. But if after a leaſe for life, the remainder be limited to the heirs of A. and B; and during the continuance of the particular eſtate, A. dies, which veſts the remainder of one moiety in his heir; and then B. dies, whereby the other moiety becomes veſted in the heir of B.; now A.'s heir and B.'s heir are not Joint-tenants of this remainder, but Tenants in common; for one moiety veſted at one time, and the other at another. 1 Inſt. 188. Yet where a feoffment was made to the uſe of a man and ſuch wife as he ſhould afterwards marry, for term of their lives, and he afterwards married; in this caſe it ſeems to have been held, that the huſband and wife had a joint eſtate, though veſted at different times; becauſe the uſe of the wife's eſtate was in abeyance, and dormant till the intermarriage, and on that event had relation back, and took effect from the time of creation. Dy. 340: 1 Rep. 101.

Laſtly, In Joint tenancy there muſt be an unity of poſſeſſion. Joint tenants are ſaid to be ſeiſed per my & per tout, by the half or moiety, and by all: that is, they each of them have the entire poſſeſſion, as well of every parcel as of the whole. They have not one of them a ſeiſin of one half or moiety, and the other of the other moiety, neither can one be excluſively ſeiſed of one acre, and his companion of another; but each has an undivided moiety of the whole, and not the whole of an undivided moiety. Litt. § 288: 5 Rep. 10: Bract. l. 5. tr. 5. c. 26. And, therefore, if an eſtate in fee be given to a man and his wife, they are neither properly Joint-tenants, nor Tenants in common; for huſband and wife being conſidered as one perſon in law, they cannot take the eſtate by moieties, but both are ſeiſed of the entirety per tout & non per my; the conſequence of which is, that neither the huſband nor the wife can diſpoſe of any part without the aſſent of the other, but the whole muſt remain to the ſurvivor. Litt. § 665: 1 Inſt. 187: 4 Bro. Ab. t. Cui in vita, 8: 2 Vern. 120: 2 Lev. 39.

If a father makes a deed of bargain and sale of lands to his son, to hold to him and his heirs, &c. to the use of the father and son, and their heirs and assigns for ever, they are Joint tenants. 2 Cro. 83. And if the father devises lands to his eldest and other sons, they are Joint-tenants, and not tenants in common. Goldsb. 28: Poph. 52.

A man devised lands to his wife for life, and after her death to his three daughters, and the heirs males of their bodies, &c. The wife and the two eldest daughters died; and it was held that the surviving daughter should have the whole for life, the three sisters being Joint-tenants for life, and several tenants in tail of the inheritance. Leon. 47.

Two or more purchase land, and advance the money in equal parts, and take a conveyance to them and their heirs; this makes a Joint-tenancy with the chance of survivorship: But where the proportions of money are not equal, they are in nature of partners; and though the legal estate survives, the survivor shall be as a trustee for the others, in respect of the sums paid by each. So, if where two having purchased jointly, afterwards one lays out a considerable sum on improvements, &c. and dies, in equity it shall be a lien on the lands, and a trust for the representative of him who advanced it. 1 Eq. Ab. 291.

A rent of 10*l.* a year is granted to A. and B. to hold to one until he marry, and to the other till he is presented to such a church; it was holden they were Joint-tenants, and that if either of them die before marriage or presentment, the rent shall survive. Co. Lit. 180. If lands are given to two men, and the heirs of their bodies, the remainder to them and their heirs; they shall be Joint-tenants for life, tenants in common of the estate-tail, and Joint-tenants of the fee-simple. Ibid. 183. But where a remainder is limited to the right heirs of two persons, in this case they shall take severally, though the words be joint. 5 Rep. 8. Land is granted to a man, and such woman as shall be his wife; here is no Joint-tenancy, but the man will have the whole: Though if one make a feoffment in fee to the use of himself, and of such wife as he shall after marry, for their lives; when he takes a wife, they are Joint-tenants. Co. Lit. 188: 1 Rep. 101.

One person is in by the common law, and another by limitation of use, yet they may be Joint-tenants by virtue of a deed of grant, &c. Jenk. Cent. 330. Lands given in the premises of a deed to three, to hold to one for life, remainder to another for life, remainder to the third for life, they are not Joint-tenants, but shall take successively. Dyer 160.

In a case in the King's Bench during Lord Holt's time, the question was, how the surrender of a copyhold to the use of three sons and two daughters, equally to be divided, and their respective heirs, ought to be construed; and the following passage in 1 Inst. 190. b. was much relied upon, by two of the judges, as an authority to show, that the words equally to be divided, imply a tenancy in common. "If a verdict find that a man hath duas partes manerii, &c. in tres partes divisas, this shall not be intended to be in common; but if verdict be, in tres partes dividendas, then it seemeth that they are tenants in common by the intendment of the verdict." But Lord Holt, who was for a Joint-tenancy, observed, that no such matter appears in the case, of 21 E. 4, there cited by Lord Coke in the margin as his authority, and that he was not positive therein, but only wrote it as his conjecture. Fisher v. Wigg, 1 P. Wms. 14, &c. and Mr. Cox's notes there: Salk. 391: Com. Rep. 88, 92: 12 Mod. 296: 1 Ld. Raym. 622. In the two latter books, and in P. Wms. the case is reported very much at large; and as the arguments on each side are very elaborate, it is an authority fit to be resorted to wherever the doubt is, whether there shall be a tenancy in common or Joint-tenancy; and seems an acknowledged authority in cases of surrenders of copyholds. 1 Wilf. 341. See also Anglesey (E.) v. Ram, Dom. Proc. September 1727: Barker v. Gyles, 2 P. Wms. 280: Bro. P. C.: Hall v. Digby & al. Bro. P. C.: Hawes v. Hawes, 1 Wilf. 165: Gaskin v. Gaskin, or Denn v. Gaskin, Cowp. 660. In this last case the word equally was deemed sufficient to create a tenancy in common in a will; and Lord Mansfield declared the opinion of the two Judges, who differed from Holt, to be the better and more liberal one; and Aston J. noticed, that equally to be divided had been adjudged a tenancy in common, even in a deed. See 1 Inst. 190. b. in n; and further title Tenants in Common.

II. Upon the principles of a thorough and intimate union of interest and possession, depend many other consequences and incidents to the Joint-tenant's estate, besides those already casually noticed. If two Joint-tenants let a verbal lease of their land, reserving rent to be paid to one of them, it shall enure to both, in respect of the joint-reversion. Co. Lit. 214. If their lessee surrenders his lease to one of them, it shall also enure to both, because of the privity or relation of their estate. Ibid. 192. On the same reason, livery of seisin, made to one Joint-tenant, shall enure to both of them. Ibid. 49: and the entry, or re-entry, of one Joint-tenant is as effectual in law as if it were the act of both. Ibid. 319, 364. In all actions also relating to their joint-estate, one Joint-tenant cannot sue or be sued without joining the other. Ibid. 195. But if two or more Joint-tenants be seised of an advowson, and they present different clerks, the bishop may refuse either, because neither Joint-tenant hath a several right of patronage, but each is seised of the whole: and, if they do not both agree within six months, the right of presentation shall lapse. But the Ordinary may, if he pleases, admit a clerk presented by either, for the good of the church, that divine service may be regularly performed; which is no more than he otherwise would be entitled to do, in case their disagreement continued, so as to incur a lapse: and, if the clerk of one Joint-tenant be so admitted, this shall keep up the title of both of them, in respect of the privity and union of their estate. Co. Lit. 185. Upon the same ground it is held, that one Joint-tenant cannot have an action against another for trespass, in respect of his land, for each has an equal right to enter on any part of it. 3 Leon. 262. But one Joint-tenant is not capable by himself to do any act, which may tend to defeat or injure the estate of the other; as to let leases, or to grant copyholds. 1 Leon. 234: And, if any waste be done, which tends to the destruction of the inheritance, one Joint-tenant may have an action of waste against the other, by construction of the stat. Westm. 2. c. 22: 2 Inst. 403. So too, though at common law no action of account account lay for one Joint-tenant against another, unless he had constituted him his bailiff or receiver, 1 Inst. 200; yet now by the stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, Joint-tenants may have actions of account against each other, for receiving more than their due share of profits of the tenements held in Joint-tenancy. This action is however seldom brought; but the practice is, to apply to a court of equity to compel an account. 2 Comm. c. 12. See post. III, 2.

From the same principle also arises the remaining grand incident of joint-estates, viz. the doctrine of Survivorship; by which, when two or more persons are seised of a joint-estate of inheritance, for their own lives, or pour autre vie, or are jointly possessed of any chattel-interest, the intire tenancy, upon the decease of any of them, remains to the survivors, and at length to the last survivor; and he shall be entitled to the whole estate, whatever it be, whether an inheritance or a common freehold only, or even a less estate. Lit. § 280, 1. This is the natural and regular consequence of the union and entierty of their interest. The interest of two Joint-tenants is not only equal or similar, but also is one and the same. One has not originally a distinct moiety from the other; but, if by any subsequent act (as by alienation or forfeiture of either) the interest becomes separate and distinct, the Joint-tenancy instantly ceases. But, while it continues, each of the two Joint-tenants has a concurrent interest in the whole; and therefore, on the death of his companion, the sole interest in the whole remains to the survivor. For the interest which the survivor originally had, is clearly not divested by the death of his companion; and no other person can now claim to have a joint-estate with him, for no one can now have an interest in the whole, accruing by the same title, and taking effect at the same time with his own: neither can any one claim a separate interest in any part of the tenements; for that would be to deprive the survivor of the right which he has in all, and every part. As therefore the survivor's original interest in the whole still remains; and as no one can now be admitted, either jointly or severally, to any share with him therein; it follows, that his own interest must now be entire and several, and that he shall alone be entitled to the whole estate (whatever it be) that was created by the original grant. 2 Comm. c. 12.

This right of survivorship is called by our ancient authors the jus accrescendi, because the right, upon the death of one Joint-tenant, accumulates and encreases to the survivors. Brac. l. 4. tr. 3. c. 9. § 3; Fleta. l. 3. c. 4. And this jus accrescendi ought to be mutual; which seems to be one reason why neither the King, nor any corporation, can be a Joint-tenant with a private person. For here is no mutuality; the private person has not even the remotest chance of being seised of the entierty by benefit of survivorship; for the King and Corporation can never die. 2 Comm. c. 12. cites 1 Inst. 190: Finch L. 83: 2 Lev. 12.

But Lord Coke expresly says, "there may be Joint-tenants though there be not an equal benefit of survivorship: as if a man let lands to A. and B. during the life of A.: if B. die, A. shall have all by survivorship: but if A. die, B. shall have nothing." 1 Inst. 181. The mutuality of survivorship does not therefore appear to be the reason, why a Corporation cannot be a Joint-tenant with a private person: for two Corporations cannot be Joint-tenants together: but whenever a joint estate is granted to them, they take as tenants in common. Co. Lit. 190.—The above is Mr. Christian's observation on the preceding passage in the Commentaries.—It may however be remarked, that Blackstone merely states this as one reason, against the King or a Corporation being a Joint-tenant with a private person. In the passage cited from 1 Inst. 181. the assertion that Joint-tenancy may be without equal benefit of survivorship, and the case put by Lord Coke, do not extend to instances where no benefit of survivorship can possibly arise to either party; as must be the case between two Corporations.

If there are two Joint-tenants for life, it is said each of them hath an estate for life, and for the life of his companion; and for that reason, if one of them make a lease, it shall continue not only during the life of the lessor, but after his death during the life of his companion, as long as the original estate out of which it was derived: Though it hath been resolved, that such a Joint-tenant hath only an estate for his own life, and a possibility of surviving his companion to be entitled to his part; therefore if he grants over his estate, that possibility is gone; and if he dies, the estate of the grantee shall revert to him in reversion. 1 Roll. 441: Jones 55: 3 Salk. 204, 205.

If one Joint-tenant grants a rent charge, &c. out of his part, and dies, the survivor shall have the whole land discharged: For he hath the land by survivorship, and not by descent from his companion. Lit. 286: 1 Co. Inst. 184. And if one Joint-tenant in fee makes a lease for years, reserving a rent, and dieth; the survivor shall have the reversion, but not the rent, because he claims by title paramount. Co. Lit. 18.

Joint-tenants, as to the possession of lands in jointure, are seised by entierties of the whole, and of every part equally; (and the possession of any Joint tenant is the possession of both;) but as to the right of the land, they are seised only of moieties; therefore if one grant the whole, a moiety only passeth. 1 Bulst. 3: Cro. Eliz. 809. If there be two Joint-tenants, and each make a several lease of the whole, their several moieties only shall pass, by each lease. 1 Wils. 1. Joint-tenants cannot singly dispose of more than the part that belongs to them; where they join in a feoffment, in judgment of law each of them gives but his respective part; so it is of a gift in tail, lease for life, &c. And for a condition broken they shall only enter on a moiety of the lands. 1 Inst. 186.

Every Joint-tenant hath a right, as to his own share, to several purposes, as to give, lease, forfeit, &c. 1 Inst. 186: Lit. 287. One Joint-tenant may lease to his companion: But one Joint-tenant cannot make a feoffment, or grant to another Joint-tenant, though he may release. 1 Vent. 78: Raym. 187. By whatever means a Joint-tenant comes to the estate of his companion, by conveyance, &c. from him, it may enure by way of release. 2 Cro. 649.

Action of trespass or trover may not be brought by one Joint-tenant against his companion, because the possession of one is the possession of the other. 1 Salk. 290. One Joint-tenant may distrain for rent alone; and he may avow in his own right, and as bailiff to the others, but he cannot avow solely; and he may not bring debt alone. 5 Mod. 73, 150.

If a Joint-tenant in fee-simple is indebted to the King, and dieth; the lands cannot be extended in the hands of the survivor; who claimeth not from his companion, but but from the feoffor, &c. 1 Inst. 185. Where there are two Joint tenants, and one is indebted to the King, and dieth, the other shall hold the land discharged of the debt: But if husband and wife have a term jointly, and the husband is indebted to the King, and dieth, in such case the term shall be subject to the debt, because the husband might have disposed of the whole estate. Plowd. 321.

Judgment in action of debt, is had against one Joint-tenant for life, who, before execution, releases to his companion; adjudged that the moiety is still liable to the judgment during the life of the releasor; but, if he had died before execution, the survivor should have had the land discharged of the debts and judgment. 6 Rep. 78. Husband and wife were Joint-tenants, and action was brought against the husband alone, who made default, thereupon the wife prayed to be received; but it was not allowed, because she was not a party to the writ; but he in reversion may be received, and plead Joint-tenancy in abatement of the writ. Moor 242.

If a feme sole and A. B purchase a term for years jointly, and afterwards intermarry, the Joint-tenancy continues. Dyer 318: 2 Nels. Abr. 1035. But where there are two women Joint-tenants of a lease for years, and one taketh husband, and dies, the term shall survive; if the husband hath not aliened her part, and severed the jointure: But it is otherwise in case of goods, vested in the husband by marriage. 1 Inst. 185.

If there be two Joint-tenants, and one releaseth to the other, this passeth a fee without the word heirs, because it refers to the whole fee, which they jointly took, and are possessed of, by force of the first conveyance: but tenants in common cannot release to each other; for a release supposeth the party to have the thing in demand; but tenants in common have several distinct freeholds, which they cannot transfer, otherwise than as persons who are sole seised. Co. Lit. 9, 200. b.

III. AN ESTATE in Joint tenancy may be severed and destroyed, by destroying any of its constituent unities. 1: That of time, which respects only the original commencement of the joint estate, cannot indeed (being now past) be affected by any subsequent transactions. But, 2: The Joint-tenants' estate may be destroyed, without any alienation, by merely disuniting their possession. For Joint-tenants being seised per my et per tout, every thing that tends to narrow that interest, so that they shall not be seised throughout the whole, and throughout every part, is a severance or destruction of the jointure. And therefore, if two Joint-tenants agree to part their lands, and hold them in severalty, they are no longer Joint-tenants; for they have now no joint interest in the whole, but only a several interest respectively in the several parts. And for that reason also, the right of survivorship is by such separation destroyed. Co. Lit. 188, 193. By common law all the Joint-tenants might agree to make partition of the lands, but one of them could not compel the other so to do. Lit. § 290: for this being an estate originally created by the act and agreement of the parties, the law would not permit any one or more of them to destroy the united possession without a similar universal consent. But now by the stats. 31 Hen. 8 c. 1.; 32 Hen. 8. c. 32, Joint tenants either of inheritances or other less estates, are compellable by writ of partition to divide their lands. And the stat. 8 and 9 W. 3. c. 11, made perpetual by stat. 3 and 4 Ann. c. 18, directs the manner of proceeding upon such writs.

In this case of Partition of estates, as also in settling accounts between the parties, resort is most frequently had to a Court of Equity. For though accounts may be taken before auditors in an action of account in the courts of common law, (see this Dictionary, title Account,) yet a court of equity, by its modes of proceeding, is enabled to investigate, more effectually, long and intricate accounts in an adverse way, and to compel payment of the balance. In the case of partition, if the titles of the parties are in any degree complicated, it is extremely difficult to proceed in the courts of common law; and where the tenants in possession are seised of particular estates only, the person entitled in remainder cannot be bound by the judgment in a writ of partition. The courts of equity having thus assumed the jurisdiction in complicated cases, seem by degrees to have been considered, as having on their subjects a concurring jurisdiction with the courts of common law, in cases where no difficulty could have attended the proceeding in those courts. Mitf. Treat. 109--111.

3. The Joint-tenancy may be severed by destroying the unity of title. As if one Joint-tenant aliens and conveys his estate to a third person, here the Joint-tenancy is severed, and turned into a tenancy in common; for the grantee and remaining Joint-tenant hold by different titles; (one derived from the original, the other from the subsequent, grantor;) though till partition made the unity of possession continues. Lit. § 292, 319, 321. But a devise of one's share by will is no severance of the jointure: for no testament takes effect till after the death of the testator; and by such death the right of the survivor, which accrued at the original creation of the estate, and has therefore a priority of the other, is already vested. 1 Inst. 185: Lit. § 287: and see 3 Parr. 128, and this Dictionary, title Will. And it has been determined that articles of marriage entered into by a female infant Joint-tenant, who died before attaining her age of twenty-one years, were not in equity a severance of the Joint tenancy. May v. Hook; in Canc. 1 Inst. 246. a. in n.

4. It may be also destroyed by destroying the unity of interest. If therefore there be two Joint-tenants for life, and the inheritance is purchased by, or descends upon either, it is a severance of the jointure. Cro Eliz. 470. Though if an estate is originally limited to two for life, and after to the heirs of one of them, the freehold shall remain in jointure, without merging in the inheritance: because, being created by one and the same conveyance, they are not separate estates, (which is requisite in order to a merger,) but branches of one entire estate. 2 Rep. 60: 1 Inst. 182. If a Joint-tenant in fee makes a lease for life of his share, this defeats the jointure, for it destroys the unity both of title and interest. Lit. § 302, 3. And wherever, or by whatever means, the jointure ceases or is severed, the right of survivorship, or jus accrescendi, the same instant, ceases with it. 1 Inst. 188. Yet if one of three Joint-tenants aliens his share, the two remaining tenants still hold their parts by Joint-tenancy and survivorship. Lit. § 294. And if one of three Joint-tenants releases his share to one of his companions, though the Joint-tenancy is destroyed with regard to that part, yet the the two remaining parts are still held in jointure; for they still perserve their original constituent unities. Lit. § 304.

Whenever, therefore, by any act or event, different interests are created in the several parts of the estate, or they are held by different titles, or if merely the possession is separated, so that the tenants have no longer these four indispensable properties, a sameness of interest and undivided possession, a title vesting at one and the same time, and by one and the same act or grant; the Joint-tenancy is instantly dissolved. 2 Comm. 186. c. 12.—Of this proposition the following cases may afford some further illustration:

When a fee-simple estate is limited by a new conveyance, there one may have the fee, and another an estate for life; but when two persons are tenants for life first, and one of them gets the fee-simple, there the jointure is severed. 2 Rep. 6. If a reversion descend upon one Joint-tenant, the jointure is severed, and by operation of law they are then tenants in common. 1 Bulst. 113. And a diversity has been taken, that where the reversion comes to the freehold, the jointure is destroyed; but when the freehold comes to him in reversion, and to another, it is otherwise. Cro. Eliz. 470; 743.

Two infants are Joint-tenants, and one of them makes a feoffment of his moiety: this will be a severance of the Joint-tenancy. Bro. Jointen. 13. A Joint-tenant in fee grants a lease for life, and then dies; it severs the jointure: though if the tenant for life die before either of the Joint-tenants, then it is in statu quo prius. Co. Lit. 193. If there be two Joint-tenants in fee, and one makes a lease for life to a stranger, the freehold and reversion is severed from the jointure: but in case one such Joint-tenant leases for years, the jointure of the inheritance is not severed; and the other Joint-tenant shall have the reversion by survivorship. Lut. 729, 1173. Two Joint-tenants are of a lease for twenty-one years, and one lets his part but for three years, the jointure is severed, so that survivorship shall not take place. 1 Inst. 188, 192. In case three persons are jointly interested in a term, and one of them mortgages his third part; by this it has been held, the Joint-tenancy was severed. 1 Salk. 158. But where one Joint-tenant of lands, in order to sever the Joint-tenancy, and provide for his wife, makes a deed of gift of his moiety to her; this being made to the wife, and so void in law, cannot be made good. Preced Canc. 124.

If two Joint-tenants be of a term, and one commits felony, or is outlawed, &c. the jointure will be severed; for the King shall have the moiety by the forfeiture: and if the Joint-tenancy is of personal things, all will be forfeited. Plowd. 410.

Where there are several Joint-tenants in fee-tail, and some of them suffer a common recovery of the whole, the estate of the others is turned to a right; and contingent remainders may be destroyed, and a new estate gained thereby. Sid. 241. And if one Joint-tenant levies a fine, it severs the Joint-tenancy; but it doth not amount to an actual turning out of his companion. 1 Salk. 286. A Joint-tenant in fee makes a lease for years, of the land, to begin presently, or in futuro, and dies, it is a severance of the Joint-tenancy, and cannot be avoided by the survivor; because immediately, by force of the lease, the lessee hath a right in the same land, of all that to the lessor belongs. Lit. 286.

In general, it is advantageous for the Joint-tenants to dissolve the jointure, since thereby the right of survivorship is taken away, and each may transmit his own part to his own heirs. Sometimes, however, it is disadvantageous to dissolve the joint-estate: as if there be Joint-tenants for life, and they make partition, this dissolves the jointure; and though before they each of them had an estate in the whole for their own lives and the life of their companion, now they have an estate in the moiety only for their own lives merely; and, on the death of either, the reversioner shall enter on his moiety. 1 Jon. 55. And therefore if there be two Joint-tenants for life, and one grants away his part for the life of his companion, it is a forfeiture; for, in the first place, by the severance of the jointure, he has given himself in his own moiety only an estate for his own life; and then he grants the same land for the life of another; which grant, by a tenant for his own life merely, is a forfeiture of his estate; for it is creating an estate which may, by possibility, last longer than that which he is legally entitled to. 4 Leon. 237: 1 Inst. 252: 2 Comm. 187. c. 12.

In ancient times Joint-tenancy was favoured by the courts of law, because it was more convenient to the Lord, and more consistent with feudal principles: but those reasons have long ceased, and a Joint-tenancy is now every where regarded, as Lord Cowper says it is in equity, as an odious thing. 1 Salk. 158. See further this Dictionary, title Tenants in Common.

JOINT-TENANCY in THINGS PERSONAL.—Goods and chattels may belong to their owners in Joint-tenancy, and in common, as well as real estates. They cannot indeed be vested in coparcenery, because they do not descend from the ancestor to the heir, which is necessary to constitute coparceners; but if a horse, or other personal chattel, be giv n to two or more absolutely, they are Joint-tenants thereof; and unless the jointure be severed, the same doctrine of survivorship shall take place as in estates of lands and tenements. Lit. § 282: 1 Vern. 482. And in like manner if the jointure be severed, as by either of them selling his share, the vendee and the remaining part-owner shall be tenants in common without any jus accrescendi or survivorship. Lit. § 321. So also if 100*l.* be given by will to two or more, equally to be divided between them, this makes them tenants in common, as the same words would have done in regard to real estates. 1 Eq. Ab. 292. Residuary legatees and executors are also Joint-tenants, unless the testator uses some expression which converts their interest into a tenancy in common: and if one dies before a division or severance of the surplus, the whole that is undivided will pass to the survivor or survivors. 2 P. Wms. 347, 529: and see 3 Bro. C. R. 25: 1 Bro. C. R. 118: 3 Bro. C. R. 455. But for the encouragement of husbandry it is held, that a stock on a farm, though occupied jointly, shall always be considered as common, and not as joint property, and there shall be no survivorship therein. 1 Vern. 217. So, for the encouragement of trade, there is no survivorship of a capital or stock in trade among merchants and traders: for this would be ruinous to the family of the deceased partner; and it is a legal maxim, jus accrescendi inter mercatores, pro beneficio commercii, locum non habet. 1 Inst. 182.

JOINTURE OF LANDS. A Jointure is A Settlement of lands and tenements made to a woman in consideration of marriage; or it is A Covenant, whereby the husband, or some friend of his, assureth to the wife, lands or tenements, for term of her life: it is so called, either because it is granted ratione juncturæ in matrimonio, or for that land in frank-marriage was given jointly to husband and wife, and after to the heirs of their bodies, whereby the husband and wife were made as it were joint-tenants during the coverture. 3 Rep. 27. By some, a Jointure is defined to be A Bargain and contract of livelihood, adjoined to the contract of marriage; being a competent provision of freehold lands or tenements, &c. for the wife, to take effect after the death of the husband, if she herself is not the cause of the determination or forfeiture of it. 1 Inst. 36: 4 Rep. 2, 3. See this Dict. title Dower, IV.

It hath been often ruled in Chancery, that if lands, money, goods, &c. are devised to a woman, without saying in lieu or satisfaction of dower, &c. the wife shall have both; because a devise is to be considered as a bounty, and implies a consideration in itself; but if it be said in lieu or recompence of dower, there the wife cannot have both, but may waive which she pleases. 2 Chan. Cases, 24: 2 Vern. 365: Preced. Chan. 133. Also vide Bro. Dow. 69: 4 Rep. 4: Dyer, 220: 2 Vent. 365: 1 Eq. Ab. 218: 1 Vern. 463.

A devise by will cannot be averred to be in satisfaction of dower, unless it be so expressed in the will. 1 Inst. 36, b: 3 Rep. 1.

But though a devise cannot at law be averred to be in satisfaction of dower, if the will is silent, yet sometimes the Courts of Equity have been induced, by special circumstances, to consider such devises as a satisfaction; and it has therefore been decreed, that the wife should make her election to waive her dower and accept under the will, or to waive the will and take her dower. In Laurence v. Laurence, 1 Vern. 463, Somers C. made such a decree; because he inferred an intention to give in bar of dower, from the testator's having devised the residue of his whole estate to another. But this decree was reversed by Lord Keeper Wright; and the reversal was afterwards affirmed in the House of Lords. 2 Bro. P. C. 483. And this is said to have settled the doctrine. 1 Eq. Ab. Dower B. pl. 2.; and see acc. Pre. Ch. 133: Vin. title Devise T. c. pl. 45: 2 Atk. 427: 3 Atk. 8; 436. See also Broughton v. Errington, 7 Bro. P. C. 12.

However, notwithstanding the doctrine on which the case of Laurence v. Laurence was finally decided, and the frequent recognition of that case, devises have been since frequently deemed a satisfaction of dower, on account of very strong and special circumstances; as where allowing the wife to take a double provision would have been quite inconsistent with the dispositions of the will. On this latter principle Northington C. is said to have decided for a satisfaction of dower in Arnold v. Kempstead, July 1764: and Camden C. in Villareal v. Galway. See 1 Inst. 36, b. inn.

If a Jointure be made to a woman, during coverture, in satisfaction of dower, she may waive it after her husband's death; but if she enters and agrees thereto, she is concluded; for though a woman is not bound by any act when she is not at her own disposal, yet if she agrees to it when she is at liberty, it is her own act, and she cannot avoid it. 4 Co. 3: Also vide Co. Lit. 29. b; 36, b; 348, a; 357: 1 Bulst. 163: Moor 717. pl. 1002: Perk. 352—3: 3 Co. 27: 3 Leon. 272: Cro. Jac. 490: Dyer 351: Hob. 72: 2 Rol. Abr. 422.

All other settlements in lieu of Dower, not made according to the statute, are Jointures at common law, and no bars to claim of dower: and a Jointure was no bar of dower before this statute; as a right or title to a freehold cannot be barred, [at law,] by acceptance of a collateral satisfaction. Co. Lit. 36. A father made a settlement to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his son and his wife, for their lives, for the Jointure of the wife; this was adjudged no Jointure to bar the wife of her dower, because it might not commence immediately after the death of the husband, who might die in the life-time of the father. So, if a feoffment be made to the use of the husband for life, remainder to another for years, remainder to the wife for life for her Jointure. 2 Cro. 489. But a feoffment in fee, upon condition that the feoffee shall make another feoffment to the use of the son of the feoffor, and to his son's wife in tail, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor, which feoffment is made accordingly; is a good Jointure within the statute, and bar to the dower of the wife. Moor 28.

An estate settled in Jointure, coming from the ancestors of the wife, and not of the purchase of the husband or his ancestors, is not within the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, as to discontinuances, alienations, &c. by the wife. Where a father of the intended wife, in consideration of marriage, &c. covenanted to assure lands to the husband and wife, his (the covenantor's) daughter, and the heirs of her body, &c. this was held no Jointure, within the meaning of the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20; being an advancement of the woman by her own father. 2 Cro. 264: 2 Lill. Abr. 80. And an estate in fee-simple conveyed to a woman for her Jointure, was held not to be any Jointure within the statute; which never extended to lands granted to women in fee: but an estate in fee, conveyed to a woman for her Jointure, and in satisfaction of her dower, is a Jointure within the statute 27 H. 8. c. 10: 4 Rep. 3.

An estate for life is the usual Jointure: and an estate for life upon condition, may bar the wife if she accepts it; as a Jointure to a woman on condition to perform the husband's will, was judged good, where the wife entered and agreed to the estate. 3 Rep. 1, 2, &c. If no inheritance is reserved to the husband and his heirs, but the estate is limited to the wife for life, or in tail, the remainder to a stranger; it is not a Jointure within the stat. 11 H. 7. c. 20, though made by the husband or his ancestor. Cro. Eliz. 2. A husband covenanted to stand seised of lands, to the use of himself and his heirs, till the marriage should take effect; and afterwards to himself, his wife, and their heirs; and it was adjudged a good Jointure within this stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10; Dyer 248.

A man makes his wife a Jointure after marriage; and afterwards by will devises, that she shall have a third part of all his lands, with her Jointure; here the wife will have the third part of all as a legacy, and if she waives her Jointure, she may have a third part of the residue for dower. Dyer 62. If a master, in consideration of service done by his servant, grants lands to the servant and a woman he intends to marry, and the heirs of their bodies, creating an estate-tail; this is not a Jointure; not being a gift of the husband, or any of his ancestors, but of his master, and in consideration of service, which will not make the husband such a purchaser as the law requires. Moor 683. But as to considerations, if an estate is settled in Jointure upon a woman, in consideration of money paid, and also of a marriage to be had; the marriage shall be looked upon to be the consideration. Cro. Jac. 474. A husband, tenant in tail, remainder to his wife for life, makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and wife for life, for her Jointure; it is no bar to the wife's dower, because it may be avoided by a remitter to her first estate for life. Moor 872. If lands are conveyed to a woman before marriage, in part of her Jointure only, and after marriage, other lands are granted in full; it is said she may waive and refuse the lands conveyed to her after coverture, and retain her first Jointure-lands and dower also. 3 Rep. 1, 5 : 4 Co. 5.

Where a Jointure is made of lands, (according to the direction of the statute of 27 H. 8. 10,) before coverture, and after the husband and wife alien them by fine, she shall not have dower in any other lands of her husband; but it is otherwise where the Jointure is made after marriage, when the wife's estate is waivable, and her election of choosing comes not till the death of the husband. 1 Inst. 36.

The important question whether a Jointure on an Infant, before marriage, may be waived, was not quite settled till the case of Drury v. Drury, which was heard before Ld Northington (Hil. T. 1 Geo. 3. The points determined by Ld. Northington in that case were; first, That the stat. of 27 H. 8, which introduced Jointures, extends to adult women only, Infants not being particularly named; and therefore that, notwithstanding a Jointure on an Infant, she may waive the Jointure, and elect to take dower; secondly, That a covenant by the husband, that his heirs, executors, or administrators shall pay the wife an annuity for her life, in full for her Jointure, and in bar of dower, without expressing that it shall be charged on any particular lands, or be secured out of lands generally, is not a good equitable Jointure within the statute; thirdly, That a woman, being an Infant, cannot, by any contract previous to her marriage, bar herself of a distributive share of her husband's personalty, in case of his dying intestate.

But from this decree there was an appeal to the House of Lords; and, after hearing the Judges seriatim on the question, whether a Jointure on an infant could be waived, on which they were divided in opinion, the decree was reversed as to all the above points. See 3 Bro. P. C. 492, Buckingham (Earl) v. Drury; where it appears that, by the decree of the Lords, it was DECLARED, "that the respondent (the widow,) is bound by the agreement entered into in consideration of, and previous to, her marriage; and that the same ought to be performed and carried into execution; and that the respondent is thereby barred of her dower, and of any share of her husband's personal estate, under the statute of Distributions."

Before the above decision, the only judicial opinions, as to the effect of a Jointure on an Infant, were Sir J. Jekyll's, in Cray v. Willis, against its barring; and Ld. Hardwicke's, in Seys v. Price, and in Harvey v. Ashley, to the contrary. See Vin. tit. Dower, Q. 4. pl. 18: Barn. C. 117: 3 Atk. 607.

A man levies a fine of his land, and it is granted back again to him and his wife, for her Jointure, and to the heirs of the husband; then he and his wife levy a fine to another use; the wife, if she survive her husband, will have dower notwithstanding the fine. 1 And. 350. If the husband make a lease of lands to his friends for any number of years, in trust for his wife and children, that she shall have 100*l.* a-year out of it, or in any such manner; by this she may have the provision, which is no Jointure, and likewise her dower. By Bridgman, Ch. J. an estate is made to husband in tail, with remainder to the wife for life, and remainder to others; this is not such a Jointure, as, with her acceptance, within the statute will hinder her from dower; and though the husband die without issue, it will not help it, but the wife shall be endowed in his other land: but if the estate were made to the husband and wife for their lives, it would be otherwise. 13 Jac. 1. B. R: 2 Shep. Abr. 74.

After the death of the husband, the wife may enter into her Jointure, and is not driven to a real action, as she is to recover dower by the common law; and upon a lawful eviction of her Jointure, she shall be endowed according to the rate of her husband's land, whereof she was dowable at common law. Co. Lit. 37: Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. If she be evicted of part of her Jointure, she shall have dower pro tanto. A wife's Jointure shall not be forfeited by the treason of the husband: but feme-coverts, committing treason or felony, may forfeit their Jointures; and being convict of recusancy, they shall forfeit two parts in three of their Jointures and dower, by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. If a woman conceals her Jointure, and brings dower and recovers it, and then sets up her Jointure, she is barred of her Jointure; and by bringing writ of dower for her thirds, the wife waives the benefit of entry into lands, so as to hold them in Jointure. Cro. Eliz. 128. 137: 3 Rep. 5: Stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. sect. 13. See further, titles Baron and Feme; Dower, II. IV; Forfeiture; Marriage; &c.

JOINTRESS, or JOINTURESS, She who hath an estate settled on her by the husband, to hold during her life, if she survive him. Stat. 17 H. 8. c. 10: 1 Inst. 46. When estates settled on a wife are a jointure, if the Jointress makes any alienation of them by fine, feoffment, &c. with another husband, it is a forfeiture of the same; but if they are not a jointure by law, it is otherwise. 2 Nels. 1040. A Jointress within the statute may make a lease for forty years, &c. if she so long live; and also for life, and be no forfeiture, though she levies a fine sur cognisance de droit, &c. Cro. Jac. 688: 3 Rep. 50: 1 Lill. 81. In other cases, if she levies a fine, it is a forfeiture; and if a Jointress, within the statute 11 H. 7. c. 20, suffer a recovery covinously to bar the heir, the heir may enter presently, &c. 2 Leon. 206: 1 Plowd. 42.

JOURNEHOPPERS, Regrators of yarn, which formerly perhaps was called journ. They are mentioned in the stat. 8 H. 6. c. 5.

JOURNEYMAN, from the Fr. journée, i. e. A day, or day's work.] Was properly one who wrought with another by the day; though it is extended by statute to those also who covenant to work with others in their trades or occupation by the year. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. See tit. Labourers; Servants.

JOURNEYS ACCOUNTS, dietæ computatæ, journées accompts.] Was a term in our old law thus understood: If a writ abated by the death of the plaintiff or defendant, or for false Latin, want of form, &c. the plaintiff might have a new writ by Journeys Accounts, i. e. within as little time as he possibly could after the abatement of the first writ; and this second writ was a continuance of the cause, as if the first writ had not abated. Terms of the Law. See 6 Rep. 10: 1 Lut. 297: Cro. Jac. 590.

This learning is now of little use, it being customary to enter a judgment that the writ be quashed, and then to sue forth another.

And by stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. § 7, the death of one plaintiff or defendant where there is another surviving, shall not abate the suit. The death to be suggested on the roll. And by § 6, death of the party after interlocutory judgment shall not abate the suit. See title Abatement.

IRE AD LARGUM, To go at large, to escape, or be set at liberty. Blount.

IRELAND,

Is a distinct Kingdom from England, but subordinate to it in government.

It was only entitled the Dominion or Lordship of Ireland, stat. Hib. 14 H. 3, and the King's style was no other than Dominus Hiberniæ till the 33 H. 8, when the title of King was expresly conferred on him by an Irish statute, and which title is recognized by stat. 35 H. 8. c. 3. As Scotland and England are now one and the same kingdom, and yet differ in their municipal laws, so England and Ireland are on the other hand distinct kingdoms, and yet in general agree in their laws. The inhabitants of Ireland are for the most part descended from the English, who planted it as a kind of colony, after the conquest of it by Hen. II, and the laws of England were then received and sworn to by the Irish nation assembled at the Council of Lismore. Pryn on 4 Inst. 249.

At the time of this conquest, the Irish were governed by what they called the Brehon law, so stiled from the Irish name of judges, who were denominated Brehons. 4 Inst. 358. But King John, in the 12th year of his reign, went into Ireland, and carried over with him many able Sages of the law; and there, by his letters patent, in right of the dominion of conquest, is said to have ordained and established, that Ireland should be governed by the laws of England; (Vaugh. 294: 2 Pryn. Rec. 85: 7 Rep. 23;) which letters patent, Sir Ed. Coke apprehends to have been there confirmed in Parliament. 1 Inst. 141. But to this ordinance many of the Irish were averse to conform, and still stuck to their Brehon law; so that both H. III. and Ed. I, were obliged to renew the injunction; and at length, at a Parliament holden at Kilkenny, 40 E. III, under Lionel, Duke of Clarence, the then Lieutenant of Ireland, the Brehon law was formally abolished, it being unanimously declared to be indeed no law, but a lewd custom crept in of latter times. 1 Comm. 100.

But as Ireland was a distinct dominion, and had Parliaments of its own, though the immemorial customs or common law of England were made the rule of justice in Ireland also, yet no acts of the English Parliament after the 12 John, extended into that kingdom, unless it were specially named, or included under general words, as within any of the King's dominions See 1 Comm. 100.

The original method of passing statutes in Ireland was nearly the same as in England; the chief governor holding Parliaments at his pleasure, which enacted such laws as they thought proper. But an ill use having been made of this liberty, a set of statutes were there enacted in the 10th H. VII, (Sir Ed. Poynings being then Lord Deputy, from whence they were called Poynings' laws,) which restrained the power as well of the Deputy as the Irish Parliament; and, in time, there was nothing left to the Parliament in Ireland but a bare negative or power of rejecting, not of proposing or altering any law. With regard to Poynings' law in particular, it could not be repealed or suspended, unless the bill for that purpose, before it should be certified to England, were approved by both Houses.

But the Irish nation, being excluded from the benefit of the English statutes, were deprived of many good and profitable laws, made for the improvement of the common law; and the measure of justice in both kingdoms becoming thence no longer uniform, it was therefore enacted, by another of Poynings' laws, that all acts of Parliament before that time made in England, should be of force within the realm of Ireland. 4 Inst. 351. After this, Ireland continued to be bound by all English acts of Parliament, in which it was specially named, or included under general words. See 1 Comm. 103.

This state of dependence being disputed by the Irish nation, it was, by stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 5, expresly declared; that the Kingdom of Ireland ought to be subordinate to and dependent on the Imperial Crown of Great Britain, as being inseparably united thereto; and that the King's Majesty, with the consent of the Lords and Commons of Great Britain in Parliament, had power to make laws to bind the people of Ireland. The same statute also expresly "declared, that the Peers of Ireland had no jurisdiction to affirm or reverse any judgments or decrees whatsoever." And a writ of error, in the nature of an appeal, lay from K. B. in Ireland to K. B. in England, as the appeal from Chancery in Ireland lay immediately to the House of Lords in England.

Thus stood the matter, till the 22d year of King Geo. III, when, on some further struggles by the Irish, the the above stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 5, was simply repealed by stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 53. But as the statute of Geo. 1, was thought to be merely declaratory of the former law, the repeal of it could produce no further operation, than to render the law in some degree less clear than that statute had made it. Therefore, to produce the effect earnestly contended for by the Irish, it required another statute, which was accordingly passed, viz stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 28, by which, "The Right claimed by the people of Ireland, to be bound only by laws enacted by his Majesty and the Parliament of that kingdom, in all cases whatever, and to have all actions and suits, instituted in that kingdom, decided in his Majesty's courts there finally, and without appeal from thence, is established and ascertained FOR EVER; and at no time to be questioned or questionable: and all Writs of Error, and Appeals in the English Courts, shall be null and void."

This latter provision, as to writs of error and appeals, is in some degree a natural consequence of the former; otherwise, as has been well remarked, the privation of the benefit of the learning and impartiality of the English Judges and House of Lords might be considered as a real and substantial advantage lost, by grasping at liberty and independence, which are often, as in this instance, a mere shadow and a name. See 1 Comm. 99—104. edit. 1793; and Mr. Christian's notes thereon.

Lord Mountmorres, in his History of the Proceedings of the Irish Parliament, observes upon the statute referred to by Blackstone, that to repeal Poynings' law, it required the consent of the greater number of the Lords and Commons; which, if it meant any thing, must signify a majority not of those who happened to be present, but of the whole number summoned to Parliament; and the requisition, in that sense, was strictly complied with in 1782, when Poynings' law was repealed. Hist. 1 vol. p. 53.

The following short view of the former and of the present method of passing laws in Ireland, is extracted from the same work, p. 57.

"Before a Parliament was held, it was expedient, antecedent to 1782, that the Lord-Lieutenant and council should send over an important bill, as a reason for summoning that assembly. This always created violent disputes, and it was constantly rejected; as a money-bill, which originated in the council, was contrary to a known maxim, that the commons hold the purse of the nation; and as all grants originate from them, since in early times, they were used to consult with their constituents upon the mode, duration, and quantum of the supply.

"Propositions for laws, or heads of bills, as they are called, originated indifferently in either House. After two readings and a committal, they were sent by the council to England, and were submitted, usually by the English Privy Council, to the Attorney and Solicitor-general; and from thence they were returned to the council of Ireland, from whence they were sent to the Commons, if they originated there, (if not, to the Lords,) and after three readings they were sent up to the House of Lords, where they went through the same stages; and then the Lord-Lieutenant gave the royal assent, in the same form which is observed in Great Britain.

"In all these stages in England and Ireland, it is to be remembered that any bill was liable to be rejected, amended, or altered; but that when they had passed the great seal of England, no alteration could be made by the Irish Parliament.

"At present, it is not necessary for the council to certify a bill under the great seal of Ireland, as a reason for summoning a parliament, but it is ordered to be convoked by proclamation from the crown, as it is summoned in England.

"Touching bills, they now originate in either House, and go from one to the other, as they do in England; after which, they are deposited in the Lords' office, when the clerk of the crown takes a copy of them, and this parchment is attested to be a true copy, by the great seal of Ireland on the left side of the instrument. Thus they are sent to England by the Irish council; and if they are approved of by the King, this transmiss or copy comes back with the great seal of England on the right side, with a commission to the Lord-lieutenant to give the royal assent. All bills, except money-bills, remain in the Lords' office; but bills of supply are sent back to the House of Commons, to be presented by the speaker at the bar of the Lords for the royal assent. Hence it is manifest, that no alteration can now be made in bills, except in Parliament, as the record, or original roll, remains in the Lords' office till it obtains the royal assent.

"As to the rejection of bills, or not returning them from England, it is said there are very few instances of such a refusal by the Crown since 1782; though, doubtless, the royal negative, in both kingdoms, is as clear a privilege as any other prerogative."

Treason committed in Ireland, by an Irish Peer, is not triable in England, because he is entitled to a trial by his Peers, which cannot be in England, but Ireland. Dyer, 360.

ISSUABLE TERMS. Hilary and Trinity Terms are usually called issuable terms, from the making up of the issues therein. Though for causes tried in Middlesex and London, many issues are made up in Easter and Michaelmas terms. See title Terms; Judges.

ISSUE, Exitus, from the Fr. Issuer, i. e. Emanare.] Hath divers significations in law; sometimes it is taken for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from amerciaments and fines; sometimes for the profits of lands and tenements: but it generally signifies the point of matter, issuing out of the allegations and pleas of the plaintiff and defendant in a cause. 1 Inst. 126: 11 Rep. 10.

Issues is the term applied to the profits on land, which the sheriff is directed to take by a writ of distringas, in order to compel the appearance of a party in court, and which, by the common law, he forfeits to the King, if he does not appear. Finch. L. 352. But now, by stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50, the Issues may be sold, if the Court shall so direct, in order to defray the reasonable costs of the plaintiff. See titles Process; Attachment; Distringas; Appearance; &c.

As to Issue, in the sense of children or heirs, see titles Estate; Limitation; Executory Devise; Remainder; Will; &c.

When, in the course of pleading, the parties in a cause come to a point, which is affirmed on one side and denied on the other, they are then said to be at Issue; all their debates being at last contracted into a single point, which must be determined either in favour of the plaintiff or the defendant. 3 Comm. 313.

The Issues concerning causes are of two kinds: Upon matter of fact, and matter of law.

An Issue in fact is where the plaintiff and defendant have agreed upon a point to be tried by a jury: An Issue in law is where there is a demurrer to a declaration, plea, &c. and a joinder in demurrer, which is to be determined by the judges. 1 Inst. 71, 72. See this Dictionary, title Demurrer.

As to Issues of fact, viz. whether the fact is true or false, which are triable by the jury, they are either general or special.

General, when it is left to the jury to try whether the defendant hath done any such thing as the plaintiff lays to his charge; as when he pleads not guilty to a trespass, &c. Non assumpsit, or that he made no promise, in an action of assumpsit. Not guilty is the General Issue in all criminal cases.

Special, is when some special matter, or material point alleged by the defendant in his defence, is to be tried; as in assault and battery, where the defendant pleads that the plaintiff struck first, &c. 1 Inst. 126.

There is also a General Issue, wherein the defendant may give the special matter in evidence, for excuse or justification, by virtue of several statutes, made for avoiding prolixity of pleading; and upon the General Issue in such cases, the defendant may give any thing in evidence, which proves the plaintiff hath no cause of action. 1 Inst. 283. Matter amounting to the General Issue, and special matter of justification, have been joined in one intire plea, and held good. 3 Lev. 41. And where there is an Issue upon not guilty, and there are other Issues upon justifications, the trial of the General Issue of not guilty, is but matter of form, and the substance is upon the special matter. Cro. Jac. 599. But the General Issue is pleaded, to put the plaintiff on proof of the fact.

In real actions, causes grown to Issue are tried by a jury of twelve men of the county where the cause of action arises; and in criminal cases, Issues ought to be tried in the county where the offence was committed; but this hath admitted of some alteration by statute. 3 Inst. 80. 135: 2 Rep. 93. See titles Indictment; Trial.

The place ought not to be made part of the Issue, in a transitory action; it is not material, as it is in real and mixed actions. Trin. 24 Car. B. R. If the place is mate-material, and make a part of the Issue, there the jury cannot find the fact in another place, because, by the special pleading, the point in Issue is restrained to a certain place; but upon the General Issue pleaded, the jury may find all local things in another county, and where the substance of the Issue is found, it is good, and the finding more may be surplusage. 6 Rep. 46. If an Issue is of two matters in two counties, trial may be in one county, by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4; for that statute extends to cases where the matter in Issue arises in two counties, and the trial is by one only, as well as where the matter in Issue arises in two places in one county, and the trial is by one. 2 Lev. 121. Every Issue is to be joined in such a court that hath power to try it, otherwise the Issue is not well joined; for if the cause cannot be tried, the Issue is fruitless, and if it be tried, the trial is coram non judice. 2 Lil. Abr. 84.

Where an issue is not joined, there cannot be a good trial, nor ought judgment to be given. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1042. All Issues are to be certain and single, and joined upon the most material thing in the cause; that all the matter in question between the parties may be tried. 2 Lil. 85. An immaterial Issue joined, which will not bring the matter in question to be tried, is not helped after verdict by the statute of jeofails; but there must be a repleader: but an informal Issue is helped. 18 Car. 2. B. R.

A repleader may be awarded after verdict, for the badness and incertainty of the Issue: and a judgment may be reversed in error, being on an immaterial Issue. 2 Lutw. 1608: 2 Lev. 194. On a joint trespass by many persons, there must be only one Issue in each plea joined: and if several offences are alleged against the defendant, he ought to take all but one by protestation, and offer an Issue upon that one, and no more. Moor 80. But in action for damages, according to the loss which the plaintiff hath sustained, every part ought to be put in Issue. 1 Saund. 269. In action upon the case for service done for a time certain, the defendant ought to put in Issue all the time alleged in the declaration. Lutw. 1268. And upon a General Issue in waste, the plaintiff must shew his title. Ibid. 1547. Though when any special point is in Issue, the plaintiff is not obliged to set forth any other matter. Cro. Eliz. 320. If there are several things in a declaration, upon which an Issue may be joined, and it is joined on any of them, it is good; and an affirmative and an implied negative will make a good Issue. Style, 151. 210.

There must be in every Issue an affirmation on the one part, as that the defendant owes such a debt, &c. and a denial on the other part, as that he oweth not the debt, &c. And though the matter contradicts, yet there must be a negative and affirmative of it, to make a right Issue. 1 Ventr. 213.

An Issue may be of two affirmatives. 1 Wils. 6. A negative should be as full as the affirmative, or it is no negative to make an Issue; as if a defendant pleads a grant of four acres, and two acres only are denied, &c. 1 Rol. Rep. 86. It has been held, that Issue ought not to be joined on a traverse only, without answering in the affirmative, &c. 2 And. 6. 102. But where the matter, which is the gist or cause of the action, is found, it has been adjudged good after verdict, though there was no negative and affirmative to make the Issue; as where in debt upon bond the defendant pleads payment, and concludes to the country, without giving the plaintiff opportunity to deny the payment, if the jury in such case find the money paid, it is good after verdict. Sid. 341.

Where there are two Issues joined, one good and the other bad, if entire damages are given upon the trial on both Issues, it will be error; but if several damages are found, the plaintiff may release the damages on the bad Issue, and have judgment for the rest. 2 Lil. Abr. 87, 88. See title Damages. And it is said, judgment may be entered as to one part of the Issue; and a nolle prosequi to another part of the same Issue, where it may be divided. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R. Where two Issues are joined, and a verdict only on one of them, it is a mistrial, and the judgment may be arrested, and a venire facias de novo awarded; if error brought, the judgment must be arrested. Annaly, 246.

There may be a plea to Issue to part, and a demurrer to part; which have no dependence on each other. 1 Saund. 338. Where the declaration of the plaintiff is good, and the plea of the defendant is ill; if the plaintiff in his replication tender an Issue upon such ill plea, and a trial is had, and it is found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment. Cro. Car. 18. And generally, when a plea is bad, that the plaintiff might have demurred upon it, and he doth not, but takes Issue, and it is found for the defendant; this is aided by the statute of jeofails, and the defendant shall have judgment: so likewise where the replication is bad, and Issue is taken upon it, and found for the plaintiff, he shall have judgment. Cro. Eliz. 455: Cro. Jac. 312. But there are many cases where, if the plea or replication is bad in substance, it is not aided by the statute of jeofails. See title Amendment.

If Issue be taken on a dilatory plea, &c. and found against the defendant, final and peremptory judgment shall be given; but it is otherwise on a demurrer. Raym. 118. In such case there must be a respondeat ouster. A good Issue is offered to the defendant, he ought not to plead over; and if he plead over, the plaintiff shall have judgment. 1 Saund. 318, 338. If he does not join Issue, but demurs, it is the same.

When Issue is joined between the parties, it cannot be afterwards waived, if it be a good Issue, without consent of both parties: but where defendant pleads the General Issue, and it is not entered, he may, within four days of the term, waive that Issue, and plead specially; and when the defendant pleads in abatement, he may at any time after waive his plea of special matter, and plead the General Issue, unless there be a rule made for him to plead as he will stand by it. 3 Salk. 211.

If the plaintiff will not try the Issue after joined, in such time as he ought by the course of the court, the defendant may give him a rule to enter it: which if he does not, he shall be nonsuit, &c. 2 Lil. 84. If the tender of the Issue comes on the part of the plaintiff, the form of it is; And this he prays may be inquired by the record, or by the country; and when on the part of the defendant, And of this he puts himself upon the country; and The plaintiff doth the like, &c.

What is here stated on the subject of Issues and pleadings, is but immethodical. For more complete and useful information, see this Dictionary, titles Pleading; Practice; and the various titles of subjects on which points of pleading arise.

There are many acts of parliament, that enable the defendant to plead the General Issue, and give the special matter in evidence.

Issues on Sheriffs, Are for neglects and defaults, by amercement and fine to the King, levied out of the Issues and profits of their lands; and double or treble Issues may be laid on a Sheriff for not returning writs, &c. But they may be taken off before estreated into the Exchequer, by rule of court, on good reason shewn. 2 Lil. Abr. 89. Issues shall be levied on jurors, for non-appearance; though on reasonable excuse, proved by two witnesses, the justices may discharge the Issues. Stat. 35 Hen. 8. cap. 6. ITINERANT, Itinerans.] Travelling or taking a journey: and those were anciently called Justices Itinerant, who were sent with commission into divers counties to hear causes.

The King's courts were formerly Itinerant, being kept in the King's palace, and removing with his household. The Common Pleas is now fixed by Magna Charta; but though the court of King's Bench is constantly held in Westminster-Hall, yet there is nothing but custom to fix it there, as it is supposed to be before the King, and if actually so, must be Itinerant. See titles Judges; Justices; Common Pleas; King's Bench; &c.

JUBILEE, Annus Jubilaeus.] The most solemn time of festival at Rome, when the Pope gives his blessing and remission of sins. It was first instituted by Boniface the 8th, in the year 1300, who granted a plenary indulgence and remission of sins to all who should visit the churches of St. Peter and St. Paul at Rome in that year, and stay there fifteen days; and this he ordered to be observed once in every hundred years; which Pope Clement the 6th reduced to fifty years, anno 1350, and to be held upon the day of the circumcision of our Saviour: and Urban IV. in the year 1389, ordained it to be kept every thirty-three years, that being the age of our Saviour: after which, Pope Sixtus the 6th, reduced it to twenty-five years. In imitation of the grand Jubilee of Rome, the Monks of Christ-Church in Canterbury, every fiftieth year invited a great concourse of people to come thither, and visit the tomb of Thomas Becket. And King Edw. III. in the fiftieth year of his age, which was 1362, caused his birth-day to be observed at court, in the name of a Jubilee; giving pardons, privileges, and other civil indulgences.—Jubilaeus, signified afterwards a man one hundred years old, and likewise a possession or prescription for fifty years. Du Fresne.

JUDAISM, Judaismus] The customs, religion, or rites of the Jews: also the income heretofore accruing from the Jews to the King: and the word Judaism was formerly used for a mortgage; and sometimes taken for usury. Ex Magno Rot. Pipae, de anno 9 Ed. 2.

Judaismus is also taken for the mansion or dwelling-place of the Jews in any town. And it sometimes signifies usury. Mon. 1 tom. p. 834.

JUDGES, Judices] Chief magistrates in the law, to try civil and criminal causes, and punish offences. Of these in England, it is commonly said that there are twelve; viz. the Lord Chief Justices of the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas; the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer; the three Puisne (i. e. younger, or rather inferior) Judges of the two former courts; and the three Puisne Barons of the latter. To whom may be added, the Lord Chancellor, and the Master of the Rolls.

The Chief Justice of the King's Bench is called Capitalis Justiciarius Banci Regis, vel ad placita coram rege tenenda; he hath the title of Lord, whilst he enjoys his office, and is styled Capitalis Justiciarius, because he is chief of the rest; and for this reason he hath usually the title of Lord Chief Justice of England. This Judge was antiently created by letters patent under the great seal, but is now made by writ, in a very short form.

The antient dignity of this supreme Magistrate was very great; he had the prerogative to be Vicegerent of the kingdom, when any of our Kings went beyond sea, being chosen to this office out of the greatest of the nobility; and had the power alone, which was afterwards distributed to three other great Magistrates; that is, he had the power of the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, of the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the Master of the Court of Wards; and he commonly sat in the King's Palace, and there executed that authority which was formerly performed per comitem palatii, in determining differences which happened between the barons and other great persons of the kingdom, as well as causes criminal and civil between other men: but King Richard I. first diminished his power, by appointing two other Justices, to each whereof he assigned a distinct jurisdiction; viz. to one the North parts of England, to the other the South: and in the reign of King Edward I. they were reduced to one court, with a further abridgement of their authority, both as to the dignity of their persons and extent of their jurisdiction; for no more were chosen out of the nobility, as antiently, but out of the commons, who were men of integrity, and skilful in the laws of the land; whence, it is said, the study of the law dates its beginning. Orig. Jud.

In the time of King John, and other of our ancient Kings, it often occurs in Charters of Privilege, Quod non ponatur respondere, nisi coram nobis, vel Capitali Justitiâ nostra: and this high officer hath, at this time, a very extensive power and jurisdiction in pleas of the crown, and is particularly intrusted, not only with the prerogative of the King, but the liberty of the Subject.

The Chief Justice of the Common Pleas hath also the title of Lord, whilst he is in office, and is called Dominus Justiciarius Communium Placitorum; vel Dominus Justiciarius de Banco; who, with his assistants, did originally, and doth yet, hear and determine Common Pleas in civil causes, as distinguished from the King's Pleas, or Pleas of the Crown. Bract. lib. 3. The Chief Justices are installed or placed on the bench by the Lord Chancellor; and the other Judges by the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Chief Justices.

Besides the Lords Chief Justices, and the other Judges of the courts at Westminster, there are many other Justices commissioned by the King to execute the laws: as Justices of Assize; of the Forest; of Nisi Prius; Oyer and Terminer; Justices of the Peace; &c. See those several titles.

The Judges of the Court of K. B. are sovereign Justices of oyer and terminer, gaol-delivery, and of eyre; conservators of the peace, and sovereign coroners of the land. 4 Inst. 73: 9 Co. 118. b.

The

The salaries of the Judges in the Court of K. B. are, The Chief 5500*l*; the three puisne Judges 2400*l*; and in nearly the same proportion in the other Courts. See stats. 32 Geo. 2. c. 35: 19 Geo. 3. c. 65: 1 Geo. 3. c. 23. § 4.

In Great Britain the King is considered as the fountain of justice and general conservator of the peace of the kingdom. The original power of Judicature, by the fundamental principles of society, is lodged in the society at large: but as it would be impracticable to render complete justice to every individual by the people in their collective capacity, therefore, every nation has committed that power to certain select magistrates, who, with more ease and expedition, can hear and determine complaints; and in this kingdom, this authority has immemorially been exercised by the King or his substitutes. He, therefore, has alone the right of erecting Courts of Judicature; for though the constitution of the kingdom hath intrusted him with the whole executive power of the laws, it is impossible, as well as improper, that he should personally carry into execution this great and extensive trust: it is consequently necessary, that Courts should be erected, to assist him in executing this power; and equally necessary, that, if erected, they should be erected by his authority. And hence it is, that all jurisdictions of Courts are either mediately or immediately derived from the Crown, their proceedings run generally in the King's name, they pass under his seal, and are executed by his officers.

It is probable, and almost certain, that in very early times, before our constitution arrived at its full perfection, our Kings, in person, often heard and determined causes between party and party. But, at present, by the long and uniform usage of many ages, our Kings have delegated their whole judicial power to the Judges of their several Courts; which are the grand depositaries of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, and have gained a known and stated jurisdiction, regulated by certain and established rules, which the Crown itself cannot now alter, but by act of parliament. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 3.

In order to maintain both the dignity and independence of the Judges in the Superior Courts, it is enacted by the stat. 13 W. 3. c. 2, that their commissions shall be made (not, as formerly, durante bene placito, but) quamdiu se bene gesserint, and their salaries ascertained and established; but that it may be lawful to remove them on the address of both houses of parliament. And now by the noble improvements of that law in the statute of 1 Geo. 3. c. 23, enacted at the earnest recommendation of THE PRESENT KING (George III,) himself, from the throne, the Judges are continued in their offices during their good behaviour, notwithstanding any demise of the Crown, (which was formerly held immediately to vacate their seats); and their full salaries are absolutely secured to them during the continuance of their commissions, by which means the Judges are rendered completely independent of the King, his Ministers, and his Successors; his Majesty having been pleased to declare, that "he looked upon the independence and uprightness of the Judges, as essential to the impartial administration of justice, as one of the best securities of the rights and liberties of his Subjects, and as most conducive to the honour of the Crown." Com. Journ. 3 March, 1761. See Ld. Raym. 747: and stat. 1 Ann. st. 1. c. 8, which continued the commissions of the Judges for six months after the demise of the Crown.

In criminal proceedings, or prosecutions for offences, it would be still a higher absurdity, if the King, personally, sate in judgment; because, in regard to these, he appears in another capacity, that of prosecutor. All offences are either against the King's peace, or his crown and dignity; and are so laid in every indictment. For though in their consequences they generally seem (except in the case of treason and a very few others) to be rather offences against the kingdom than against the King, yet as the Public, which is an invisible body, has delegated all its power and rights, with regard to the execution of the laws, to one visible Magistrate, all affronts to that power, and breaches of those rights, are immediately offences against him, to whom they are so delegated by the public. He is, therefore, the proper person to prosecute for all public offences and breaches of the peace, being the person injured in the eye of the law. And hence also arises the most mild and equitable branch of the prerogative, One of the most distinguishing features in a MONARCHY, that of pardoning offences; for it is reasonable that he only who is injured should have the power of forgiving.

In this distinct and separate existence of the judicial power in a peculiar body of men, nominated indeed, but not removable at pleasure by the Crown, consists one main preservative of the public liberty; which cannot subsist long in any State, unless the administration of common justice be, in some degree, separated both from the Legislative, and also from the Executive Power. Were it joined with the Legislative, the life, liberty, and property of the Subject would be in the hands of arbitrary Judges, whose decisions would be then regulated only by their own opinions, and not by any fundamental principles of law; which, though Legislators may depart from, yet Judges are bound to observe. Were it joined with the Executive, this union might soon be an over-balance for the Legislative. For which reason, by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10, which abolished the Court of Star-chamber, effectual care is taken to remove all judicial power out of the hands of the King's privy council. See 1 Comm. 266—9. c. 7.

The personal safety of the Judges, and the respect due to them, being also of essential consequence towards the preservation of their independence and integrity, which is no less in danger from the ardor civium prava jubentium, than from the vultus instantis tyranni; many provisions have been made by law to restrain and punish affronts and injuries, to them personally, and to the Courts of Justice, over which they preside.

One species of treason under stat. 25 E. 3. c. 2, (See title Treason,) is, "If a man slay the Chancellor, Treasurer, or the King's Justices of the one Bench or the other, Justices in Eyre, or Justices of Assise, and all other Justices assigned to hear and determine, being in their places doing their offices." But this statute extends only to the actually killing of them, and not to wounding or attempting to kill them. It extends also only to the officers therein specified; and therefore the Barons of the Exchequer as such, are not within the protection of this act. 1 Hal. P. C. 231. But the Lord Keeper, or Commissioners of the Great Seal, now seem to to be within it, by virtue of the stats. 5 Eliz. c. 18: 1 W. & M. c. 21.—4 Comm. 84.

Striking in the King's superior Courts of Justice in Westminster-Hall, or at the assises, is more penal than even in the King's palace. The reason seems to be, that those Courts being anciently held in the King's palace and before the King himself, striking there included the contempt against the King's palace, and something more, viz. the disturbance of public justice. For this reason, by the ancient common law before the Conquest, striking in the King's Courts of Justice, or drawing a sword therein, was a capital felony. Ll. Inæ. c. 6: Ll. Canut. c. 56: Ll. Alured. c. 7. Our modern law retains so much of the ancient severity as only to exchange the loss of life for the loss of the offending limb. Therefore a stroke or blow in such a Court of Justice, whether blood be drawn or not, or assaulting a Judge sitting in the Court, by drawing a weapon, without any blow struck, is punishable with the loss of the right hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, and of the profits of land during life. Staundf. P. C. 38: 3 Inst. 140, 1. A rescue also of a prisoner from any of the said Courts, without striking a blow, is punished with perpetual imprisonment and forfeiture of goods, and of the profits of land during life; being looked on as an offence of the same nature with the last, but only as no blow is actually given, the amputation of the hand is excused. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. For the like reason, an affray or riot near the said Courts, but out of their actual view, is punished only with fine and imprisonment. Cro. Car. 373.

Not only such as are guilty of an actual violence, but of threatening, or reproachful words to any Judge sitting in the Courts, are guilty of a high misprision, and have been punished with large fines, imprisonment, and corporal punishment. Cro. Car. 503. And even in the inferior Courts of the King, an affray, or contemptuous behaviour, is punishable with a fine by the Judges there sitting, as by the steward in a Court-Leet, or the like. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 21.

It may not be amiss to mention that King Henry IV. when his eldest son the Prince, afterwards Henry V. was by the Lord Chief Justice committed to prison, for a great misdemeanor, thanked God that he had a son of that obedience, and a Judge of that courage and impartiality. Stowe.

As the Judges are thus guarded against influence or injury, to enable them to do justice to the people, so are they protected in the upright discharge of their duty, by being indemnified from answering for the consequence of the Judgments given by them.

The Judges of Courts of Record are freed from all prosecutions whatsoever, except in parliament, where they may be punished, for any thing done by them in such Courts as Judges; this is to support their dignity and authority, and draw veneration to their persons, and submission to their Judgments: but if a Judge will so far forget the dignity and honour of his post, as to turn solicitor in a cause which he is to judge, and privately and extra-judicially tamper with witnesses, or labour Jurors, he may be dealt with according to the same capacity to which he so basely degrades himself. 12 Rep. 24: Vaugh. 138: S. P. C. 173.

Judges are not in any way punishable for a mere error of judgment: and no action will lie against a Judge for an erroneous Judgment; or for a wrongful imprisonment, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. § 17: 1 Mod. 184.

But it is said, that where Judges are limited to the subject-matter of their jurisdiction, and they exceed the limits of their jurisdiction, action lies against them; per Powell J. 3 Lutw. 1565, cites Hard. 480.

A Judge is not answerable to the King, or the party, for mistakes or errors of his judgment, in a matter of which he has jurisdiction. 1 Salk. 397.

If an action be brought against a Judge of Record, for an act done in his judicial capacity, he may plead that he did it as Judge of Record, and that will be a sufficient justification. And so may a Judge of a Court in a foreign country, under the dominion of the Crown. Mostyn v. Fabrigas, Cowp. 172. See this Dictionary, titles Action; Courts Martial; Navy, &c.

With respect to the general conduct of the Judges, the following observations are worthy attention:

A Judge at his creation takes an oath, That he will serve the King, and indifferently administer justice to all men, without respect of persons, take no bribe, give no counsel where he is a party, nor deny right to any, though the King, or any other, by letters, or by express words, command the contrary, &c. and in default of duty, to be answerable to the King in body, land, and goods. Stat. 18 Ed. 3. st. 4. See also stat. 20 E. 3. c. 1, 2.

Judex est lex loquens, and ought to judge by law, and not by examples: by Glanvil a Judge is called justitia in abstracto, because he should be, as it were, justice itself. Co. Lit. 71: 7 Rep. 4. And all the commissions of Judges are bounded with this limitation, Facturi quod ad justitiam pertinet secundum legem & consuetudinem Angliæ.

The Judges are to give Judgment according to law, and what is alledged and proved: and they have a private knowledge, and a judicial knowledge, though they cannot judge of their own private knowledge, but may use their discretion; but where a Judge has a judicial knowledge, he may and ought to give Judgment according to it. King Henry IV. demanded of Judge Gascoigne, If he saw one in his presence kill A. B. and another person, who was not culpable, should be indicted of this, and found guilty before him, what he would do in this case; to which he answered, That he ought to respite the Judgment against him, and relate the matter to the King, in order to procure him a pardon; for there he cannot acquit him, and give Judgment according to his private knowledge, Plowd. 82.

The King in all cases doth judge by his Judges; who ought to be of counsel with prisoners: and if they are doubtful or mistaken in matter of law, a stander-by may be allowed to inform the Court, as amicus curiæ. 2 Inst. 178. Our Judges are to execute their offices in proper person, and cannot act by deputy, or transfer their power to others; as the Judges of Ecclesiastical Courts may. 1 Rol. Abr. 382: Bro. Judges, 11. Yet where there are divers Judges of a Court of Record, the act of any one of them is effectual; especially if their commissions do not expressly require more. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 1. Though what a majority rules when present, is the act of the court. If on a demurrer or special verdict, dict, the Judges are divided in opinion, two against two, the cause must be adjourned into the Exchequer Chamber. 3 Mod. 156. And a rule is to be made for this purpose, and the record certified, &c. 5 Mod. 335. In fines levied, all the Judges of C. B. ought to be particularly named: but writs of certiorari to remove records out of that Court, &c. are directed to the Chief Justice, without naming his companions. 1 H. 7. 27: Jenk. Cent. 167.

When a record is before the Judges, they ought ex officio to try it: and they are to take notice of statutes, and of the terms, &c. Jenk. Cent. 215, 298. No Judge is compellable to deliver his opinion before-hand, in relation to any question which may after come judicially before him. 3 Inst. 29. Judges of the common law, have no ordinary jurisdiction to examine witnesses at their chambers; though by consent of parties, and rule of court, they may on interrogatories; and some things done by Judges at their chambers, in order to proceedings in court, are accounted as done by the court.

A Judge shall not be generally excepted against, or challenged; or have any action brought against him, for what he does as Judge. 1 Inst. 294: 2 Inst. 422.

A Judge ought not to judge in his own cause, or in pleas where he is party. 8 Rep. 118. If a fine be levied to a Justice of Bank, he cannot take the conusance; for he cannot be his own Judge. 8 H. 6. 21: Br. Patents, pl. 15. cites S. C. per Martin. If a fine be levied by, or to a Justice in Bank, his name shall not be in the fine. 11 H. 6. 49. b. So if a Justice of Bank be sued in Bank, he cannot record it; it shall be recorded by the other Justices. So if a Justice of Bank sues there, he cannot record it, but it shall be recorded by the other Justices. Ibid. If the Chief Justice of Bank be to sue a writ there, the writ shall not be in his name, but in the name of the secondary. 8 H. 6. 19. b.

None may judge in his own cause, for it is a manifest contradiction that a man can be agent and patient in the same thing, and what Lord Coke says in Dr. Bonham's case is far from any extravagancy; for it is a very reasonable and true saying, that if an act of parliament should ordain, that the same person should be party and Judge, or, which is the same thing, Judge in his own cause, it would be a void act of parliament; per Holt, Ch. J. 12 Mod. 687: Bridgm. 11, 12.

Judgment given by a Judge, who is party in the suit with another, and so entered of record, is error, although several other Judges sit there, and give Judgment for the Judge who is party. Jenk. 90. pl. 74.

Where a Judge has an interest, neither he nor his deputy can determine a cause, or sit in Court; and if he does, a prohibition lies. Hard. 503.

Judges are punishable, however, for wilful offences against the duty of their situation; instances of which happily live only in remembrance; and as to which, the following short extracts and references may be sufficient:

Among the laws of King Edgar is this, viz. Judex, qui injustum judicium judicabit alicui, det Regi CXXs. nisi jurare audeat, quod rectius judicare nescivit. Decem Scriptores Anglicani 872. l. 3. The same among the laws of Canute, Ibid. 924. l. 2. adds, that Et dignitatem suæ legalitatis semper amittat, si non eam redimat erga Regem, sicut ei permittetur. In Danelaga Lahslitbes reus sit; si non juret, quod melius nescivit. Chronicon Johannis Bromton.

There are ancient precedents of Judges, who were fined when they transgressed the laws, though commanded by warrants from the King; and it is said, that Earl Typtoft, who was a Chancellor, was beheaded, for acting upon the King's warrant against law. Burnet's Rich. 2. pag. 38.

Bribery in Judges is punishable by loss of office, fine, and imprisonment; and by the common law, bribery of Judges in relation to a cause depending before them, has been punished as treason. 1 Leon. 295: Cro. Jac. 65: 1 Hawk. P. C. See title Bribery.—A Judge ignorantly condemns a man to death for felony, when it is not felony; for this offence, the Judge shall be fined and imprisoned, and lose his office. Jenk. Cent. 162. If a Judge who hath no jurisdiction of the cause, give judgment of death and award execution, which is executed, such Judge is guilty of felony; and also the officer who executes the sentence. H. P. C. 35: 10 Rep. 76. And if Justices of Peace, on indictment of trespass, arraign a man of felony, and judge him to death, and he is executed, it is felony in them. H. P. C. 35: Dalt. c. 98.

A Justice cannot rase a record, nor embezzle it, nor file an indictment which is not found, nor give judgment of death where the law does not give it; if he does, it is misprision, he shall lose his office, and make fine for misprision; but it is not felony. Br. Judges, pl. 33. cites 2 R. 3. 9.

JUDGMENT, Judicium, quasi, juris dictum.

The Sentence of the Law, pronounced by the Court, upon the matter contained in the record. 3 Comm. 395. c. 24.

I. Of the various Kinds of Judgments in Civil Cases.
II. Points of Practice relating thereto.
III. Of Arrest of Judgment.

I. JUDGMENTS are of four sorts. 1. Where the facts are confessed by the parties, and the law determined by the court; as in case of Judgment upon a Demurrer. 2. Where the law is admitted by the parties, and the facts disputed; as in case of Judgment upon a Verdict. 3. Where both the fact and the law arising thereon are admitted by the defendant; which is the case of Judgments by Confession or Default. Or, 4. Where the plaintiff is convinced, that fact, or law, or both, are insufficient to support his action, and therefore abandons or withdraws his prosecution; which is the case in Judgments upon a Nonsuit or retraxit. 3 Comm. 396. c. 24.

The Judgment though pronounced or awarded by the Judges, is not their determination or sentence, but the determination and sentence of the law. It is the conclusion that naturally and regularly follows from the premises of law and fact, which stand thus: Against him, who hath rode over my corn, I may recover damages by law; now A. hath rode over my corn; therefore I shall recover damages against A. If the major proposition be denied, this is a demurrer in law: if the minor, it is then an issue of fact; but if both be confessed (or determined) to be right, the conclusion or Judgment of the court cannot but follow. Which Judgment or conclusion depends not therefore on the arbitrary caprice of the Judge, but on the settled and invariable principles of justice. The Judgment, in short, is the remedy prescribed by law for the redress of injuries; and the suit or action is the vehicle or means of administering it. What that remedy may be, is, indeed, the result of deliberation and study to point out; and, therefore, the stile of the Judgment is, not that it is decreed or resolved by the court, for then the Judgment might appear to be their own; but, "It is considered," consideratum est per curiam, that the plaintiff do recover his damages, his debt, his possession, and the like; which implies, that the Judgment is none of their own, but the act of law, pronounced and declared by the Court after due deliberation and enquiry. 1 Inst. 39.

All these species of Judgments are either interlocutory or final. Interlocutory Judgments are such as are given in the middle of a cause, upon some plea, proceeding, or default, which is only intermediate, and does not finally determine or complete the suit. Of this nature are all Judgments for the plaintiff upon pleas in abatement of the suit or action; in which it is considered by the court, that the defendant do answer over, respondeat ouster; that is, put in a more substantial plea. 2 Saund. 30. It is easy to observe, that the Judgment here given is not final, but merely interlocutory; for there are afterwards farther proceedings to be had, when the defendant hath put in a better answer.

But the Interlocutory Judgments, most usually spoken of, are those incomplete Judgments, whereby the right of the plaintiff is, indeed, established, but the quantum of damages sustained by him is not ascertained; which is a matter that cannot be done without the intervention of a Jury. This can only happen where the plaintiff recovers; for when Judgment is given for the defendant, it is always complete as well as final. This sort of interlocutory Judgment happens in the first place, where the defendant suffers Judgment to go against him by default, or nihil dicit; as if he puts in no plea at all to the plaintiff's declaration: by confession, or cognovit actionem, where he acknowledges the plaintiff's demand to be just: or by non sum informatus, when the defendant's attorney declares he has no instructions to say any thing in answer to the plaintiff, or in defence of his client; which is a species of Judgment by default.

If these, or any of them, happen in actions where the specific thing sued for is recovered, as in action of debt for a sum certain, the Judgment is absolutely complete. And therefore it is very usual, in order to strengthen a creditor's security, for the debtor to execute a warrant of attorney to some attorney named by the creditor, empowering him to confess a Judgment by either of the ways just now mentioned, (by nihil dicit, cognovit actionem, or non sum informatus,) in an action of debt to be brought by the creditor against the debtor for the specific sum due; which Judgment, when confessed, is absolutely complete and binding; provided the same (as is also required in all other Judgments), be regularly docketed; that is, abstracted and entered in a book, according to the directions of stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 20, by which it is provided, that no Judgment shall affect purchasers of lands, and mortgagees, till docketed, nor have any preference against heirs, executors, &c. in the administration of estates. See post, Judgments acknowledged for Debts.

But, where damages are to be recovered, a Jury must be called in to assess them; unless the defendant, to save charges, will confess the whole damages laid in the declaration; otherwise the entry of the Judgment is, "that the plaintiff ought to recover his damages (indefinitely); but because the court know not what damages the said plaintiff hath sustained, therefore the sheriff is commanded, that by the oaths of twelve honest and lawful men, he enquire into the said damages, and return such inquisition into court." This process is called a Writ of Inquiry; in the execution of which the sheriff sits as Judge, and tries by a Jury, subject to nearly the same law and conditions as the trial by Jury at nisi prius, what damages the plaintiff hath really sustained; and when their verdict is given, which must assess some damages, the sheriff returns the inquisition, which is entered upon the roll in manner of a postea, and thereupon it is considered, that the plaintiff do recover the exact sum of the damages so assessed. In like manner, when a demurrer is determined for the plaintiff upon an action wherein damages are recovered, the Judgment is also incomplete, without the aid of a writ of inquiry.

It was said by Wilmot, C. J. that a writ of inquiry is an inquest of office to inform the conscience of the court; who, if they please, may themselves assess the damages. 3 Wils. 62. Hence, a practice is now established in the courts of K. B. and C. P. in actions where Judgment is recovered by default, upon a bill of exchange, or promissory note, to refer it to the Master or Prothonotary, to ascertain what is due for principal, interest, and costs, whose report supersedes the necessity of a writ of inquiry. 4 T. R. 275: H. Black. Rep. 541. In cases of difficulty and importance, the court will give leave to have the writ of inquiry executed before a Judge, at Sittings or Nisi prius; and then the Judge acts only as an assistant to the sheriff. The number of the Jurors sworn upon this inquest need not be confined to twelve; for when a writ of inquiry was executed at the bar of the court of K. B. in an action of scand. mag. brought by the Duke of York (afterwards James II.) against Titus Oates, who had called him a traitor; fifteen were sworn upon the Jury, and gave all the damages laid in the declaration; viz. 100,000 l. In that case, the sheriffs of Middlesex sate in court covered, at the table below the Judges. 3 St. Tr. 987.

Final Judgments are such as at once put an end to the action, by declaring, that the plaintiff has either entitled himself, or has not, to recover the remedy he sues for. In which case, if the Judgment be for the plaintiff, it is also considered, that the defendant be either amerced, for his wilful delay of justice, in not immediately obeying the King's writ, by rendering the plaintiff his due, 8 Rep. 40. 61: or be taken, capiatur, till he pays a fine to the King for the public misdemeanor, which is coupled with the private injury, in all cases of force; (8 Rep. 59: 11 Rep. 43: 5 Mod. 285;) of falshood, in denying his own deed; (F. N. B 121: 1 Inst. 131: 8 Rep. 60: 1 Roll. Ab. 219: Lill. Entr. 379: C. B. Hil. 4 Ann. Rot. 430;) or unjustly claiming property in replevin; or of contempt by disobeying the command of the King's writ, or the express prohibition of any statute, statute. 8 Rep. 60. But in case of trespass, ejectment, assault and false imprisonment, it is provided by the stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 12, that no writ of capias shall issue for this fine, nor any fine be paid; but the plaintiff shall pay 6*s.* 8*d.* to the proper officer, and be allowed it against the defendant among his other costs. And therefore, upon such Judgments in the Common Pleas, they used to enter that the fine was remitted, and now in both courts they take no notice of any fine or capias at all. Salk. 54: Carth. 390. But if Judgment be for the defendant, then, in case of fraud and deceit to the Court, or malicious or vexatious suits, the plaintiff may also be fined; 8 Rep. 59, 60. But in most cases it is only considered, that he and his pledges of prosecuting, be (nominally) amerced for his false claim, pro falso clamore suo, and that the defendant may go thereof without a day, eat inde sine die; that is, without any farther continuance or adjournment; the King's writ commanding his attendance being now fully satisfied, and his innocence publicly cleared. 3 Comm. 395—99.

II. Judgment is sometimes had with a cessat executio; and if the defendant gives a Judgment, with stay of execution, till a certain day, the plaintiff may, notwithstanding, sue forth a capias or a fieri facias into the county where the action is laid, returnable before the day, to enable him at that day to take a testatum against the defendant; though he shall not in that case sue out a capias to warrant a scire facias against the bail. Pasch. 22 Car. 2. See title Capias. If debt be brought against an executor upon the bond of the testator, and he pleads plene administravit, this is a confession of the debt; and the plaintiff may have Judgment with a cessat executio till the defendant hath assets. 4 Rep: 2 Nels. Abr. 1052.

If the plaintiff or defendant die after interlocutory Judgment, the action shall not abate. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11. See title Abatement, I. 6. c. Judgment upon a demurrer to a declaration, &c. is no bar to any other action; because it is not on the merits, and the plaintiff may afterwards make his declaration right, and then proceed. 2 Lill. 113. But other Judgments may be pleaded in bar to any other action for the same cause; and Judgment in an inferior court, may be alledged in bar to an action in a superior court. 2 Lev. 93.

Judgment final ought not to be given upon default in real actions; but a grand cape upon default before appearance, and a petit cape on default after appearance. 1 Lev. 105.

All Judgments given in any court of record, must be duly entered: the plaintiff's attorney, four days after the postea is brought into court, if the rule for Judgment is out, may enter Judgment for his client by the course of the court. 2 Lill. Abr. 95. But on a rule for Judgment, Sunday is not one of the four days, though the rule is given the last day of the term. After a rule to sign Judgment, there ought to be four days exclusive of the day on which the rule was made, before the Judgment is signed, that the party may have a reasonable time to bring writ of error: in C. B. they never give rules for signing Judgment, but stay till the quarto die post, which makes but four days inclusive. Mod. Cas. 241. A plaintiff got his Judgment signed on the very day, but it was not executed till after the sixth day, so that the defendant had time enough to bring a writ of error, or move any thing in arrest of Judgment: but the court of B. R. held the signing of the Judgment to be irregular, it being before the day allowed by the rules of the court; and though execution was taken out afterwards, Judgment was set aside. 5 Mod. 205. If a distringas is returnable within term, and the cause is tried two or three days only before the end of the term, the Judgment shall be entered that very term, though there be not four days to move in arrest of Judgment. 1 Salk. 77. But a four-day rule must be given, and the party cannot sign Judgment, till four days exclusive are elapsed, and if Sunday intervenes, that is not to be reckoned one of the four days. But if verdict be given after term, no Judgment can be given on it till the next term following; for the Judgment is the act of the Court, and the Court sits not but in term. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. See title Practice.

If verdict pass for the plaintiff, and he will not enter his Judgment, the defendant, by motion of course, may oblige him to it. 2 Lill. Abr. 97. The defendant may enforce the plaintiff to enter his Judgment to the end he may plead it to another action. Latch. 216: 1 Danv. 722: Palm. 281. So if the defendant wants to bring a writ of error.

Judgments are not only to be signed by the proper officer, but entered of record; before which they are not Judgments: and in a Judgment given to recover a sum of money, the sum must be entered in words at length; and not in figures, which may be easily altered; and a Judgment was reversed, because the time when given was in figures, and the sum recovered expressed in figures, &c. But the court may amend their Judgments of the same term, because the term is but as one day in law; though they may not do it in another term. 2 Lill. 103: 3 Lev. 430. If a Judgment be unduly obtained, the court will vacate the Judgment, and restore the party damnified; if not punish the offender: but it is against the course of the court to vacate a Judgment the last day of the term. Pasch. 1656.

A Judgment entered in C. B. shall relate to the essoin day of the term, and be a Judgment from that time: but a Judgment in B. R. shall relate only to the first day of the term. Cro. Car. 102. If a rule be given for the defendant to plead, at a certain day, and he do not plead accordingly, the plaintiff may enter Judgment against him, without moving the court; though in real actions, and criminal causes, on indictment, &c. there must be a motion in court, for a peremptory rule. 2 Lill. 116. Yet a plaintiff, after he hath signed Judgment against the defendant, may waive it if he will, and accept of a plea from the defendant. Trin. 23 Car. B. R.

If a Judgment be obtained, but the plaintiff doth not take out execution within a year and a day, the Judgment must be revived by scire facias. If any thing be entered in a Judgment, which is not mentioned in the plaintiff's declaration, the Judgment is not good. 2 Lill. 104. And where it appears upon the record, that the plaintiff hath no cause of action, he shall never have Judgment. 8 Rep. 120. In such case the Court may give Judgment for the defendant. 1 Plowd. 66.

In debt on specialty, the whole and exact sum must be demanded, or the Judgment upon it will not be good. 3 Mod. 41. If more be in the Judgment than the plaintiff demands, it is erroneous; though this may be helped by a remisit dampna for part. 2 Lill. 27. If in case, trespass, &c. a verdict is given for more damages than laid in the plaintiff's declaration, and he does not remit the surplus damages, but takes Judgment for the whole, it is an incurable error, and cannot be amended. See titles Debt; Damages.

If issue is found against one party in a suit, and not against the other, Judgment may be for the plaintiff to recover against him where the matter is found; and a nil capiat per billam be entered against the plaintiff as to the other. 1 Saund. 216. And when several damages are recovered against several defendants, the plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi as to one of the defendants, &c. and have Judgment against one only for the damages against him. 3 Mod. 101. If one entire Judgment is given against two several persons, and one of them is an infant, appearing by attorney, the whole Judgment is void; which being entire cannot be divided, except the infant be joint executor with the other party. When a Judgment is entire, it cannot be divided, to make one part of it good, and another part thereof erroneous; but if it be not an entire Judgment, it may. 2 Lill. 100. See post III. On action where damages are to be recovered, if the declaration be good in part, and insufficient in part, and the defendant demurs upon the entire declaration; the plaintiff shall have Judgment for that which is well laid, and be barred for the rest. 2 Saund. 379. And if in action of debt upon three bonds, it appears that one of them is not forfeited, &c. the plaintiff shall have Judgment for the other two. 1 Saund. 286.

There were four counts in the declaration; non assumpsit pleaded to three, and a demurrer to the fourth. After Judgment on the demurrer, the plaintiff takes out a writ of inquiry, and executes it; the demurrer being determined, the Court held the Judgment regular, and that there was no occasion for a nolle prosequi, to be entered on the roll as to the three counts, until he enter final Judgment. Stra. 532.

Where a Judgment is partly by the common law, and partly by statute, the Judgment at common law may remain, and be complete, without the other. 1 Salk. 24.

Where there are two distinct Judgments, one at common law, and the other by statute, one may be affirmed, and the other reversed, on a writ of error. Annaly 50.

Every Judgment ought to be complete and formal: one Judgment cannot determine another Judgment, and the Judges will not give a Judgment against law, although the plaintiff and defendant do agree to it. 1 Salk. 213: Cro. Eliz. 817. In actions personal, Judgment given against the plaintiff upon any plea to bar him, is peremptory. Jenk. Cent. 52. If the defendant doth not deny the debt, or other matter in suit, but endeavours to elude the action by insufficient pleading; in this case, if it be found for the plaintiff, he shall have Judgment; but not vice versa, if for the defendant, because the matter of the suit is not fully and sufficiently denied, but in some measure confessed by the insufficient plea. Ibid. 70.

Judgment may not be given for the plaintiff upon an insufficient bar, if the replication be so, and shew no title; but a Judgment shall not be set aside for mispleading a point collateral to the issue. Hob. 8, 128. See post III. In debt upon an obligation, the defendant pleaded that he delivered it on a condition to be performed by the plaintiff, which he had not done, and therefore it was not his deed; the Jury found for the defendant, that the condition was not performed, yet the plaintiff had Judgment; for the defendant's plea confesses it to be his deed, and the verdict does not disprove it, and the issue is, deed or no deed, &c. Here, therefore, the plaintiff hath his Judgment upon the defendant's confession, not upon the verdict. Jenk. Cent. 102.—A Judgment contrary to the verdict found in the cause is generally void; for it is to be warranted by the verdict. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. There may be cases where Judgment may be given for one of the parties contrary to the verdict; as where the defendant pleads such a plea as in effect acknowledges the demand, there, though there should be a verdict for the defendant, Judgment shall be for the plaintiff, or the Judge of nisi prius may refuse to try it. Annaly 250. If a verdict is imperfect, Judgment cannot be given upon it; and for the incertainty of the verdict, Judgment may be void. 2 Lill. 111: Raym. 220. Action of debt lies upon a good Judgment, as well after writ of error brought as before. Raym. 100: 2 Mod. 127. But if error is brought, and depending, the court will, on motion, stay proceedings in the new action, or rather prevent plaintiff from taking out execution, defendant confessing judgment in the last suit. See title Debt. In actions of debt on bonds, a rule may be made to stay proceedings on payment of principal, interest, and costs. Mod. Ca. 60. See stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 13. and this Dictionary, title Bond. If a Judgment is recovered jointly against three defendants, the plaintiff cannot bring action of debt upon that Judgment against one alone. 2 Leon. 220. A plaintiff shall not have a new action of debt on the same bond, &c. after Judgment had on it, as long as the Judgment is in force. 6 Rep. 2: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1056. An erroneous Judgment in Chancery is reversible in B. R. Dyer 315. And if the House of Lords reverse a Judgment of B. R. the Lords are to enter the new Judgment, and not the Court of B. R. who by the first Judgment had executed their authority. 1 Salk. 403. See this Dictionary, titles Appeal; Error.

A regular Judgment in a crown cause cannot be set aside on payment of costs. 1 Wils. 163.

Where there is a Judgment and no surprize, it shall not be set aside on an affidavit of a matter relative to the merits which might have been pleaded. Annaly 157.

Where the condition of a bond was, that the money was not to be paid till a future day, and the conusee by virtue of a warrant of attorney entered Judgment, and took out execution before the day, the Court would not set the Judgment aside, but the execution. Annaly 270.

A regular interlocutory Judgment may be set aside, so as to let in the defendant to try the merits of his case: but it must be on payment of costs, and such merits likewise must appear upon affidavit. Stra. 823, 1242: 1 Burr. 568. A writ of inquiry was set aside, and defendant let in to plead a fair plea on payment of costs. Salk. 518: 6 Mod. 191.

The stat. 8 W. 3. c. 11, orders Judgment for costs, upon demurrers, and on suing writs of error, where the former Judgment is affirmed, &c. See this Dictionary, title Costs. The statutes of jeofails extend to Judgments upon nihil dicit, confession, non sum informatus, &c. Stat. ... c. 16. For further matter, see titles, Abatement; Amendment; Execution; Issue; Practice, &c.

III. ARRESTS OF JUDGMENT arise from intrinsic causes appearing upon the face of the record. Of this kind are: First, Where the declaration varies totally from the original writ; as where the writ is in debt or detinue, and the plaintiff declares in an action on the case for an assumpsit; for, the original writ out of Chancery being the foundation and warrant of the whole proceedings in the Common Pleas, if the declaration does not pursue the nature of the writ, the Court's authority totally fails. Also, secondly, Where the verdict materially differs from the pleadings and issue thereon; as if, in an action for words, it is laid in the declaration that the defendant said, "the plaintiff is a bankrupt;" and the verdict finds specially that he said "the plaintiff will be a bankrupt." Or, thirdly, If the case laid in the declaration is not sufficient in point of law to found an action upon.

It is an invariable rule with regard to Arrests of Judgment upon matter of law, "that whatever is alledged in Arrest of Judgment must be such matter, as would have been, upon demurrer, sufficient to overturn the action or plea." As if, on an action for slander, in calling the plaintiff a Jew, the defendant denies the words, and issue is joined thereon; now, if a verdict be found for the plaintiff, that the words were actually spoken, whereby the fact is established, still the defendant may move in Arrest of Judgment, that to call a man a Jew, is not actionable; and, if the Court be of that opinion, the Judgment shall be arrested, and never entered for the plaintiff. But the rule will not hold è converso, "that every thing that may be alledged as cause of demurrer, will be good in Arrest of Judgment;" for if a declaration or plea omits to state some particular circumstance, without proving which, at the trial, it is impossible to support the action or defence, this omission shall be aided by a verdict. As if, in an action of trespass, the declaration doth not alledge, that the trespass was committed on any certain day, Carth. 389; or, if the defendant justifies, by prescribing for a right of common for his cattle, and does not plead that his cattle were levant and couchant on the land, Cro. Jac. 44; though either of these defects might be good cause to demur to the declaration or plea, yet if the adverse party omits to take advantage of such omission in due time, but takes issue, and has a verdict against him, these exceptions cannot, after verdict, be moved in Arrest of Judgment. For the verdict ascertains those facts, which before, from the inaccuracy of the pleadings, might be dubious; since the law will not suppose, that a Jury, under the inspection of a Judge, would find a verdict for the plaintiff or defendant, unless he had proved those circumstances, without which, his general allegation is defective. 1 Mod. 292.

Exceptions, therefore, that are moved in Arrest of Judgment, must be much more material and glaring, than such as will maintain a demurrer; or, in other words, many inaccuracies and omissions, which would be fatal, if early observed, are cured by a subsequent verdict; and not suffered, in the last stage of a cause, to unravel the whole proceedings. But if the thing omitted be essential to the action or defence, as if the plaintiff does not merely state his title in a defective manner, but sets forth a title that is totally defective in itself, or if to an action of debt the defendant pleads not guilty instead of nil debet, these cannot be cured by a verdict, for the plaintiff in the first case, or for the defendant in the second. 3 Comm. 393—5.

Although it appear to the Court that the defendant's title is not good, if the plaintiff, in his declaration, hath not set forth a good title for himself, the Court shall never give him Judgment. 2 Lill. 98. Though the plaintiff destroys the defendant's title, if he gives him another title by pleading, &c. the defendant shall have Judgment; for the court are to judge upon the whole record. 8 Rep. 90. But if action of trespass is brought for trespass done in lands belonging to such a house, and it appears at the trial that the plaintiff had no title to the house, the Court cannot give Judgment to turn him out of possession, because that was not judicially before them. 3 Salk. 213.

Judgments are to continue, till they shall be attaint by error. Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 23. And after verdict given in any Court of record, there shall be no stay of Judgment for want of form in a writ, count, &c. or mistaking the name of either party, sum of money, day, month, year, &c. rightly named in any writ or record preceding, &c. 18 Eliz. c. 14: 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 8. See titles Abatement; Amendment; Error.

JUDGMENTS ACKNOWLEDGED FOR DEBTS. The course for one to acknowledge a Judgment for debt, is for him that doth acknowledge it to give a warrant of attorney to some attorney of that court where the Judgment is to be acknowledged, to appear for him, to file common bail, and receive a declaration, and then plead non sum informatus, &c. or to let it pass by nihil dicit: whereupon Judgment is entered for want of a plea. 2 Lill. 105. The person to whom this warrant of attorney is given, has all the benefit of a Judgment and execution, against the debtor's person and property, without being delayed by any intermediate process, as in the course of a regular suit. It is frequently given by a person arrested, upon condition of his discharge, and that longer time shall be allowed him for the payment of the debt, or that some other indulgence shall be shewn him. But to prevent persons in this situation from being imposed upon, no warrant of attorney to confess a Judgment, given by a person arrested upon mesne process, shall be of any force, unless some attorney be present on behalf of the person in custody, who shall explain the nature of the warrant, and subscribe his name as a witness to it. Cromp. Pract. See 1 Salk. 402.

If one be seemingly discharged, with design that he should give a warrant of attorney to confess a Judgment, it is ill: but if one arrested by process of an inferior court, gives a warrant for confessing Judgment in that court, B. R. will not set it aside, though an attorney be not present. Mod. Cas. 85. By rule of B. R. Easter 15 Car. 2, No bailiff is to take from any prisoner in his custody, a warrant to acknowledge Judgment unless in the presence of an attorney. But where one has been in prison some time, and he confesses Judgment to his creditor voluntarily, that Judgment shall stand, although there be no attorney. 7 Mod. 115. See title Arrest.

If a warrant of attorney to confess a Judgment is given unconditionally, or without delay of execution,

Judg-

Judgment may be signed, and execution taken out upon the same day it is given; and thus a debtor may give one creditor a preference to another, who has obtained Judgment after a long litigation. 5 Term Rep. 235.

If one gives a warrant of attorney to confess Judgment, and dies before it is confessed, this is a countermand of the warrant. 1 Ventr. 310. Though the Courts have, on motion, allowed Judgment to be entered up. Where they may be entered after the party's death, see Annaly 158. But the rule does not hold in adversary suits. Ibid. 183. If a feme sole gives warrant of attorney to confess Judgment, and marries before it is entered, the warrant is absolutely countermanded; and Judgment shall not be entered against husband and wife. 1 Salk. 399.

A Judgment confessed upon terms, being in effect conditional, the Court will see the terms performed: but where a Judgment is acknowledged absolutely, and a subsequent agreement is made, this does not affect the Judgment, and the Court will take no notice of it. 7 Mod. 400. If a warrant be to enter Judgment as of such a term, or any time after; the attorney may enter it at any time during life: but without those words the Judgment must be entered the term expressed in the warrant: and if no term be mentioned, it may be intended the next term. 1 Mod. 1. Or it has been held it may be entered within a year after the date of it: and if Judgment upon a warrant of attorney be not entered within the year, it cannot be done without leave of the Court, on motion and affidavit made of the party's being living, and the debt not satisfied. Cromp. Pract: 2 Lill. Abr. 118: 2 Show. 253.

It is dangerous to take a Judgment acknowledged in the vacation, as of the preceding term; and if any such Judgment be taken, the warrant of attorney to confess the same must bear date before, or in the term whereof it is confessed: but the safest way is to make it a Judgment of the subsequent term. 2 Lill. 103.

By Holt, Chief Justice, If one will enter a Judgment as of a precedent term, he must actually enter it before the essoin day of the succeeding term: and if Judgment be signed in Hilary term, and in the subsequent vacation the defendant sells lands, if before the essoin of Easter term, the plaintiff enters his Judgment, it shall affect the lands in the hands of the purchaser; (but see stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3;) and if one enters Judgment so in vacation, when the party is dead, the Judgment shall be good by relation, if he was living in the precedent term. 1 Salk. 401. As to complaints for delay of entering Judgments, the same shall be examined into by commissioners and ordered to be entered, &c. See stat. 14 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 5.

Judgments, as against purchasers, shall only relate to the day of signing. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. sect. 15. See title Execution. If any person having acknowledged or suffered a Judgment as a security for money, afterwards on borrowing other money of another, mortgage his lands, &c. without giving notice of such Judgment, unless he pay it off in six months, he shall forfeit his equity of redemption, &c. Stat. 4 W. & M. c. 16. See title Mortgage. To search for Judgments a fee is paid of 4*d.* a term.

On Judgments, a release of errors is usually entered into at the time of the warrant of attorney given, or Judgment had. And in case of several Judgments, if two are given in one term, and the last is first executed, that creditor hath the best title. Latch. 53. When a Judgment is satisfied, it is to be acknowledged on record by attorney, &c. Acknowledging a Judgment in the name of another, who is not privy or consenting to the same, is felony, by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 26.

JUDGMENTS IN CRIMINAL CASES. When, upon a capital charge, the Jury have brought in their verdict, Guilty, in the presence of the prisoner; he is either immediately, or at a convenient time soon after, asked by the court, if he has any thing to offer why Judgment should not be awarded against him. And in case the defendant be found guilty of a misdemeanor, (the trial of which may, and does usually, happen in his absence, after he has once appeared,) a capias is awarded and issued, to bring him in to receive his Judgment; and if he absconds, he may be prosecuted even to outlawry. But whenever he appears in person, upon either a capital or inferior conviction, he may, at this period, as well as at his arraignment, offer any exceptions to the indictment, in arrest or stay of Judgment; as for want of sufficient certainty in setting forth either the person, the time, the place, or the offence. And, if the objections be valid, the whole proceedings shall be set aside; but the party may be indicted again. 4 Rep. 45. And we may take notice, 1. That none of the statutes of jeofails, for amendment of errors, extend to indictments or proceedings in criminal cases; and therefore a defective indictment is not aided by a verdict, as defective pleadings in civil cases are. 2. That in favour of life, great strictness has at all times been observed, in every point of an indictment. Sir Matthew Hale, indeed, complains, "that this strictness is grown to be a blemish and inconvenience in the law, and the administration thereof: for that more offenders escape by the over-easy ear given to exceptions in indictments, than by their own innocence." And yet no man was more tender of life than this truly excellent Judge. See 2 Hal. P. C. 193.

A pardon also may be pleaded in arrest of Judgment: and it has the same advantage when pleaded here, as when pleaded upon arraignment; viz. the saving the attainder, and of course the corruption of blood, which nothing can restore but parliament, when a pardon is not pleaded till after sentence. And certainly, upon all accounts, when a man hath obtained a pardon, he is in the right to plead it as soon as possible. See title Pardon.

Praying the benefit of clergy may also be ranked among the motions in arrest of Judgment. See title Clergy, Benefit of.

If all these resources fail, the Court must pronounce that Judgment which the law hath annexed to the crime, for which reference may be made to the titles of the several offences, in this Dictionary. Of these some are capital, which extend to the life of the offender, and consist generally of being hanged by the neck till dead; though in very atrocious crimes other circumstances of terror, pain, or disgrace are superadded; as, in treasons of all kinds, being drawn or dragged to the place of execution; in high treason affecting the King's person or government, embowelling alive, beheading, and quartering; and in murder, a public dissection. And, in case of any treason committed by a female, the Judgment ment at common law was to be burned alive. But now, by stat. 30 Geo. 3. c. 48, it is enacted, "that in all cases of conviction of any woman for high or petit treason, the Judgment shall be, that she shall be drawn and hanged, and not burned; and if any woman is convicted of petit treason, she shall be liable to such farther Judgment as is directed by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 37, to be given upon persons convicted of wilful murder. Indeed the humanity of the English nation has ever authorised by a tacit consent, an almost general mitigation of such part of these Judgments as savours of torture or cruelty: a sledge or hurdle being usually allowed to such traitors as are condemned to be drawn; and there being very few instances (and those accidental, or by negligence) of any persons being embowelled or burned, till previously deprived of sensation by strangling.—Some punishments consist in exile or banishment, by abjuration of the realm or transportation; others, in loss of liberty, by perpetual or temporary imprisonment. Some extend to confiscation, by forfeiture of lands, or moveables, or both, or of the profits of lands for life; others induce a disability of holding offices or employments, being heirs, executors, and the like. Some, though rarely, occasion a mutilation or dismembering, by cutting off the hand or ears; others fix a lasting stigma on the offender, by slitting the nostrils, or branding in the hand or cheek. Some are merely pecuniary, by stated or discretionary fines; and, lastly, there are others that consist principally in their ignominy, though most of them are mixed with some degree of corporal pain; and these are inflicted chiefly for such crimes as either arise from indigence, or render even opulence disgraceful; such as whipping, hard labour in the House of Correction, or otherwise, the pillory, the stocks, and the ducking-stool. Disgusting as this catalogue may seem, it will afford pleasure to an English reader, and do honor to the English law, to compare it with that shocking apparatus of death and torment, to be met with in the criminal codes of almost every other nation in Europe. And it is, moreover, one of the glories of our English law, that the species, though not always the quantity or degree, of punishment is ascertained for every offence; and that it is not left in the breast of any Judge, nor even of a Jury, to alter that Judgment, which the law has before-hand ordained, for every Subject alike, without respect of persons. For, if Judgments were to be the private opinions of the Judge, men would then be slaves to their magistrates, and would live in society, without knowing exactly the conditions and obligations which it lays them under. And besides, as this prevents oppression on the one hand, so on the other it stifles all hopes of impunity or mitigation, with which an offender might flatter himself, if his punishment depended on the humour or discretion of the court. Whereas, where an established penalty is annexed to crimes, the criminals may read their certain consequence in that law, which ought to be the unvaried rule, as it is the inflexible judge, of his actions. 4 Comm. 375, &c.

The discretionary fines and discretionary length of imprisonment, which our Courts are enabled to impose, may seem an exception to this rule. But the general nature of the punishment, viz. by fine or imprisonment, is, in these cases, fixed and determinate; though the duration and quantity of each must frequently vary, from the aggravations or otherwise of the offence, the quality and condition of the parties, and from innumerable other circumstances. The quantum, in particular, of pecuniary fines, neither can, nor ought to be, ascertained by any invariable law. The value of money itself changes from a thousand causes; and, at all events, what is ruin to one man's fortune, may be matter of indifference to another's. Our statute law has not, therefore, often ascertained the quantity of fines, nor the common law ever: it directing such an offence to be punished by fine in general, without specifying the certain sum; which is fully sufficient, when we consider, that however unlimited the power of the Court may seem, it is far from being wholly arbitrary; but its discretion is regulated by law. 4 Comm. 378. See this Dictionary, title Fines for Offences.

No man can be attainted of treason or felony, but on Judgment by express sentence, or by outlawry, or abjuration. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 48. § 25. And a person shall not have two Judgments for one offence; for in outlawry, which is a Judgment, execution shall be awarded against the offender, but no sentence pronounced. Finch. 389, 467. But one convicted of a scandalous libel, had Judgment to pay a fine, and to go to all the courts in Westminster Hall with a paper in his hat signifying his crime; and on his behaving impudently, his punishment was encreased. 1 Salk. 401. No Judgment or punishment can be inflicted unknown to our laws; but only by act of parliament. Dalis. 20. And the law makes no distinction, in fixed and stated Judgments, between a peer and a commoner; or between a common and ordinary case and one extraordinary. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 48. § 2.

Judgment cannot be given for a corporal punishment, in the absence of the party. 1 Salk. 400. Though persons may have Judgment to be fined in their absence, having a clerk in court to undertake for the fine. 1 Salk. 56.

JUDICIAL Decisions, Opinions, or Determinations, are the sentiments of the Judges delivered in a cause in Court before them, and which form the decree or judgment of the Court. See Hale's Hist. Com. Law 68, 69, cites Plowden 122 to 130, 140, &c.

An extra-judicial opinion, given in or out of Court, is no more than the prolatum or saying of him who gives it, nor can be taken for his opinion, unless every thing spoken at pleasure must pass as the speaker's opinion. Vaugh. 382.

So an opinion given in Court, if not necessary to the judgment given of record, but that it might have been as well given, if no such, or a contrary, opinion had been broached, is no Judicial opinion; nor more than a gratis dictum.

dictum. But an opinion, though erroneous, concluding to the judgment, is a Judicial opinion, because delivered under the sanction of the Judge's oath upon deliberation, which assures that it is or was, when delivered, the opinion of the deliverer. Vaugh. 382. See title Judges.

JUDICIAL WRITS. The Capias, and all other subsequent to the original writ, not issuing out of Chancery, but from the Court into which the original was returnable, and being grounded on what has passed in that Court in consequence of the sheriff's return, are called Judicial, not original writs; they issue under the private seal of that Court, and not under the Great Seal of England; and are tested, not in the King's name, but in that of the Chief Justice only. 3 Comm. 282. JURISDICTION, jurisdictio.] An authority or power, which a man hath to do justice in causes of complaint brought before him: of which there are two kinds; the one, which a person hath by reason of his fee, and by virtue thereof doth right in all plaints, concerning the lands within his fee; the other is a Jurisdiction given by the prince to a bailiff, as divided by the Normans; and by him whom they called a bailiff, we may understand all who have commission from the King to give judgment in any cause. Custum. Normand. cap. 2. The Courts and Judges at Westminster have Jurisdiction all over England; and are not restrained to any county or place: but all other Courts are confined to their particular Jurisdictions; which if they exceed, whatever they do is erroneous. 2 *Lil. JURIS UTRUM, A writ which lies for the parson of a church, whose predecessor hath alienated the lands and tenements thereof. F. N. B. 48. When a clerk is in full possession of the benefice, the law gives him the same possessory remedies to recover his glebe, his rents, his tithes, and other ecclesiastical dues, by writ of entry, assize, ejectment, debt, or trespass, (as the case may happen,) which it furnishes to the owners of lay property. Yet he shall not have a writ of right, nor such other similar writs as are grounded upon the mere right; because he hath not in him the entire fee and right; (F. N. B. 49;) but he is entitled to a special remedy called a writ of Juris Utrum, which is sometimes stiled the Parson's writ of right; (Booth 221;) being the highest writ which he can have. F. N. B. 48. This lies for a parson or a prebendary at common law, and for a vicar by stat. 14 E. 3. st. 1. c. 17, and is in the nature of an assize, to inquire whether the tenements in question are frank-almoign belonging to the church of the demandant, or else the lay fee of the tenant. Registr. 32. And thereby the demandant may recover lands and tenements, belonging to the church, which were aliened by the predecessor, or of which he was disseissed; or which were recovered against him by verdict, confession, or default, without praying in aid of the patron and Ordinary, or on which any person has intruded since the predecessor's death. F. N. B. 48, 9. But since the restraining statute of 13 Eliz. c. 10, whereby the alienation of the predecessor, or a recovery suffered by him of the lands of the church, is declared to be absolutely void, this remedy is of very little use; unless where the parson himself has been deforced for more than twenty years. Booth. 221.

JUROR jurator.] One of those persons who are sworn on a Jury. See title Jury.

JURY; JURATA: from Lat. jurare, to swear.

A certain number of Men sworn to inquire of, and try, a matter of Fact, and declare the truth, upon such evidence as shall be delivered them in a cause: and they are sworn judges upon evidence in matter of fact.

The privilege of Trial by Jury, is of great antiquity in this kingdom; some writers will have it that Juries were in use among the Britons: but it is more probable that this trial was introduced by the Saxons: yet some say that we had our trials by Jury from the Greeks; the first trial by a Jury of twelve, being in Greece. By the laws of King Ethelred, it is apparent that Juries were in use many years before the Conquest; and they are, as it were, incorporated with our constitution, being the most valuable part of it. Wilk. Ll. Angl. Sax. 117.

The truth seems to be, that this tribunal was universally established among all the northern nations, and so interwoven in their very constitution, that the earliest accounts of the one give us also some traces of the other. Its establishment, however, and use, in this island, of what date soever it be, though for a time greatly impaired and shaken by the introduction of the Norman trial by battel, was always so highly esteemed and valued by the people, that no conquest, no change of government, could ever prevail to abolish it. In Magna Charta it is more than once insisted on as the principal bulwark of our liberties; but especially by chapter 29, that no freeman shall be hurt in either his person or property; "nisi per legale judicium parium suorum, vel per legem terræ." And it was ever esteemed, in all countries, a privilege of the highest and most beneficial nature.

Trials by Jury in civil causes are of two kinds; extraordinary, and ordinary. The extraordinary shall be only briefly hinted at. The first species of extraordinary trial by Jury is, that of the Grand Assise, which was instituted by King Henry VII. in parliament, by way of alternative offered to the choice of the tenant or defendant in a writ of right, instead of the barbarous and unchristian custom of duelling. For this purpose a writ de magnâ assisâ eligendâ is directed to the sheriff, to return four knights, who are to elect and chuse twelve others to be joined with them, in the manner mentioned by Glanville; (l. 2. c. 11, 21;) who, having probably advised the measure himself, is more than usually copious in describing it: and these all together, form the grand assise, or great Jury, which is to try the matter of right, and must now consist of sixteen Jurors. F. N. B. 4: Finch L. 412: 1 Leon. 303. It seems not, however, to be ascertained that any specific number above twelve is absolutely necessary to constitute the grand assise; but it is the usual course to swear upon it the four knights, and twelve others. Vin. Abr. title Trial X e. See the proceedings upon a writ of right before the sixteen recognitors of the grand assise in 2 Wils. 541. And further this Dictionary, title Writ of Right.

Another species of extraordinary Juries, is the Jury to try an Attaint; which is a process commenced against a former Jury, for bringing in a false verdict. It is sufficient here to observe, that this Jury is to consist of twenty-four of the best men in the county, who are called the Grand Jury in the Attaint, to distinguish them from the first or petit Jury; and these are to hear and try the goodness of the former verdict. See this Dictionary, title Attaint.

With regard to the Ordinary Trial by Jury, it may be considered, according to the following divisions; first premising, that these Juries are not only used in the circuits of the Judges, but in other Courts and matters: as if a Coroner inquire how a person killed came by his death, he doth it by Jury; and the Justices of peace in their Quarter-sessions, the Sheriff in his County Court, the Steward of a Court-Leet or Court-Baron, &c. if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it in like manner. Lamb. Eiren. 384.

I. Of the Mode of summoning, and compelling the Appearance, of Juries.

II. Of Challenging Jurors; and herein of their Qualifications.

III. Of the Verdict of a Jury in civil Cases.

IV. 1. Of Juries in criminal Cases; and 2. How far they are Judges of Law, as well as Fact.

I. When an issue is joined, between the parties in a suit, by these words, "and this the said A. prays may be inquired of by the country," or, "and of this he puts himself upon the country, and the said B. does the like," the Court awards a writ of venire facias upon the roll or record, commanding the Sheriff, "that he cause to come here, on such a day, twelve free and lawful men (liberos et legales homines) of the body of his county, by whom the truth of the matter may be better known, and who are neither of kin to the aforesaid A., nor the aforesaid B., to recognise the truth of the issue between the said parties." And such writ is accordingly issued to the Sheriff.

Thus the cause stands ready for a trial at the bar of the Court itself: for all trials were there anciently had, in actions which were there first commenced; which then never happened but in matters of weight and consequence; all trifling suits being ended in the Court-Baron, Hundred, or County Courts; and indeed all causes of great importance or difficulty are still frequently retained upon motion, to be tried at the bar in the Superior Courts. (See title Trial.) But when the usage began, to bring actions of any trifling nature in the Courts of Westminster Hall, it was found to be an intolerable burthen to compel the parties, witnesses, and Jurors to come from Westmorland perhaps, or Cornwall, to try an action of assault at Westminster. A practice, therefore, very early obtained, of continuing the cause from term to term in the Court above, provided the Justices in eyre did not previously come into the county where the cause of action arose; and if it appeared that they arrived there within that interval, then the cause was removed from the jurisdiction of the Justices at Westminster, to that of the Justices in eyre. Bract. l. 3. tr. 1. c. 11 § 8. Afterwards, when the Justices in eyre were superseded by the modern Justices of Assise, (who came twice or thrice in the year into the several counties, ad capiendas assisas, to take or try writs of assise, of mort d'ancestor, novel disseisin, nusance, and the like,) a power was superadded by stat. Westm. 2, 13 Ed. 1. c. 30, to these Justices of Assise to try common issues in trespass, and other less important suits, with directions to return them (when tried) into the Court above; where alone the judgment should be given. And as only the trial, and not the determination of the cause, was now intended to be had in the Court below, therefore the clause of nisi prius was left out of the conditional continuances before-mentioned, and was directed by the statute to be inserted in the writs of venire facias; that is, "that the Sheriff should cause the Jurors to come to Westminster, (or wherever the King's Courts should be held,) on such a day in Easter and Michaelmas terms; nisi prius, unless before that day the Justices assigned to take assises shall come into his said county." By virtue of which the Sheriff returned his Jurors to the Court of the Justices of Assise, which was sure to be held in the vacation before Easter and Michaelmas terms, and there the trial was had. See title Justices of Assise.

An inconvenience attended this provision: principally because as the Sheriff made no return of the Jury to the Court at Westminster, the parties were ignorant who they were till they came upon the trial, and therefore were not ready with their challenges or exceptions. For this reason, by stat. 42 Edw. 3. c. 11, the method of trials by nisi prius was altered; and it was enacted that no inquests (except of assise and gaol-delivery) should be taken by writ of nisi prius, till after the Sheriff had returned the names of the Jurors to the Court above. So that now in almost every civil cause the clause of nisi prius is left out of the writ of venire facias, which is the Sheriff's warrant to warn the Jury; and is inserted in another part of the proceedings: for now the course is, to make the Sheriff's venire returnable on the last return of the same term wherein issue is joined, viz. Hilary or Trinity terms; which from the making up of the issues therein, are usually called issuable terms. And he returns the names of the Jurors in a panel (a little pane, or oblong piece of parchment) annexed to the writ. This Jury is not summoned, and therefore, not appearing at the day, must unavoidably make default; for which reason, a compulsive process is now awarded against the Jurors, called in the Common Pleas, a writ of habeas corpora juratorum, and in the King's Bench, a distringas, commanding the Sheriff to have their bodies, or to distrain them by their lands and goods, that they may appear upon the day appointed. The entry, therefore, on the roll or record is, "that the Jury is respited, through the defect of the Jurors, till the first day of the next term, then to appear at Westminster; unless before that time, viz. on Wednesday the fourth of March, the Justices of our Lord the King, appointed to take assises in that county, shall have come to Oxford;" [that is, to the place assigned for holding the assises;] and thereupon the writ commands the Sheriff to have their bodies at Westminster on the said first day of next term, or before the said Justices of assise, if before that time they come to Oxford; viz. on the fourth of March aforesaid. And, as the Judges are sure to come and open the circuit commissions on the day mentioned in the writ, the Sheriff returns and summons this Jury to appear at the assises, and there the trial is had before the Justices of Assise and Nisi prius: among whom are usually two of the Judges of the Courts at Westminster, the whole kingdom being divided into six circuits for this purpose. (See titles Assise; Circuits.) Thus it may be observed, that the trial of common issues, at nisi prius, which was in its original only a collateral incident to the original business of the Justices of assise, is now, by the various revolutions of practice, become their principal civil employment; hardly any thing remaining in use of the real assises but the name.

If the Sheriff be not an indifferent person, as if he be a party in the suit, or be either related by blood or affinity to either of the parties, he is not then trusted to return the Jury; but the venire shall be directed to the Coroners, who, in this, as in many other instances, are the substitutes of the Sheriff, to execute process when he is deemed an improper person. If any exception lies to the Coroners, the venire shall be directed to two clerks of the Court, or two persons of the county named by the Court, and sworn. And these two, who are called Elisors, or electors, shall indifferently name the Jury, and their return is final; no challenge being allowed to their array. Fortesc. de Laud. Ll. c. 25: Co. Litt. 158: see 3 Comm. c. 23.

The learned Commentator here pauses to enlarge in the praise of this mode of trial, even in these its preparatory stages, as most admirably adapted for the impartial investigation of truth. He then proceeds:

When a cause is ready for trial the Jury is called and sworn. To this end the Sheriff returns his compulsive process, the writ of habeas corpora, or distringas, with the panel of Jurors annexed, to the Judge's officer in Court. The Jurors contained in the panel are either special or common Jurors.

SPECIAL JURIES were originally introduced in trials at bar, when the causes were of too great nicety for the discussion of ordinary freeholders; or where the Sheriff was suspected of partiality, though not upon such apparent cause as to warrant an exception to him; he is, in such cases, upon motion in Court, and a rule granted thereupon, to attend the prothonotary or other proper officer with his freeholder's book; and the officer is to take, indifferently, forty eight of the principal freeholders in the presence of the attornies on both sides; who are each of them to strike off twelve, and the remaining twenty-four are returned upon the panel. By stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, either party is entitled upon motion to have a Special Jury struck upon the trial of any issue as well at the assises as at bar; he paying the extraordinary expences, unless the Judge will certify (in pursuance of stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18,) that the cause required such special Jury.

By the said stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, when any Special Jury shall be ordered by rule of the said Courts in any cause arising in any city, &c. the Jury is to be taken out of lists or books of persons qualified, which shall be produced produced and brought by the Sheriffs, &c. before the proper officer, as the freeholder's book is for striking Juries in causes arising in counties. And by stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37, (which makes perpetual stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25,) the Justices of Assise for the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster, &c. upon motion in behalf of the King, or any prosecutor, or defendant, in an indictment, information, or any suit, may appoint a Jury to be struck for trial of issues in like manner as Special Juries in the Courts of law at Westminster.

Though this Special Jury is allowed as well in indictments and informations for misdemeanors as in civil actions; but there cannot be a Special Jury in cases of treason or felony, on account of the prisoner's privilege of peremptory challenge. See post IV. 21 Vin. Abr 301. If after a Special Jury has been struck, the cause goes off for default of Jurors, no new Jury can be struck, but the cause must be tried by the Jury first appointed. 5 Term Rep. 453.

The nomination of a Special Jury, is to be in the presence of the attornies on each side; but if either of them refuse to come, then the Secondary, &c. may proceed ex parte, and he shall strike twelve for the attorney who makes default. R. Trin. 8 W. 3. B. R.

It has been also adjudged, that if a rule is made for a Special Jury, and it is not expressed, that the Master of the office or Secondary shall strike forty-eight freeholders, and that each of the parties shall strike out twelve; in such case the Master may strike twenty-four, and neither of the parties strike out any. 1 Salk. 405. A Special Jury may be granted to try a cause at bar, without the consent of parties. Pasch. 10 Geo. 1. A rule may be made for a good Jury, and that a special verdict may be found, &c. Mod. Cas. in Law and Eq. 221.

A Common Jury is one returned by the Sheriff according to the directions of stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25; which appoints that the Sheriff or officer shall not return a separate panel for every separate cause, as formerly, but one and the same panel for every cause to be tried at the same assises, containing not less than forty-eight, nor more than seventy-two, Jurors: and that their names being written on tickets, shall be put into a box or glass; and when each cause is called, twelve of these persons, whose names shall be first drawn out of the box, shall be sworn upon the Jury, unless absent, challenged, or excused; or unless a previous view of the messuages, lands, or place in question, shall have been thought necessary by the Court: in which case it is provided by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16, that six or more of the Jurors returned, to be agreed on by the parties, or named by a Judge or other proper officer of the Court, shall be appointed by special writ of habeas corpora, or distringas, to have the matters in question shewn to them by two persons named in the writ; and then such of the Jury as have had the view, or so many of them as appear, shall be sworn on the inquest previous to any other Jurors. See this Dictionary, title View. These statutes are well calculated to restrain any suspicion of partiality in the Sheriff, or any tampering with the Jurors when returned.

It may be proper also to notice certain other provisions made with a view to the same desirable purposes. Panels of Juries returned to inquire for the King, may be reformed by the Judges of gaol delivery, &c. Stat. 3 Hen. 8. c. 12. Jurymen not appearing shall forfeit issues, if they have no reasonable excuse for their defaults, viz. 5*s.* on the first writ, upon the second 10*s.* and the third writ 13*s.* 4*d.* Stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 6. No Jury is to appear at Westminster for a trial, when the offence was committed thirty miles off; except the Attorney General require it. Stat. 18 Eliz. c. 5. § 2. Constables of parishes, &c. at Michaelmas quarter-sessions yearly, are to return to the Justices of peace, lists of the names and places of abode of persons qualified to serve on Juries, between the ages of twenty-one and seventy, attested upon oath, on pain of forfeiting 5*l.* And the Justices of peace shall order the Clerk of the peace to deliver a duplicate of those lists to the Sheriff, &c. And Sheriffs are to impanel no other persons, under the penalty of 20*l.* &c. Stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32: 3 Ann. c. 18.

No Sheriff, Bailiff, &c. shall return any person to serve on a Jury, unless he hath been duly summoned six days before the day of appearance; nor shall take any money or other reward to excuse the appearance of any Juryman, on pain of forfeiting 10*l.* Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24.

By the stat. 3 Geo 2. c. 25, lists of Jurors qualified are to be made from the rates of each parish, and fixed on the doors of churches, &c. twenty days before the feast of St. Michael, that public notice may be given of persons qualified omitted, or of persons inserted who are not so, &c. and the lists being set right by the Justices of peace in quarter-sessions, duplicates are to be delivered to the Sheriffs of counties, by the clerks of the peace; the names contained in which shall be entered alphabetically by the Sheriffs in a book, with their additions, and places of abode, &c. If any Sheriff shall return other persons to serve on Juries; or the clerk of the assise record any appearance, when the party did not appear, they shall be fined by the Judges, not above 10*l.* nor less than 40*s.* The like penalty for taking money to excuse persons from serving; and the Sheriffs may be fined 5*l.* for returning Jurors, who have served two years before, &c. Jurors making default in appearance shall be fined not exceeding 5*l.* nor under 40*s.* By stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 7. § 2, no person shall be returned as a Juror at Nisi prius in Middlesex, who has been returned there in the two preceding terms, or vacations. By stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, no persons shall be returned as Jurors at assises in counties who have served within two years; except in Rutlandshire, (the smallest county in England,) where the time is limited to one year; and in Yorkshire, (the largest.) where it is extended to four years The stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 19, enacts, that persons summoned on Juries in Courts of Record in London, or in any other cities, corporations, and franchises, not attending, may be fined from 40*s.* to 20*l.*

If the Sheriff return twelve Jurors only according to the writ, where he ought to have returned twenty-four according to the usage, for speeding the trial in case of challenge, death, or sickness, &c. he shall be amerced, Jenk. Cent. 172.

Either the plaintiff or defendant may use their endeavours for any Juryman to appear; but one who is not a party to the suit, may not: and an attorney was thrown over the bar, because he had given the names of several persons persons in writing to the Sheriff, whom he would have returned on the Jury, and the names of others whom he would not have returned. Moor 882. If a Juryman appear, and refuse to be sworn, or refuse to give any verdict, if he endeavours to impose upon the Court, or is guilty of any misbehaviour after departure from the bar, he may be fined, and attachment issue against him. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 15—18.

If, by means of challenges, or other cause, a sufficient number of unexceptionable Jurors doth not appear at the trial, either party may pray a tales. A tales is a supply of such men, as are summoned upon the first panel, in order to keep up the deficiency. For this purpose a writ of decem tales, octo tales, and the like, was used to be issued to the Sheriff at common law, and must be still so done at a trial at bar, if the Jurors make default. But at the Assises or Nisi prius, by virtue of stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 6, and other subsequent statutes, (14 Eliz. c. 9: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, &c.) the Judge is impowered at the prayer of either party to award a tales de circumstantibus of such persons present in Court, as are duly qualified to be joined to the other Jurors to try the cause, who are liable however to the same challenges as the principal Jurors. This is usually done till the legal number of twelve be completed. See 10 Rep. 102: Finch 414: 2 Rol. Ab. 67.

Upon a trial at bar, if the Jury do not appear full, the Court cannot grant a tales de circumstantibus, but will grant a decem tales, returnable in some convenient time the same Term, to try the cause. 2 Lill. Abr. 552. A plaintiff or defendant may have a tales de circumstantibus; and the statutes which authorise Justices of nisi prius to award a tales de circumstantibus, extend as well to capital cases as to others; but such a tales cannot be prayed for the King upon an indictment or criminal information, without a warrant from the Attorney General, or an express assignment from the Court before which the inquest is taken; though it may be awarded on an information qui tam, &c. because of the interest which the prosecutor hath in such prosecutions. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 41. § 18: 3 Salk. 339. A tales is not to be granted where the whole Jury is challenged, &c. but the whole panel, if the challenge be made good, is to be quashed, and a new Jury returned; for a tales consists but of some persons to supply the places of such of the Jurors as were wanting of the number of twelve, and is not to make a new Jury. 2 Lil. Abr. 252.

If but one Juror appears on the principal panel, the Court may order a tales under stat. 35 Hen. 8 c. 6: 10 Rep. 102. And if upon a habeas corpora, or a distringas jur. none of the Jury appear, it is said a decem tales shall be awarded: but it shall not be had upon a venire fac. Cro. Eliz. 502: Moor 528. See Dyer 245: 2 Roll. Rep. 75. At the assises, one of the principal panel appeared, and no more, and a tales was awarded, the title whereof was nomina decem talium, and under it eleven were returned; this was, notwithstanding, held good; for it is only a misprision of the clerk, and decem was struck out, and then the title was nomina talium, &c. And it was adjudged, that if, after a tales granted, the principal panel should be quashed, the tales should stand good, and more be added, &c. 4 Rep. 103: 2 Cro. 316.

Before the stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, twenty-four different Jurors were returned for the trial of each separate cause in the manner of twenty-four special Jurymen at present; hence the necessity of praying a tales, from the non-attendance of twelve unexceptionable persons in each panel, would frequently occur. And by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, it was enacted, that the tales-men should be selected from those who had been summoned on other panels. But since the practice was introduced by the said stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, of impanelling not less than forty-eight, nor more than seventy-two, for the trial of all common causes, the provisions of the statutes respecting a tales, are now confined, in a great measure, to Special Juries. If a tales in default of special Jurymen is prayed, it is supplied agreeably to stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, from the panel of common Jurymen. No tales can be prayed where all the special Jurymen are absent. A tales may be prayed as in civil actions in cases of misdemeanor tried by writ of nisi prius. 3 St. Tr. 57.

When a sufficient number of persons impanelled, or tales-men, appear, they are then separately sworn, "well and truly to try the issue joined between the parties, and a true verdict to give according to the evidence," and hence they are denominated the Jury, jurata; and Jurors, sc. juratores.

The number of the Jury thus sworn must in general be twelve; to this there are, however, a very few exceptions.

In the manor of Penryn Farrein, in Cornwall, there was a custom to try an issue with six Jurors; but this custom was adjudged no good custom, as Rolle, Chief Justice, affirmed, Mich. Term, 1652. MSS. Not. The printed books also furnish two cases against such a custom; in the first of which cases, Rolle appears to have argued for it; and to have noticed, that there was a multitude of records in twenty several Courts in Cornwall, proving its prevalency. See Fredymock v. Perryman, Cro. Car. 259: 1 Ro. Abr. 564: and Aike & al. v. Aunkin, 1 Sid. 233. In some special cases only, the Jury may be less than twelve; and in some, must or may be more.—They may be less: Thus it may be in Wales under the provision of stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. c. 26, concerning Wales, which allows of six: See the stat. § 74: Cro. Car. 259: 1 Sid. 233: and stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. § 9. So also it is in some special cases in England, as six or eight in inquiry of damages on default, and in inquiry of waste; though this latter has been questioned, and even denied. Spelm. Gloss. voc. Jurata: F. N. B. 107. (C): Dunc. Trials per Pais, c. 6: : Vent. 113: Finch L. 400. Further, there is in Glanvil, a writ for a Jury of eight to inquire into the age where infancy is alledged. Glanvil, l. 13. c. 14, 15, 16. See title Infant—.Instances, in which the law allows or requires more than twelve, are, Attaint, in which there must be twenty-four; the Grand Assise, in which there must be sixteen; the Grand Jury, for indictments, which usually consist of some number between twelve and twenty-three; a writ of inquiry of Waste, in which thirteen have been allowed. Finch L. 484: Spelm. Gloss. voc. Jurata: 2 H. H. P. C. 161: Cro. Car. 414: 1 Inst. 155, a. in n.

II. As

II. As the Jurors appear, when called, they shall be sworn, unless challenged by either party. Challenges are of two sorts, challenges to the array, and challenges to the polls.

CHALLENGES to the Array, are at once an exception to the whole panel, in which the Jury are arrayed or set in order by the Sheriff in his return; and they may be made on account of partiality, or some default in the Sheriff, or his under officer who arrayed the panel. And, generally speaking, the same reasons that before the awarding the venire were sufficient to have directed it to the coroners or elisors, will also be sufficient to quash the array, when made by a person or officer of whose partiality there is any tolerable ground of suspicion. Also, though there be no personal objection against the Sheriff, yet if he arrays the panel at the nomination, or under the direction of either party, this is good cause of challenge to the array. Formerly, if a Lord of Parliament had a cause to be tried, and no knight was returned upon the Jury, it was a cause of challenge to the array. Co. Lit. 156: Selden Baronage, II, 11. But an unexpected use having been made of this dormant privilege by a spiritual Lord, (the Bishop of Worcester, M. 23 Geo. 2. B. R.) it was abolished by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18. But still in an attaint, a knight must be returned on the Jury. Co. Lit. 156.

Also by the policy of the antient law, the Jury was to come de vicineto, from the neighbourhood of the vill or place where the cause of action was laid in the declaration, and therefore some of the Jury were obliged to be returned from the hundred in which such vill lay; and, if none were returned, the array might be challenged for defect of hundredors. For, living in the neighbourhood, they were properly the very country, or pais, to which both parties had appealed; and were supposed to know before-hand the characters of the parties and witnesses, and therefore the better knew what credit to give to the facts alleged in the evidence. But this convenience was over-balanced by another very natural and almost unavoidable inconvenience; that Jurors coming out of the immediate neighbourhood, would be apt to intermix their prejudices and partialities in the trial of right. And this our law was so sensible of, that it has for a long time been gradually relinquishing this practice; the number of necessary hundredors in the whole panel, which, in the reign of Edward III. were constantly six, being in the time of Fortescue reduced to four. Gilb. Hist. C. P. c. 8: Fortesc. de Laud. Ll. c. 25. Afterwards, indeed, stat. 35 Hen. 8. c. 6, restored the antient number of six; but that clause was soon virtually repealed by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 6, which required only two. And Sir Edward Coke also gives us such a variety of circumstances, whereby the Courts permitted this necessary number to be evaded, that it appears they were heartily tired of it. 1 Inst. 157. At length, by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, it was entirely abolished upon civil actions, except upon penal statutes; and upon those also by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18, the Jury being now only to come de corpore comitatûs from the body of the county at large, and not de vicineto, or from the particular neighbourhood.

The array, by the antient law, may also be challenged, if an alien be party to the suit, and, upon a rule obtained by his motion to the Court, for a Jury de medietate linguæ, such a one be not returned by the Sheriff, pursuant to the stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 13, enforced by stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 29; which enacts, that where either party is an alien born, the Jury shall be one half denizens, and the other aliens, (if so many be forth-coming in the place,) for the more impartial trial. A privilege indulged to strangers in no other country in the world, but which is as antient with us as the time of King Ethelred. But when both parties are aliens, no partiality is to be presumed to one more than another; and therefore it was resolved soon after the stat. 8 Hen. 6, that where the issue is joined between two aliens, (unless the plea be had before the Mayor of the Staple, and thereby subject to the restrictions of stat. 27 Edw. 3. st. 2. c. 8,) the Jury shall all be denizens. Yearb. 21 Hen. 6. 4. And it now might be a question, how far the stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, (before referred to) hath in civil causes undesignedly abridged this privilege of foreigners, by the positive directions therein given concerning the manner of impanelling Jurors, and the persons to be returned in such panel. So that, (unless this statute is to be construed by the same equity, which stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 29, declared to be the rule of interpreting stat. 2 H. 5. st. 2. c. 3, concerning the landed qualification of Jurors in suits to which aliens were parties,) a Court might perhaps hesitate, whether it has now a power to direct a panel to be returned de medietate linguæ; and thereby alter the method prescribed for striking a Special Jury, or balloting for common Jurors.

Challenges to the Polls, in capita, are exceptions to particular Jurors; by the laws of England, in the time of Bracton and Fleta, a Judge might be refused for good cause; but now the law is otherwise, and it is held, that Judges and Justices cannot be challenged. See Bract. l. 5. c. 15: Fleta, l. 6. c. 37: Co. Lit. 294.

Challenges to the Polls of the Jury (who are judges of fact) are reduced to four heads by Sir Edward Coke; propter honoris respectum; propter defectum; propter affectum; & propter delictum. 1 Inst. 156.

Propter honoris respectum, as if a Lord of Parliament be impanelled on a Jury, he may be challenged by either party, or he may challenge himself.

Propter defectum, as if a Juryman be an alien born, this is defect of birth: if he be a slave or bond-man, this is defect of liberty, and he cannot be liber et legalis homo. Under the word homo also, though a name common to both sexes, the female is however excluded, propter defectum sexûs: except when a widow feigns herself with child, in order to exclude the next heir, and a supposititious birth is suspected to be intended; then upon the writ de ventre inspiciendo, a Jury of women is to be impanelled to try the question, 'whether with child or not.' Cro. Eliz. 566. See this Dictionary, title Ventre inspiciendo.

But the principal deficiency is defect of estate, sufficient to qualify him to be a Juror. This depends upon a variety of statutes. First, by stat. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c 38, none shall pass on Juries in assises within the county, but such as may dispend twenty shillings by the year, at the least, which is increased to forty shillings by stats. 21 Ed. 1. st. 1: 2 Hen. 5. st. 2. c. 3. This was doubled by stat. 27 Eliz. c. 6, which requires, in every such case, the Jurors to have estate of freehold to the yearly value of four pounds at the least. This qualification was raised by stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. c. 3, to twenty pounds per annum; which being only a tempo-trary act, so three years, was suffered to expire without renewal, to the great debasement of Juries. However, by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24, it was again raised to ten pounds per annum in England, and six pounds in Wales, of freehold lands or copyhold; which is the first time that copyholders (as such) were admitted to serve upon Juries in any of the King's Courts; though they had before been admitted to serve in some of the Sheriff's Courts, by stats. 1 Ric. 3. c. 4: 9 Hen. 7. c. 13. All cities, boroughs, and corporate towns, are excepted out of the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. And by an antient statute, 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, trials of Felons in corporations may be by freemen worth forty pounds in goods. Lastly, by stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, any leaseholder for the term of five hundred years absolute, or for any term determinable upon life or lives, of the clear yearly value of twenty pounds per annum, over and above the rent reserved, is qualified to serve upon Juries. On account of the small number of freeholders in the county of Middlesex, and the frequent occasion for Juries at Westminster, in that county, it is enacted, by stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 7, that a leaseholder for any number of years, if the improved annual value of his lease be fifty pounds, above all ground rents and other reservations, shall be liable to serve upon Juries for that county. By stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25, persons impanelled upon any Jury within the city of London shall be householders, and possessed of some estate either real or personal of the value of one hundred pounds. When the Jury is de medietate linguæ, that is, one moiety of the English tongue or nation, and the other of any foreign one, no want of lands shall be cause of challenge to the alien; for as he is incapable to hold any, this would totally defeat the privilege. See ante, and stats. 2 Hen. 5. st. 2. c. 3: 8 Hen. 6. c. 29.

Jurors may be challenged propter affectum, for suspicion of bias or partiality. This may be either a principal challenge, or to the favour. A principal challenge is such, where the cause assigned carries with it primâ facie evident marks of suspicion, either of malice or favour: as, that a Juror is of kin to either party within the ninth degree, Finch L. 401; that he has been arbitrator on either side; that he has an interest in the cause; that there is an action depending between him and the party; that he has taken money for his verdict; that he has formerly been a Juror in the same cause; that he is the parties master, servant, counsellor, steward, or attorney, of the same society or corporation with him: all these are principal causes of challenge; which, if true, cannot be over-ruled, for Jurors must be omni exceptione majores. Challenges to the favour, are where the party hath no principal challenge; but objects only some probable circumstances of suspicion, as acquaintance and the like; the validity of which must be left to the determination of Triors, whose office it is to decide whether the Juror be favourable or unfavourable. The Triors, in case the first man called be challenged, are two indifferent persons named by the Court, and, if they try one man, and find him indifferent, he shall be sworn; and then he and the two Triors shall try the next; and, when another is found indifferent and sworn, the two Triors shall be superseded, and the two first sworn on the Jury shall try the rest. Co. Lit. 158.

Challenges propter delictum are for some crime or misdemeanor, that affects the Juror's credit, and renders him infamous. As for a conviction of treason, felony, perjury, or conspiracy; or if for some infamous offence he hath received judgment of the pillory, tumbrel, or the like, or to be branded, whipt, or stigmatized; or if he be outlawed or excommunicated; or hath been attainted of false verdict, præmunire, or forgery; or, lastly, if he hath proved recreant when champion in the trial by battel, and thereby hath lost his liberam legem. A Juror may himself be examined on oath of voir dire, veritatem dicere, with regard to such causes of challenge, as are not to his dishonour or discredit, but not with regard to any crime, or any thing which tends to his disgrace or disadvantage. Co. Litt. 158. b: and see the notes there.

Besides these challenges, which are exceptions against the fitness of Jurors, and whereby they may be excluded from serving, there are also other causes to be made use of by the Jurors themselves, which are matter of exemption; whereby their service is excused. As by stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 38, sick and decrepit persons, persons not commorant in the county, and men above seventy years old; and by the stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, infants under twenty-one. This exemption is also extended by divers statutes, customs, and charters, to physicians, and other medical persons, counsel, attornies, officers of the Courts, and the like; all of whom, if impanelled, must shew their special exemption. Clergymen are also usually excused, out of favour and respect to their function: but if they are seised of lands and tenements, they are, in strictness, liable to be impanelled in respect of their lay fees, unless they be in the service of the King or some Bishop. F. N. B. 166: Reg. Brev. 179.

Barons of the realm, as has been already hinted, and all above them, are not to serve in any ordinary Jury; and others may have this privilege by writ, or the King's grant, &c. 6 Rep. 53: 1 Brownl. 30. But such as have charters of exemption, shall be sworn on great assises, and in attaints, &c. when their oath is requisite. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 14.

It has been already remarked that a person indicted of treason may challenge thirty-five of those returned on the panel of Jurors to try him, without cause shewn; and if two or more are to be tried, they may challenge so many each; but then they are to be tried singly, or all may challenge that number in the whole, and be tried jointly. 3 Salk. 81. By stat. 3 Hen. 7. c. 14, in treason, by the King's sworn servants, for compassing to kill the the King, tried before the steward of the King's household, &c. no challenge shall be allowed but for malice. Some statutes which take away the benefit of clergy from felons, exclude those from their clergy who peremptorily challenge more than twenty, whereby they are liable to judgment of death. See stats. 22 Hen. 8. c. 14: 28 Hen. 8. c. 1: 1 E. 6. c. 12. § 11: 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. But it is now settled, that if the offender be within the benefit of clergy, the challenge shall be over-ruled, and the party put upon his trial. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43.

All peremptory challenges are to be taken by the party himself; and where there are divers challenges, they must be taken all at once. But there can be no challenge till the Jury is full; and then the array is to be challenged before one of them is sworn. Hob. 235. Where the King is party, if the other side challenge a Juror above the number allowed by law, he ought to shew the cause of his challenge immediately. 1 Bulst. 191. A defendant shall shew all causes of challenge, before the King shall shew any. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43.

If the Juror is convicted and attainted of treason, felony, perjury, adjudged to the pillory, or other punishment whereby he becomes infamous, or is outlawed or excommunicate, these are all principal challenges; but in these cases and others, he that challengeth is to shew the record, if he will have it take place as a principal challenge; otherwise he must conclude to the favour, unless it be a record of the same Court. Co. Litt. 157. A person under prosecution for any crime, may, before indicted, challenge any of the Grand Jury, as being outlawed, &c. or returned at the instance of the prosecutor, or not returned by the proper officer, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 16.

A principal challenge being found true, is sufficient without leaving it to Triers; but if some of a Jury are challenged for favour, they shall be tried by the rest of the Jury whether indifferent. Co. Litt. 158. Where a challenge is made to the array, the Court appoint the two Triers, who are sworn, and then the cause of favour is shewed to them, which may be called the issue they are to try; and if it is proved, then they give their verdict that they are not indifferently impanelled, and this is entered of record; but if the favour is not proved, then they say the Jury were indifferently impanelled, and so the trial goes on, without making any entry of the matter. 1 Bulst. 114.

If one take a principal challenge against a Juror, he cannot afterwards challenge that Juror for favour, and wave his former challenge; but a challenge may be made to the polls after it has been made to the array. Wood. 592. A new Jury is to be impanelled by the Coroner, where the array is quashed for partiality, &c. of the Sheriff. Trials per pais, 15.

If a plaintiff or defendant have action of battery, &c. against the Sheriff, or the Sheriff against them, it is cause of challenge; and if either of the parties have action of debt against the Sheriff; or if the Sheriff hath any parcel of land depending on the same title as the parties; or if he, or his bailiffs who returned the Jury, be under the distress of either party, &c.; these are good causes of challenge. Where one of the Jurors hath a suit at law depending with the plaintiff, it is good challenge. Stile. 129. An action depending betwixt either of the parties and a Juror, implying malice, is cause of challenge; and a Juror may be challenged for holding lands by the same title as the defendant. 2 Leon. 40. If a person owes suit of court, &c. to a lord of a hundred who is plaintiff, it is a principal challenge, as he is within the distress of the plaintiff. Dyer. 176. But it is said to be no challenge, that a person is in debt to either party. 1 Nels. Abr. 426. A Juror returned by a wrong name may be challenged and withdrawn, so that the Jury shall not be taken; yet a tales may be granted. 1 Lil. Abr. 260. And if a Juror declares the right of either of the parties, &c. it is cause of challenge; though it hath been ruled that it is not sufficient cause of challenge, that a Juror delivered his opinion touching the title of the land in question, because his opinion may be altered on hearing the evidence. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R.

If there are two defendants in a real action, or two tenants, and one challenge a Juror, and the other will not, the Juror (the challenge being allowed) shall be drawn against the rest. 11 H. 6. 15: Jenk. Cent. 114. To say of a person to be tried for any crime, that he is guilty, or will be hanged, &c. is good cause of challenge; but the prisoner must prove it by witnesses, and not out of the mouth of the Juryman, who may not be examined: and though a Juryman may be asked upon a voir dire, whether he hath any interest in the case, or whether he hath a freehold, &c. yet a Juryman or a witness shall not be examined whether he hath been convict of felony, or guilty of any crime, &c. which would make a man discover that of himself which tends to make him infamous, and the answer might charge him with a misdemeanor. 1 Salk. 153.

If one challenge a Juror, and the challenge is entered, he may not have him afterwards sworn on the Jury. And if the defendant do not appear at the trial when called, he loseth his challenge to the Jurors, though he afterwards appear. 1 Lil. Abr. 259. When the Jury appear at a trial, before the Secondary calls them to be sworn, he bids the plaintiff and defendant to attend their challenges, &c.

III. The Jury, after the proofs in a cause are summed up, unless the case be very clear, withdraw from the Bar to consider of their verdict; and, in order to avoid intemperance and causeless delay, are to be kept without meat, drink, fire, or candle, unless by permission of the Judge, till they are all unanimously agreed. If they eat or drink at all, or have any eatables about them, without consent of the Court, and before verdict, it is fineable; and if they do so at his charge for whom they afterwards find, it will set aside the verdict. Also if they speak with either of the parties, or their agents, after they are gone from the bar; or if they receive any fresh evidence in private; or if, to prevent disputes, they cast lots for whom they shall find; any of these circumstances will entirely vitiate the verdict. And it has been held, that if the Jurors do not agree in their verdict before the Judges are about to leave the town, though they are not to be threatened or imprisoned, the Judges are not bound to wait for them, but may carry them round the circuit from town to town in a cart. Mirr. c. 4. § 24: Lib. Ass. fol. 40. pl. 11. This necessity of a total unanimity seems to be peculiar to our own constitution. See Barrington on the Statutes, 19, 20, 21: 3 Comm. c. 23; and Mr. Christian's notes there; and post. IV.

After a Juror is sworn he may not go from the bar until the evidence is given, for any cause whatsoever, without leave of the Court; and with leave he must have a keeper with him. 2 Lil. 123, 127. A witness may not be called by the Jury to recite the same evidence he gave in Court, when they are gone from the bar. Cro. Eliz. 189. Nor may a party give a brief or notes of the cause to the Jury to consider of; if he doth, he and the Jurors may be fined. Moor. 815.

If Jurymen after sworn, either before or after they are agreed of their verdict, eat and drink, the verdict may be good; but they are fineable: and if it be at the charge of either party, the verdict is void. Dalis. 10: Cro. Jac. 21. If they agree to cast lots for their verdict, or to bring in guilty or not guilty, as the Court shall seem inclined, they may be fined. 2 Lev. 205: Cro. Eliz. 779. But a Jury have been permitted to recall their verdict; as where one was indicted of felony, the Jury found found him not guilty, but immediately before they went from the bar, they said they were mistaken, and found him guilty, which last was recorded for their verdict. Plowd. 211.

The Jury are to judge upon the evidence given, but the Jurors may not contradict what is agreed in pleading between the parties; if they do, it shall be rejected; and where the Jury find the fact, but conclude upon it contrary to law, the Court may reject the conclusion. 1 And. 41: 10 Rep. 56: Co. Litt. 22: Hob. 222. The Jury may find a thing done in another county, upon a general issue; and foreign matters done out of the realm, &c. Moor. c. 238: Godb. 33. Jurors having once given their verdict, although it be imperfect, shall not be sworn again in the same issue, unless it be in assize. 2 Cro. 210.

If a Juryman is guilty of bribery, he is disabled to be of any assize or Jury; and shall be imprisoned and ransomed at the King's will. stat. 5 E. 3. c. 10. Jurymen accused of bribery, are to be tried presently by a Jury then taken. stat. 34 E. 3. c. 8. And if a Juror takes any thing of either party to give his verdict, he shall pay ten times as much as taken; or suffer a year's imprisonment. stat. 38 E. 3. c. 12. And on this statute a writ of decies tantum lies; and this though they give no verdict, or the verdict be true; if they take money. Reg. Orig. 188: F. N. B. 171: New Nat. Br. 380: Dyer 95: See this Dict. tit. Decies tantum; Embracery.

A Jury sworn and charged in case of life and member, cannot be discharged till they give a verdict: In civil cases, it is otherwise; as where nonsuits are had, &c. And sometimes when the evidence has been heard, the parties doubting of the verdict, do consent that a Juror shall be withdrawn or discharged. 1 Inst. 154, 227.

A Verdict, vere dictum, is either privy or public. A privy verdict is when the Judge hath left or adjourned the Court, and the Jury being agreed, in order to be delivered from their confinement, obtain leave (in civil cases) to give their verdict privily to the Judge out of Court; which privy verdict is of no force, unless afterwards affirmed by a public verdict given openly in Court; wherein the Jury may if they please vary from their privy verdict. So that the privy verdict is indeed a mere nullity; and yet it is a dangerous practice, and therefore very seldom indulged. But the only effectual and legal verdict, is the public verdict; in which they openly declare to have found the issue for the plaintiff or for the defendant; and if for the plaintiff, they assess the damages also sustained by him. Sometimes if there arises in the case any difficult matter of law, the Jury for the sake of better information, and to avoid the danger of having their verdict attainted, will find a special verdict, which is grounded on stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 30. § 2. And herein they state the naked facts as they find them to be proved, and pray the advice of the Court thereon; concluding conditionally, that if upon the whole matter the Court shall be of opinion that the plaintiff had cause of action, they then find for him; if otherwise, then for the defendant. This is entered at length on the record, and afterwards argued and determined in the Court at Westminster, from whence the issue came to be tried.—Another method of finding a species of special verdict is where the Jury find a verdict generally for the plaintiff, but subject nevertheless to the opinion of the Judge or the Court above, on a special case stated by the counsel on both sides with regard to a matter of law.—But in both these instances the Jury may, if they think proper, take upon themselves to determine, at their own hazard, the complicated question of fact and law; and without either special verdict or special case, may find a verdict absolutely either for the plaintiff or the defendant. Litt. § 386: 3 Comm. c. 23.—It may be sufficient in this place to remark, that in case the Jury find against what in the opinion of the Court above is law, such Court will repeatedly grant a new trial, till what they consider to be a proper verdict is found.—This might alone be an answer as to the Juries being judges of law in civil cases; but see post. IV. 2. and this Dict. title Trial; (New Trial.)

It was an antient doctrine, that such evidence as the Jury might have in their own consciences, by their private knowledge of facts, had as much right to sway their judgment, as written or parol evidence delivered in Court. And therefore it hath been often held, that though no proofs be produced on either side, yet the Jury might bring in a verdict. Yearb. 14 Hen. 7. 29: Plowd. 12: Hob. 227: 1 Lev. 87. For the oath of the Jurors, to find according to their evidence, was construed to be, to do it according to the best of their own knowledge. Vaugh. 148, 149. This seems to have arisen from the antient practice in taking recognitions of assize, at the first introduction of that remedy; the Sheriff being bound to return such recognitors as knew the truth of the fact, and the recognitors, when sworn, being to retire immediately from the bar, and bring in their verdict according to their own personal knowledge, without hearing extrinsic evidence, or receiving any direction from the Judge. Bract. l. 4. tr. 1. c. 19 § 3: Fleta. l. 4. c. 9. § 2. And the same doctrine, (when attaints came to be extended to trials by Jury, as well as to recognitions of assize,) was also applied to the case of common Jurors; that they might escape the heavy penalties of the attaint, in case they could show by any additional proof that their verdict was agreeable to the truth, though not according to the evidence produced: with which additional proof the law presumed they were privately acquainted, though it did not appear in Court. But this doctrine was again exploded, when attaints began to be disused, and new trials introduced in their stead. For it is quite incompatible with the grounds upon which such new trials are every day awarded, viz. that the verdict was given without, or contrary to, evidence. And therefore, together with new trials, the practice seems to have been first introduced, which now universally obtains, that if a Juror knows any thing of the matter in issue, he may be sworn as a witness, and give his evidence publickly in Court. See Styl. 233: 1 Sid. 133.

IV. 1. The Trial by Jury, in Criminal Cases, is more peculiarly the grand bulwark of the liberties of every subject of Great Britain; and is secured, as has already been mentioned, by the Great Charter, 9 H. 3 c. 29.

The antiquity and excellence of this trial, in civil cases, has already been explained at length. The arguments in its favour hold much stronger in criminal cases. Our law has therefore wisely and mercifully placed the strong twofold barrier, of a presentment and a trial by Jury, between the liberties of the People and the prerogative of the Crown. It has with excellent forecast contrived, that that no man should be called to answer for any capital crime, unless on the preparatory accusation of twelve or more of his fellow-subjects, the Grand Jury: and that the truth of every accusation should be afterwards confirmed by the unanimous suffrage of twelve of his equals and neighbours, indifferently chosen, and superior to all suspicion. So that the liberties of England cannot but subsist so long as this Palladium remains sacred and inviolate; unawed by the power of the Monarch, and unstained by the weakness or wickedness of those who are called upon to exercise this invaluable privilege.

The Grand Jury generally consists of twenty-four men of greater quality than the other, chosen indifferently out of the whole county by the Sheriff; and the Petit Jury consisteth of twelve men, of equal condition with the party indicted, impanelled in criminal cases, called the Jury of Life and Death: The Grand Jury find the bills of indictment against criminals, and the Petit Jury convict them by verdict, in the giving whereof all the twelve must agree; and according to their verdict the judgment passeth. 3 Inst. 30, 31, 221. See this Dict. title Indictment.

When a prisoner on his arraignment has pleaded not guilty, and for his trial hath put himself upon his country, which country the Jury are, the Sheriff of the county must return a pannel of Jurors; freeholders without just exception, and of the neighbourhood; that is, of the county where the fact is committed. 2 Hal. P. C. 264: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 40. If the proceedings are before the Court of K. B. time is allowed, between the arraignment and trial, for a Jury to be impanelled by writ of venire facias to the Sheriff as in civil causes: But before Commissioners of oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery, the Sheriff, by virtue of a general precept directed to him beforehand, returns to the Court a pannel of forty-eight Jurors, to try all felons that may be called upon their trial at that session. 4 Comm. c. 27.

Challenges may be made in criminal cases either on the part of the King, (the prosecution,) or on that of the prisoner; and either to the whole array or to the separate polls, for the very same reasons that they may be made in civil causes. For it is here at least as necessary as there, that the Jury be liable to no objection; that the Sheriff or returning officer be totally indifferent; and that where an alien is indicted, the Jury should be half foreigners, if so many are found in the place: this latter privilege however does not hold in treasons, aliens being very improper judges of the breach of allegiance. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43. § 37: 2 Hal. P. C. 271.

Challenges upon any of the accounts specified in civil cases are styled challenges for cause: which may be without stint in both criminal and civil trials. But in criminal cases, at least in capital ones, there is in favour of life allowed to the prisoner an arbitrary and capricious species of challenge, to a certain number of Jurors, without shewing any cause at all: a provision full of that tenderness and humanity to prisoners for which the English laws are justly famous. This is grounded on two reasons, viz. the sudden impressions and unaccountable prejudices, which every one is apt to conceive on the bare looks and gesture of another; and the consideration that the very questioning a person's indifference may provoke resentment;—a Juror therefore challenged for insufficient cause may afterwards be peremptorily challenged.

This privilege of peremptory challenges, though allowed to the prisoner is denied to the King, by stat. 33 E. 1. st. 4; which enacts, that the King shall challenge no Jurors without assigning a cause certain, to be tried and approved by the Court. However, it is held that the King need not assign his cause of challenge till all the pannel is gone through, and unless there cannot be a full Jury without the persons so challenged: and then and not sooner the King's counsel must shew the cause, otherwise the Jurors shall be sworn. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43. § 3: 2 Hal. P. C. 271: Raym. 473.

These peremptory challenges of the prisoner must however have some reasonable boundary: this is settled by the common law at the number of thirty-five, that is one under the number of three full Juries: and if a prisoner peremptorily challenged above that number, and would not retract his challenge, he was formerly to be dealt with as one who stood mute, or refused his trial, by sentencing him in cases of felony to the peine forte & dure; (pressing to death, now totally abolished: See that title, and title Trial;) and by attainting him in treason. And so the law stands at this day with regard to treason of any kind. But by stat. 22 H. 8. c. 14, (which with regard to felonies stands unrepealed by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10,) no person arraigned for felony can be admitted to make any more than twenty peremptory challenges. If in such case the prisoner peremptorily challenged twenty-one, the old opinion was, that judgment of peine forte & dure should be given as where he challenged thirty-six at the common law. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 43. § 9. But the better opinion seems to be, that such challenge shall be only disregarded and overruled, and the Juror be regularly sworn. 3 Inst. 227: 2 Hal. P. C. 270.

If by reason of challenges, or the default of Jurors, a sufficient number cannot be had of the original pannel, a tales may be awarded, as in civil causes: Though this cannot take place in mere commissions of gaol-delivery, but in which the Court may by word order a new pannel to be returned instanter. 4 Inst. 68: 4 St. Tr. 728. Cook's Ca. See ante. When at length the number of twelve is completed, they are sworn, "well and truly to try, and true deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the prisoner whom they have in charge; and a true verdict to give according to their evidence." 4 Comm. 27.

When the evidence on both sides is closed, and indeed when any evidence hath been given, the Jury cannot be discharged, unless in cases of evident necessity, till they have given in their verdict; but are to consider of it, and deliver it in with the same forms as upon civil causes; only they cannot, in a criminal case which touches life or member, give a privy verdict. See 1 Inst. 227: 3 Inst. 110: Fost. 27: 2 Hal. P. C. 300: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 47. § 1, 2. But the Judges may adjourn, while the Jury are withdrawn to confer, and return to receive the verdict in open Court. 3 St. Tr. 731: 4 St. Tr. 231, 455, 485.

On the State Trials for High Treason, at the Sessions-house in the Old Bailey, London, under a special commission in 1794, against Tho. Hardy, Horne Tooke, and several others charged with having formed the destructive project of A Convention of the People, to overthrow the Monarchy and the Constitution, the Jury on each Prisoner were kept together in the Custody of the Sheriff or his Bailiffs night and day, for several days successively, during the whole of the proceedings on each trial, and till they gave their verdicts. The Court adjourned from evening till morning; and also once in the day for the purpose of refreshment, and from Saturday evening till Monday morning, when Sunday intervened.—The Sheriff was charged to see that no improper communication was had with the Jury during these intervals. And the first Jury having been sent several nights to an Hotel in Covent Garden, at some distance from the Court, a slight suspicion arising that they were not kept quite free from extraneous information, the subsequent Juries were accommodated with beds, in rooms nearly adjoining the Court.

A Culprit was indicted for murder. The Jury were sworn, and part of the evidence given, but before the trial was over, one of the Jurymen was taken ill, went out of Court with the Judge's leave, and presently after died. The Judge, doubting whether he could swear another Jury, discharged the eleven, and left the prisoner in gaol. The Court was moved for a writ of habeas corpus, to bring up the prisoner that he might be discharged, having been once put upon his trial. This being a new case, the Court said they would advise with the other Judges upon it; and afterwards they all agreed that the prisoner might be tried at the next assizes, or the Judge might have ordered a new Jury to have been sworn immediately. Mich. 4 Geo. 3. R. v. Gould. Burn's J. title Jurors V. ad fin.

The verdict in a criminal case thus publickly and openly given may be either general, Guilty, or Not Guilty; in which precise terms alone a general verdict must be given; or special, when it must set forth all the circumstances of the case, and pray the judgment of the Court whether for instance, on the facts stated, it be murder, manslaughter, or no crime at all.

This special verdict is where the Jury doubt the matter of law, and therefore choose to leave it to the determination of the Court; though they have an unquestionable right of determining upon all the circumstances, and finding a general verdict if they think proper so to hazard a breach of their oaths: and if their verdict be notoriously wrong, they may be punished, and the verdict set aside by attaint at the suit of the King, but not at the suit of the prisoner. 2 Hal. P. C. 310: 4 Comm. 361. c. 27: See post. IV. 2.

The instances which formerly happened of fining, imprisoning, or otherwise punishing Jurors, merely at the discretion of the Court, for finding their verdict contrary to the direction of the Judge, were arbitrary, unconstitutional, and illegal; and indeed it would be a most unhappy case for the Judge himself, if the prisoner's fate depended on his directions; unhappy also for the prisoner; for if the Judge's opinion must rule the verdict, the trial by Jury would be useless. 2 Hal. P. C. 313.

Yet in many instances where, contrary to evidence, the Jury have found the prisoner guilty, their verdict hath been mercifully set aside, and a new trial granted by the Court of King's Bench: for in such case it cannot be set right by attaint. 1 Lev. 9: T. Jones. 163: 10 St. Tr. 416. As the party is found guilty in fact, by twenty-four; 1 Rol. 280. l. 2. 7. But the Court have never interfered even to grant a new trial where a prisoner is once acquitted; however contrary the verdict might be to the opinion of the Judge, or to what, in the eyes of all, but the Jury, might be deemed the real justice of the case. See 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 47. § 11, 12; where it is positively stated as settled, that the Court cannot set aside a verdict which acquits a defendant of a prosecution properly criminal. See this Dict. title Trial; (New Trial.)

2. The Question whether Juries are, or are not, Judges of Law as well as of Fact, has been long agitated with great zeal and energy; probably more through a spirit of party, than from a desire of establishing any undoubted determination on the subject. There cannot, after all, as it seems, be any great difficulty, to an unbiassed and unprejudiced mind, in determining the controversy.

We have already seen, that Juries may, by a general verdict of acquittal in criminal prosecutions, prevent the case from coming under the final consideration of the Court; who, in that event, have no opportunity of deciding on the question of law. But in cases of conviction, it is the established rule, that the Judges of the Court in which the prosecution is carried on, may arrest the judgment, or grant a new trial, where they are of opinion, that the offence is not such as is charged in the indictment; that the indictment is defective in charging it; or, that the verdict is against evidence. Thus much therefore appears indisputable, that in one event the Court are the acknowledged Judges of the law, as the Jury are of the fact: and that the latter have the absolute POWER of ACQUITTAL in criminal cases; but not of conviction. A provision, indeed, full of that wisdom and mercy which so eminently characterize the English laws.

This litigated question has principally arisen on prosecutions for Libels, and above all others on those for State Libels; in which it had for a long time been the usage for the Judge to direct the Jury, that if the fact of the publication of the paper charged to be a libel was proved, and if they believed the innuendoes in the indictment, they must find the defendant guilty; without adverting to any other circumstances, such as whether the paper were in their opinion a libel, or published with a malicious, seditious, traiterous, &c. intention.——The Counsel for the defendants in such prosecutions always maintained, that it was the province of the Jury to judge whether the paper was a libel; (undoubtedly a question of mere law); and also whether it were published with a malicious, seditious, &c. intention, as charged;—a complicated question of law and fact.

Mr. Erskine was the most strenuous asserter of this latter doctrine; and by the indefatigable exertions of him and Mr Fox, the following act of parliament was obtained with a view expressly of settling this question by legislative authority:

The stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 60, after reciting that "doubts had arisen whether on the trial of an indictment or information for the making or publishing any libel, where an issue or issues are joined between the King and the defendant, on the plea of not guilty pleaded, it be competent to the Jury, impanelled to try the same, to give their verdict upon the whole matter in issue;" enacts, that "on every such trial, the Jury, sworn to try the issue, may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty, upon the whole matter put in issue, upon such indictment or information; and shall not be required or directed, by the

the Court or Judge, before whom the indictment, &c. shall be tried, to find the defendant guilty, merely on the proof of the publication, by such defendant, of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to the same in such indictment." § 1.

But it is provided by the said statute, that the Court or Judge shall, according to their discretion, give their opinion and directions to the Jury on the matter in issue, as in other criminal cases—that the Jury may also find a special verdict; and that in case the Jury shall find the defendant guilty, he may move in arrest of judgment, as by law he might have done before the passing of the act. §§ 2, 3, 4.

The above is the whole substance of the statute: the only case that appears on the subject of libels, in the books, subsequent to the passing that act, is R. v. Holt; 5 Term Rep. 436; which does not seem to bear upon the question, further than that Mr. Erskine incorrectly stated the statute, as giving the Jury a right to take into their consideration the intention of the defendant.

It is observable, however, that as the rule on this subject laid down by Lord Coke, 1 Inst. 155, b, is in a negative way; " ad quæstionem facti non respondent Judices, ad quæstionem juris non respondent Juratores—Judges are not to answer to the question of fact; Juries are not to answer to the question of law;" so this modern statute, in the same kind of language provides, that " the Jury shall not be required or directed to find a verdict of guilty, merely on the proof of publication, and the sense ascribed to the paper."—The statute does not proceed any further to state what matters may or may not be given or produced in evidence in such trials; nor does it say one word as to the contested point, the settling of which was the pretext for its being procured, as to the right or province of the Jury to decide the question of law. On the contrary, it is most remarkable that the doubt, expressed to have been entertained, is, whether it were competent to the Jury to give their verdict upon the whole matter in issue. Now this doubt certainly never existed; since, wherever the question of Law is in issue, it is always tried by the Court on a demurrer, and is never submitted at all to a Jury. On an issue of Fact, (such as that joined on all indictments is,) the law is never in dispute.

The provision in the act, " that in cases where the Jury shall find a verdict of guilty, the defendant may move in arrest of judgment, as by law he might have done before the passing of the act," seems as express a denial of the right of the Jury to determine the question of law, as could possibly be framed; since that question can never arise on a verdict of Not guilty. It was, doubtless, adopted in majorem cautelam; lest by any forced construction, the statute should have been interpreted as taking into consideration the question how far the Jury could act as Judges of law.

The whole fallacy of the controversy seems to have originated, first, from the complication of fact and law, which is more apparent in prosecutions for libel, than in other criminal cases: and, secondly, from confounding the terms POWER and RIGHT, as synonimous: faculties frequently so similar in their operations, that it requires the discrimination of a penetrating mind, to assign the effects arising from either to their proper source. The Jury, as the law at present stands, have the POWER of acquittal, absolute and uncontrouled; except may-be, by the tedious and now most uncertain process of Attaint; which, though it might punish the Jury for their verdict, yet could not convict the defendant, whom they had acquitted; and it is even doubted whether such attaint could be maintained, in a criminal case, against a Jury. Vaugh. 146. See 1 Ro. Abr. 281. l. 5: F. N. B. 107. D. cites 42 E. 3. 26, that it may; but which seems rather to apply to the circumstances of a civil action, In Vaugh. 164, Bushell's Case, the great case on the power of Juries, Vaughan, Chief Justice, cites 10 Hen. 4. Attaint, 60, 64, and says, that there is no case, in all the law, of such an attaint; nor any opinion but that of Thirning's in the case cited, for which there is no warrant in law; and thinks the law clear that an attaint did not lie. 3 Vin. Abr. tit. Attaint (A) pl. 17. See also the same title A. 2. pl. 12: O. pl. 3: A. 2. pl. 16: G. pl. 1, 12, 13: 1 Inst. 228. a. In 1 Ld. Raym. 469, it is observed, that in an attaint in a civil cause, a man's property is only brought into question a second time, and not his liberty or life. And Hawkins states, that it seems to be certain that no one is liable to any prosecution whatsoever, in respect of any verdict given by him in a criminal matter, either upon a grand or petty Jury. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 72. § 5: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 20—23. —From all which authorities, it appears on the whole, that attaint in criminal cases is a very rare and doubtful proceeding; and that only instances of very undoubted and corrupt contumacy can justify even the laying a fine upon a Jury. See also this Dict. title Attaint.

Let it not, however, be thought invidious to remark, that there may have been verdicts in which none but the Jury themselves, or the party whose cause they espoused, were capable of conceiving that they had the RIGHT of acquittal, by constituting themselves Judges of the law. But these are cases over which it becomes a sincere lover of the Constitution, and of this most valuable branch of it, to draw a veil; in pity to the perhaps laudable and often irresistible prejudices, to which the frailty of human nature is liable.

There is no doubt that, before the passing of the above mentioned stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 60, if a Jury were convinced, either that the paper alledged to be a libel was not such in law, or that the defendant published the same through an innocent negligence, or inadvertence, they had always the power of giving a verdict of acquittal, which could never be called in question. Whether that statute has conferred any further privilege on them is left for the Reader to determine; after considering the foregoing observations, and those which follow; extracted from two most learned, ingenious, and constitutional writers. Some repetition may, perhaps, appear in them of what has been already advanced from the pen of the Editor. He only has to say in excuse, that he committed his own thoughts to paper, before consulting those authorities.

On the trial of John Lilburne for treason, in 1649, high words passed between the Court and him, in consequence of his stating that the Jury were Judges both of law and fact, and citing passages in 1 Inst. 228, a, to prove it. 2 St. Tr. 4 ed. 69. In the case of Penn and Meade, who, in 1670, were indicted for unlawfully assembling the people, and preaching to them, the Jury gave gave a verdict against the directions of the Court in point of law, and for this were committed to prison. But the commitment was questioned, and on a habeas corpus brought in the Court of Common Pleas, it was declared illegal, Vaughan, Chief Justice, distinguishing himself on the occasion by a most profound argument in favour of the rights of a Jury. Bushell's Ca. 1 Freem. 1: Vaugh. 135. However, the contest did not cease, as appears by Sir John Hawles's famous 'Dialogue between a Barrister and a Juryman,' which was published in 1680, to assert the claims of the latter, against the then current doctrine, decrying their authority. Since the Revolution also, many cases have occurred, in which there has been much debate on the like topick, See Hardw. 23: Franklyn's Ca. 9 St. Tr. 275: Peter Zenger's, ib: Owen's Ca. 10 St. Tr. 196. App: Woodfall's Ca. 5 Burr. 261: [R. v. Shipley, Dean of St. Asaph.] By attending to the cases before referred to, it will be easy to trace the progress of this controversy on the limit of the Jury's province, 1 Inst. 155. b. in n.

Mr. Hargrave, the author of the above note, then proceeds to give his own ideas on the subject; which from the known learning and probity of the writer, are deserving very serious attention.

" On the one hand, says he, as the Jury may, as often as they think fit, find a general verdict, I therefore think it unquestionable that they so far MAY decide upon the law as well as fact; such a verdict necessarily involving both. For this, there is the authority of Littleton himself, who writes, that, ' If the inquest will take upon them the knowledge of the law upon the matter, they may give their verdict generally.' § 368; 228. a. But, on the other hand, it seems clear, that questions of law generally, and more properly, belong to the Judges, and that, exclusively of the fitness of having the law expounded by those who are trained to the knowledge of it by long study and practice, this appears from various considerations.—First, If the parties litigating agree in their facts, the cause can never go to a Jury, but is tried on a demurrer; it being a rule, apparently without exception, that issues in law are ever determined by the Judges, and only issues of fact are tried by a Jury. 1 Inst. 71. b.—Secondly, Even when an issue of fact is joined, and comes before a Jury for trial, either party, by demurring to evidence, which includes an admission of the fact, to which the evidence applies, may so far draw the cause from the cognizance of the Jury; for in that case, the law is referred for the decision of the Court, from which the issue of fact comes; and the Jury is either discharged, or at the utmost, only ascertains the damages. 1 Inst. 72. a: Cocksedge v. Fanshaw, Dougl. 119—134: Cort v. Birkbeck, Dougl. 218—225: Bull. N. P. 2d edit. 313.—Thirdly, The Jury is supposed to be so inadequate to finding out the law, that it is incumbent on the Judge who presides at the trial, to inform them what the law is; and as a check to the Judge in the discharge of this duty, either party may, under stat. Westm. 2. c. 31, make his exception in writing to the Judge's direction, and enforce its being made a part of the record, so as afterwards to found error upon it. See 2 Inst. 426: Trials per pais, 8 ed. 222, 466: Fabrigas v. Mostyn. 11 St. Tr.: Money v. Leach, 3 Burr. 1742: Bull. N. P. 2d ed. 315: [This Dict. title Bill of Exceptions.]—Fourthly, The Jury is ever at liberty to give a special verdict, the nature of which is to find the facts at large, and leave the conclusion of law to the Judges of the Court from which the issue comes. Formerly, indeed, it was doubted whether, in certain cases in which the issue was of a very limited and restrained kind, the Jury was not bound to find a general verdict: but the contrary was settled in Dowman's Ca. 9 Co. 11. b; and the rule now holds both in criminal and civil cases without exception. See 1 Inst. 227. b: Staunf. P. C. 165. a: 2 Ld. Raym. 1494.—Fifthly, Whilst attaints, which still subsist in law, [See ante,] were in use, it was hazardous in a Jury to find a general verdict where the case was doubtful, and they were apprised of it by the Judges; because if they mistook the law, [against the direction of the Judge,] they were in danger of an attaint. 1 Inst. 228. a: Hob. 227: Vaugh. 144: 2 H. H. P. C. 310: Gilb. C. P. 2d edit. 128.—Sixthly, If the Jury find the facts specially, and add their conclusion as to the law, it is not binding on the Judges; but they have a right to controul the verdict, and declare the law as they conceive it to be. At least this is the language of some most respectable authorities. Staunf. P. C. 165. a: Plowd. 114. a, b: 4 Co. 42. b: Hal. H. P. C. i. 471, 6, 7; ii. 302. See ante III.—Lastly, The Courts have long exercised the power of granting new trials in civil cases, where the Jury finds against that which the Judge, trying the cause, or the Court at large, holds to be law: or where the Jury finds a general verdict, and the Court conceives that on account of difficulty of law there ought to have been a special one. Hardw. 26. [And the Court will grant such new trial, even a second and a third time, till the Jury give a general verdict consonant to law; or a special verdict, on which the Court may pronounce the law. See Tindal v. Brown, 1 Term Rep. 167: and this Dict. title Trial; (New Trial.)] Though too in criminal and penal cases the Judges do not claim such a discretion against persons acquitted, the reason presumed is in respect of the rule, nemo bis punitur aut vexatur pro eodem delicto; or the hardship which would arise from allowing a person to be twice put in jeopardy for one offence: and if this be so, it only shows, that on that account an exception is made to a general rule. 4 Comm. 361: 2 Ld. Raym. 1585: 2 Stra. 899: 4 Co. 40. a: Wingate's Maxims, 695. Upon the whole, (says Mr. Hargrave,) the result is, that the immediate and direct right of deciding upon questions of law is entrusted to the Judges; that in a Jury it is only incidental: That in the exercise of this incidental RIGHT, the latter are not only placed under the superintendance of the former, but are in some degree controulable by them; and therefore, that in all points of law arising on a trial, Juries ought to show the most respectful deference to the advice and recommendation of Judges. Nor is it any small merit in this arrangement, that, in consequence of it, every person accused of a crime, is enabled by the general plea of not guilty, to have the benefit of a trial, in which the Judge and Jury are a check upon each other. 1 Inst. 155. a. &c. in n."

The Student will perceive from the above extract, that Mr. Hargrave admits the incidental RIGHT of the Jury to determine questions of law; in which he goes further than the writer from whom the subsequent long quotation is introduced; who supports his reasonings by very ingenious, if not unanswerable arguments; and which will be found to coincide with those offered at the beginning beginning of this division, by the present Editor of this Dictionary.

Mr. Wynne, in his Eunomus, or Dialogues concerning the Law and Constitution of England, Dial. 3. § 53, & seqq. examines the dispute, very elegantly, in the following manner:

"All that may here be said upon the subject of Juries is agreeable to the established maxim above recognised, ad quæstionem facti, &c. This is the fundamental maxim acknowledged by the Constitution; and yet this is the maxim, which those who have advanced doctrines against the Constitution have ever in their mouths.

"Fundamental maxims of Law or Government are so plain and intuitive, that every body understands them; those of the lowest capacity make them their standard in their own breasts to judge by. And therefore they who would lead a party in a wrong cause with success, must do it not by disputing fundamentals, but by avowing and afterwards perverting them. This seems to be much the case in the present contested question.

"It is undoubtedly true, that the Jury are judges, the only judges, of the fact: is it not equally within the spirit of the maxim, that Judges only have the competent cognisance of the law? Can it be contended that the Jury have, in reality, an adequate knowledge of law; or that the Constitution ever designed they should? Every country village has its Jurors, whom nobody will suppose to be lawyers; and it is from the generality that we are to form our notions of the nature of a Jury, as the law has prescribed it; not from the abilities of any particular man, or any particular Jury. But it is said, and it is an argument not a little insisted upon, that the law and the fact are often complicated. Then it is the province of the Judge to distinguish them; to tell the Jury that supposing they believe that such and such facts were done, what the law is in such circumstances. This is an unbiassed direction: this keeps the province of Judge and Jury distinct: the facts are left altogether to the Jury, and the law does not controul the fact, but arises from it. If the law is thought to be mistaken, the direction of the Judge that gave it may be considered in another Court; and if it is mistaken, the verdict in conformity to it will be of no effect. But a verdict cannot be complained of as contrary to the direction of law given; it can scarcely be concluded it is: and the reason is, because the law arises only from the fact; and the Jury previously find the fact in their own mind, before they couple it with the law pronounced from the Bench to make up their verdict. Every verdict is compounded of law and fact; but the law and the fact are always distinct in their nature. See Vaugh. 146, 152.

"Littleton and his Commentator have been made advocates on this occasion; and have been thought to say, though at the peril of contradicting themselves an hundred times, that Jurors are the judges of the law as well as the fact; in the passage already repeatedly cited and alluded to; 1 Inst. 228. a; "If they will take upon them the knowledge of the law upon the matter, they may give their verdict generally, as is put in their charge." See 2 Ld. Raym. 1494: Hardw. 16. But does not the Judge betray his trust in not telling them how the law is? If he does not tell them, it is true they may suppose it to be so, and find accordingly: if he does tell them how the law is, they are to compare the fact with the law; but cannot of their own head say what the law is. The law is never submitted to them, as part of their inquiry. Vaugh. 143. No finding can in general be complained of, as against a Judge's direction; but as against the weight of evidence, and in that case the remedy is well known. The warrant of commitment, as stated in the return in Bushell's Case, was nevertheless expresly granted against the Jury, for finding contrary to the direction of the Judge in a matter of law. Which part of the return, Vaughan, C. J. said, literally taken, was insignificant and not intelligible; and if it had any meaning, stript of the veil and colour of words, was a direct argument for the abolition of the form of trial by Jury; because the Judge in such case must resolve both the law and the fact. True it is, the Chief Justice does there put a particular case of a Jury finding against a Judge's direction, which in general, for the reason he has given, is impossible: and that case is, where a Judge asks the Jury previous to the verdict, How they find such a particular thing propounded to them? If on their giving an answer the Judge adds, Then, as you agree to find the fact so, the law is for the plaintiff or defendant: and if the finding is afterwards contrary to what he declares, they do in that case find contrary to the Judge's direction in matter of law. But in that case, the regular order of proceeding is directly inverted; the Judge makes them find a particular fact previous to his declaration of the law: whereas, what Vaughan, C. J. calls the discreet and lawful assistance of a Judge to a Jury, is always to give an hypothetical direction to the Jury; not by previously having their answer to the fact, and thereupon declaring the law to controul their verdict; but to leave their verdict free, by saying, If you find the fact so and so, then the law is for the plaintiff; or you are to find for the plaintiff; or vice versâ. See Vaugh. 136, 143, 4.

"All this reasoning shews, that the province of Judge and Jury, as to law and fact, are separate and exclusive: that in the general and regular form of proceeding, it is impossible for a verdict to be said to be against a direction in law; but if the case should happen, the verdict must be rectified; for this plain reason, that it appears in such a case the Jury have taken upon them the determination of the law, which is entirely out of their jurisdiction.

"Besides what has been already said, it seems undeniably to appear, that Juries are designed by the Constitution to be Judges of the fact only, and not of the law, for these reasons: First, Because the contrary supposition is against the plain tenor of their Oath. The form of every oath administered in a court of justice, is either according to common law, or as required by some act of parliament. 3 Inst. 165. An oath of office contains a summary description of duty; and the terms of a Jury's oath are so strictly applicable to fact only, that they do by the strongest implication exclude any cognizance of the law. Every Juror, in a cause, is enjoined by his oath "well and truly to try the issue joined between the parties, and a true verdict to give according to the evidence." Now to consider this by parts. 1. He is well and truly to try; How can one well and truly try any point but according to his knowledge? Either, as has been contended, according to his own previous knowledge, or according to the information he meets with at the

the time of the examination: A Juror may have knowledge of both kinds as to the fact; but it is not requisite he should have either as to the law.—2. The oath directs the Jury to try the issue joined; this issue is always a fact denied on one side, and affirmed on the other; where the law is directly in dispute, the issue (as has been already repeatedly observed in the remarks on the stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 60,) goes before the Court, and not at all before a Jury. And though during the trial of an issue of fact, points of law do very often incidentally arise, it does not follow from thence that they are under the cognizance of the Jury; any more than disputes about practice, the competence of witnesses, or whether such and such evidence is admissible; which do as often arise in the course of a trial, and were never contended to belong to the Jury. The law, therefore, because it arises out of the fact, and because in the end it is to govern it, does not, on that account, appertain to the Jury, if from other considerations it appears to be improper.—3. What can be meant by a true Verdict?—Truth, both Philosophers and Lawyers will refer to fact, rather than opinion about law: when it is referred to opinion, we mean the agreement of a proposition with our own ideas, or the ideas of others. But how those who have such faint and imperfect ideas as Jurors have of law, can discern this agreement, or judge of the truth, in such a case, every reasoning man must be at a loss to determine.—4. But to exclude the possibility of a doubt in this question, their oath does not only direct them to find the truth, but tells them what rule or measure they are to go by in their enquiry. They are to find a true verdict, according to the evidence. This branch of the oath, which governs the whole, can be applied only to the fact. The fact only is in evidence, and consequently the law not being in evidence is not before them. See Vaugh. 143. Thus in the clearest terms does the oath limit and define their duty.

" But, secondly, in the course and management of a trial, other persons are likewise under an oath, and have duties incumbent on them also. Now without looking into the oath of a Judge, it will be easily understood to be inconsistent with his duty and his oath to be a mere cypher on the Bench. A Judge however will be little more than a cypher, either if he sits and says nothing, or if what he does say is to go for nothing. The Jury's ignorance of law makes it necessary for the Judge to tell them what the law is in the case before them; but he tells it them surely to very little purpose, if they think themselves afterwards at liberty to determine otherwise.

" Other arguments there are also which deserve to have weight on this question, drawn from the forms of pleading and the general frame of records; than which none perhaps be produced more worthy to be relied on.

" 1. It i known in constant experience, that by the mode o wing a demurrer, the matter in debate is referred gether to the decision of the Court, and in reality never does go before a Jury. By a demurrer, the bare law is in question; the fact being constantly admitted, if clearly expressed. The reason of admitting the fact in that case seems to be, that without such confession of the fact the Court have no ground to go upon; for the law in every case arises from the fact. The case then must really exist before the legality of it, as to circumstances, can be determined. But if a matter where the law only is in question, is never, nor can in its nature be, sent to a Jury, it proves almost to a demonstration, that the Jury have nothing to do with bare law.—2. Nor is the argument to be drawn from the nature of a special verdict of less force on this occasion. The ignorance of the Jury as to the law in the case, and their reference to the Court, is the constant language of a special verdict. Not that the Jury can in reality be supposed more ignorant of the law arising in such a case, than they are in a thousand others, where all is concluded under a general verdict. Indeed in that light, the common Juries are now much improved in their knowledge of the law, there being very few instances of their expressing their doubts in special verdicts at this day. The reason of having special verdicts was, at all times, in order to have the point of law solemnly determined, and remain on record; without which, in many cases, no writ of error could have been brought in former times, nor the point reserved for the consideration of the Court. The usage of stating a case, and having a general verdict, subject to the opinion of the Court afterwards on the circumstances of the case, is an invention of late times; and is found in practice to be less expensive, and to answer to the parties as well as a special verdict. But the case stated, and the special verdict, are equally proofs of what is here contended for, by expresly leaving the law to the Court for their determination. See ante III.

" The professed patrons of the right of the Jury to be judges of law have principally applied their doctrine, as has been already remarked, to the case of libels; but they were aware that the conclusion would be general, though the case was particular; because the right of the Juries to determine the law in the case of libels, could only be a consequence of their right to find the law in other cases. There seems to be this fatality that has in practice attended the case of libels, that the law and the fact have not been always accurately distinguished: and perhaps in feverish times, some particulars have been contended for as implications of law, which ought rather to have been considered as facts, and left to the Jury. [An evil, and perhaps the only one, in some measure guarded against, by the construction put on the stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 60; mentioned at the beginning of this discussion.]

" It seems however universally, that any action, the intention of the agents, and every other circumstance under which that action was done, are equally facts, and as such cognizable by a Jury; but whether that action, under all the circumstances in which it has been admitted or proved to have been done, is a crime or not, is what the law alone can determine; and the Judges, whose breasts are the depositories of the law, alone can pronounce. Otherwise it is evident the quality of human actions, more especially of those that are in themselves indifferent, and have been defined by Society alone, would be referred not only to a very variable standard, but an incompetent one. Apply this particularly to the case of libels, and the least reflection will be sufficient to shew, that the power and province of Juries is the same in case of libels as in every other case. And that in no case whatever a Jury has, in its nature, a cognisance of law, though by accident the law may have been sometimes left to them."

To

To draw towards a conclusion of this long discussion; the very interesting nature of which must plead the Editor's excuse for the foregoing multiplied extracts and observations:—There are some arguments in favour of the Jury's right, as relates to criminal cases, which seem not answered by the remarks arising from the conduct of civil causes. In the first place, their Oath is, that they shall "well and truly try, and a true deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner whom they have in charge, and a true Verdict give according to the evidence."—Now it is not expressed what they shall try; it is therefore inferred, that the whole of the case is submitted to their determination. But we must recollect that in this, as in all cases, an Issue is joined, between the King and the Prisoner, of Not guilty; and Guilty: (See this Dict. tit. Trial.) The Verdict according to the Evidence must be therefore on the Issue, as in all other cases; and the Fact only, not the Law, is submitted to the consideration of the Jury.—Some doubt has arisen on the word Deliverance; whether it applies to delivering the verdict; to the deliverance of the culprit from his charge and imprisonment; or whether it does not simply mean a true deliberation on, and consideration of, the evidence produced to them: which latter is the sense most approved by legal writers and historians on the subject. If indeed it does apply to the deliverance of the prisoner, still it must be a true deliverance, on proof of his innocence, or rather on failure in the proof of his guilt.

Another argument, which at first bears the appearance of more weight than those just mentioned, though it has not been frequently relied on, is this; That, from the very nature and words of the verdict the Jury are constituted Judges of the law, as well as the fact, in criminal cases.—That the words Guilty or Not Guilty do not merely ascertain the commission or non-commission of any indifferent fact; but the commission of a criminal fact; or the being free from any crime, as the fact is not done, or as the fact though done were lawful, or performed without any illegal or criminal intention. That therefore the Jury in terms decide, by their verdict, not only on the perpetration of the fact, but on the criminality annexed to it; since if the fact be not criminal, no guilt is incurred; and therefore the verdict of guilty would be false, and of not guilty nonsensical; no guilt attaching to a praise-worthy, an indifferent, or an innocent act.—Two answers suggest themselves; one, that the language in which alone the Jury can deliver a general verdict, according to the rules positively prescribed to them by law, at all events allows the fact charged to be criminal as far as the judgment or discretion of the Jury on that question can be exercised, whatever may be the subsequent decision of the Court. The second, that the language of the verdict, interpreted according to the rules of law, of practice, and of common sense, is this—"Guilty—If the fact, with which the prisoner is charged be sufficiently stated, and is a crime in the eye of the law." And that this is the true interpretation of the verdict of guilty, the right of the Court to arrest the judgment, in case, on inspection of the record, they are of opinion that the fact charged is no crime, or, if a crime, is defectively charged, is undeniable proof. This right of the Court to decide the law in the event of a verdict of guilty is recognised by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 60. already so often cited.

Still it may be objected that the Jury by a verdict of Not guilty have a right to decide the law. But the fallacy of confounding the terms right and power has already been noticed: and it may be added that though nineteen Juries were successively to acquit nineteen defendants on a charge of publishing the same libel, their verdicts could never be produced as precedents in law, that a twentieth person might not be indicted for the same libel, and found guilty by a twentieth Jury.—To put the case still stronger; it is by no means an uncommon circumstance, that where several criminals are included in the same indictment, they sever in their challenges, and are therefore tried separately: but it was never imagined that the conviction or acquittal of one, had the least effect upon the question of the guilt or innocence of the others.—Whereas the decision of the Court, on an indictment, that the fact charged in it as a crime was not such, or was defectively charged, would quash the whole indictment against all; and be a precedent for arresting the judgment on any subsequent conviction, or indictment under the same circumstances—Why? Clearly because in one case the mere fact is decided, as relates to the Individual accused; in the other the question of law, as relates to the Crime charged.

In fine, it will doubtless be granted that this dispute on the power, province, and rights of Juries has arisen from a jealousy, on their parts, of the predilection supposed to be entertained by Judges of the Courts of Law, in favour of the King's prerogative; and, on the other hand, from the opinion those courts entertain that Juries may be too much inclined to screen popular offenders from the punishment of the law.—It may not be unjust to imagine, that as Judges are now independent of the Crown, they are, from their educations, habits, and characters, full as likely to act from unbiassed principles of justice, as any Jury selected from the defendant's equals: and who, from what may well be considered as a praise-worthy anxiety in behalf of a fellow-citizen, must unavoidably feel every cause as in some measure affecting themselves no less than the party accused.

Who presented last? Who is the rightful patron? &c. The awarding a Jus Patronatûs is not of necessity, but at the pleasure of the Ordinary, for his better information who hath the right of patronage, for if he will at his peril take notice of the right, he may admit the clerk of either of the patrons, without a Jus Patronatûs. 1 Leon. 168. JUSTICEMENTS, from justitia, All things belonging to justice. Co. on Westm. 1. fol. 225. Also the effects or execution of justice or of jurisdiction.

JUSTICES; Justiciarii.

Officers deputed by the King to administer Justice, and do right by way of judgment. They are called Justices because in ancient time the Latin word for a Judge was justitia, and for that he hath his authority by deputation, and not jure magistratûs. Glanvil. lib. 2. c. 6. See title Judges.

Of these Justices there are various sorts, with various powers and duties, as hereafter shortly set forth under the subsequent titles Justices of Assise, &c.; and see this Dict. titles Courts; Chancery; Equity; King's Bench; Common Pleas, &c.

Justices of Assise, Justiciarii ad capiendas assisas.] Such as were wont by special commission to be sent (as occasion was offered) into this or that county, to take assises for the ease of the Subjects; for, as these actions pass always by Jury, many men could not, without damage and charge, be brought to London, therefore Justices for this purpose, by commission particularly authorized, were sent to them. For it seems, that the Justices of the Common Pleas had no power to take assises till the stat. of 8 R. 2. c. 2, by which they were enabled to do it, and to deliver gaols. And the Justices of the King's Bench have by that statute such power affirmed unto them, as they had one hundred years before.

These commissions ad capiendas assisas, have of late years been settled and executed only in Lent, and the long vacation, (called now the Lent and Summer Assises,) when the Justices, and other learned lawyers, may be at leisure to attend those controversies; whereupon it also falls out, that the matters that were wont to be heard by more general commissions of Justices in Eyre, are heard all at one time with these assises, which was not so of old, as appears by Bracton, lib. 3. cap. 7. num. 2. And by this means the Justices of both Benches being worthily accounted the fittest of all others, and their assistants, were employed in these affairs. That Justices of Assise and Justices in Eyre did anciently differ, appeareth by stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 5. And that Justices of Assise and Justices of Gaol-delivery were different, is evident by stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 3. The oath taken by the Justices of Assise is all one with that taken by the Justices of the King's Bench. Old Abridgment of Statutes, tit. Sacramentum Justiciariorum. Cowell. See further title Assise.

To what is said under this Dict. title Assise, may be added, that

The Courts of Assise and Nisi Prius are composed of two or more commissioners, who are sent twice in every year, by the King's special commission, all round the kingdom, (except London and Middlesex, where Courts of of Nisi Prius are holden in and after every Term, before the Chief or other Judge of the several superior Courts; and except the four Northern Counties, where the assises are only holden twice a-year,) to try by a jury of the respective counties the truth of such matters of fact as are then under dispute in Westminster-Hall. These Judges of Assise came into use in the room of Justices in Eyre, justiciarii in itinere (or itinerantes); who were regularly established, if not first appointed by the parliament of Northampton, A. D. 1176, 22 Hen. 2, with a delegated power from the King's Great Court, or aula regia, being looked upon as members thereof: and they afterwards made their circuit round the kingdom once in seven years for the purpose of trying causes. Co. Lit. 293. They were afterwards directed by Magna Charta, c. 12, to be sent into every county twice a-year, to take (or receive the verdict of the jurors, or recognitors in certain actions then called) recognitions in assises; the most difficult of which they are directed to adjourn into the Court of Common Pleas, to be there determined. The Itinerant Justices were sometimes mere Justices of Assise, or of Dower, or of Gaol-delivery, and the like; and they had sometimes a more general commission, to determine all manner of causes, being constituted Justiciarii ad omnia placita. Bract. l. 3. tr. 1. c. 11. But the present Justices of Assise and Nisi Prius are more immediately derived from the stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 30, which directs them to be assigned out of the King's sworn Justices, associating to themselves one or two discreet knights of each county. By stat. 27 E. 1. c. 4, (explained by 12 E. 2. c. 3,) assises and inquests were allowed to be taken before any one Justice of the court in which the plea was brought; associating to him one knight, or other approved man of the county. And, lastly, by stat. 14 E. 3. c. 16, Inquests of Nisi Prius may be taken before any Justice of either Bench, (though the plea be not depending in his own court,) or before the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, if he be a man of the law; or otherwise before the Justices of Assise, so that one of such Justices be a Judge of the King's Bench or Common Pleas, or the King's Serjeant sworn. They usually make their circuits in the respective vacations after Hilary and Trinity Terms; assises being allowed to be taken in the holy time of Lent by consent of the Bishops at the request of the King, as expressed in stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 51. And it was also usual, during the times of popery, for the prelates to grant annual licences to the Justices of Assise to administer oaths in holy times: for oaths being of a sacred nature, the logic of those ages concluded that they must be of ecclesiastical cognizance. Instances hereof may be met with in the Appendix to Spelman's Original of the Terms, and in Parker's Antiquities, 209. The prudent jealousy of our ancestors ordained, that no man of law should be Judge of Assise in his own county wherein he was born or doth inhabit. Statutes 4 E. 3. c. 2: 8 Rich. 2. c. 2: 33 Hen. 8. c. 24. But this restraint is now taken off, as to Justices of Oyer and Terminer, by stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 27. See post that title; and for further information on this head, this Dict. tit. Assise.

The Courts of Nisi Prius in London and Middlesex are called Sittings; and those for Middlesex were established by the Legislature in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. In ancient times all issues in actions brought in that county were tried at Westminster in the Terms, at the bar of the Court in which the action was instituted: but when the business of the Courts increased, these trials were found so great an inconvenience, that it was enacted by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 12, that the Chief Justice of the King's Bench should be empowered to try within the term, or within four days after the end of the term, all the issues joined in the Courts of Chancery and King's Bench; and that the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, should in like manner try the issues joined in their respective Courts.—In the absence of any one of the Chiefs, the same authority was given to two of the Judges or Barons of his Court.—The stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 31, extended the time to eight days after term; and impowered one Judge or Baron to sit in the absence of the Chief.—Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18, extended the time after Term still further to 14 days.

JUSTICES OF BOTH BENCHES, Shall decide pleas commenced before other matters be arraigned. Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 46. See this Dict. titles King's Bench; Common Pleas.

JUSTICES IN EYRE, Justiciarii itinerantes. So termed of the old French word erre, as a grand erre, i. e. magnis itineribus, proverbially spoken.] These, in ancient time, were sent with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially, as were termed Pleas of the Crown. And this was done for the ease of the people, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the case were too high for the county-court: They differed from the Justices of Oyer and Terminer, who were sent upon one or a few special causes, and to one place; whereas the Justices in Eyre were sent through the provinces and counties of the land, with more indefinite and general commission, as appeareth by Bracton, lib. 3. cc. 11, 12, 13. and Britton, cap. 2.

And again, because the Justices of Oyer and Terminer were sent uncertainly upon any uproar, or other occasion in the country; but these in Eyre (as Mr. Gwin sets down in the Preface to his Reading) were sent but once in every seven years; with whom agrees Horne in his Mirror of Justices, l. 2. c. Queux poient estre attourn, &c. & l. 2. cap. Des peches criminals, &c. al suit del Roy, &c. And lib. 3. cap. De Justices in Eyre: Where he also declares what belongs to their office. But according to Orig. Juridiciales, they went oftener. These were instituted by King Henry the Second, as Camden in his Brit. witnesseth, pag. 104.—Hoveden par. post. suor. Annal. fol. 113, hath of them these words, Justiciarii itinerantes, constituti per Henricum secundum, qui divisit Regnum suum in sex partis, per quarum singulas tres Justiciarios itinerantes constituit, &c. In some respect they resembled our Justices of Assise at present, though their authority and manner of proceeding much differ. 1 Inst. 293: Cowell. See ante tit. Justices of Assise.

JUSTICE OF THE FOREST, Justiciarius forestæ;] Is a Lord by his office, and hears and determines all offences within the forest, committed against vert or venison: Of these there are two, whereof one hath jurisdiction over all forests on this side Trent, the other of all beyond it. The chief point of their jurisdiction consisteth upon the articles of the King's charter, called Charta de foresta, made anno 9 Hen. 3. concerning which see Camd. Brit. p. 214.

p. 214. The court where this Justice sits and determines, is called The justice-seat of the forest, held once every three years. Manwood's Forest Laws, cap. 24. He is also called Justice in Eyre of the Forest; and is the only Justice that may appoint a deputy by the statute of 32 Hen. 8. c. 35. See title Forest.

JUSTICES OF GAOL-DELIVERY, Justiciarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are those who are sent with commission, to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such, who for any offence are cast into gaol: part of their authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners who are not bailable by law, nor by the statute De Finibus, cap. 3. F. N. B. fol. 151. These seem in ancient time to have been sent into the country upon several occasions; but afterwards Justices of Assise were likewise authorized to the like purposes. Anno 4 Ed. 3. c. 3. Their oath is all one with others of the King's Justices of either Bench. See stat. 2 E. 3. c. 2: Old Abridgment of the Statutes, tit. Sacramentum Justiciariorum: Cowell. Justices of Assise, if laymen, shall deliver the gaols. Stat. 27 Ed. 1. st. 1. c. 3.—The Justices of Peace shall deliver over their indictments to the Justices of Gaol-delivery. Stat. 4 Ed. 3. c. 2.—See post, Justices of Oyer and Terminer.

JUSTICE OF THE HUNDRED, Justiciarius Hundredi.] Erat ipse hundredi Dominus, qui et centurio et centenarius, hundredique aldermannus appellatus est. Praeerat omnibus hundredi friborgis, cognovitque de causis majusculis, quae in eisdem finiri non potuerunt. Spelm. See title Hundred.

JUSTICES OF THE JEWS, Justiciarii ad custodiam Judaeorum assignati.] King Richard I. after his return out of the Holy Land, anno 1194, appointed particular Justices, laws, and orders, for preventing the frauds, and regulating the contracts and usury of the Jews. Hoveden, parte post. p. 745: Claus. 3 Ed. 1. m. 19.

JUSTICES OF LABOURERS. Justices heretofore appointed to redress the frowardness of labouring men, who would either be idle, or have unreasonable wages. See the old Statutes 21 Ed. 3. c. 1: 25 Ed. 3. c. 8: 31 Ed. 1. c. 6.

JUSTICES OF NISI PRIUS, Are all one at this time with Justices of Assise, for it is a common adjournment of a cause in the Common Pleas, to put it off to such a day, Nisi Prius Justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; unless the Justices shall first come to a place named to take the assises; which they are sure to do; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called Justices of Nisi Prius, as well as Justices of Assise. Their commission you may see in Cromp. Juris. fol. 204; yet with this difference between them, that Justices of Assise have power to give judgment in a cause, but Justices of Nisi Prius only to take the verdict. But in the nature of both their functions, this seems to be the greatest difference, that Justices of Nisi Prius have to deal in causes personal as well as real; whereas Justices of Assise, in strict acceptation, meddle only with the possessory writs called Assise. Cowell. See title Justices of Assise; and titles Jury; Judges; Assise.

JUSTICES OF OYER AND TERMINER, Justiciarii ad audiendum & terminandum.] Were Justices deputed upon some special or extraordinary occasions. Fitzherbert in his Nat. Brev. saith, That the commission d'Oyer and Terminer is directed to certain persons upon any great riot, insurrection, heinous misdemeanors, or trespasses committed. And because the occasion of granting this commission should be maturely weighed, it is provided by the statute made 2 Ed. 3. c. 2, That no such commission ought to be granted, but that they shall be dispatched before the Justices of the one Bench or other, or Justices errant, except for horrible trespasses, and that by the special favour of the King. The form of this commission, see F. N. B. f. 110.

The Courts of Oyer and Terminer, and general Gaol-delivery, are of a general nature, and universally diffused over the kingdom; but yet are of a local jurisdiction, and confined to particular districts. These are held before the King's Commissioners, among whom are usually two Judges of the Courts at Westminster, twice in every year, in every county of the kingdom; except the four northern ones, where they are held only once, and London and Middlesex, wherein they are held eight times. These were slightly mentioned under the foregoing article, Justices of Assise; and under title Assise, it is observed, that, at what is usually called the Assises, the Judges sit by virtue of five several authorities: two of which, the Commission of Assise and its attendant jurisdiction of Nisi Prius, being principally of a civil nature, are there explained: to which may here be added, that these Justices have, by virtue of several statutes, a criminal jurisdiction also, in certain special cases. 2 Hal. P. C. 39: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 7. As to another authority, the Commission of the Peace; See post, title Justices of the Peace. It may here be mentioned, that all the Justices of the Peace of any county wherein the assises are held, are bound by law to attend them, or else are liable to a fine, in order to return recognizances, &c. and to assist the Judges in such matters as lie within their knowledge and jurisdiction, and in which some of them have probably been concerned, by way of previous examination. But the authority now to be explained is the commission of Oyer and Terminer, to hear and determine all treasons, felonies, and misdemeanors. This is directed to the Judges and several others, or any two of them; but the Judges or Serjeants at Law only are of the quorum, so that the rest cannot act without the presence of one of them. The words of the commission are, "to inquire, hear, and determine:" so that by virtue of this commission they can only proceed upon an indictment found at the same assises; for they must first inquire, by means of the Grand Jury or Inquest, before they are empowered to hear and determine by the help of the Petit Jury. Therefore they have besides all these a commission of general Gaol-delivery, which empowers them to try and deliver every prisoner, who shall be in the gaol when the Judges arrive at the circuit town, whenever, or before whomsoever indicted, or for whatever crime committed. It was anciently the course to issue special writs of gaol-delivery for each particular prisoner, which were called the Writs de bono et malo; 2 Inst. 43: but these being found inconvenient and oppressive, a general commission for all the prisoners has long been established in their stead. So that, one way or the other, the gaols are in general cleared, and all offenders tried, punished, or delivered, twice in every year: a constitution of singular use and excellence.

Some-

Sometimes also, upon urgent occasions, the King issues a special and extraordinary commission of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol-delivery, confined to those offences which stand in need of immediate inquiry and punishment, upon which the course of proceeding is much the same as upon general and ordinary commissions.

Formerly it was held, in pursuance of the statutes 8 R. 2. c. 2: 33 H. 8. c. 4, that no Judge or other lawyer could act in the commission of Oyer and Terminer, or in that of Gaol-delivery, within his own county where he was born or inhabited; in like manner as they are prohibited from being Judges of Assise, and determining civil causes. But that local partiality, which the jealousy of our ancestors was careful to prevent, being judged less likely to operate in the trial of crimes and misdemeanors, than in matters of property and disputes between party and party, it was thought proper by the stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 27, to allow any man to be a Justice of Oyer and Terminer and general Gaol-delivery within any county of England. 4 Comm. 269—271. In fine, as the Justices of Assise and Nisi Prius are appointed to try civil causes, so are the Justices of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-delivery to try indictments for crimes all over the kingdom, at what are generally denominated the Circuits or Assises; and the towns where they come to execute their commissions are called the Assise towns, and generally the County towns.

JUSTICES OF THE PAVILION, Justiciarii Pavilionis] Are certain Judges of a Pie-powder Court, of a most transcendent jurisdiction, held under the Bishop of Winchester at a fair on St. Giles's Hill near that city, by virtue of letters patent granted by Richard II. and Edw. IV. Episcopus Wynton, & successores suos, à tempore quo, &c., Justiciarios suos, qui vocantur Justiciarii Pavilionis, cognitiones placitorum & aliorum negotiorum eâdem feriâ durante, necnon claves portarum & custodiam prædictæ civitatis nostræ Wynton, pro certo tempore feriæ illius, & nonnullas alias libertates, immunitates & consuetudines habuisse, &c. See the patent at large in Prynne's Animad. on 4 Inst. fol. 191.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE;

Judges of Record, appointed by the King's commission to be Justices within certain limits; generally within the counties where they are resident; for the conservation of the peace, and for the execution of divers things comprehended within their commission, and within divers statutes committed to their charge. Dalt. c. 2. See Burn's J. tit. Justices of the Peace. The principal of these is the Custos Rotulorum, or Keeper of the Records of the County. 1 Comm. 349.

I. Of the Origin of these Officers.
II. Of their Commission, and its Determination.
III. Of their Qualifications.
IV. Of their Power, Duty, and Office.

I. The Common Law hath ever had a special care and regard for the conservation of the peace: for peace is the very end and foundation of Civil Society. And therefore before the present constitution of Justices was invented, there were peculiar officers apointed by the common law for the maintenance of the public peace. Of these, some had and still have this power annexed to other offices which they hold; others had it merely by itself, and were thence named Custodes or Conservatores Pacis. Those that were so virtute officii still continue: but the latter sort are superseded by the modern Justices.

The King's Majesty is, by his office and dignity royal, the principal Conservator of the peace within all his dominions, and may give authority to any other to see the peace kept, and to punish such as break it: hence it is usually called the King's Peace. Lamb. Eirenarch. 12.—The Lord Chancellor or Keeper, the Lord Treasurer, the Lord High Steward of England, (when any such officers are in being,) and all the Justices of the Court of King's Bench (by virtue of their offices), and the Master of the Rolls (by prescription), are general Conservators of the peace throughout the whole kingdom, and may commit all breakers of it, or bind them in recognizances to keep it. Lamb. 12. The other Judges are so, only in their own courts. The Coroner is also a Conservator of the peace within his own county; as is also the Sheriff; and both of them may take a recognizance or security of the peace. Britt. 3: F. N. B. 81. Constables, tythingmen, and the like, are also conservators of the peace within their own jurisdictions; and may apprehend all breakers of the peace, and commit them, till they find sureties for their keeping it. Lamb. 14. See title Constable.

Those that were, without any office, simply and merely Conservators of the peace, either claimed that power by prescription, or were bound to exercise it by the tenure of their lands; or, lastly, were chosen by the freeholders in full county-court before the Sheriff; the writ for their election directing them to be chosen de probioribus et potentioribus comitatûs sui in custodes pacis. Lamb. 15—17. But when Queen Isabel, the wife of Edward II. had contrived to depose her husband, by a forced resignation of the crown, and had set up his son Edward III. in his place, this being a thing then without example in England, it was feared would much alarm the people: especially as the old King was living, though hurried about from castle to castle, till at last he met with an untimely death. To prevent therefore any risings, or other disturbances of the peace, the new King sent writs to all the Sheriffs in England, the form of which is preserved by Thomas Walsingham, Hist. A. D. 1327; giving a plausible account of the manner of his obtaining the crown; to wit, that it was done ipsius patris bene placito; and withal commanded each Sheriff, that the peace be kept throughout his bailiwick, on pain and peril of disinheritance and loss of life and limb. And in a few weeks after the date of these writs, it was ordained in parliament, by stat. 1 E. 3. c. 16, that, for the better maintaining and keeping of the peace in every county, good men and lawful, which were no maintainers of evil, or barretors in the county, should be assigned to keep the peace. And in this manner, and upon this occasion, was the election of the conservators of the peace taken from the people and given to the King, Lamb. 20; this assignment being construed to be by the King's commission, stats. 4 E. 3. c. 2: 18 E. 3. st. 2. c. 2. But still they were only called Conservators, Wardens, or Keepers of the Peace; till the stat. 34 E. 3. c. 1, gave them the power of trying felonies; and then they acquired the more honourable appellation of Justices. Lamb. 23.

Polidore Virgil says, that Justices of the Peace had their beginning in the reign of William I. called the Conqueror; but Sir Edward Coke was of opinion, that in the sixth year of K. Ed. I., Prima fuit institutio Justiciariorum pro pace conservandâ. Mr. Prynne affirms, that in the reign of King Hen. III. after the agreement made between that King and his barons, Guardians ad pacem conservandam were constituted: And Sir Henry Spelman differs from both these, being of opinion that they were not made until the beginning of the reign of King Ed. III. when they were thought necessary for suppressing commotions, which might happen upon dethroning of K. Ed. II. It is certain the general commission of the peace, by statute, began 1 Ed. III; though before that time there were particular commissions of peace to certain men, in certain places; but not throughout England. 2 Nelf. Ab. 1063.

To explain further what has been said above, as to the election of the Conservators of the peace being taken from the people and given to the King, it should be remarked, that such election, when made, was by force of the King's writ; after which election so made and returned, the King directed a writ to the party so elected, to take upon him and execute the office, until the King should order otherwise. 2 Inst. 558, 9.

Justices of Peace were formerly to be allowed 4*s.* a-day during their attendance at the quarter sessions, to be paid by the Sheriffs of counties. 12 R. 3: 2 H. 5: 18 H. 6.

II. These Justices are appointed by the King's special commission under the Great Seal, the form of which was settled by all the Judges, A. D. 1590: Lamb. 43. 35. The power of constituting them is only in the King; though they are generally made at the discretion of the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, by the King's leave; and the King may now appoint in every county in England and Wales as many as he shall think fit. 1 Inst. 174. 175. See post. III. Their commission appoints them all, jointly and severally, to keep the peace; and any two more of them to inquire of and determine felonies and other misdemeanors: in which number some particular Justices, or one of them, are directed to be always included, and no business to be done without their presence; the words of the commission running thus, "Quorum (Of whom) aliquem vestrum, A. B. C. D. &c. unum esse volumus, any one of you the aforesaid A. B. C. D. &c. we will shall be one;" whence the persons so named are usually called Justices of the Quorum. And formerly it was customary to appoint only a select number of Justices, eminent for their skill and discretion, to be of the Quorum; but now the practice is to advance almost all of them to that dignity, naming them all over again in the Quorum clause, except perhaps only some one person for the sake of propriety: and no exception is now allowable for not expressing in the form of warrants, orders, &c. that the Justice who issued them is of the Quorum. Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 27. See also stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 21. When any Justice intends to act under this commission, he sues out a writ of Dedimus potestatem, from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, empowering certain persons therein named to administer the usual oaths to him; which done, he is at liberty to act.

As the office of these Justices is conferred by the King, so it subsists only during his pleasure; and is determinable, 1. By the demise of the Crown; that is, in six months after. Stat. 1 Ann. c. 8. But if the same Justice is put in commission by the Successor, he shall not be obliged to sue out a new dedimus, or to swear to his qualification afresh, stat. 1 Geo. 3. c. 13: nor, by reason of any new commission, to take the oaths more than once in the same reign. Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 9.—2. By express writ under the Great Seal, discharging any particular person from being any longer Justice. Lamb. 67.—3. By superseding the commission by writ of supersedeas, which suspends the power of all the Justices, but does not totally destroy it, seeing it may be revived again by another writ called a procedendo.—4. By a new commission, which virtually, though silently, discharges all the former Justices that are not included therein; for two commissions cannot subsist at once.—5. By accession of the office of Sheriff or Coroner. Stat. 1 Mar. st. 1. c. 8. [A Sheriff cannot act as Justice during the year of his office: but it has been observed, that neither this statute referred to by Blackstone, nor any other, disqualifies a Coroner from acting as a Justice of the Peace; nor do the two offices in their nature seem incompatible. 1 Comm. c. 9. n. 14.] Formerly it was thought, that if a man was named in any commission of the peace, and had afterwards a new dignity conferred upon him, that this determined his office; he no longer answering the description of the commission; but now by stat. 1 E. 6. c. 7, it is provided, that, notwithstanding a new title of dignity, the Justice on whom it is conferred shall still continue a Justice. If a new commission is made and granted for Justices of Peace, out of which some of the Justices in the old commission are omitted, yet what acts they do as Justices are lawful till the next sessions, at which the new commission is published; and when the new commission is published, they are to take notice of it, and not act further. Moor. 187. Though by granting a new commission, discharge under the Great Seal, accession of another office, and by the demise of the King, the power and offices of Justices of Peace determine, 4 Inst. 165; yet till then they are empowered to act in a great many particular cases by statute.

On renewing the commission of the peace, (which generally happeneth as any person is newly brought into the same,) there cometh a writ of Dedimus potestatem directed out of Chancery, to some antient Justice (or other) to take the oath of him which is newly inserted, which is usually in a schedule annexed: and to certify the same into that court, at such a day as the writ commandeth. Unto which oath are usually annexed the oaths of allegiance and supremacy. Lamb. 53.

The form of which oath of office at this day is as followeth:

"YE shall swear, that as Justice of the Peace in the county of W. in all articles in the King's commission to you directed, you shall do equal right to the poor and to the rich, after your cunning, wit, and power, and after the laws and customs of the realm, and statutes thereof made: And ye shall not be of counsel of any quarrel hanging before you: And that ye hold your sessions after the form of the statutes thereof made: And the issues, fines, and amerciaments that shall happen to be made, and all forfeitures which shall fall before you, ye shall cause to be entered without any concealment (or embezzling), and truly send them to the King's Exchequer. Ye shall not let, for gift or other cause, but well and truly ye shall do your office of Justice of the Peace in that behalf: And that you take nothing for your office of Justice of the Peace to be done, but of the King and fees accustomed, accustomed, and costs limited by statute. And ye shall not direct, nor cause to be directed, any warrant (by you to be made) to the parties, but ye shall direct them to the bailiff of the said county, or others the King's officers or ministers, or other indifferent persons, to do execution thereof. So help you GOD." Burn. J. tit. Justices of the Peace III.

III. Touching the Number and Qualifications of these Justices; it was ordained by stat. 18 E. 3. c. 2, that two or three of the best reputation in each county should be assigned to keep the peace. But these being found rather too few for that purpose, it was provided by stat. 34 E. 3. c. 1, that one lord, and three or four of the most worthy men in the county, with some learned in the law, shall be made Justices in every county. But afterwards the number of Justices, through the ambition of private persons, became so large, that it was thought necessary, by stats. 12 Ric. 2. c. 10. and 14 Ric. 2. c. 11, to restrain them at first to six, and afterwards to eight only. But this rule is now disregarded, and the cause seems to be (as Lambard observed long ago) that the growing number of statute laws, committed from time to time to the charge of Justices of the Peace, have occasioned also (and very reasonably) their increase to a larger number. And as to their qualifications, the statutes just cited direct them to be of the best reputation, and most worthy men in the county; and stat. 13 Ric. 2. c. 7, orders them to be of the most sufficient knights, esquires, and gentlemen of the law. Also, by stat. 2 Hen. 5. st. 1. c. 4; and st. 2. c. 1, they must be resident in their several counties. And because contrary to these statutes, men of small substance had crept into the commission, whose poverty made them both covetous and contemptible, it was enacted by stat. 18 Hen. 6. c. 11, that no Justice should be put in commission, if he had not lands to the value of 20*l.* per annum. And the rate of money being greatly altered since that time, it was enacted by statutes 5 Geo. 2. c. 18: 18 Geo. 2. c. 20, that every Justice, except as is therein excepted, shall have 100*l.* per annum clear of all deductions; and, if he acts without such qualification, he shall forfeit 100*l.* This qualification is almost an equivalent to the 20*l.* per annum required in Henry the Sixth's time; and of this the Justice must now make oath. Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 20. Also, it is provided by the stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 18, that no practising attorney, solicitor, or proctor, shall be capable of acting as a Justice of the Peace for any county.

The said stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 20, provides that no person shall be capable of being a Justice of Peace, or acting as such, who shall not have in law or equity, for his own use in possession, a freehold, copyhold, or customary estate for life, or some greater estate, or for years determinable upon a life or lives, or 21 years, in lands, &c. of the clear yearly value of 100*l.* over and above all incumbrances, rents, and charges; or entitled to the immediate reversion or remainder in lands, &c. of 300*l.* per ann. and who shall not take the oath in this act mentioned, under the penalty of 100*l.* to be recovered by action of debt, and the proof of the qualification to lie on the defendant; and if he insists on any lands not mentioned in the oath, he is to give notice of them; and lands, not mentioned in the oath or notice, are not to be allowed. This act not to extend to Corporation Justices, or to the eldest sons of peers, and of gentlemen qualified to be knights of shires, the officers of the Board of Green Cloth, principal Officers of the Navy, Under Secretaries of State, Heads of Colleges, or to the Mayors of Oxford and Cambridge; all of whom may act without any qualification by estate.

IV. The Power, Office, and Duty of a Justice of the Peace depend on his commission, and on the several statutes which have created objects of his jurisdiction. His commission, first, empowers him singly to conserve the peace; and thereby gives him all the power of the antient conservators at the common law, in suppressing riots and affrays, in taking securities for the peace, and in apprehending and committing felons, and other inferior criminals. It also empowers any two or more to determine all felonies, and other offences; which is the ground of their jurisdiction at the Sessions. And as to the powers given to one, two, or more Justices by the several statutes, which from time to time have heaped upon them such an infinite variety of business, that few care to undertake, and fewer understand, the office; they are such, and of so great importance to the public, that the country is greatly obliged to any worthy magistrate that, without sinister views of his own, will engage in this troublesome service. 1 Comm. c. 9: and see 4 Comm. c. 20. If therefore a well-meaning Justice makes any undesigned slip in his practice, great lenity and indulgence are shewn to him in the Courts of Law; and there are many statutes made to protect him in the upright discharge of his office; which, among other privileges, prohibit such Justices from being sued for any oversights without notice before-hand; and stop all suits begun, on tender made of sufficient amends. See stats. 7 Jac. 1. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 12: 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. But, on the other hand, any malicious or tyrannical abuse of their office is usually severely punished; and all persons who recover a verdict against a Justice, for any wilful or malicious injury, are entitled to double costs. See 1 Comm. 350—4.

Justices of Peace are to hold their sessions four times a year, i. e. the first week after Michaelmas, the Epiphany, Easter, and St. Thomas called Becket, being the 7th of July. Stats. 36 Ed. 3. c. 12: 12 R. 2. c. 10. They are Justices of Record, for none but Justices of Record can take a recognizance of the peace. Every Justice of Peace hath a separate power, and may do all acts concerning his office apart and by himself; and even may commit a fellow Justice upon treason, felony, or breach of the peace: and this is the ancient power which Conservators of the peace had at common law. But it has been held, that one Justice of the Peace cannot commit another Justice, for breach of the peace; though the Justices in sessions may do it. Lamb. Just. 385: Jenk. Cent. 174. By several statutes Justices may act in many cases where their commission doth not reach; the statutes themselves being a sufficient commission. Lamb. lib. 4: Wood's Inst. 79, 80.

The statute 4 H. 7. c. 12, (and statutes 33 H. 8. c. 10: 37 H. 8. c. 7,) give them a farther general power than is expressed either in their commission, or in any particular statute. The particular statutes are to be executed as they direct; wherein if no express power is given to any one Justice, he can admonish only, and if not obeyed, may make presentment of the offence upon the statute, and with his fellow Justices hear and determine it in Sessions; or he may bind the offender to the peace, peace, or the good behaviour: some statutes empower one Justice of Peace alone to act; some require two, three, four Justices, &c. And where a special authority is given to Justices of Peace, it must be exactly pursued; or the acts of the Justices will not be good. 2 Salk. 475.

If a Justice of Peace does not observe the form of proceeding directed by statute, it is coram non judice, and void; but if he acts according to the direction of the statutes, neither the Justices in sessions nor B. R. can reverse what he has done. Jones 170.

The power of Justices is ministerial when they are commanded to do any thing by a superior authority, as by the court of B. R. &c. In all other cases they act as judges: but they must proceed according to their commission, &c. Where a statute requires any act to be done by two Justices, it is an established rule, that if the act is of a judicial nature, or is the result of discretion, the two Justices must be present to concur and join in it, otherwise it will be void; as in orders of removal and filiation, the appointment of overseers, and the allowance of the indenture of a parish apprentice: but where the act is merely ministerial, they may act separately, as in the allowance of a poor rate. This is the only act of two Justices which has yet been construed to be ministerial; and the propriety of this construction has been justly questioned. 4 Term Rep. 386. A Justice is to exercise his authority only within the county where he is appointed by his commission; not in any city which is a county of itself, or town corporate, having their proper Justices, &c. though in other towns and liberties he may. Dalt.

From the general rule, that a Justice is to act only within his own county, two considerations arise: One, how far a Justice can act when he is out of the county; the other, when he is in the county, how far his power extends to other counties.

As to the former case, when he is out of the county, it is said that the Justices have no coercive power when out of the county; and therefore that an order of bastardy, or for payment of labourers' wages, made by them out of the county, is not binding. Yet it is said, that recognizances and informations voluntarily taken before them in any place are good. 2 Hawk. P. C. And Hale says, that a Justice of the Peace may do a ministerial act out of his county, as examining a party robbed whether he knows the felons: but that he cannot do a compulsory act, as committing a person for not giving a recognizance.

When a Justice of Peace acts to compel another to perform any thing required by law, as where he imprisons or commands any one to be imprisoned, &c. he cannot act out of the jurisdiction of his county; but he may take informations any where to prove offences in the county where committed, and he principally resides; or take a recognizance to prosecute. Cro. Car. 213. Now, however, by stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 49, any Justice acting as such for any two or more counties, being adjoining counties, may act in all matters concerning any or either of the said counties; and all acts of any such Justice, and of any officer in obedience thereto, shall be as valid as if done in the county to which they relate. Provided that such Justice be personally resident in one of the said counties at the time of doing such act, and that his warrants, &c. be directed, in the first instance, to the constable, &c. of the county to which the same relate.

As to the latter case, wherein it is supposed that the Justice's power is limited to that county only, the stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55, enacts, That where a Justice shall grant a warrant against a person escaping or residing out of his jurisdiction, a Justice of the county, &c. where such person shall reside, shall indorse his name on the warrant, which shall be a sufficient authority to the person to whom the warrant was originally directed, to execute the warrant, and carry the person before the Justice who indorsed the warrant, or any other Justice of the same county, who, if the offence be bailable, shall take bail for the person's appearing at the next sessions for the county, &c. where the offence was committed, and deliver the recognizance and all proceedings to the constable, &c. who apprehended the party, to be by him delivered to the clerk of the peace of the county, &c. where the fact was committed; if the fact be not bailable, or the party shall not give bail, the constable may carry the party before a Justice of the county where the fact was committed. No action lies against the Justice who indorses such warrant, but only against the Justice who granted it, if cause.

Justices either of the county from which tenants fraudulently remove goods, or of that in which they are concealed, may convict the offenders in their respective counties.—Unless facts are stated to make the contrary appear, the court always presumes in favour of the acts of inferior jurisdictions. R. v. Morgan, Cald. ca. 156.—Also, by stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7, a Justice dwelling in a city or precinct, that is a county of itself within the county at large, may act at his own dwelling-house for such county at large. This statute is explained by stat. 28 Geo. 3. c. 49. § 7, which provides, that any Justice acting for any county at large, may act as such at any place within any city, &c. being a county of itself, and situate within, or adjoining to such county at large; but not to extend to give such Justices of the county, not being Justices of the city, &c. power to act in any matters relating to such city, &c.

A man may be a Justice of Peace in one part of Yorkshire, and yet not be a Justice of Peace in every part of the county; this county being divided into separate ridings. Hill. 22 Car. B. R.

By stat. 16 Geo. 2. c. 18, Justices of Peace may do all things relating to the laws for relief of the poor, the passing and punishing vagrants, the repairs of the highways, or concerning parochial taxes or rates, although such Justices are rated to the taxes, within any place where they execute their office: but no Justice shall act in determining any appeal to the quarter-sessions, from any order that relates to the parish where he is so charged. In the case of R. v. Yarpole, it was determined, that on an appeal to the sessions, against an order of removal, those Justices who are rated to the relief of the poor in either of the contending parishes have not a right to vote. 4 Term Rep. 71.

By stat. 5 Geo 2. c. 19, on appeals to Justices of Peace in the sessions, they are to cause defects in form in orders, &c. to be rectified without charge, and then determine the matters according to the merits of the case; and their proceedings shall not be removed into B. R. without entering into recognizance of 50*l.* to prosecute with effect, and pay costs if affirmed.

By stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 18, no certiorari shall issue to remove any order, made by Justices of Peace of any county, &c.

&c. or at the quarter-sessions, unless it be applied for within six months, and proved on oath that six days' notice in writing was given to the Justices, by whom the order was made, that they or the parties concerned may shew cause against it. See tit. Certiorari.

If a commission of oyer and terminer issues to hear and determine felonies, that determines the commissions of Justices of Peace as to felonies, though not as to the peace, &c. The stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 13, directs Justices of Peace to take examinations in cases of felony and murder, and to certify them to the Justices of gaol-delivery, &c. since which they forbear to try great felonies. H. P. C. 166.

Justices of Peace may take an information against persons committing treason; issue warrants for their apprehension, and commit them to prison, &c. They commit all felons in order to trial; and bind over the prosecutors to the Assises: and if they do not certify examinations and informations to the next gaol-delivery, or do not bind over prosecutors, &c. they shall be fined. Dalt. c. 11.

For petit larceny and small felonies, the Justices in their Quarter Sessions may try offenders; other felonies being of course tried at the Assises: and in case of felonies, and pleas upon penal statutes, they cannot hold cognizance without an express power given them by the statutes. Justices of Peace in their sessions cannot try a cause the same sessions, without consent of parties, &c. for the party ought to have convenient time, or it will be error. Cro. Car. 317: S[illegible] 34. Nor can the sessions of Justices refer a matter which ought to be tried, to be determined by another session; yet they may refer a thing to another to examine, and make report to them for their determination. 2 Salk. 477. The Sessions is all as one day, and the Justices may alter their judgments at any time while it continues. Ibid. 494. See tit. Sessions.

It is incident to the office of a Justice of Peace to commit offenders: and a Justice may commit a person that doth a felony in his own view, without warrant; but if it be on the information of another, he must make a warrant under hand and seal for that purpose. If a Justice issues a warrant to arrest a felon, and the accusation be false, the Justice is excused, where a felony is committed: if there be no accusation, action will lie against the Justice. 1 Leon. 187. A Justice makes a warrant to apprehend a felon, though he is not indicted, he who executes the warrant shall not be punished. 13 Rep. 76: Cro. Jac. 432. If complaint and oath be made before a Justice of Peace, by one, of goods stolen, and that he suspects they are in such a house, and shews the cause of his suspicion; the Justice may grant a warrant to the constable, &c. to search in the place suspected; and seize the goods and person in whose custody they are found, and bring them before him, or some other Justice, to give an account how he came by them; and farther to abide such order, as to law shall appertain. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 114. The search on these warrants ought to be in the day-time, and doors may be broken open by constables to take the goods; which are to be deposited in the hands of the sheriff, &c. till the party robbed hath prosecuted the offender, to have restitution. Ibid. 150, 151.

A Justice of Peace may make a warrant to bring a person before himself only, and it will be good; though it is usual to make warrants to bring the offenders before him or any other Justice of the county, &c. And if a Justice directs his warrant to a private person, he may execute it. 5 Rep. 60: 1 Salk. 347.

It seems now to be indisputable, that in all cases where Justices of Peace have a jurisdiction over the offence, they may grant a warrant in order to compel the person accused to appear before them; for it would be absurd to give them power to examine an offender, unless they had also a power to compel him to attend and submit to such examination. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 15. And this extends undoubtedly to all treasons, felonies, and breaches of the peace, and also to all such offences as they have power to punish by statute. Sir E. Coke indeed hath laid it down, that a Justice of the Peace cannot issue a warrant to apprehend a felon upon bare suspicion; no, not even till an indictment be actually found; 4 Inst. 176: and the contrary practice is by others held to be grounded rather upon connivance, than the express rule of law, though now by long custom established. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 16. A doctrine which would in most cases give a loose to felons to escape without punishment; and therefore Sir Matthew Hale hath combated it with invincible authority and strength of reason: maintaining, 1. That a Justice of Peace hath power to issue a warrant to apprehend a person accused of felony though not yet indicted; 2 Hal. P. C. 108; and, 2. That he may also issue a warrant to apprehend a person suspected of felony, though the original suspicion be not in himself, but in the party that prays his warrant, because he is a competent judge of the probability offered to him of such suspicion. But in both cases it is fitting to examine upon oath the party requiring a warrant, as well to ascertain that there is a felony or other crime actually committed, without which no warrant should be granted; as also to prove the cause and probability of suspecting the party against whom the warrant is prayed. Ibid. 110. This warrant ought to be under the hand and seal of the Justice, should set forth the time and place of making, and the cause for which it is made; and should be directed to the constable, or other peace-officer, (or, it may be, to any private person by name;) Salk. 176: requiring him to bring the party either generally before any Justice of the Peace for the county, or only before the Justice who granted it; the warrant in the latter case being called a special warrant. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13. § 26. A general warrant to apprehend all persons suspected, without naming or particularly describing any person in special, is illegal and void for its uncertainty, 1 Hal. P. C. 580: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 13: for it is the duty of the magistrate, and ought not to be left to the officer, to judge of the ground of suspicion. And a warrant to apprehend all persons, guilty of a crime therein specified, is no legal warrant: for the point, upon which its authority rests, is a fact to be decided on a subsequent trial; namely, whether the person apprehended thereupon be really guilty or not. It is therefore in fact no warrant at all; for it will not justify the officer who acts under it; whereas a warrant properly penned, (even though the magistrate who issues it should exceed his jurisdiction,) will, by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, at all events indemnify the officer who executes the same ministerially. And, when a warrant is received by the officer, he is bound to execute it, so far as the jurisdiction of the magistrate and himself extends. A warrant from the Chief or other Justice of the Court of King's Bench extends all over the kingdom; and is tested, or dated, England;

England; not Oxfordshire, Berks, or any other particular county. But the warrant of a Justice of the Peace in one county, as Yorkshire, must be backed, that is, signed, by a Justice of the Peace in another, as Middlesex, before it can be executed there. Formerly, regularly speaking, there ought to have been a fresh warrant in every fresh county; but the practice of backing warrants had long prevailed without law, and was at last authorised by stats. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26: 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. And now, by stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 31, any warrant for apprehending an English offender, who may have escaped into Scotland, and vice versâ, may be indorsed and executed by the local magistrates, and the offender conveyed back to that part of the united kingdoms in which such offence was committed. 4 Comm. 290—2. See ante.

Justices of Peace may make and persuade an agreement in petty quarrels and breaches of the peace, where the King is not entitled to a fine: though they may not compound offences, or take money for making agreements. Noy, 103. Justices may not intermeddle with property; if they do, action lies against them and the officers who execute their orders. 3 Salk. 217. But see title Forcible Entry.

A Justice of Peace hath a discretionary power of binding to the good behaviour; and may require a recognizance with a great penalty of one for his keeping of the peace, where the party bound is a dangerous person, and likely to break the peace, and do much mischief. Pasch. 1652: 2 Lill. Abr. 131. And where a person is to be bound to the good behaviour, for default of sureties he may be committed to gaol. But a man giving security for keeping the peace in B. R. or the Chancery, may have a supersedeas to the Justices in the country not to take security; and so where a person hears of a warrant out against him, and gives surety of the peace to any other Justice, &c. See title Peace, Surety of.

If one make an assault upon a Justice of Peace, he may apprehend the offender, and send him to gaol till he finds sureties for the peace; and a Justice may record a forcible entry upon his own possession: in other cases he cannot judge in his own cause. Wood's Inst. 81. Where a man abuseth a Justice by words, before his face or behind his back, in relation to his office, he may be bound to his good behaviour; and if a Justice of Peace be abused in the execution of his office, the offender may be also indicted and fined. Cromp. 145: 4 Rep. 16. To say of a Justice of Peace he doth not understand law, &c. is indictable; and contempts against Justices are punishable by indictment and fine at the Sessions. 3 Mod. 139: 1 Sid. 144. But abusing a Justice out of his office, by words that do not relate to his office, seems to stand only as in the case of other persons.

If a magistrate abuses the authority reposed in him by the law, in order to gratify his malice, or promote his private interests or ambition, he may be punished also criminally by indictment or information. But the Court of K. B. have frequently declared, that though a Justice of Peace should act illegally, yet if he has acted candidly without any bad view or ill intention whatsoever, the Court will never punish him by the extraordinary mode of an information, but will leave the party complaining to the ordinary method of prosecution by action or indictment. Burr. 556, 785, 1162: 1 Term Rep. 653, 692. And in no case will the Court grant an information, unless an application for it is made within the second Term after the offence is committed; and unless notice of the application be previously given to the Justice, and the party injured will undertake to bring no action.* And if the party proceeds both by action and indictment, the Attorney General will grant a nolo prosequi to the indictment. Indeed where a Justice has committed an involuntary error, without any corrupt motive or intention, it may be questioned, whether it is an indictable offence. 1 Comm. 354. c. 9: and Mr. Christian's note there.

Justices shall not be regularly punished for any thing done by them in Sessions as Judges; and if a Justice of Peace be sued for any thing done in his office, he may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence; and if a verdict goes for him, or the plaintiff be nonsuit, he shall have double costs. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 12. Though if a Justice of Peace is guilty of any misdemeanor in his office, Information lies against him in B. R. where he shall be punished by fine and imprisonment. Sid. 192. If a person be never summoned by Justices of Peace, to be heard and make his defence, before the Justices make any order against him, it is a misbehaviour for which an information will lie against them. See title Conviction.

The Court of B. R. will grant an information against a Justice of Peace on motion for sending a servant to the House of Correction without sufficient cause; if the Justice do not shew good cause, &c. Mod. Cas. in L. and E. 45, 46. And for contempt of laws, &c. attachment may be had against Justices of Peace in B. R. on motion of the Attorney General, &c. A Justice of Peace fined a thousand marks, for corrupt practices. See 1 Keb. 727.

The stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44, particularly provides, that no writ shall be sued out against any Justice of Peace, for any thing done by him in the execution of his office, until a notice in writing shall be delivered to him one month before the suing out the same, containing the cause of action, &c. within which month he may tender amends, and if the tender be found sufficient, he shall have a verdict. No such plaintiff shall recover against the Justice, unless such notice shall be proved at the trial. If the Justice shall neglect to make such tender, or shall make an insufficient tender, he may, before issue joined, pay into Court such sum as he shall think fit. Where an action is against a Justice and constable, if there be a verdict against the Justice, and the constable be acquitted, the plaintiff shall recover such costs against the Justice, as to include the costs the plaintiff shall be obliged to pay to the constable. And this statute enacts, that if the plaintiff in any such action shall recover against a Justice, and the Judge shall certify that the injury was wilfully and maliciously done, the plaintiff shall recover double costs. No action shall be brought against a Justice for any thing done in the execution of his office, unless commenced within six months after the act committed.

By the stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20, in all cases of a warrant of distress for levying any penalty inflicted, or money directed to be paid, the Justice or Justices granting such warrant, may therein order the goods distrained to be sold within a certain time limited in the warrant, to be not less than four days, nor more than eight days, unless the the penalty or money, with the reasonable charges of taking and keeping such distress, be sooner paid. The officer may deduct the reasonable charges of taking, keeping, and selling the distress; and if required, shall shew the party his warrant, and permit him to take a copy of it. This not to extend to stats. 7 & 8 W. 3. c 34: 1 Geo. 1. c. 6; as to levying tithes, &c. on Quakers.—The stat. 18 Geo. 3. c. 19, enables Justices to award costs on determination of complaints before them, and to levy them by distress and sale of the parties goods, or commit the offender to the House of Correction. General rules as to costs may be settled in Sessions, and allowed by the Judges on their circuits.

The stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 14, was made for the regulation of fees of Justices' clerks; a table of which is to be made at sessions, and allowed by the Judges on their circuits; and in Middlesex, by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 16, by the Chief Justices at Westminster, or any two of them.

For further matter relative to this extensive and useful office, see Burn's Justice, title Justices of the Peace; and that book, and this Dictionary, passim; the latter, particularly under titles Commitment; Conviction; and other apposite titles.

Justices of Peace within Liberties; Justiciarii ad pacem infra libertates.] Are such in cities, and other corporate towns, as the others are of the county; and their authority is all one within the several territories and precincts, having besides the assise of ale and beer, wood, victuals, &c. See stat. 27 H. 8. c. 5. But if the King grant to a Corporation, that the Mayor and Recorder, &c. shall be Justices of Peace within the city; if there be no words of exclusion, Justices of the county have concurrent jurisdiction with them; and the King, notwithstanding his charter, may grant a commission of the peace specially in that city or county. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 47. Also where the Justices of any corporate town, deny doing right, Justices of the Peace of the county may inquire into it. Mod. Cas. 164. The Justices of Peace in cities, or towns corporate, may commit persons apprehended within their liberties to the House of Correction of the county, &c. which persons shall be liable to the like correction and punishment, as if committed there by any Justice of the same county. Stat. 15 Geo. 2. c. 24. Justices of cities and corporations are not within the qualification act, 5 Geo. 2. c. 18. See titles Mayors; Corporations; Justices of the Peace.

Justices of Trail-baston, Were Justices appointed by King Ed. I. during his absence in the Scotch and French wars. They were so stiled, says Hollingshed, of trailing or drawing the staff of justice; or for their summary proceeding, according to Sir Edward Coke, who tells us, they were in a manner Justices in Eyre; and it is said, they had a baston, or staff, delivered to them as the badge of their office, so that whoever was brought before them was traile ad baston, traditus ad baculum: whereupon they had the name of Justices de trail baston, or Justiciarii ad trahendum offendentes ad baculum vel baston. Their office was to make inquisition through the kingdom on all officers and others, touching extortion, bribery, and such like grievances; of intruders into other men's lands, barretors, robbers, and breakers of the peace, and divers other offenders; by means of which inquisitions, some were punished with death, many by ransom, and the rest flying the realm, the land was quieted, and the King gained riches towards the support of his wars. Mat. Westm. anno 1305. A commission of trail-baston was granted to Roger de Grey, and others his associates, in the reign of King Ed. III. Spelm. Gloss.

Justice-Seat, Is the highest Court that is held in a Forest, and is always held before the Lord Chief Justice in Eyre of the forest, upon warning forty days before; and there fines are set for offences, and judgments given, &c. Manwood's Forest Law, cap. 24. The fine and amercement of the Justices in Eyre, for false judgment, or other trespass, shall be assessed by the said Justices upon the oaths of Knights, and other honest men, and be estreated into the Exchequer. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 18. And Justices in Eyre shall appoint a time for delivering in all writs by the Sheriff, &c. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 10. See this Dictionary, title Forest.

JUSTICIAR, or JUSTICIER, Fr. Justicier.] A Judge, Justice, or as he was sometimes termed, Justiciary: Shakspeare uses the term Justicer for Judge. The Lord Bermingham, Justicier of Ireland. Baker's Chron. Angl. fol. 118.

The whole jurisdiction which is now distributed among the several Courts of Westminster-Hall, seems in the first reigns after the Conquest to have been lodged in one Court, commonly called the King's Court, where justice is said to have been administered sometimes by the King himself in person, and sometimes by the High Justicier, who was an officer of very great authority, and used in the King's absence beyond sea to govern the realm as Vice-Roy. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3.

The first Justiciaries after the Conquest were Odo bishop of Baieux in Normandy, half brother by the mother to the conqueror, and William Fitz Osborn, who was viceroy, and had the same power in the north that Odo had in the south, and was the chief in the Conqueror's army. The next Justiciaries were William Earl of Warren in Normandy, a great commander in the battle against Harold, and Richard de Benefacta, alias Richard de Tonebridge, son to Gilbert Earl of Brion in Normandy, and were constituted in 1073. In a great plea between Lanfrank and the said Odo, Goisfrid Bishop of Constance in Normandy, was Justiciary. In the beginning of William Rufus, Odo was again Justiciary. William de Carileso, bishop of Durham, a Norman, succeeded Odo, and then followed Ranulph Flambard in 1099. Afterwards, in the reign of Hen. I. in 1100, Hugo de Bocland, a Norman, was Justiciary, and after him his son Richard Basset; then Roger Bishop of Salisbury, was Justiciary, and Chancellor. The next, in the time of King Stephen, was Henry Duke of Normandy, afterwards King Henry II. And in Henry the Second's time was Robert de Bello Monte Earl of Leicester in 1168, but Alberic de Vere Earl of Guisnes, is said to have been Justiciary before him; and after Earl of Leicester, Richard de Lucie was made Justiciary; after him in 1180, Ranulph de Glanville, that famous lawyer, was made Justiciary; after him, Hugo de Putacio, commonly called Pusat, Pusac, or Pudsey, nephew to King Stephen by his sister, was made Justiciary in the north parts beyond Trent; and William de Longo-Campo, or Long-Champ, Bishop of Ely, was at the same time, by Richard the First, made Justiciary on the south parts of this side Trent. Then, after the deprivation of William Bishop of Ely, Walter Archbishop of Rouen in Normandy, was made Justiciary of all England. Brady's Preface, &c. 151. (D) (E) (F); 152. (A) (B) (C); See Dugd. Chron. Series, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.

William Long-Champ Bishop of Ely, Chief Justiciar and Lord Chancellor to Ric. I. Speed. 473. Fitz Peter, Chief Justiciar in the first of John. Ib. 487. Hubert de Burgh Earl of Kent, Chief Justiciar. 1 Hen. 3: Ib. 513. And after him, Stephen Segrave. Ib. 521. The Chief Justiciar was the Minister of regal command in the absence of the King. Ib. 513.

Towards the latter end of the Norman period, the power of the Grand Justiciar was broken, so that the Aula Regis, which before was one great Court where the Justiciar presided, was divided into four distinct Courts, viz. Chancery, Exchequer, King's Bench, and Common Pleas. Gilb. Hist. View of the Court of Exchequer 7, cites Madd. 2, 4. It determined about the 45 H. 3. Brady's Preface, &c. 154. b.

The Chancellor was the first in order on the left hand of the Justiciary, and as he was a great person in Court, so he was in the Exchequer; for no great thing passed but with his consent and advice; nothing could be sealed without his allowance and privity. But the Justiciary surmounted him and all others in authority; and he alone was endowed with and exercised all the power which afterwards was executed by the four chief Judges, viz. the Chief Justice of B. R. the Chief Justice of C. B. the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, and the Master of the Court of Wards. Brady's Preface to the Roman History, 153. (B). As long as the power of the Justiciar continued, the Aula Regis was one Court, and only distinguished by the several officers; for all the officers were united under the Justiciar, and he was the governor and superintendant of the Courts. Gilb. Hist. View of the Exchequer, 10. See titles Judge; Justices; Court; King's Bench; &c.

JUSTICIATUS, Judicature, Prerogative. Cowell.

JUSTICIES, is a writ directed to the Sheriff in some special cases, by virtue of which he may hold plea of debt in his County Court for a large sum; whereas, otherwise, by his ordinary power, he is limited to sums under 40*s.* F. N. B. 117: Kitch. 74. It is called Justicies, because it is a commission to the Sheriff to do a man justice and right, beginning with the word Justicies, &c. Bract. lib. 4, makes mention of a Justicies to the Sheriff of London, in a case of dower: and it lies in account, annuity, customs, and services, &c. New Nat. Br. In debt, the writ runs thus: The King to the Sheriff of S. greeting: We command you, that You Justice A. B. that justly and without delay he render to C. D. five pounds, which to him he oweth, as it is said, and as reasonably he can shew, that he ought to render him, that no more clamour thereof we may hear, for default of justice, &c.

This writ of Justicies impowers the Sheriff, for the sake of dispatch, to do the same justice in his County Court as might otherwise be had at Westminster. Finch. 318: F. N. B. 152. The Freeholders of the county are the real Judges in this Court, and the Sheriff is the ministerial officer. 3 Comm. 36. c. 4. See this Dictionary, title County Court.

JUSTIFIABLE HOMICIDE. See title Homicide.

JUSTIFICATION, justificatio] A maintaining or shewing good reason in Court why one did such a thing which he is called to answer. Broke. Pleas in Justification are to set forth some special matter whereby the party justifies what he hath done concerning lands or goods; as that he did it by authority: and this may be by the law, or from another person; wherein, to make it right, there must be good authority, which is to be exactly pursued. Shep. Epit. 1041. Justification may be in trespass, and under writs, processes, &c. But a person cannot justify a trespass, unless he confesseth it; for he ought to plead the special matter, and confess and justify what he hath done. 3 Salk. 218. Where a defendant justifies in trespass on his possession, by virtue of any estate, he must shew his title; but when the matter is collateral to the title to the land, it is otherwise. 2 Mod. 70. Sed Qu. If he should not give colour? or probably such plea may amount to the general issue. If a sheriff, or other officer, justifies by virtue of any returnable writ, he is to shew that the writ was returned; though he need not if the writs are not returnable writs. 1 Salk. 409. And it must be shewn from what Courts the writs issued. Ibid. 517.

When the action concerns a transitory thing, if the defendant justify the taking or doing in one place; it is a Justification in all places: if the action concern a local thing, a Justification in one place is not a Justification in another place; for in the former case the place is not material, but the mere doing or taking of the thing is the substance; and in the latter, the place is material, as the defendant may be able to justify as to one place, and not in another. 2 Lil. Abr. 134. If the matter of Justification is local, there the defendant ought to shew the cause specially, and traverse the place; but not where it is transitory. Cro. Eliz. 667. If one have corn upon the lands of another, and he take it, and the owner of the ground sues him, he must justify, and not plead the general issue. 5 Rep. 85. In actions for entering a close, and taking corn; the defendants may justify they did it as servants to the parson; and that the corn was tithe, severed from the nine parts, &c. 2 Keb. 44. A man may plead in Justification, that land is his freehold, on making an entry thereon, &c. That one entered a house to apprehend a felon; or by warrant to levy a forfeiture; to take a distress, &c. And in assault that he did it in his own defence, &c. Lib. Ent. Words spoken may be justified, because spoken in a legal way: for words the defendant may justify in an action; but not in an indictment, &c. 1 Danv. 162: 3 Salk. 326. See titles Action; Words; Libel.

A Justification (in other words) is a special plea in bar; as in actions of assault and battery, son assault demesne, viz. that the plaintiff first, with force and arms, assaulted the defendant, and he defended himself, and therefore, if any damage happened to plaintiff, it was owing to the assault he made on defendant, and in his necessary defence;—in other actions of trespass, that the defendant did the thing complained of in right of some office which warranted him so to do;—or in an action of slander, that the plaintiff was guilty of such or such a crime, and therefore he, the defendant, spoke the words. See titles Pleading; Trespass, &c.

KEEP. A strong tower or hold in the middle of any castle or fortification, wherein the besieged made their last efforts of defence, was formerly in England called a Keep: and the inner pile within the castle of Dover, erected by King Hen. II, about the year 1153, was termed the King's Keep: so at Windsor, &c. It seems to be something of the nature of that which is called abroad a Citadel.

KEEPER OF THE FOREST, Custos Forestæ.] Or Chief-warden of the Forest, hath the principal government over all officers within the forest; and warns them to appear at the Court of Justice-seat, on a general summons from the Lord-Chief Justice in Eyre. Manwood, part 1. p. 156. See title Forest.

KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL, Custos magni sigilli.] Is a Lord by his office, stiled Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England, and is of the King's Privy Council: through his hands pass all charters, commissions and grants of the King, under the Great Seal; without which seal many of those grants and commissions are of no force in law; for the King is by interpretation of law a corporation, and passeth nothing but by the Great Seal, which is as the public faith of the kingdom, in the high esteem and reputation justly attributed thereto.

The Great Seal consists of two impressions, one being the very seal itself with the effigies of the King stamped on it; the other has an impression of the King's arms in the figure of a target, for matters of a smaller moment, as certificates, &c. that are usually pleaded sub pede sigilli. And anciently, when the King travelled into France or other foreign kingdoms, there were two Great Seals; one went with the King, and another was left with the Custos Regni, or the Chancellor, &c.

If the Great Seal be altered; the same is notified in the Court of Chancery, and public proclamations made thereof by the Sheriffs, &c. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 171, 4.

The Lord Keeper of the Great Seal, by statute 5 Eliz. c. 18, hath the same place, authority, pre-eminence, jurisdiction, and execution of laws, as the Lord Chancellor of England hath; and he is constituted by the delivery of the Great Seal, and by taking his oath, 4 Inst. 87. See Lamb. Archeion. 65: 1 Rol. Abr. 385. and this Dictionary, title Chancellor.

KEEPER OF THE PRIVY SEAL, Custos privati sigilli.] That officer, through whose hands all charters, pardons, &c. pass, signed by the King, before they come to the Great Seal: and some things which do not pass that seal at all: he is also of the Privy Council, but was anciently called only Clerk of the Privy Seal; after which he was named Guardian del Privy Seal; and lastly, Lord Privy Seal, and made one of the great officers of the kingdom. See stat. 12 R. 2. c. 11: Rot. Parl. 11 H. 4: and stat. 34 H. 8. c. 4.

The

The Lord Privy Seal is to put the seal to no grant without good warrant; nor with warrant, if it be against law, or inconvenient, but that he first acquaint the King therewith. 4 Inst. 55. KERNELLARE DOMUM, from Lat. Crena, a notch.] To build a house formerly with a wall or tower, kernelled with crannies or notches, for the better convenience of shooting arrows, and making other defence. Du Fresne derives this word from quarnellus, or quadranellus, a four-square hole or notch; ubicunque patent quarnelli sive fenestræ: and this form of walls and battlements for military uses might possibly have its name from quadrellus, a four-square dart. It was a common favour granted by our Kings in ancient times, after castles were demolished for prevention of rebellion, to give their chief Subjects leave to fortify their mansion-houses with kernelled walls. Paroch. Antiq. 533.

KIDNAPPING, The forcible abduction and conveying away of a man, woman, or child from their own country, and sending them to another; it is an offence at common law. Raym. 474.

This is unquestionably a very heinous crime, as it robs the King of his Subjects, banishes a man from his country, and may in its consequences, be productive of the most cruel and disagreeable hardships; and therefore the common law of England has punished it with fine, imprisonment, and pillory. 2 Show. 221: Skin. 47: Comb. 10.

The stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7, though principally intended against pirates, has a clause that extends to prevent the leaving of such persons abroad, as are thus kidnapped or spirited away; by enacting, that if any captain of a merchant vessel shall (during his being abroad) force any person on shore, and wilfully leave him behind, or refuse to bring home all such men as he carried out, if able and desirous to return, he shall suffer (what seems no very adequate punishment) three months' imprisonment. There is no doubt, however, that the party thus injured may maintain an action against the party offending for damages sustained by occasion of such treatment. See title Imprisonment.

KINDRED,

KINDRED, Are a certain body of persons of kin or related to each other. There are three degrees of Kindred in our law; one in the right line descending, another in the right line ascending, and the third in the collateral line.

The right line descending, wherein the Kindred of the male line are called Agnati, and of the female line Cognati, is from the father to the son, and so on to his children in the male and female line; and if no son, then to the daughter, and to her children in the male and female line; if neither son nor daughter, or any of their children, to the nephew and his children, and if none of them, to the niece and her children; if neither nephew nor niece, nor any of their children, then to the grandson or granddaughter of the nephew; and if neither of them, to the grandson or granddaughter of the niece; and if none of them, then to the great grandson or great granddaughter of the nephew and of the niece, &c. et sic ad infinitum.

The right line ascending is directly upwards; as from the son to the father or mother; and if neither father nor mother, to the grandfather or grandmother; if no grandfather or grandmother, to the great grandfather or great grandmother; if neither great grandfather or great grandmother, to the father of the great grandfather, or the mother of the great grandmother; and if neither of them, then to the great grandfather's grandfather, or the great grandmother's grandmother; and if none of them, to the great grandfather's great grandfather, or great grandmother's great grandmother, et sic in infinitum.

The collateral line is either descending by the brother and his children downwards, or by the uncle upwards: it is between brothers and sisters, and to uncles and aunts, and the rest of the Kindred, upwards and downwards, across and amongst themselves. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1077, 1078.

If there are no Kindred in the right descending line, the inheritance of lands goes to the collateral line; but it never ascends in the right line upwards, if there are any Kindred of the collateral line, though it may ascend in that line: and there is this difference between the right line descending and the collateral line; that the right of representation of Kindred in the right descending line reaches beyond the great grandchildren of the same parents; but in the collateral line, it doth not reach beyond brothers and sisters children; for after them there is no representation among collaterals.

In the right ascending line the father or mother are always in the first degree of Kindred; and by the civil law, if the son died without issue, his father or mother succeeded, and after them his brother or sister, uncle, aunt, &c. But in case of purchase by the son, if he died without issue, his father or mother could not inherit, but his brothers and sisters, &c. by which it appears, that the father cannot succeed the son immediately, though he is the next of kin. If a man purchase lands and dies without issue, it shall never go to the half blood in the collateral line; though it is otherwise in case of a descent from a common ancestor.

The children of the brothers and sisters of the half blood, shall exclude all other collateral ascendants, as uncles and aunts, and all remoter Kindred of the whole blood in the collateral line. 2 Nelf. Abr.

There are several rules to know the degrees of Kindred; in the ascending line, take the son and add the father, and it is one degree ascending, then add the grandfather, and it is a second degree, a person added to a person in the line of consanguinity making a degree; and if there are many persons, take away one, and you have the number of degrees; as if there are four persons, it is the third degree, if five, the fourth, &c. so that the father, son, and grandchild, in the descending line, though three persons make but two degrees: To know in what degree of Kindred the sons of two brothers stand, begin from the grandfather and descend to one brother, the father of one of the sons, which is one degree, then descend to his son the ancestor's grandson, which is a second degree; and then descend again from the grandfather to the other brother, father of the other of the sons, which is one degree, and descend to his son, &c. and it is a second degree; thus reckoning the person from whom the computation is made, it appears there are two degrees, and that the sons of two brothers are distant from each other two degrees: for in what degree either of them is distant from the common stock, the person from whom the computation is made, they are distant between themselves in the same degree; and in every line the person must be reckoned from whom the computation is made. If the Kindred are not equally distant from the common stock; then in what degree the most remote is distant, in the same degree they are distant between themselves, and so the kin of the most remote maketh the degree; by which rule, I, and the grandchild of my uncle, are distant in the third degree, such grandchild being distant three degrees from my grandfather, the nearest common stock. See further at length, 2 Comm. c. 14: and this Dictionary, titles Descent; Executor, III; V. 8. The common law agrees in its computation with the civil and canon law, as to the right line; and only with the canon law as to the collateral line. Wood's Inst. 48, 9.

KING,

REX; from Lat. Rego to rule:—Sax. Cyning or Coning.] A Monarch or Potentate, who rules singly and sovereignly over a People; or he that has the highest power and rule in the land. The King is the head of the State. See Bract. lib. 1. c. 8.

THE SUPREME EXECUTIVE POWER of these Kingdoms is vested by the English laws in a single person, the King or Queen; for it matters not to which sex the Crown descends; but the Person entitled to it, whether Male or Female, is immediately invested with all the ensigns, rights, and prerogatives of Sovereign Power: as is declared by stat. 1 Mary, stat. 3. c. 1.

The Editor has endeavoured to digest and bring together much information on this head, which in former Dictionaries was either omitted or scattered through various unconnected titles. For this purpose he has, in the first place, had recourse to the valuable Commentaries; to which he has found it his duty to make continual application, through the whole of this work. The outline there furnished is here attempted to be, in some measure, filled up with various matter from other sources. It seemed, on the whole, most convenient to follow nearly the arrangement of Blackstone. The Student will, therefore, find the matter of this title thus disposed.

I. Of the Title, and Succession to the Throne.
II. Of the Royal Family.—As to the Queen, see this Dict. under that title.
III. Briefly and incidentally of the King's Councils.
IV. Of the King's Duties; and his Coronation Oath.
V. Of the King's Prerogative.

2. As relates to his Royal Character; wherein of his Sovereignty; Perfection; and Perpetuity.
3. With respect to his Authority, foreign and domestic;—in sending Ambassadors; making Treaties; War and Peace:—As One of the Estates of the Realm; Commander of our Armies and Navies; the Fountain of Justice; and of Honour: Arbiter of Domestic Commerce; Supreme Head of the Church.
4. As regards his Revenues; ordinary and extraordinary; and, in the latter, of his Civil List.
VI. Of the King's Prerogative in relation to his Debts; and see this Dict. titles Execution; Extent; Judgment; &c.
VII. The former and present state of the Prerogative in general.

The Executive Power of the English Nation being vested in a single person, by the general consent of the People, the evidence of which general consent is long and immemorial usage, it became necessary to the freedom and peace of the State, that a rule should be laid down uniform, universal, and permanent; in order to mark out with precision who is that single person, to whom are committed (in subservience to the law of the land) the care and protection of the community; and to whom in return the duty and allegiance of every individual are due.

When the succession to the Crown was formerly interrupted by the state of Society and the Constitution, which had not then arrived to the state of perfection it attained in later ages, and even more recently since the Revolution, distinctions have been frequently made between a King de facto and de jure. Though it is to be hoped that no contest of this nature is likely again to rise in these kingdoms, what is just shortly hinted on this subject will doubtless be agreeable to the Student; see further on this subject, title Treason.

If there be a King regnant in possession of the Crown, although he be but Rex de facto, and not de jure, yet he is Seignior le Roy: and another that hath right, if he be out of possession, he is not within the meaning of the stat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 1. for the Subjects to serve and defend him in his wars, &c. And a pardon, &c. granted by a King de jure, that is not likewise de facto, is void. 3 Inst. 7. If a King that usurps the Crown, grants licences of alienation or escheats, they will be good against the rightful King; so of pardons, and any thing that doth not concern the King's ancient patrimony, or the government of the People: judicial acts in the time of such a one, bind the right King and all who submitted to his judicature. The Crown was toss between the two families of York and Lancaster many years; and yet the acts of royalty done in the reign of the several competitors, were confirmed by the Parliament: and those resolutions were made, because the common people cannot judge of the King's title; and to avoid anarchy and confusion. Jenk. Cent. 130, 1.

All judicial acts done by Henry VI. while he was King, and also all pardons of felony and charters of denization granted by him, were deemed valid; but a pardon made by Edw. IV. before he was actually King, was declared void even after he came to the Crown. See 1 Hawk. P.C. c. 17.

Hale says, the right Heir of the Crown, during such time as the Usurper is in plenary possession of it, and no possession thereof in the heir, is not a King within this act; as was the case of the house of York, during the plenary possession of the Crown in Hen. IV., Hen. V., Hen. VI. But if the right Heir had once the possession of the Crown, as King, though an Usurper had got the possession thereof, yet the other continues his stile, title, and claim thereto, and afterwards re-obtains the full possession thereof; a compassing the death of the rightful heir, during that interval, is compassing of the King's death within this act, for he continued a King still, quasi in possession of his kingdom; which was the case of Ed. IV. in that small interval wherein Hen. VI. re-obtained the Crown; and the case of Ed. V. notwithstanding the usurpation of his uncle Rich. III. 1 Hal. Hist. P.C. 104.

The grand fundamental maxim upon which the Jus Coronæ, or right of succession to the Throne of these kingdoms depends, seems to be this: "That the Crown is by common law and constitutional custom hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself; but that the right of inheritance may from time to time be changed or limited by Parliament; under which limitations the Crown still continues hereditary."

First, it is in general hereditary, or descendible to the next heir, on the death or demise of the last proprietor. All regal governments must be either hereditary or elective; and as no instance can be found wherein the Crown of England has ever been asserted to be elective, by any authority but that of the Regicides at the infamous and unparalleled trial of K. Charles I., it must of consequence be hereditary. Yet an hereditary, by no means intends a jure-divino, right to the Throne; save only so far as Kingdoms, like other human fabricks, are subject to the general and ordinary dispensations of Providence. Nor indeed have a jure-divino and an hereditary right any necessary connexion with each other, as some have very weakly imagined. The hereditary right which the laws of England acknowledge, owes its origin to the founders of our Constitution, and to them only. The founders of our English Monarchy might perhaps, if they had thought proper, have made it elective; but they rather chose, and upon good reason, to establish originally a succession by inheritance. This has been acquiesced in by general consent; and ripened by degrees into common law; the very same title that every private man has to his own estate. Lands are not naturally descendible any more than Thrones; but the Law has thought proper, for the benefit and peace of the Public, to establish hereditary succession in the one, as well as the other.

Secondly, as to the particular mode of inheritance; it in general corresponds with the feodal path of descents, chalked out by the Common Law in the succession to landed Estates; yet with one or two material exceptions. Like Estates, the Crown will descend lineally to the issue of the reigning Monarch; as it did from King John to Richard II, through a regular degree of six lineal generations. As in common descents, the preference of males to females, and the right of primogeniture among the males, are strictly adhered to. But among the females, the Crown descends by right of primogeniture to the Eldest Daughter only, and her issue; and not as in common inheritances, to all the Daughters at once: the evident necessity of a sole succession to the Throne having occasioned the royal law of descents to depart from the common law in this respect. The doctrine of representation also prevails in the descent of the Crown, as it does in other inheritances, whereby the lineal descendants of any person deceased stand in the same place as their ancestor, if living, would have done. Lastly, on failure of lineal descendants, the Crown goes to the next collateral relations of the late King, provided they are lineally descended from the blood-royal; that is, from that royal stock which originally acquired the Crown. But herein there is no objection (as in the case of common descents) to the succession of a Brother, an Uncle, or other collateral relation of the half blood; provided only, that the one Ancestor from whom both are descended, be that from whose veins the blood-royal is communicated to each. The reason of which diversity, between royal and common descents, may be better understood by recurring to the general rules of Descent. See that title; Canon VI. ad fin.

If the King hath issue a son and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another venter, and purchases lands and dies, and the eldest son enters, and dies without issue the daughter shall not inherit those lands, nor any other fee-simple lands of the Crown, but the younger brother shall have them together with the Crown. Co. Lit. 15. b.

Thirdly; the doctrine of hereditary right does by no means imply an indefeasible right to the Throne. No man will surely assert this who has considered our Laws, Constitution, and History without prejudice, and with any degree of attention. It is unquestionably in the breast of the Supreme Legislative Authority of this Kingdom, The King and both Houses of Parliament, to defeat this hereditary right; and by particular entails, limitations, and provisions, to exclude the immediate heir, and vest the inheritance in any one else. This is strictly consonant to our laws and constitution, as may be gathered from the expression so frequently used in our statute-book of "the King's Majesty, his heirs and successors." In which we may observe, that as the word Heirs necessarily implies an inheritance or hereditary right generally subsisting in the royal person; so the word Successors, distinctly taken, must imply that this inheritance may sometimes be broken through; or that there may be a successor without being the heir of the King.

Fourthly; However the Crown may be limited or transferred, it still retains its descendible quality, and becomes hereditary in the wearer of it. And hence in our law the King is said never to die in his political capacity; because immediately upon the natural death of Henry, William, or Edward, the King survives in his Successor. For the right of the Crown vests eo instanti upon his heir; either the hæres natus, if the course of descent remains unimpeached, or the hæres factus, if the inheritance be under any particular settlement. So that there can be no interregnum; but as Hale observes, the right of sovereignty is fully invested in the Successor by the very descent of the Crown. 1 Hist. P. C. 61. Hence the statutes passed in the first year after the Restoration of Car. II. are always called the Acts in the 12th year of his reign; and all the other legal proceedings of that reign are reckoned from the year 1648, and not from 1660.

On this principle, that the King commences his reign from the day of the death of his ancestor, it hath been held, that compassing his death before coronation, or even before proclamation, is compassing of the King's death within the statute of 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. c. 2; he being King presently, and the proclamation and coronation only honourable ceremonies for the further notification thereof. 3 Inst. 7: 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 101. See title Treason.

However acquired therefore, the Crown becomes in the Successor absolutely hereditary; unless by the rules of the limitation it should be otherwise ordered and determined.

In these four points consists the constitutional notion of hereditary right to the Throne; which is still further elucidated and made clear beyond all dispute, by the learned Commentator, from whom much of the foregoing and following abstract is abridged, in a short historical view which he gives, of the Succession to the Crown of England, from Egbert to the present time; of the doctrines of our ancient Lawyers; and of the several statutes that have from time to time been made, to create, to declare, to confirm, to limit, or to bar, the hereditary title to the Throne. In the pursuit of this Inquiry he clearly shews, that from the days of Egbert, the first sole Monarch of this kingdom, to the present, the four cardinal maxims above mentioned have ever been held the constitutional canons of Succession to the Crown. It is true this succession, through fraud or force, or sometimes through necessity, when in hostile times the Crown descended on a Minor, or the like, has been very frequently suspended: but has generally at last returned back, into the old hereditary channel; though sometimes a very considerable period has intervened. And even in those instances where the succession has been violated, the Crown has ever been looked upon as hereditary in the wearer of it. Of which the Usurpers themselves were so sensible, that they for the most part endeavoured to vamp up some feeble show of a title by descent, in order to amuse the People, while they gained the possession of the kingdom. And when possession was once gained, they considered it as the purchase or acquisition of a new estate of inheritance, and transmitted, or endeavoured to transmit, it to their own posterity, by a kind of hereditary right of Usurpation. See 1 Comm. c. 3. p. 190—7.

If the Throne be at any time vacant, (which may happen by other means besides that of abdication; as if all the blood-royal should fail, without any successor appointed by Parliament,) the right of disposing of this vacancy seems naturally to result to the Houses of Lords and Commons, the trustees and representatives of the Nation. For there are no other hands in which it can so properly be entrusted; and there is a necessity of its being entrusted somewhere, else the whole frame of Government must be dissolved and perish.

The Preamble to the Bill of Rights expresfly declares, that "the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, assembled at Westminster, lawfully, fully, and freely represent all the Estates of the People of this realm." The Lords are not less the trustees and guardians of their country than the Members of the House of Commons. It was justly said, when the royal prerogatives were suspended during his Majesty's illness, in 1788, that the two Houses of Parliament were the organs by which the People expressed their will. And in the House of Commons, on the 16th of December in that year, two Declaratory Resolutions were accordingly passed, importing: 1. The Interruption of the Royal Authority; 2. That it was the duty of the two Houses of Parliament to provide the means of supplying that defect. On the 23d of the same month a third resolution passed, empowering the Lord Chancellor of Great Britain to affix the Great Seal to such Bill of Limitations as might be necessary to restrict the power of the future Regent to be named by Parliament: this Bill was accordingly brought forward, not without considerable opposition to its provisions, as well from private motives as on forcible political grounds; and at length, happily for the Public, arrested in its progress by the providential recovery of his Majesty in March 1789. It is observable, however, that no Bill was ever afterwards introduced to guard against a future emergency of a similar nature: on the grounds undoubtedly of delicacy to a Monarch universally beloved; in the hope of the improbability that such a circumstance should recur in future; and in the confidence of the omnipotence of Parliament if necessarily called upon again. See Belsham's Memoirs of Geo. III. sub. an. 1788-9: and the Journals of the Lords and Commons.

Towards the end of King William's reign, the King and Parliament thought it necessary to exert their power of limiting and appointing the succession, in order to prevent the vacancy of the Throne; which must have ensued upon their deaths, as no farther provision was made at the Revolution than for the issue of Queen Mary, Queen Anne, and King William. It had been previously, by the stat. 1 W. and M. stat. 2. c. 2, enacted, that every person who should be reconciled to, or hold communion with, the See of Rome, who should profess the Popish religion, or who should marry a Papist, should be excluded, and for ever incapable to inherit, possess, or enjoy the Crown; and that in such case the people should be absolved from their allegiance [to such person], and the Crown should descend to such persons, being Protestants, as would have inherited the same, in case the person so reconciled, holding communion, professing, or marrying, were naturally dead. To act therefore consistently with themselves, and at the same time pay as much regard to the old hereditary line as their former resolutions would admit, they turned their eyes on the Princess Sophia, Electress and Dutchess Dowager of Hanover. For, upon the impending extinction of the Protestant posterity of Charles I. the old law of regal descent directed them to recur to the descendants of James I. and the Princess Sophia being the youngest daughter of Elizabeth, Queen of Bohemia, who was the daughter of James I. was the nearest of the antient blood-royal, who was not incapacitated by professing the Popish religion. On her, therefore, and the heirs of her body, being Protestants, the remainder of the Crown, expectant on the death of King William and Queen Anne, without issue, was settled, by stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2. And at the same time it was enacted, that whosoever should hereafter come to the possession of the Crown, should join in the communion of the church of England as by law established.

This is the last limitation of the Crown that has been made by Parliament, and all the several actual limitations, from the time of Henry IV. to the present, (stated at large in 1 Comm. c. 3,) do clearly prove the power of The King and Parliament to new model or alter the succession. And indeed it is now again made highly penal to dispute it; for by stat. 6 Ann. c 7, it is enacted, that if any person maliciously, advisedly, and directly, shall maintain by writing, or printing, that the Kings of this realm, with the authority of Parliament, are not able to make laws to bind the Crown and the descent thereof, he shall be guilty of high treason; or if he maintains the same only by preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, he shall incur the penalties of a præmunire.

The Princess Sophia dying before Queen Anne, the inheritance thus limited descended on her son King George I. and having taken effect in his person, from him, it descended to his late Majesty King George II. and from him to his grandson and heir, our present Gracious Sovereign King George III.

The Title to the Crown therefore, though at present hereditary, is not quite so absolutely hereditary as formerly; and the common stock or ancestor, from whom the descent must be derived, is also different. Formerly the common stock was King Egbert, then William the Conqueror: afterwards in James I.'s time the two common stocks united, and so continued till the vacancy of the throne, occasioned by the abdication of James II. in 1688: now it is the Princess Sophia, in whom the inheritance was vested by the King and Parliament. Formerly the descent was absolute, and the Crown went to the next heir without any restriction; but now, upon the new settlement, the inheritance is conditional; being limited to such heirs only of the body of the Princess Sophia, as are Protestant Members of the Church of England; and are married to none but Protestants.

In this due medium appears to consist the true constitutional notion of the right of succession to the Imperial Crown of these Kingdoms. The extremes, between which it steers, are each of them equally destructive of those ends for which Societies were formed, and are kept on foot. Where the Magistrate, upon every succession, is elected by the people, and may, by the express provision of the laws, be deposed (if not punished) by his Subjects; this may sound like the perfection of Liberty, and look well enough when delineated on paper; but in practice will be ever productive of tumult, contention, and anarchy. And, on the other hand, divine, indefeasible hereditary right, when coupled with the doctrine of unlimited passive obedience, is surely, of all constitutions, the most thoroughly slavish and dreadful. But when such an hereditary right, as our laws have created and vested in the royal stock, is closely interwoven with those liberties, which are equally the inheritance of the Subject; this union will form a constitution, in theory, the most beautiful of any; in practice the most approved; and, in duration, it is to be hoped, the most permanent. It is the duty of every expounder of our Laws to lay this this Constitution before the Student in its true and genuine light; it is the duty of every good Englishman to understand, to revere, and to defend it.

II. THE first and most considerable branch of the King's Royal Family, regarded by the laws of England, is the Queen; as to whom see this Dictionary, title Queen.

The Prince of Wales, or Heir-apparent to the Crown, and also his royal consort; and the Princess Royal, or eldest daughter of the King, are likewise peculiarly regarded by the laws. For, by stat. 25 E. 3, to compass, or conspire the death of the former, or to violate the chastity of the latter, is as much high treason as to conspire the death of the King, or violate the chastity of the Queen. See this Dictionary, title Treason. The Heir-apparent to the Crown is usually made Prince of Wales and Earl of Chester by special creation and investiture; but being the King's eldest son, he is by inheritance Duke of Cornwall, without any new creation. 8 Rep. 1: Seld. title Hon. 2, 5.

The observations in Coke's reports, however, as well as the words of the statute, it has been remarked, limit the dukedom of Cornwall to the first begotten [rather first born] son of a King of England, and to him only. But although from this it is manifest, that a Duke of Cornwall must be the first begotten son of a King, yet it is not necessary that he should be born after his father's accession to the Throne.

This is, on the whole, a strange species of inheritance, and perhaps is the only mode of descent which depends upon the authority of a statute. In the Prince's case, reported by Lord Coke, the question was, whether the original grant to Edward the Black Prince, who was created in the 11th of Ed. III. Duke of Cornwall, and who was the first Duke in England after the Duke of Normandy, had the authority of Parliament; or was an honour conferred by the King's charter alone? If the latter, the limitation would have been void, as nothing less than the power of Parliament can alter the established rules of descent. But notwithstanding it is in the form of a charter, it was held to be an act of the Legislature. It concludes, per ipsum regem et totum concilium in parliamento.—Christian's Note on 1 Comm. c. 4.

The rest of The Royal Family may be considered in two different lights, according to the different senses in which the term Royal Family is used. The larger sense includes all those, who are by any possibility inheritable to the Crown. Such, before the Revolution, were all the descendants of William the Conqueror, who had branched into an amazing extent, by intermarriages with the ancient nobility. Since the Revolution and act of Settlement, it means the Protestant issue of the Princess Sophia, now comparatively few in number, but which in process of time may possibly be as largely diffused. The more confined sense includes only those who are within a certain degree of propinquity to the reigning Prince, and to whom therefore the laws pay an extraordinary regard and respect.

At the time of passing the Regency-Act, stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 27, (see Post V. 2.) the bill, which was framed on the plan of the Regency Act in the preceding reign, empowered his Majesty to appoint either the Queen, or any other person of his Royal Family usually resident in Great Britain, to be Regent until the successor to the Crown should attain eighteen years of age. A doubt arising on the question who were the Royal Family, it was explained by the Law Lords to be the descendants of King George II. It was, therefore, found necessary expressly to insert in the act the name of her Royal Highness the Princess Dowager of Wales, widow of the King's eldest son deceased, and mother of his present Majesty; as she was not held to be comprehended under the general description of the Royal Family. See Belsham's Memoirs of King Geo. III.

The younger sons and daughters of the King, and other branches of the royal family, who are not in the immediate line of succession, were therefore little farther regarded by the antient law, than to give them a certain degree of precedence before all persons and public officers, as well ecclesiastical as temporal. This is done by stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 10; which enacts, that no person, except the King's children, shall presume to sit or have place at the side of the cloth of estate in the Parliament chamber; and that certain great officers therein named shall have precedence above all dukes, except only such as shall happen to be the King's son, brother, uncle, nephew, (which latter Sir E. Coke, 4 Inst. 362, explains to signify grandson or nepos,) or brother's or sister's son.

Indeed, under the description of the King's children, his grandsons are held to be included, without having recourse to Sir E. Coke's interpretation of nephew; and, therefore, when his late Majesty King George II. created his grandson Edward, (the second son of Frederick Prince of Wales deceased,) Duke of York, and referred it to the House of Lords to settle his place and precedence, they certified that he ought to have place next to the late Duke of Cumberland, the then King's youngest son; and that he might have a seat on the left hand of the cloth of estate. Ld.'s Journ. Ap. 24, 1760. But when, on the accession of his present Majesty, those royal personages ceased to take place as the children, and ranked only as the Brother and Uncle of the King, they also left their seats on the side of the cloth of estate: so that when the Duke of Gloucester, his Majesty's second brother, took his seat in the House of Peers, he was placed on the upper end of the Earl's bench (on which the Dukes usually sit) next to his Royal Highness the Duke of York. Ld.'s Journ. 10 January 1765. And in 1718, upon a question referred to all the Judges by King Geo. I. it was resolved by ten against the other two, that the education and care of all the King's grandchildren, while minors, did belong of right to his Majesty as King of this realm, even during their father's life. Fortesc. Al. 401—440. And they all agreed, that the care and approbation of their marriages, when grown up, belonged to the King their grandfather. And the Judges have more recently concurred in opinion, that this care and approbation extend also to the Presumptive Heir of the Crown; though to what other branches of the royal family the same did extend, they did not find precisely determined. Ld.'s Journ. 28 Feb. 1772. The most frequent instances of the Crown's interposition go no farther than nephews and nieces, but examples are not wanting of its reaching to distant collaterals. Therefore by stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 18. (repealed among other statutes of treasons by 1 Ed. 6. c. 12,) it was made high treason for any man to contract marriage with the King's children, or reputed children, his sisters or aunts, ex parte paternâ, or the children of his brethren or sisters; being exactly the same degrees to which precedence is allowed by the stat. 31 Hen. 8, before mentioned. And now by stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 11, no descendant of the body of King Geo. II. (other than the issue of Princesses married into foreign countries) is capable of contracting matrimony, without the previous consent of the King signified under the Great Seal; and any marriage contracted without such consent is void: [a marriage accordingly, which had, in fact, taken place abroad against the provisions of this act, between one of the sons of Geo. III. and an English lady, was dissolved in 1794 by sentence of the Ecclesiastical Court here;] but it is provided by the act, that such of the said descendants as are above the age of twenty-five, may, after a twelvemonth's notice given to the King's Privy Council, contract and solemnize marriage without the consent of the Crown; unless both houses of parliament shall, before the expiration of the said year, expresly declare their disapprobation of such intended marriage.—All persons solemnizing, assisting, or being present at, any such prohibited marriage shall incur the penalties of præmunire.

III. In order to assist the King in the discharge of his duties, the maintenance of his dignity, and the exertion of his prerogative, the law hath assigned him a diversity of councils to advise with. These are, his Parliament; his Peers; and his Privy Council. See this Dictionary under those titles.

For law matters the Judges of the Courts of law are held to be the King's Council; as appears frequently in our statutes, particularly stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 5: and in other books of law. So that when the King's Council is mentioned generally, it must be defined, particularized, and understood, secundum subjectam materiam: and if the subject be of a legal nature, then by the King's Council is understood, his Council for matters of law; namely, his Judges. Therefore, when by stat. 16 R. 2. c. 5, it was made a high offence to import into this kingdom any papal bulles, or other processes from Rome; and it was enacted, that the offenders should be attached by their bodies, and brought before the King and his Council to answer for such their offence, here, by the expression of the King's Council were understood, the King's Judges of his Courts of Justice, the subject matter being legal; this being the general way of interpreting the word Council, 3 Inst. 125. See further this Dictionary, title Judges.

Upon the same principle, in cases where fine and ransom is imposed for any offence at the King's pleasure, this does not signify any extra-judicial will of the Sovereign, but such as is declared by his representatives, the Judges in his Courts of Justice, voluntas regis in curia, non in camerâ. 1 Hal. P. C. 375.

IV. It is in consideration of the Duties incumbent on the King by our Constitution, that his dignity and prerogative are established by the laws of the land: it being a maxim in the law, that protection and subjection are reciprocal, 7 Rep. 5. And these reciprocal duties are most probably what was meant by the Convention Parliament in 1688, when they declared that King James II. had broken the original contract between King and People. But however, as the terms of that original contract were in some measure disputed, being alledged to exist principally in theory, and to be only deduceable by reason and the rules of natural law; in which deduction, different understandings might very considerably differ; it was, after the Revolution, judged proper to declare these duties expresly, and to reduce that contract to a plain certainty. So that whatever doubts might be formerly raised about the existence of such an original contract, they must now entirely cease; especially with regard to every Prince who hath reigned since the year 1688.

The principal duty of the King is to govern his people according to law. And this is not only consonant to the principles of nature, reason, liberty, and society, but has always been esteemed an express part of the common law of England, even when prerogative was at the highest. See our ancient authors, Bract. l. 1. c. 8; l. 2. c 16. § 3: *Fortesc. cc.*2, 34. But to obviate all doubts and difficulties concerning this matter, it is expresly declared by stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, "That the Laws of England are the Birth-right of the People thereof; and all the Kings and Queens who shall ascend the throne of this realm, ought to administer the government of the same according to the said laws: and all their Officers and Ministers ought to serve them respectively, according to the same: and therefore all the laws and statutes of this realm for securing the established religion, and the rights and liberties of the people thereof, and all other laws and statutes of the same, now in force, are ratified and confirmed accordingly." See further this Dictionary, title Liberties.

As to the terms of the original contract between King and People; these it seems are now couched in the Coronation Oath, which, by stat. 1 W. & M. st. 1. c. 6, is to be administered to every King and Queen, who shall succeed to the Imperial Crown of these realms, by one of the Archbishops or Bishops in the presence of all the People; who, on their parts, do reciprocally take the oath of allegiance to the Crown.

This Coronation Oath is conceived in the following terms.

"The Archbishop or Bishop shall say, Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the people of this Kingdom of England, [Quere? Great Britain. See stat. 5 Ann. c. 8. § 1: and this Dictionary, title Scotland:] and the dominions thereto belonging, according to the statutes in Parliament agreed on; and the laws and customs of the same? The King or Queen shall say, I solemnly promise so to do.—Abp. or Bp. Will you to your power cause law and justice, in mercy, to be executed in all your judgements?—K. or Q. I will.—Abp. or Bp. Will you to the utmost of your power maintain the laws of God, the true profession of the Gospel, and the Protestant reformed religion established by the law? And will you preserve unto the Bishops and the Clergy of this realm, and to the churches committed to their charge, all such rights and privileges as by law do or shall appertain unto them or any of them?—K. or Q. All this I promise to do.—After this the King or Queen laying his or her hand upon the Holy Gospels shall say, The things which I have here before promised, I will perform and keep, so help me God.—And then shall kiss the book."

It is also required, both by the Bill of Rights, stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2, and the Act of Settlement, stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, that every King and Queen of the age of twelve years, either at their coronation, or on the first day of the first Parliament, upon the throne in the House of Peers (which shall first happen) shall repeat and subscribe the declaration against Popery, according to stat. 30 Car. 2. st. 2. c. 1.

The above is the form of the Coronation oath, as it is now prescribed by our laws; the principal articles of which appear to be at least as antient as the Mirror of Justices (c. 1. § 2); and even as the time of Bracton. See l. 3. tr. 1. c. 9. But the wording of it was changed at the Revolution, because (as the statute alleges) the oath itself had been framed in doubtful words and expressions with relation to ancient laws and constitutions at this time unknown. For these old Coronation Oaths, see 1 Comm. c. 6. p. 235, in n.

However, in what form soever this Oath be conceived, it is most indisputably a fundamental and express original contract; though doubtless the duty of protection is impliedly as much incumbent on the Sovereign before Coronation, as after; in the same manner as allegiance to the King becomes the duty of the Subject immediately on the descent of the Crown, before he has taken the oath of allegiance, or whether he ever takes it all. In the King's part of this original contract are expressed all the duties that a monarch can owe to his people, viz. to govern according to law; to execute judgment in mercy; and to maintain the established religion. And with respect to the latter of these three branches, the Act of Union, stat. 5 Ann. c. 8, recites and confirms two preceding statutes; the one of the Parliament of Scotland, the other of the Parliament of England; which enact, the former that every King at his accession, shall take and subscribe an oath, to preserve the Protestant religion, and Presbyterian church government in Scotland; the latter, that at his coronation he shall take and subscribe a similar oath to preserve the settlement of the church of England, within England, Ireland, Wales, and Berwick, and the territories thereunto belonging.

V. 1. It has been observed, that one of the principal bulwarks of Civil Liberty, or in other words, of the British Constitution, is the limitation of the King's Prerogative, by bounds so certain and notorious, that it is impossible he should ever exceed them, without either the consent of the people, or a violation of that contract which we have seen expresly subsists between the Prince and the Subject. When we more particularly consider this prerogative minutely, in order to mark out, in the most important instances, its particular extent and restrictions, one conclusion will evidently follow; that the powers which are vested in the Crown by the laws of England, are necessary for the support of Society; and do not intrench any farther on our natural, than is expedient for the maintenance of our civil, liberties.

There cannot be a stronger proof of that genuine freedom, which is the boast of this age and country, than the power of discussing and examining with decency and respect the limits of the King's prerogative. This was formerly considered as a high contempt in a Subject, and the glorious Queen Elizabeth herself directed her Parliament to abstain from judging of or meddling with her prerogative. It is no wonder, therefore, that her successor, James I. should consider such a presumption as little less than blasphemy and impiety. But whatever might be the sentiments of some of our Princes, this was never the language of our ancient constitution and laws. The sentiments of Bracton and Fortescue, at the distance of two centuries from each other, may be seen by a reference to the place cited in the preceding division, IV. And Sir Hen. Finch, under Charles I. after the lapse of two centuries more, though he lays down the law of prerogative in very strong and emphatical terms, yet qualifies it with a general restriction in regard to the liberties of the people. The King, says he, has a prerogative in all things that are not injurious to the Subject; for in them all it must be remembered, that the King's prerogative stretcheth not to the doing of any wrong. Finch. l. 84, 5. Nihil enim aliud potest Rex, nisi id solum quod de jure potest. Bract. l. 3. tr. 1. c. 9.

The nature of our constitution is that of a limited monarchy, in which the legislative power is lodged in the King, Lords, and Commons; but the King is intrusted with the executive part, and from him all justice is said to flow; hence he is stiled the head of the Commonwealth, supreme governor, parens patriæ, &c. but still he is to make the law of the land the rule of his government; that being the measure as well of his power, as of the Subjects obedience: for as the law asserts, maintains and provides for the safety of the King's royal person, crown, and dignity, and all his just rights, revenues, powers, and prerogatives; so it likewise declares and asserts the rights and liberties of the Subject. 1 And. 153: Co. Lit. 19, 75: 4 Co. 124.

Hence it hath been established as a rule, that all prerogatives must be for the advantage of the people, otherwise they ought not to be allowed by law. Moor 672: Show. P. C. 75.

Although the King is the fountain of justice, and intrusted with the whole executive power of the law, yet he hath no power to alter the laws which have been established, and are the birthright of every subject; for by those very laws he is to govern; and as they prescribe the extent and bounds of his prerogative, in like manner they declare and ascertain the rights and liberties of the people, therefore admit of no innovation or change but by act of parliament. 4 Inst. 164: 2 Inst. 54, 478: 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 131, 282: Vaugh. 418: 2 Salk. 510.

The rights and prerogatives of the Crown are in most things as ancient as the law itself; for though the statute 17 Ed. 2. c. 1, commonly called the statute De prærogativa Regis, seems to be introductive of something new, yet for the most part it is but a collection of certain prerogatives that were known law long before. Bendl. 117: 2 Inst. 263, 496: 10 Co. 64. And this statute does not contain the King's whole prerogative, but only so much thereof as concerns the profits of his coffers. Plowd. 314.

The nature of the government of our King, says Fortescue, is not only regal, but political: if it were merely the former, regal, he would have power to make what alterations he pleased in our law, and impose taxes and other hardships upon the Subject, whether they would or no: but his government being political, he cannot change the laws of the realm, without the People consent thereto, nor burthen them against their wills. It is also said by the same writer, that the King is appointed to protect his Subjects in their lives, properties, and laws; for which end and purpose he has the delegation of power from the people: likewise our King is such by the fundamental law of our land; by which law the meanest Subject enjoys the liberty of his person and property in his estate; and it is every man's concern to defend these, as well as the King in his lawful rights. Fortescue, de Laud. leg. Angl. 17, &c.

If a King hath a kingdom by title of descent, where the laws have taken good effect and rooting, or if a King conquers a Christian kingdom, after the people have laws given them for the government of the country, to which they submit, no succeeding King can alter the same without the Parliament. 7 Rep. 17. It has nevertheless been held, that conquered countries may be governed by what laws the King thinks fit, and that the laws of England do not take place in such countries, until declared so by the conqueror, or his successor; here, in case of infidels, their laws do not cease, but only such as are against the law of God; and where the laws are rejected or silent, they shall be governed according to the rule of natural equity. 2 Salk. 411, 412. 666.

If the King makes a new conquest of any country, the persons there born are his subjects; for by saving the lives of the people conquered he gains a right and property in such people, and may impose on them what laws he pleases. Dyer 224: Vaugh. 281.

But until such laws given by the conquering prince, the laws of the conquered country hold place; (unless where these are contrary to our religion, or enact any thing that is malum in se, or are silent;) for in all such cases the laws of the conquering country prevail. 2 P. Wms. 75, 76.

If there be a new and uninhabited country found out by English subjects, as the law is the birthright of every Subject, so wherever they go carry their laws with them, therefore such new found country is to be governed by the laws of England; though after such country is inhabited by the English, acts of parliament made in England, without naming the foreign plantations, will not bind them. 2 P. Wms. 75: 2 Salk. 411. And see Campbell v. Hall, Cowp. 204: Spragge v. Stone, cited Dougl. 35, 37, 38.

Questions of this nature are not at present likely often to arise, since (as in the instance of annexing the Crown of Corsica to the British Crown in 1794) all such transactions are now regulated by express stipulations; which neither leave to the prerogative of the conquering monarch, nor the laws of his kingdom, any power to interfere.

By the word Prerogative is usually understood, that special pre-eminence, which the King hath over and above all other persons, and out of the ordinary course of the common law, in right of his regal dignity. It signifies, in its etymology from præ and rogo, something that is required or demanded before, or in preference to all others. And hence it follows, that it must be in its nature singular and eccentrical; that it can only be applied to those rights and capacities, which the King enjoys alone in contradistinction to others; and not to those which he enjoys in common with any of his Subjects: for if once any prerogative of the Crown could be held in common with the Subject, it would cease to be prerogative any longer. Finch, therefore, lays it down as a maxim, that the prerogative is that law in case of the King, which is law in no case of the Subject. Finch, L. 85.

Prerogatives are either direct or incidental. The direct are such positive substantial parts of the royal character and authority, as are rooted in, and spring from, the King's political person, and of which we are about to state the law at some length. But such prerogatives as are incidental bear always a relation to something else, distinct from the King's person, and are indeed only exceptions in favour of the Crown, to the general rules established for the rest of the community; such as that no costs shall be recovered against the King; that he can never be a joint-tenant; and that his debt shall be preferred before that of a Subject. These, and an infinite number of other instances, will better be understood by referring to the Subjects themselves, to which these incidental prerogatives are exceptions. As to his prerogative relating to his debts, however, here reckoned among those considered as incidental, See post VI, at some length; and this Dictionary, titles Execution; Extent; Judgment, &c. Other incidental prerogatives are, that where the title of the King and a common person concur, the King's title shall be preferred. 1 Inst. 30.—No distress can be made upon the King's possession, but he may distrain out of his fee in other lands, &c. and may take distresses in the highway. 2 Inst. 131.—An heir shall pay the King's debt, though he is not named in the bond: and the King's debt shall be satisfied before that of a Subject, for which there is a prerogative writ. 1 Inst. 130, 386.—But this is where the debt is in equal degree with that of the Subject. See stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39, at large: post VI.: and Cro. Car. 283: Hardr. 23.—Goods and chattels may go in succession to the King, though they may not to any other sole corporation. 1 Inst. 90.—In the hands of whomsoever the goods of the King came, their lands are chargeable, and may be seized for the same: and the King is not bound by sale of his goods in open market. 2 Inst. 713.—No entry will bar the King, and no judgment is final against him, but with a salvo jure regis, Litt. 178: Finch 46: but see post 2. as to the nullum tempus-act 9 Geo. 3. c. 9.—The King may plead several matters without being guilty of double pleading, and the party shall answer them all. Bro. Dougl. pl. 57.—In his pleading he need not plead an act of parliament as a Subject is bound to do. 4 Rep. 75.—He is not bound to join in demurrer on evidence, and the Court may direct the Jury to find the matter specially. Finch 82: 5 Rep. 104.—The King's own testimony of any thing done in his presence is of as high a nature and credit as any record, whence, in all original writs or precepts, he useth no other witness than himself, as teste meipso. 1 Inst. 41, 57.

It is also held, that the King is by his prerogative Universal Occupant, as all property is presumed to have been originally in the Crown; and that he partitioned it out in large districts to the great men who deserved well of him in the wars, and were able to advise him in time of peace. Hence the King hath the direct dominion; and all lands are holden mediately or immediately from the Crown. Co. Lit. 1: Dyer 154: 1 Bend. 237: Seld. Mare Claus.

If the sea leaves any shore by the water suddenly falling off, such derelict lands belong to the King; but if a man's man's lands lying to the sea are increased by insensible degrees, they belong to the soil adjoining. Dyer 326: 2 Rol. Abr. 170.

So, if a river, so far as there is a flux of the sea, leaves its channel, it belongs to the King; for the English sea and channels belong to the King; and, having never distributed them out to Subjects, he hath a property in the soil. 2 Rol. Abr. 170.

But if a river, in which there is no tide, should leave its bed, it belongs to the owners on both sides; for they have in that case the property of the soil; this being no original part or appendix to the sea, but distributed out as other lands. 2 Rol. Abr. 170.

If land be drowned, and so continue for years; if it be after regained, every owner shall have his interest again, if it can be known by the boundaries. 8 Co. Sir Francis Barrington's case.

It is said, that there is a custom in Lincolnshire, That the lord of the manors shall have derelict lands; and that as such it is a reasonable custom; for if the sea wash away the lands of the Subject, he can have no recompence, unless he should be entitled to what he regains from the sea. Dict.

The King hath the Sovereign dominion in all seas and great rivers, which is plain from Selden's account of the ancient Saxons, who dealt very successfully in all naval affairs; therefore the territories of the English seas and rivers always resided in the King. Seld. Mar. Cl. 251, &c. 1 Rol. Abr. 168, 169: 1 Co. 141: 5 Co. 106.

And as the King hath a prerogative in the seas, so hath he likewise a right to the fishery and to the soil; so that if a river as far as there is a flux of the sea leaves its channel, it belongs to the King. Dyer 326: 2 Rol. Abr. 170.

Hence the Admiralty Court, which is a Court for all maritime causes or matters arising on the high seas, is deemed the King's Court, and its jurisdiction derived from him who protects his Subjects from pirates, and provides for the security of trade and navigation. 4 Inst. 142: Molloy 66.

From the King's dominion over the sea it was holden, that the King, as protector and guardian of the seas, might before any statute made for commissions of sewers, provide against inundations by lands, banks, &c. and that he had a prerogative herein as well as in defending his Subjects from pirates, &c. 10 Co. 141.

But notwithstanding the King's prerogative in seas and navigable rivers, yet it hath been always held, that a Subject may fish in the sea; which being a matter of common right, and the means of livelihood, and for the good of the commonwealth, cannot be restrained by grant or prescription. 8 Ed. 4. 18. 19: Bro. Custom, 46: Fitz. Bar. 1 Mod. 105: 2 Salk. 637.

Also it is held, that every Subject of common right may fish with lawful nets, &c. in a navigable river as well as in the sea; and the King's grant cannot bar them thereof; but the Crown only has a right to royal fish, and that the King only may grant. 6 Mod. 73: 1 Salk. 357. S. C. & S. P. See title Fish, &c.

It is also said, that the King, as a perpetual sign and acknowledgment of his dominion of the seas, hath several creatures reserved to him under the denomination of royal creatures, as swans, sturgeons, and whales; all which are natives of seas and rivers. 7 Co. 16. See post 4.

2. The law ascribes to the King the attribute of Sovereignty or pre-eminence. See Bract. l. 1. c. 8.—He is said to have imperial dignity; and in charters, before the Conquest, is frequently stiled Basileus and Imperator; the titles respectively assumed by the Emperors of the East and West. His realm is declared to be an empire, and his Crown imperial, by many acts of parliament; particularly stats. 24 Hen. 8. c. 12: 25 Hen. 8. c. 28; which at the same time declare the King to be the supreme head of the realm in matters both civil and ecclesiastical; and, of consequence, inferior to no man upon earth, dependant on no man, accountable to no man. See also stats. 24 Geo. 2. c. 24: 5 Geo. 3. c. 27.

No King of England used any seal of arms till the reign of Rich. I. Before that time, the seal was the King sitting in a chair of state on one side of the seal, and on horseback on the other side; but this King sealed with a seal of two lions: and King John was the first that bare three lions; and afterwards Edward III. quartered the arms of France, which has been continued to this time. King Henry VIII. was the first to whom Majesty was attributed; before which, our Kings were called Highness, &c. Lex Constitut. 47, 48.

The meaning of the Legislature when it uses these terms of empire and imperial, and applies them to the realm and Crown of England, is only to assert that our King is equally sovereign and independent within these his dominions, as any Emperor is in his empire, and owes no kind of subjection to any other Potentate upon earth.

Hence it is, that no suit or action can be brought against the King, even in civil matters, because no Court can have jurisdiction over him. All jurisdiction implies superiority of power: authority to try would be vain and idle without authority to redress; and the sentence of a Court would be contemptible, unless that Court had power to command the execution of it: but who, says Finch, shall command the King? Finch, l. 83.—Hence it is likewise, that by law, the PERSON of the KING is SACRED, even though the measures pursued in his reign be completely tyrannical and arbitrary: for no jurisdiction upon earth has power to try him in a criminal way, much less to condemn him to punishment. If any foreign jurisdiction had this power, as was formerly claimed by the Pope, the independence of the kingdom would be no more; and, if such a power were vested in any domestic tribunal, there would soon be an end of the constitution, by destroying the free agency of one of the constituent parts of the sovereign Legislative Power.

Are then, it may be asked, the Subjects of England totally destitute of remedy, in case the Crown should invade their rights, either by private injuries, or public oppressions? To this we may answer, that the law has provided a remedy in both cases.

As to private injuries; if any person has, in point of property, a just demand upon the King, he must petition him in his Court of Chancery, where his Chancellor will administer right as a matter of grace, though not upon compulsion. Finch, l. 255. See this Dictionary, title Chancery; and post as to the Perfection ascribed to the King.

As to cases of ordinary public oppression, where the vitals of the constitution are not attacked, the law has also also assigned a remedy. For as a King cannot misuse his powers without the advice of evil counsellors, and the assistance of wicked ministers, these men may be examined and punished. The Constitution has therefore provided, by means of indictments and parliamentary impeachments, that no man shall dare to assist the Crown in contradiction to the law of the land. But at the same time it is a maxim in those laws, that the King himself can do no wrong; since it would be a great weakness and absurdity in any system of positive law, to define any possible wrong, without any possible redress.

As to such public oppressions as tend to dissolve the Constitution, and subvert the fundamentals of Government, these are cases which the law will not, out of decency, suppose; being incapable of distrusting those whom it has invested with any part of the supreme power; since such distrust would render the exercise of that power precarious and impracticable. For, wherever the law expresses its distrust or abuse of power, it always vests a superior coercive authority in some other hand to correct it; the very notion of which destroys the idea of Sovereignty. If therefore (for example) the Two Houses of Parliament, or either of them, had avowedly a right to animadvert on the King, or each other, or if the King had a right to animadvert on either of the Houses, that branch of the Legislature, so subject to animadversion, would instantly cease to be part of the Supreme Power; the balance of the Constitution would be overturned; and that branch or branches, in which this jurisdiction resided, would be completely sovereign. The supposition of Law therefore is, that neither the King, nor either House of Parliament (collectively taken) is capable of doing any wrong; since in such cases the law feels itself incapable of furnishing any adequate remedy. For which reason all oppressions, which may happen to spring from any branch of the Sovereign Power, must necessarily be out of the reach of any stated rule or express legal provision: but if ever they unfortunately happen, the prudence of the times must provide new remedies upon new emergencies.

Indeed, it is found by experience, that whenever the unconstitutional oppressions, even of the Sovereign Power, advance with gigantic strides, and threaten desolation to a State, mankind will not be reasoned out of the feelings of humanity, nor will sacrifice their liberty by a scrupulous adherence to those political maxims which were originally established to preserve it. And, therefore, though the positive laws are silent, experience furnishes us with a very remarkable case, wherein nature and reason prevailed. When King James II. invaded the fundamental constitution of the realm, the Convention-Parliament declared an abdication, whereby the throne was considered vacant, which induced a new settlement of the Crown. And so far as this precedent leads, and no farther, we may now be allowed to lay down the Law of redress against public oppression. If therefore any future Prince should endeavour to subvert the constitution by breaking the original contract between King and People, should violate the fundamental laws, and should withdraw himself out of the kingdom, we are now authorized to declare that this conjunction of circumstances would amount to an abdication, and the throne would be thereby vacant. In these, therefore, or other circumstances, which a fertile imagination may furnish, since both Law and History are silent, it becomes us to be silent too; leaving to future generations, whenever necessity and the safety of the whole shall require it, the exertion of those inherent (though latent) powers of Society, which no climate, no time, no constitution, no contract, can ever destroy or diminish.

It may not be amiss to conclude this part of the subject with observing that, All persons born in any part of the King's dominions and within his protection are his Subjects; thus are those born in Ireland, Scotland, Wales, the King's plantations, or on the English seas; who by their birth owe such an inseparable allegiance to the King, that they cannot by any act of theirs renounce or transfer their subjection to any foreign prince. 7 Co. 1, &c.: Calvin's Case: Molloy, 370: Co. Lit. 129: Dyer, 300. See titles Aliens; Allegiance; Treason.

Besides the attribute of Sovereignty, the law also ascribes to the King, in his political capacity, absolute Perfection. The King can do no wrong. Which antient and fundamental maxim is not to be understood, as if every thing transacted by the Government was of course just and lawful, but means only two things. First, that whatever is exceptionable in the conduct of public affairs is not to be imputed to the King, nor is he answerable for it personally to his people. And, secondly, it means that the prerogative of the Crown extends not to do any injury; it is created for the benefit of the people, and therefore cannot be exerted to their prejudice. Plowd. 487.

Or perhaps it means that, although the King is subject to the passions and infirmities of other men, the constitution has prescribed no mode by which he can be made personally amenable for any wrong that he may actually commit. The law will therefore presume no wrong, where it has provided no remedy. The Inviolability of the King is essentially necessary to the free exercise of those high prerogatives, which are vested in him, not for his own private splendor and gratification, as the vulgar and ignorant are too apt to imagine, but for the security and preservation of the real happiness and liberty of his Subjects.

The King moreover is not only incapable of doing wrong, but even of thinking wrong; he can never mean to do an improper thing; in him is no folly or weakness. If therefore the Crown should be induced to grant any franchise or privilege to a subject, contrary to reason, or any way prejudicial to the commonwealth, or a private person, the law will not suppose the King to have meant either an unwise or an injurious action; but declares that the King was deceived in his grant: and therefore such grant is rendered void, merely upon the foundation of fraud and deception, either by or upon those agents, whom the Crown has thought proper to employ. See title Grant of the King.—But a latitude of supposing a possibility of some failure of this personal perfection is allowed in the case of enquiries frequently instituted by Parliament, even as to those acts of royalty which are most properly and personally the King's own; but which are to be conducted in those assemblies with the decency and respect due to the kingly character. See further this Dict. tit. Parliament.

It may not be amiss in this place very concisely to mention the remedies for the various injuries which may proceed from, and also for those which may affect the rights of the Crown.

 The

The distance between the Sovereign and his Subjects is such, that it can rarely happen that any personal injury can immediately and directly proceed from the Prince to any private man; and as it can so seldom happen, the Law in decency supposes that it never can or will happen at all. But injuries to the rights of property can scarcely be committed by the Crown, without the intervention of its officers, against whom the law furnishes various methods of detecting their errors or misconduct.

The common-law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the Crown of either real or personal property are, by Petition of Right (already alluded to above) or Monstrans de Droit, Manifestation or Plea of Right; as to both which see title Monstrans de Droit.

The methods of redressing such injuries as the Crown may receive from a Subject are; either by such usual common-law actions as are consistent with the royal prerogative and dignity; or by such prerogative modes of process as are peculiarly confined to the Crown. As the King, by reason of his legal ubiquity, cannot be disseised or dispossessed of any real property which is once vested in him, he can maintain no action which supposes a dispossession of the plaintiff, such as an Assise or Ejectment. Bro. Ab. 1. Prerogative 89. But he may bring a Quare Impedit, which always supposes the plaintiff to be seised or possessed of the advowson; and he may prosecute this writ like every other by him brought, as well in the court of K. B. as of C. P. or in whatever court he pleases. F. N. B. 32: 3 Comm. c. 17. So too he may bring an action of Trespass for taking away his goods; but such actions (of Trespass) are not usual, though in strictness maintainable for breaking his close, or other injury done upon his soil or possession. Bro. Ab. 1. Prerogative 130: F. N. B. 90: Y. B. 4 H. 4. 4.

Much easier and more effectual remedies are however usually obtained by prerogative modes of process. Such is that of Inquisition or Inquest of Office; as to which see this Dictionary, title Inquest.—Where the Crown hath unadvisedly granted any thing by letters patent which ought not to be granted, or where the patentee hath done any act that amounts to a forfeiture of the grant, the remedy to repeal the patent is by writ of Scire Facias in Chancery. See Dy. 198: 3 Lev. 220: 4 Inst. 88.—So also, if upon office untruly found for the King, he grants the land over to another, he who is grieved thereby, and traverses the office itself, is entitled, before issue joined, to a Scire Facias against the patentee in order to avoid the grant. Bro. Ab. 1. Scire Facias 69, 185. See this Dict. tit. Scire Facias.—An Information on behalf of the Crown is a method of suit for recovering money, or obtaining damages for any personal wrong to the lands or possessions of the Crown; as to which see this Dict. title Information.—A Writ of Quo Warranto is in the nature of a Writ of Right for the King against any person claiming or usurping any office, franchise, or liberty, to inquire by what authority he supports his claim, in order to determine the right. Finch. L. 322: 2 Inst. 282. See this Dict. tit. Quo Warranto. And something of the same nature is the Writ of Mandamus, as to which see this Dict. titles Corporation; Mandamus.

The Law also determines that in the King can be no negligence or laches, and therefore no delay will bar his right. Nullum tempus occurrit Regi has been the standing maxim upon all occasions: for the law intends that the King is always busied for the public good, and therefore has not leisure to assert his right within the times limited to his subjects. Finch. L. 82: Co. Litt. 90.—This maxim applies also to criminal prosecutions which are brought in the name of the King; and therefore by the Common Law there is no limitation in treasons, felonies, or misdemeanors.—By stat. 7 W. 3. c. 7, an indictment for treason, except for an attempt to assassinate the King, must be found within three years after the commission of the treasonable act. See this Dict. title Treason.—But where the legislature has affixed no limit, nullum tempus occurrit regi holds true: thus a man may be convicted of murder at any distance of time within his life after the commission of the crime. This maxim obtains still in full force in Ireland. 1 Ld. Mountm. 365. In civil actions relating to landed property, by stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 16, commonly called the Nullum Tempus Act, the King, like a subject, is limited to 60 years. For the occasion of passing this act, see Belsham's Memoirs of Geo. III. sub an. 1768. See also the stats. 21 Jac. 1. c. 2; 11 Geo. 3. c. 4.

In the King also can be no stain or corruption of blood; for if the Heir to the Crown were attainted of treason or felony, and afterwards the Crown should descend to him, this would purge the attainder ipso facto. Finch. L. 82.

Neither can the King, in judgment of law as King, ever be a minor or under age; and therefore his royal grants, and assents to acts of parliament are good, though he has not in his natural capacity attained the age of 21. Co. Lit. 43: 2 Inst. Proëm 3. Indeed by stat. 28 H. 8. c. 17, power was given to future Kings to rescind and revoke all acts of parliament that should be made while they were under the age of 24: but this was repealed by stat. 1 E. 6. c. 11, so far as related to that Prince; and both statutes are declared by stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 24, to be determined. It hath also been usually thought prudent, when the Heir-apparent has been very young, to appoint a Protector, Guardian, or Regent for a limited time; but the very necessity of such extraordinary provision is sufficient to demonstrate the truth of that maxim of the Common Law, that in the King is no Minority; and therefore he hath no legal guardian.

The methods of appointing a guardian or regent in case of an Infant-heir to the Crown, have been so various, and the duration of his power so uncertain, that from hence alone it may be collected that his office is unknown to the Common Law; and therefore the surest way is to have him made by authority of the great Council in Parliament. 4 Inst. 58. The statutes 25 H. 8. c. 12: 28 H. 8. c. 7, [q. 17?] provided, that the successor, if a male and under 18, or a female and under 16, should be till such age in the government of his or her natural mother, (if approved by the King,) and such other counsellors as his Majesty should by will or otherwise appoint: and he accordingly appointed his sixteen executors to have the government of his son Edward VI. and the kingdom; which executors elected the Earl of Hertford Protector. The stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 24, in case the Crown should descend to any of the children of Frederick then late Prince of Wales under the age of 18, appointed the Princess Dowager; and the stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 27, in case of a like descent to any of the children of K. Geo. III. empowered the King to name either the Queen, the Princess Dowager, or any descendant of K. Geo. II. residing in this kingdom, to be Guardian and Regent, till the the successor attained such age, assisted by a Council of Regency: the powers of them all being expressly defined and set down in the several Acts. See ante II.

From the maxim that the King, as King, cannot be a Minor, grants, leases, &c. made by him, though under age, bind presently, and cannot be avoided by him either during his minority, or when he comes of age: for it is a maxim of politics, that he who is to govern the kingdom should never be considered as incapable from minority of governing his own affairs. Dy. 209, pl. 22: Plowd. 209: Co. Litt. 43: 5 Co. 27: Raym. 90.

The law ascribes to the King's Majesty in his political capacity an absolute Immortality. The King never dies. Henry, Edward, or George, may die; but the King survives them all. For immediately upon the decease of the reigning Prince in his natural capacity, his Kingship or Imperial Dignity, by act of law, without any interregnum or interval, is vested at once in his heir, who is eo instanti King to all intents and purposes. And so tender is the law of supposing even a possibility of his death, that his natural dissolution is generally called his demise; demissus regis vel coronæ: an expression signifying merely a transfer of property. By the term, Demise of the Crown, therefore, is understood, that, in consequence of the disunion of the King's natural body from the body politic, the kingdom is transferred or demised to his successor; and so the royal dignity remains perpetual. Plowd. 177. 234. Thus too, when Ed. IV. in the 10th year of his reign, was driven from his throne for a few months by the house of Lancaster, this temporary transfer of his dignity was denominated his demise; and all process was held to be discontinued, as it then was upon the natural death of the King. M. 49 H. 6. pl. 1—8.

K. Henry II. took his son into a kind of subordinate regality with him, so that there were Rex Pater and Rex Filius; but he did not divest himself of his sovereignty, but reserved to himself the homage of his subjects. And notwithstanding this King, by consent of Parliament, created his son John King of Ireland; and K. Rich. II. made Robert de Vere Duke of Ireland, and Ed. III. made his eldest son Lord of Ireland, with royal dominion; yet it has been expressly held, that the King cannot regularly make a King within his own kingdom. 4 Inst. 357. 360. Hen. de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, was by King Hen VI. crowned King of Wight Island; but it was resolved, that this could not be done without consent of Parliament; and even then our greatest men have been of opinion, that the King could not by law create a King in his own kingdom, because there cannot be two Kings of the same place. And afterwards the same K. Henry made the same Earl of Warwick Primus Comes totius Angliæ. Hal Hist. Coron.

A King cannot resign or dismiss himself of his office of King without consent of Parliament; nor could Hen. II. without such consent, divide the sovereignty: there is a sacred bond between the King and his kingdom that cannot be dissolved without the free and mutual consent of both in Parliament; and though in foreign kingdoms there have been instances of voluntary cessions and resignations, which possibly may be warranted by their several constitutions, yet, by the laws of England, the King cannot resign his sovereignty without his Parliament. Hale's H. Cor.

3. In the exercise of those branches of the Royal Prerogative which invest this our Sovereign Lord, thus all-perfect and immortal in his Kingly capacity, with a number of authorities and powers, consists the Executive Part of the Government. This is wisely placed in a single hand by the British Constitution, for the sake of unanimity, strength, and dispatch. The King of England is therefore not only the Chief, but properly the Sole Magistrate of the nation; all others acting by commission from, and in due subordination to him.

In the exertion of lawful prerogative, the King is and ought to be absolute; that is, so far absolute, that there is no legal authority that can either delay or resist him. He may reject what bills, may make what treaties, may coin what money, may create what peers, may pardon what offences he pleases; unless where the Constitution hath expressly, or by evident consequence, laid down some exception or boundary, declaring that thus far the prerogative shall go, and no farther. For otherwise the power of the Crown would indeed be but a name and a shadow, insufficient for the ends of government, if, where its jurisdiction is clearly established and allowed, any man, or body of men, were permitted to disobey it in the ordinary course of law. It is not now meant to speak of those extraordinary resources to first principles which are necessary when the contracts of Society are in danger of dissolution, and the law proves too weak a defence against the violence of fraud or oppression. And yet the want of attending to this obvious distinction has occasioned these doctrines, of absolute power in the Prince, and of national resistance by the People, to be much misunderstood and perverted by the advocates for slavery on the one hand, and the demagogues of faction on the other. Civil Liberty, rightly understood, consists in protecting the rights of individuals by the united force of Society. Society cannot be maintained, and of course can exert no protection, without obedience to some Sovereign Power: and obedience is an empty name, if every individual has a right to decide how far he himself shall obey.

In the exertion therefore of these prerogatives which the law has given him, the King is irresistible and absolute, according to the forms of the constitution. And yet, if the consequence of that exertion be manifestly to the grievance or dishonour of the kingdom, the Parliament will call his advisers to a just and severe account. Thus the King may make a treaty with a Foreign State, which shall irrevocably bind the nation; and yet, when such treaties have been judged pernicious, impeachments have pursued those ministers by whose agency or advice they were concluded.

With regard to Foreign Concerns, the King is the Delegate or Representative of his people. It is impossible that the individuals of a State, in their collective capacity, can transact the affairs of that State with any other community equally numerous as themselves. Unanimity must be wanting to their measures, and strength to the execution of their counsels. In the King, therefore, as in a center, all the rays of his people are united, and form by that union a consistency, splendor, and power, that make him feared and respected by foreign Potentates; who would scruple to enter into any engagement, that must afterwards be revised and ratified by a popular assembly. What is done by the royal authority, with with regard to foreign powers, is the act of the whole nation: what is done without the King's concurrence is the act only of private men. And so far is this point carried by our law, that it hath been held, that should all the Subjects of England make war with a king in league with the King of England, without the Royal assent, such war is no breach of the league. 4 Inst. 152. And by the stat. 2 Hen 5. c. 6, any Subject committing acts of hostility upon any nation in league with the King, was declared to be guilty of high treason: and though that act was repealed by the stat. 20 Hen. 6. c. 11, so far as relates to making this offence high treason, yet still it remains a very great offence against the Law of Nations; and punishable by our laws, either capitally or otherwise, according to the circumstances of the case.

The King therefore, considered as the representative of his people, has the sole power of sending Ambassadors to foreign States, and receiving Ambassadors at home. How far the municipal laws of England intermeddle with or protect the right of these messengers from one potentate to another, may be seen in this Dict. tit. Ambassadors; and more fully, 1 Comm. c. 7.

It is also the King's prerogative to make Treaties, Leagues, and Alliances with foreign States and Princes. For it is by the Law of Nations essential to the goodness of a league, that it be made by the Sovereign power; and then it is binding upon the whole community: and in England the Sovereign power, quoad hoc, is vested in the person of the King. Whatever contracts therefore he engages in, no power in the kingdom can legally delay, resist, or annul. Although, lest this plenitude of authority should be abused to the detriment of the public, the Constitution (as has been already hinted) hath here interposed a check, by the means of parliamentary impeachment, for the punishment of such ministers as from criminal motives advise or conclude any treaty, which shall afterwards be judged to derogate from the honour and interest of the nation.

Upon the same principle, the King has also the sole prerogative of making War and Peace. For it is held by all the writers on the Law of Nature and Nations, that the right of making war, which by nature subsisted in every individual, is given up by all private persons that enter into Society, and is vested in the Sovereign power. Puff. b. 8. c. 9. § 6. This right is given up not only by individuals, but even by the entire body of people, that are under the dominion of a Sovereign. It would indeed be extremely improper, that any number of Subjects should have the power of binding the Supreme Magistrate, and putting him against his will in a state of war. Whatever hostilities therefore may be committed by private citizens, the State ought not to be affected thereby; unless that should justify their proceeding, and thereby become partner in the guilt. Such unauthorized volunteers in violence are not ranked among open enemies, but are treated like pirates and robbers. In order to make a war completely effectual, it is necessary with us in England that it be publicly, [actually or virtually,] declared and duly proclaimed by the King's authority; and, then all parts of both contending nations, from the highest to the lowest, are bound by it. And wherever the right resides of beginning a national war, there also must reside the right of ending it, or the power of making peace. And the same check of Parliamentary Impeachment, for improper or inglorious conduct, in beginning, conducting, or concluding a national war, is in general sufficient to restrain the Ministers of the Crown from a wanton or injurious exertion of this great Prerogative.

The power of making war or peace is enumerated by Lord Hale inter jura summi imperii, and in England is lodged singly in the King; though, says he, it ever succeeds best when done by parliamentary advice. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 159: 7 Co 25.

A general war, according to the same Writer, is of two kinds, 1. Bellum solenniter denunciatum. 2. Bellum non solenniter denunciatum. The first is, When war is solemnly declared or proclaimed by our King against another Prince or State, which is the most formal solemnity of a war now in use. 2dly, When a nation slips suddenly into a war without any solemnity, which happens by granting letters of marque, by a foreign prince invading our coasts, or setting on the King's navy at sea; and hereupon a real, though not a solemn, war may arise and hath formerly arisen; therefore to prove a nation to be at enmity with England, or to prove a person to be an alien enemy, there is no necessity of shewing any war proclaimed; but it may be averred, and so put upon the trial of the country, whether there was a war or not. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 163. See further also as connected with this subject, titles Letters of Marque; and of Safe Conduct.

In all these prerogatives of the King respecting this nation's intercourse with foreign nations, he is considered as the Delegate or Representative of his people. But in domestic affairs, he is considered in a great variety of characters, and from thence there arises an abundant number of other prerogatives.

First. He is A Constituent Part of the Supreme Legislative Power; and, as such, has the prerogative of rejecting such provisions in Parliament, as he judges improper to be passed. The expediency of which Constitution is evinced at large under tit. Parliament. It may here be added, that the King is not bound by any act of parliament, unless he be named therein by special and particular words. The most general words that can be devised (any person or persons, bodies-politic or corporate, &c.) affect not him in the least, if they may tend to restrain or diminish any of his rights or interests. 11 Rep. 74. Yet, where an act of Parliament is expresly made for the preservation of public rights and suppression of public wrongs, and does not interfere with the established rights of the Crown, it is said to be binding as well upon the King as the Subject. 11 Rep. 71. The King may likewise take the benefit of any particular act, though he be not especially named. 7 Rep. 32.

The King is considered, in the next place, as the Generalissimo, or the first in military command, within the kingdom.

In this capacity, of General of the Kingdom, the King has the sole power of raising and regulating fleets and armies. Of the manner in which they are raised and regulated, more is said in other places. We are now only to consider the Prerogative of enlisting and governing them, which indeed was disputed and claimed, contrary to all reason and precedent, by the long Parliament of King Charles I.: but, upon the restoration of his son, was solemnly declared by the stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 6, to be in the King alone; for that the sole supreme government and command of the Militia within all his Majesty's realms and dominions, and of all Forces by sea and land, and of all forts and places of strength, ever was, and is, the undoubted right of his Majesty, and his royal predecessors, Kings and Queens of England; and that both or either house of parliament cannot, nor ought to, pretend to the same. See this Dictionary, title Militia.

This statute, it is obvious to observe, extends not only to fleets and armies, but also to Forts and other places of strength, within the realm, the sole prerogative as well of erecting, as manning and governing of which belongs to the King in his capacity of general of the kingdom. 2 Inst. 30.—And all lands were formerly subject to a tax for building of castles wherever the King thought proper. This was one of the three things, from contributing to the performance of which no lands were exempted; and therefore called by our Saxon ancestors the trinoda necessitas; viz. pontis reparatio, arcis constructio, & expeditio contra hostem. Cowell's Inter. title Castellorum operatio: Seld. Jan. Angl. 1. 42. See title Castles, Forts, &c.

It is partly upon the same, and partly upon a fiscal foundation, to secure his marine revenue, that the King has the prerogative of appointing Ports and Havens, or such places only, for persons and merchandize to pass into and out of the realm, as he in his wisdom sees proper. See title Harbours and Havens. And to this head may be referred also, the prerogative as to the erection of Beacons and Lighthouses; as to which, see 4 Inst. 148: 12 Co. 13: Carter 90: 2 Keb. 114: 3 Inst. 204; and this Dictionary, title Beacons.

To this branch of the prerogative may also be referred the power vested in his Majesty, by stats. 12 Car. 2. c. 4: 29 Geo. 2. c. 16, of prohibiting the exportation of arms or ammunition out of this kingdom, under severe penalties: and likewise the right which the King has, whenever he sees proper, of confining his Subjects to stay within the realm, or of recalling them when beyond the seas.

By the common law every Subject may go out of the kingdom for merchandize or travel, or other cause, as he pleases, without any licence for that purpose; this appears from the statute 5 R. 2. c. 2, made to restrain persons passing out of the realm, but excepts lords, great men and notable merchants; as also by the statute 26 Hen. 8. c. 10, which gave power to the King during his life to restrain persons from trading to certain countries; which acts had been vain and idle, if the King by his prerogative might have done it. F. N. B. 85: Dyer 165, 296: 2 Rol. Rep. 12: 3 Mod. 131: Stil. 442.

But notwithstanding this general liberty allowed by the common law, it appears plainly that the King by his prerogative, and without any help of an act of parliament, may prohibit his Subjects from going out of the realm; but this must be by some express prohibition; as by laying on embargoes, which can be only done in time of danger, or by writ of Ne exeat Regno, which, from the words Quamplurima nobis & coronæ nostræ prajudicialia ibidem prosequi intendis, appears to be a State writ, though it is never granted universally, but to restrain a particular person, on oath made that he intends to go out of the realm; indeed Fitzherbert says, that the King may restrain his Subjects by proclamations; and assigns as a reason for it, that the King may not know where to find his Subject, so as to direct a writ to him. 12 Co. 33: 11 Co. 92: Fitz. N. B. 89: 2 Inst. 54. See title Imbargo.

As the King may restrain any of his Subjects from going abroad, in like manner he may command them to return home; and disobeying a privy seal for this purpose is the highest contempt. 1st, It is a disobedience to the command of the King himself directed to the party. 2dly, The command is, that he shall return upon his faith and allegiance, which is the strongest compulsion that can be used. 3dly, The thing required by the King is the principal duty of a Subject, viz. to be at the service of his King and country. Dyer 128. b; Lane 44: Moor 109: 3 Inst. 179.

The punishment for this offence is, seizing the party's estate till he return; and of this there are many instances in our books. And when he does return he shall be fined. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 22. § 4.

William de Brittain in the 19 of Ed. 2, refusing to return on the King's writ, his goods and chattels, lands and tenements, were seised into the King's hands; so in the case of Edward of Woodstock, Earl of Kent, in the same reign. Dyer 128. b.

So in the case of one Bartue, who married the Duchess of Suffolk, they obtained a licence from Q. Mary to go out of the realm, under pretence of recovering debts as executors to the Duke; when in reality it was on account of the religion established by Queen Mary, and living with other fugitives under the protection of the Palsgrave of the Rhine in Germany, who was an eminent Calvinist, were sent to by privy seal; but the messenger, in endeavouring to serve them with his letters, being obstructed and abused by their attendants, a certificate was made of this, and their lands and tenements seized. Dyer 176; Jenk. Cent. 220.

So in the case of Sir Francis Englefield, who departed the kingdom on a licence obtained for three years; but not returning at the expiration of the three years, a privy seal was sent to him by Queen Elizabeth, which he not obeying, and this matter being certified into Chancery by the Queen, under her sign manual, his lands and tenements were seised in the fifth year of her reign by virtue of a commission under the great seal. 1 Leon. 9: Moor 109: 1 And. 95, S. C. See also 7 Co. 18: Poph. 18: 4 Leon. 135.

So in the case of Sir Robert Dudley, who, intending to travel, obtained a licence from James the First to go to Venice; but before his departure he by indenture inrolled for valuable consideration, as was expressed in the deed, (but none paid,) conveyed the manor of Killingworth with other lands to the Earl of Nottingham and others in fee, with a proviso, that, on tender of an angel of gold, all should be void; and with a covenant on the part of the bargainees that they should make all such estates as the said Sir Robert should appoint; the bargainees were not parties to the deed, nor had they notice of it till sometime after: but afterwards they made a lease to Sir Robert Lee, to the intent that Lady Dudley should take the profits of part of the premisses for ten years, if their estate continued so long unrevoked. The King, hearing that Sir Robert had been guilty of some bad practices beyond sea, in the fifth year of his reign sent his privy seal to him, which he not obeying, the great question in this case was, Whether those lands thus thus conveyed were forfeited: and adjudged that they were, the conveyance being fraudulent as to the King. Lane 42, &c.

In these cases it hath been held, that the King hath only an interest in the offender's lands till he return; and that his restoring them is not a matter of grace but of right. Lane 48.

See further, on this part of the subject, this Dictionary, title Ne exeat Regno.

The King is also considered as the Fountain of Justice, and general Conservator of the peace of the Kingdom.—All jurisdiction exercised in these kingdoms that are in obedience to our King, is derived from the Crown; and the laws, whether of a temporal, ecclesiastical, or military nature, are called his laws: and it is his prerogative to take care of the due execution of them. Hence it is that all Judges derive their authority from the Crown, by some commission warranted by law. Fleta, c. 17: Co. Lit. 99. a. 144. See title Judges.

From the inherent right inseparable from the King to distribute justice among his Subjects, it hath been held, that an appeal from the Isle of Man lies to the King in council, without any reservation in the grant of the Isle of Man of any such right; and though there had been exclusive words, yet the grant must have been construed to be void on the King's being deceived, rather than the Subject should be deprived of a right inseparable to him as a Subject, of applying to the Crown for justice. 1 P. Wms. 329.

A consequence of this prerogative is the legal Ubiquity of the King; his Majesty, in the eye of the law, is always present in all his courts, though he cannot personally distribute justice. Fortesc. c. 8: 2 Inst 186.—His Judges are the mirror by which the King's image is reflected. It is the regal office, and not the royal person, that is always present in Court, always ready to undertake prosecutions, or pronounce judgment for the benefit and protection of the Subject. And from this ubiquity it follows, that the King can never be nonsuit; for a nonsuit is the desertion of the suit or action by the non appearance of the plaintiff in Court. But the Attorney General may enter a non vult prosequi, which has the effect of a nonsuit. Co. Lit. 139. For the same reason also, in the forms of legal proceedings, the King is not said to appear by his Attorney, as other men do; for in contemplation of law he is always present in Court. Finch, L. 81.

From the same original, of the King's being the fountain of justice, may also be deduced the prerogative of issuing Proclamations, which is vested in the King alone. These proclamations have then a binding force, when they are grounded upon and enforce the laws of the realm 3 Inst. 162. For though the making of laws is entirely the work of a distinct part, the legislative branch of the sovereign power, yet the manner, time, and circumstances of putting these laws in execution, must frequently be left to the discretion of the Executive Magistrate. And, therefore, his constitutions or edicts concerning these points, which we call proclamations, are binding upon the Subject where they do not either contradict the old laws, or tend to establish new ones, but only enforce the execution of such laws as are already in being, in such manner as the King shall judge necessary. Thus the established law is, that the King may prohibit any of his Subjects from leaving the realm: a proclamation therefore, forbidding this in general for three weeks, by laying an embargo upon all shipping in time of war, will be equally binding as an act of parliament, because founded upon a prior law. 4 Mod. 177, 179.

But a proclamation to lay an embargo in time of peace upon all vessels laden with wheat (though in time of a public scarcity) being contrary to law, and particularly to stat. 22 Car. 2. c. 13, the advisers of such a proclamation, and all persons acting under it, have been always found necessary to be indemnified by special acts of parliaments. See stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 7: 30 Geo. 3. c. 1. and this Dictionary, title Imbargo.—A proclamation for disarming Papists is also binding, being only in execution of what the Legislature has first ordained; but a proclamation for allowing arms to Papists, or for disarming any Protestant Subjects, will not bind; because the first would be to assume a dispensing power, the latter a legislative one; to the vesting of which, in any single person, the laws of England are absolutely strangers. Indeed, by the stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 8, it was enacted, that the King's proclamations should have the force of acts of parliament: a statute, which was calculated to introduce the most despotic tyranny; and which must have proved fatal to the liberties of this kingdom, had it not been luckily repealed in the minority of his successor, about five years after, by stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12.—It was anciently held, though that is not now law, that the King might suspend, dispense with, or alter any particular law that he deemed hurtful to the public; and it has been said that he may dispense with a penal statute wherein his Subjects have not any interest. 4 Inst. 7: 4 Rep. 36. But by stat. 1 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2, It is declared and enacted, "that no dispensation by non obstante of or to any statute, or any part thereof, be allowed, but that the same shall be held void, and of none effect, except a dispensation be allowed in such statute." It is plain, however, that the King by his prerogative may, in certain cases, and special occasions, issue out proclamations for prevention of offences, to ratify and confirm an antient law, or, as some books express it, quoad terrorem populi, to admonish them that they keep the laws on pain of his displeasure; and such proclamations being grounded on the laws of the realm, are of great force. Fortesc. de Laud. c. 9: 11 Co. 87: 12 Co. 74, 75: Dal. 20. pl. 10: 2 Rol. Abr. 209: 3 Inst. 162.

It is likewise clear, that the Subject is obliged on pain of fine and imprisonment to obey every proclamation legally made, and though the thing prohibited were an offence before, that yet the proclamation is a circumstance which highly aggravates it; and on which alone the party disobeying may be punished. 12 Co. 74: Hob. 251. It is clearly agreed, that no private person can make any proclamation of a public nature, except by custom, as is usual in some cities and boroughs; this being a prerogative act, with which alone the King is intrusted. Bro. Procl. pl. 1: 12 Co. 75: Crom. Jurisf. 41.

But, according to the principles already laid down, the King by his proclamation cannot change any part of the common law, statutes, or customs of this realm; nor can he by his proclamation create any offence which was not an offence before. 11 Co. 87, b: 12 Co. 75.

On

On this foundation it hath been held, that the King's proclamation prohibiting the importation of wines from France on pain of forfeiture, was against law and void; there being at that time no war subsisting between the nations. 2 Inst. 63.

So where an act was made by which foreigners were licensed to merchandize within London, and Hen. IV. by proclamation prohibited the execution of it, and ordered it should be in suspense, usque ad proximum parliamentum; and this was held to be against law. 12 Co. 75.

On a conference between some Lords of the Privy Council, and the two Chief Justices (of which Lord Coke was one) and Chief Baron and Baron Altham, the question was, 1st, Whether the King by proclamation might prohibit new buildings in and about London?

2d, If the King might prohibit the making starch of wheat?

And the Judges were of opinion that the Subject could not be restrained in these particulars by the King's Proclamation. 12 Co. 74.

The King by proclamation may call or dissolve parliament, and declare war or peace; for these are prerogative acts, with which he is intrusted, as the executive part of the law; but if there be an actual war, it is not necessary in pleading to shew that such war was proclaimed. 3 Inst. 162: 1 Hal. H. P. C. 163: Owen 45: Rast. Ent. 605. See ante.

The King by proclamation may legitimate foreign coin, and make it current money of this kingdom, according to the value imposed by such proclamation; he may legitimate base coin, or mixed below the standard of sterling; he may enhance coin to a higher denomination or value, and may decry money that is current in use and payment; and in all these cases a proclamation, with a proclamation writ under the Great Seal, is necessary. Co. Lit. 207, b: 5 Co. 114, b: Dav. 21: 1 Hal. H. P. C. 192, 197. See title Coin.

The King by proclamation may appoint Fasts and days of thanksgiving and humiliation, and issue proclamations for preventing and punishing immorality and prosaneness; and enjoin reading the same in churches and chapels. Comp. Incumb. 354.

A proclamation must be under the Great Seal, and if denied, is to be tried by the Record thereof; but if a man pleads he was prevented doing a thing by proclamation, it seems the better opinion, that he need not aver that such proclamation was under the Great Seal; for alledging that such Proclamation was made, it shall be intended to have been duly made. Cro. Car. 180: See 1 Rol. Rep. 172: Vide Cro. Car. 130.

The King is likewise the Fountain of Honour, of Office, and of Privilege; and this in a different sense from that wherein he is stiled the fountain of justice; for here he is really the parent of them. It is impossible that Government can be maintained without a due subordination of rank, that the people may know and distinguish such as are set over them, in order to yield them their due respect and obedience; and also, that the officers themselves being encouraged by emulation, and the hopes of superiority, may the better discharge their functions: and the law supposes that no one can be so good a judge of their several merits and services, as the King himself who employs them. It has, therefore, intrusted with him the sole power of conferring dignities and honours, in confidence that he will bestow them upon none but such as deserve them. And, therefore, all degrees of nobility, of knighthood, and other titles, are received by immediate grant from the Crown; either expressed in writing by writs or letters patent, as in the creation of peers and baronets, or by corporeal investiture, as in the creation of a simple Knight. See titles Precedency; Peer.

From the same principle also arises the prerogative of erecting and disposing of Offices; for honours and offices are in their nature convertible and synonymous. All officers under the Crown carry in the eye of the law an honour along with them; because they imply a superiority of parts and abilities, being supposed to be always filled with those that are most able to execute them. And, on the other hand, all honours in their original had duties or offices annexed to them: an Earl, Comes, was the Conservator or Governor of a county; and a Knight, Miles, was bound to attend the King in his wars. For the same reason, therefore, that honours are in the disposal of the King, offices ought to be so likewise; and as the King may create new titles, so may he create new offices; but with this restriction, that he cannot create new offices with new fees annexed to them, nor annex new fees to old offices, for this would be a tax upon the Subject, which cannot be imposed but by act of parliament. 2 Inst. 533. Wherefore, in 13 Hen. 4, a new office being created by the King's letters patent for measuring cloths, with a new fee for the same, the letters patent were, on account of the new fee, revoked and declared void in Parliament.

On this subject it hath been further said, that the King, as the fountain of justice, hath an undoubted prerogative in creating officers, and all officers are said to derive their authority mediately or immediately from him; those who derive their authority from him are called the officers of the Crown, and are created by letters patent; such as the great officers of State, Judges, &c. and there needs no stronger evidence of a right in the Crown herein, than that the King hath created all such officers time immemorial. Dyer 176: 2 Roll. Abr. 152: 4 Co. 32: 2 Inst. 425, 540: 12 Co. 116: 1 Roll. Rep. 205: Show. Par. Ca. 111: 1 Lev. 219.

But though all such officers derive their authority from the Crown, and from whence the King is termed the universal officer and disposer of justice, yet it hath been held, that he hath not the office in him to execute it himself, but is only to grant or nominate; nor can the King grant any new powers to such officers, but they must execute their offices according to the rules prescribed by law. Co. Lit. 3, 114: 2 Vent. 270: 4 Inst. 125: 6 Co. 11, 12.

Neither can the King create any new office inconsistent with our constitution or prejudicial to the Subject. 2 Inst. 540: 2 Sid. 141: Moor 808: 4 Inst. 200.

And on this foundation an office created by letters patents for the sole making of all bills, informations and letters missive in the council of York, was unreasonable and void. 1 Jon. 231. See further this Dictionary, title Office.

Upon the same, or a like reason, the King has also the prerogative of conferring privileges upon private persons, such as granting place or precedence to any of his Subjects

Subjects as shall seem good to his royal wisdom. 4 Inst. 361. See title Precedence. Or such as converting aliens, or persons born out of the King's dominions, into denizens, whereby some very considerable privileges of natural-born Subjects are conferred upon them. See title Aliens. Such also is the prerogative of erecting Corporations; which is grounded upon this foundation, that the King, having the sole administration of the Government in his hands, is the best and the only Judge, in what capacities, with what privileges, and under what distinctions, his people are the best qualified to serve and act under him.

Another light in which the laws of England consider the King, with regard to domestic concerns, is as the Arbiter of domestic commerce, by the establishment of Markets, the regulating of Weights and Measures, and of the Coin. See this Dictionary under those titles.

The King is, lastly, considered by the laws of England as the Head and Supreme Governor of the national Church.

To enter into the reasons upon which this prerogative is founded is matter rather of divinity than law. It shall only, therefore, be observed, that, by stat. 26 H. 8. c. 1, (reciting that the King's Majesty justly and rightfully is and ought to be the supreme head of the church of England, and so had been recognized by the Clergy of this kingdom in their convocation,) it is enacted, that the King shall be reputed the only Supreme Head in earth of the Church of England, and shall have annexed to the Imperial Crown of this realm, as well the title and stile thereof, as all jurisdictions, authorities, and commodities, to the said dignity of Supreme Head of the Church appertaining. And another statute to the same purport was made 1 Eliz. c. 1.

In virtue of this authority the King convenes, prorogues, restrains, regulates, and dissolves, all ecclesiastical synods or convocations. This was an inherent prerogative of the Crown long before the time of Hen. VIII, as appears by the stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 1; and the many authors, both lawyers and historians, vouched by Sir E. Coke. 3 Inst. 322, 3. So that the stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19, which restrains the convocation from making or putting in execution any canons repugnant to the King's prerogative, or the laws, customs, and statutes of the realm, was merely declaratory of the old common law. 12 Rep. 72: that part of it only being new, which makes the King's royal assent actually necessary to the validity of every canon. See further title Convocation; Bishop.—As Head of the Church, the King is likewise the dernier resort in all ecclesiastical causes; an appeal lying ultimately to him in Chancery from the sentence of every ecclesiastical Judge; which right was restored to the Crown by stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19. See title Courts Ecclesiastical.

The Kings of England not having the whole legislative power, if the King and clergy make a canon, though it bind the clergy in re ecclesiasticâ, it does not bind laymen; for they are not represented in the convocation, but in Parliament. In the primitive church, the laity were present at all synods; and when the empire became Christian, no canon was made without the Emperor's consent, and indeed the Emperor's consent included that of the people, he having in himself the whole legislative power; but the Kings of this kingdom have it not. 2 Salk. 412, 673. See title Canon Law.

4. The King's Fiscal Prerogatives, or those which regard his Revenue, are such as the British Constitution hath vested in the Royal Person, in order to support his dignity and maintain his power; being a portion which each Subject contributes of his property, in order to secure the remainder.

This revenue is either ordinary, or extraordinary. The King's ordinary revenue is such, as has either subsisted time out of mind in the Crown, or else has been granted by Parliament, by way of purchase or exchange, for such of the King's inherent hereditary revenues, as were found inconvenient to the Subject.

It is not, however, to be understood, that the King is at present in the actual possession of the whole of this revenue. Much (nay, the greatest part) of it is at this day in the hands of Subjects; to whom it has been granted out from time to time by the Kings of England, which has rendered the Crown, in some measure, dependent on the People for its ordinary support and subsistence. So that among the royal revenues are now recounted, what Lords of manors and other Subjects frequently look upon to be their own absolute inherent rights, because they are, and have been, vested in them and their ancestors for ages, though in reality originally derived from the grants of our ancient princes. See 1 Comm. c. 8.

The King's Ordinary Revenues are stated by the learned Commentator to arise from: 1, The custody of the temporalties of Bishops. 2, A corody from each Bishoprick. 3, The Tithes in extraparochial places. 4, First-fruit and Tenths of all spiritual preferments. 5, The Demesne-lands of the Crown. (See stats. 26 Geo. 3. c. 87: 30 Geo. 3. c. 50). 6, Military Tenures, Purveyance, and Pre-emption. 7, Wine-licences. 8, Forest Courts. 9, Fines and fees in Courts of justice. 10, Royal Fish. 11, Shipwrecks. 12, Mines. 13, Treasure Trove. 14, Waifs. 15, Estrays. 16, Forfeitures of lands and goods for offences: in which are included Deodands. 17, Escheats of lands. 18, The custody of Idiots. As to all which, see this Dictionary under title Taxes; and the several other appropriate titles.

The Ordinary Revenue, or proper patrimony of the Crown was very large formerly, and capable of being increased to a magnitude truly formidable; for there are very few estates in the kingdom that have not, at some period of time or other since the Norman Conquest, been vested in the hands of the King by forfeiture, escheat, or otherwise. But, fortunately for the liberty of the Subject, this hereditary landed revenue, by a series of improvident management, is sunk almost to nothing; and the casual profits arising from the other branches of the census regalis, are likewise almost all of them alienated from the Crown. In order to supply the deficiencies of which, we are now obliged to have recourse to new methods of raising money, unknown to our early ancestors; which methods constitute the King's extraordinary revenue. For the public patrimony being got into the hands of private Subjects, it is but reasonable that private contributions should supply the public service. And, perhaps, if every gentleman in the kingdom was to be stripped of such of his lands as were formerly the property of the Crown, was to be again subject to the inconveniences of purveyance and pre-emption, the oppression of forest laws, and the slavery of feudal tenures, and was to resign into the King's hands all his royal franchises of waifs, waifs, wrecks, estrays, treasure-trove, mines, deodands, forfeitures, and the like; he would find himself a greater loser than by paying his quota to such taxes as are necessary to the support of government. The thing, therefore, to be wished and aimed at in a land of liberty, is by no means the total abolition of taxes, which would draw after it very pernicious consequences, and the very supposition of which is the height of political absurdity; but wisdom and moderation, not only in granting, but also in the method of raising the necessary supplies; by contriving to do both in such a manner as may be most conducive to the national welfare, and at the same time most consistent with œconomy and the liberty of the Subject; who, when properly taxed, contributes only some part of his property, in order to enjoy the rest. See further, titles Taxes; National Debt; Excise; Customs, &c.

By these taxes a vast sum of money is annually raised; but the Civil List is properly the whole of the King's revenue in his own distinct capacity; the rest being rather the revenue of the Publick or its creditors, though collected and distributed again in the name and by the officers of the Crown; it now standing in the same place as the hereditary income did formerly; and as that has gradually diminished, the parliamentary appointments have increased.

The expences defrayed by the Civil List are those that in any shape relate to civil government: as the expences of the royal household; the revenues allotted to the Judges previous to the year 1758; all salaries to Officers of State, and every of the King's servants; the appointments to foreign ambassadors; the maintenance of the Queen and Royal Family; the King's private expences, or privy purse; and other very numerous outgoings, as secret-service money, pensions, and other bounties; which sometimes have so far exceeded the revenues appointed for that purpose, that application has been made to parliament to discharge the debts contracted on the Civil List.

The whole revenue of Queen Elizabeth did not amount to more than 600,000*l.* a year; that of King Charles I. was 800,000*l.*; and the revenue voted for King Charles II. was 1,200,000*l.* though complaints were made (in the first years at least) that it did not amount to so much. The revenue of the Commonwealth between the time of Charles I. and Charles II. was upwards of 1,500,000*l.* A striking instance (says Mr. Christian in his Note on this passage in the Commentaries) to prove that the burthens of the people are not necessarily lightened by a change in the Government. A remark, which applies with tenfold force to the democratick government of France, raised by blood and slaughter on the ruins of monarchy; one pretext of the destruction of which was the enormous expence of it; an argument which has been, with equal falsehood and malice, applied also to the British Monarchy.

Under the revenue of the Civil Lists above-mentioned were included all manner of public expences; among which Lord Clarendon in his speech to the Parliament computed, that the charge of the navy and land forces amounted annually to 800,000*l.* which was ten times more than before the former troubles. The same revenue, subject to the same charges, was settled on King James II. by stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 1; but by the increase of trade, and more frugal management, it amounted on an average to a million and a half per annum; besides other additional customs granted by Parliament, stat. 1 Jac. 2. cc. 3, 4, which produced an annual revenue of 400,000*l.* out of which his fleet and army were maintained at the yearly expence of 1,100,000*l.* After the Revolution, when the Parliament took into its hands the annual support of the forces, both maritime and military, a civil list revenue was settled on the new King and Queen, amounting, with the hereditary duties, to 700,000*l.* per annum; and the same was continued to Queen Anne and King George I. That of King George II. was nominally augmented to 800,000*l.* by stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 2; and in fact was considerably more: and that of his present Majesty is avowedly increased to the limited sum of 900,000*l.*

Upon the whole, it is doubtless much better for the Crown, and also for the People, to have the revenue settled upon the modern footing rather than the ancient. For the Crown, because it is more certain, and collected with greater ease; for the People, because they are now delivered from the feodal hardships, and other odious branches of the prerogative. And though complaints have sometimes been made of the increase of the civil list, yet, if we consider the sums that have been formerly granted; the limited extent under which it is now established, the expences defrayed by it, the revenues and prerogatives given up in lieu of it by the Crown, the numerous branches of the present Royal Family, and, above all, the diminution of the value of money compared with what it was worth in the last century, we must acknowledge these complaints to be void of any rational foundation; and that it is impossible to support that dignity, which a King of Great Britain should maintain, with an income in any degree less than what is now established by Parliament.

VI. By Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3. c. 8, "The King nor his bailiffs shall levy any debts upon lands or rents so long as the debtor hath goods and chattels to satisfy, neither shall the pledges be distrained so long as the principal is sufficient; but if he fail, then shall the pledges answer the debt; howbeit they shall have the debtor's lands and rents until they be satisfied, unless he can acquit himself against the pledges."

Goods and chattels] By order of the common law, the King for his debt had execution of the body, lands, and goods of his debtor; this is an act of grace, and restrains the power the King had before. 2 Inst. 19.

Pledges be distrained] This act does not extend, nor was ever taken to extend to sureties in a bond or recognizance, if they may be so called, being bound themselves equally with the principal, as sureties to perform covenants and agreements are in like manner; but to pledges and manucaptors only, who by express words are not responsible, unless their principals become insolvent, and so are conditional debtors only. And so the act has always been construed, and the words themselves imply as much. Hard. 378.

By Magna Charta, c. 18, "The King's debtor dying, the King shall be served before the executor."

By this statute, the King by his prerogative shall be preferred in satisfaction of his debt by the executors before fore any other. And if the executors have sufficient to pay the King's debt, the heir nor any purchaser of his lands shall not be charged. 2 Inst. 32.

Stat. West. 1; 3 Ed. 1. c. 19, enacts, "That the Sheriff having received the King's debt, upon his next account shall discharge the debtor thereof, in pain to forfeit three times so much to the debtor, and to make fine at the King's will. And the sheriff and his heirs shall answer all monies that they whom he employed receive; and if any other that is answerable to the Exchequer by his own hands do so, he shall render thrice so much to the plaintiff, and make fine as before. And on payment of the King's debt, the Sheriff shall give a talley to the debtor, and the process for levying the same shall be shewed him on demand without fee, on pain to be grievously punished."

The King's debt.] Under this word, debt, all things due to the King are comprehended, and not only debt in the proper sense, but duties on things due, as rents, fines, issues, amercements, and other duties to the King received or levied by the Sheriff; for debt in its large sense signifies whatever a man doth owe; and debere dicitur quia deest habere; debitori enim deest quod habet, cum sit creditoris, maxime in casu domini regis. 2 Inst. 198.

The Sheriff and his heirs shall answer.] This is to be understood, quoad restitutionem, but not quoad pœnam; that is for the civil but not for the criminal part; for this is a maxim in law. 2 Inst. 198.

The stat. 28 Ed. 1. st. 3. c. 12, enacts, "That beasts of the plough shall not be distrained for the King's debts so long as others may be found, on such pain as is elsewhere ordained by statute: (viz. by the statute de districtione scaccarii, 51 Hen. 3. stat. 4.) And the great distresses shall not be taken for his debts, nor driven too far; and if the debtor can find convenient surety, the distress shall in the mean time be released; and he that does otherwise shall be grievously punished."

This is an act of grace, and on this act there lies a writ directed to the Sheriff, commanding him to receive surety according to this act, which if he refuses, an attachment lies against him, or the party offering surety according to this act, if it be refused, may have an action against the Sheriff, &c. 2 Inst. 565.

The stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 19, enables a common person to sue a debtor of his (who is likewise a debtor to the King) to judgment, but he cannot proceed to execution, unless the plaintiff gives security to pay the King's debt first, and then he may take execution for his own and the King's debt too.—For otherwise, if without giving such security, the party takes forth execution upon his judgment, and levies the money, the same money may be seized upon to satisfy the King's debt.

The stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. s. 2, enacts, "That all obligations and specialties concerning the King and his heirs, or made to his or their use, shall be made to his Highness and to his heirs, Kings, in his or their name or names, by these words, domino regi, and to no other person to his use, and to be paid to his Highness, by these words, solvend' eidem domino regi hæred' vel executoribus suis, with other words used in common obligations, which obligations and specialties shall be in the nature of a statute staple."

None other are to be charged, but such as were liable to the bond when it was made. Sav. 10.

An obligation for performance of covenants is within this act, after the covenants are broken. 7 Rep. 20. b: Hard. 368, 442.

By § 3 of the said act 33 Hen. 8. c. 39, All such obligations, the debt not being paid, shall come, remain, and be to the heirs or executors of the King as he shall appoint; and if any person take any obligation to the use of the King or his heirs, otherwise than as aforesaid, he shall suffer such imprisonment as shall be adjudged by the King or his honourable Council.

Costs and damages are given to the King. § 6.

~~Debts to be sued for in proper Courts.~~ § 7.

And every of the Courts are empowered to set such fines, &c. on persons for their defaults, &c. as to the Court seem expedient. And all trials shall be by due examination of witnesses, writings, proofs, or such other way as by the Courts shall be thought expedient. § 13.

And in all actions in any of the Courts for any debt due to the King by reason of any attainder, outlawry, forfeiture, gift of the party, or by any other collateral ways or means, it shall be sufficient in law to shew and allege generally, that the party to whom the said debt did belong, such a year and day did give the same to the King, or was attainted, outlawed, &c. whereby the said debt did accrue to the King; and the same shall be of the same effect, as if the whole matter had been declared at large according to the order of the common law. § 25.

If any suit be commenced, or any process awarded for the King, for the recovery of any debt, then the same suit and process shall be preferred before any person. And that the Lord, his heirs and successors, shall have first execution against any defendant for his debt, before any person: so always that the King's suit be commenced, or process awarded for the debt, at the suit of the King, his heirs or successors, before judgment given for the other person. § 26.

This statute abridges the prerogative, and controuls the common law; and here is a negative implied, though the statute sounds in the affirmative; for it enacts a new thing, and the ita quod makes a condition precedent and a limitation: and the words are introductive. Hard. 27.

Strange arg. said, That on this act he took it, the suit must be said to be then taken or commenced when the first step is made towards the proceeding to execution, and the first step to be taken is to procure a fiat of a Baron, and then it is in fact that the process is awarded. Gilb. Eq. R. 222.

All manors, lands, tenements, possessions, and hereditaments, which be, or that hereafter shall be, in the hands, possession, occupation, or seisin of any person, to whom the manors, &c. have heretofore or hereafter shall descend, revert, or remain in fee-simple, or in fee-tail, general or special, by, from, or after the death of any ancestor as heir, or by gift of his ancestors whose heir he is, which ancestor was, is, or shall be indebted to the King, or to any person to his use, by judgment, recognizance, obligation, or other specialty, the debt whereof is or shall not be paid; then in every such case the same manors, &c. shall be chargeable for payment of the debt. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39, § 27.

All manors.] A. seised of the manor of F. in consideration of a marriage to be had between B. his son, and

M. daughter of J. S. covenanted to levy a fine to the use of himself and wife for their lives, remainder to the use of B. and M. and the heirs of their bodies with remainders over; afterwards A. acknowledged a recognizance to the Queen and died. His wife died; the manor is extended for the Queen's debt, by force of the statute. It was argued by Coke, that the manor is not chargeable by the statute; but it was made for the King's benefit in two points. To make lands intailed liable for the King's debts, where they were not so before, against the issue. 2. To make bonds taken by the officers of the King to the use of the King, as effectual as statutes; that the words (was or shall be indebted) shall not be intended after the gift made; that (shall be) is to be intended of future debts after the statute, whereas at the time of the settlement A. was not receiver or other officer to the Queen; the words are (by gift after the debt acknowledged to the Queen); that this case is not within the statute; for the words are (of the gift of his ancestor), but here B. has not the manor of the gift of A. but rather by the statute of uses, and so he is in the post, and not in the per, by his ancestor; for the fine was levied to divers persons to the uses aforesaid, nor was the gift a mere gratuity, but in consideration that he should marry the daughter of J. S. and the debt accrued not till after the gift. He admitted, that had there been any fraud in the case, or any purpose in A. when he made the conveyance, to become the King's debtor or officer, it would be within the statute, and the gift had been a meer gratuity, &c. and afterwards (as Coke reported) B. and his lands were discharged. 2 Leon, 90, 91.

Shall be indebted.] This is intended an immediate debt, and not such debts as are due to the subject and accrue to the King by any collateral means; for which this statute has a clause for the writ and general manner and form of pleading in such cases, of the part of the King for the recovery of them, that the party such a year and day, &c. (which see at § 25 above). So that the several manners of penning these two branches manifest the intention of the makers of the act to prefer immediate debts due to the King by judgment, &c. before debts of the Subject which accrue to the King by assignment, attainder, outlawry, &c. and the reason was, because debts due immediately to the King by judgment, recognizance, obligation, or other specialty, are in their nature more high, and may be better known, and upon search found, than debts due to Subjects. 7 Rep. 21 Jenk. 226. pl. 99. S. P. But for such debts the King is left at common law. If the King's debtor, officer, or accomptant has leases for years or goods; these leases and goods are not liable if the debtor sold them bona fide; but if he sold them by covin it is otherwise. If land be purchased with the King's money, it is liable to satisfy the King.

The debt ought to be immediately to the King himself, or if it be to any other than to the King, it ought to be originally to the use of the King. 7 Rep. 22. a.

If tenant in tail becomes indebted to the King, unless it be by judgment, recognizance, obligation, or other specialty, and dies, the lands in the seisin of the issue in tail by force of this act shall not be extended by this act for such debt; for the statute extends only to the said four cases, and all other debts remain at common law. 7 Rep. 21. b.

The issue in tail (the land being in his hands) is also liable in either of the said four cases, but not the bona fide alienee of the issue; for the words of the statute do not extend to this alienee; the common law did not help the King in these cases; the statute helps the King in the case against the issue in tail. Jenk. 226. pl. 99. 285. pl. 19.

The issue in tail shall not be charged by this statute for the penalty on a conviction of recusancy of the tenant in tail by proclamation, under stat. 29 Eliz. c. 6, but otherwise it had been if he had been convicted under stat. 23 El. c. 1. 1 Rol. Rep. 94.

In every such case.] By the express purview of this act, the land shall be solely extended as long as it is in the possession or seisin of the heir in tail; for this act says, That in every such case the land shall be charged. And as the land against the issue in tail was not extendable before this act, the King has benefit to extend it in the possession of the heir in tail, which he could not do before; but the King cannot extend the lands of the alienee: for the statute does not extend to this, and the makers of the act have reason to favour the purchasers, farmers, &c. of the heir in tail more than the heir himself; for they are strangers to the debts of tenant in tail, and they come to the land on good consideration. 7 Rep. 21. b.

The same manors.] If the goods and chattels of the King's debtors be sufficient, and so can be made appear to the Sheriff, whereupon he may levy the King's debt, then the Sheriff ought to extend the lands of the debtor or his heir, or of any purchaser or tenant. 2 Inst. 19.

The King shall not be excluded to demand his debts against any of his Subjects, as heir to any person indebted to his Highness or to his use, albeit this word heir be not comprised in such recognizance or specialty, or that such person shall say, that they have not any hereditaments to them descended, but only such as be intailed or given to them by their ancestors. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. § 28.

By this clause the intent of the makers of the act appears, that the heir in tail shall be only charged with the debt of the King; but lands in fee-simple were extendable at the common law in whatever hands they came, therefore as to them this statute was only declarativum antiqui juris: but as to the estates in tail, it was introductivum novi juris against the issue in tail. 7 Rep. 21. b.

One P. was indebted to the Queen, and one W. was bound to P. in 100*l.* in which obligation W. did not mention his heirs; P. assigned the obligation in which W. was bound to him, to the Queen; and, on this, process was made against the heir of W. And it was held by the Court, that as W. did not oblige himself and his heirs, that the heir by the death of the father was discharged. And if the assignment had been made in the life-time of the father, and then the father had died, the heir should be discharged, but the son may be charged as executor or administrator. &c. Sav. 2.

Provided, That the King may at his liberty demand his debts of any executors or administrators of any person indebted, if the executors, &c. have assets. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. § 29.

J. S. was obliged to Sir Richard Cavendish, Treasurer of the Chamber to Henry VIII. in 100*l.* who was indebted indebted to the King, on which process was made against those who were tertenants of J. S. tempori confectionis scripti præd' made to the said Sir Richard. Per Manwood, Ch. B. The tertenants are not chargeable in this case, but the heirs and executors. Per Shute, second Baron, If an obligation be made to the King, it shall be of the same nature as a statute staple to all intents, by this statute; but obligations made to other persons to the use of the King, shall be executory against the obligor, his heirs, executors, or administrators, and not against other persons; but if J. N. be bound to J. S. and J. S. assigns this to Sir Richard Cavendish, and he over to the King, no process shall be made thereon; to which the Court and all the clerks agreed. And it was held, that if obligor, after the obligation made, voluntarily make feoffment of lands, such feoffees shall be charged; otherwise it is of purchasers before the obligation made in case of the King. Sav. 12.

If the hereditaments be evicted out of the possession of such person by just title without fraud, whose hereditaments shall be chargeable as is abovesaid, then such hereditaments shall be acquitted of the debts. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. § 30.

B. was indebted to the Queen, for the payment of which debt certain lands of B. at the time of the debt, were purchased by one W. against whom and one C. and D. the said B. exhibited his bill in the Exchequer-chamber, praying that the equity of the case might there be examined. Before any answer made, W. paid the debt, and then demanded judgment if the Court would hold further plea, as the cause of privilege was determined, which is the debt due to the Queen. And it was held, that on this reason the Court ought to dismiss the cause, and so it was done. Sav. 15.

If any person of whom any such debt shall be demanded, shew sufficient matter, in law, reason, or good conscience, why such persons ought not to be charged with the same, and it be sufficiently proved, the Courts have power to allow the proof, and acquit all persons so impleaded. Stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. § 31.

Sufficient matter in law.] This proviso gives benefit not only to him who has matter in good conscience, but also to him who has good and sufficient cause, and matter in law, reason, (and then comes) good conscience; and without question the first words, viz. cause and matter in law, shall extend to all the debts of the King, and process thereupon, as well at common law as on this act. And the conclusion of the branch does not make against it. For the sense thereof was, that he should plead matter in law or good conscience, and that nothing contained in the act should be an impediment thereto. 7 Rep. 19. b.

Scire facias issued against Sir W. H. as heir to M. H. his father, on a recognizance acknowledged to Edw. VI. by the said M. H. the Sheriff returned scire feci, and on his default judgment was given. And because in truth he never was summoned, and had good matter, if he had notice thereof, to plead in discharge of the recognizance acknowledged, all which he shewed in certain in a bill in the Exchequer; upon which, on conference had by Manwood and the other Barons, with the two Ch. J. he was discharged of the recognizance. 7 Rep. 20. a. As 3 Rep. Trin. 37 Eliz. Sir William Herbert's case.

In law, reason, or good conscience.] A. obtained of the King a privy seal, whereby the forfeiture of certain recognizances for appearing at the sessions, amounting in the whole to 800*l.* was granted her. And it was made a question, Whether the Court might compound those forfeitures by their privy seal which was granted before the privy seal and grant to A.? And it was doubted whether the privy seal did not take away and revoke the power given to the Court in this particular? But it was held clearly, that the Court might upon good matter in equity discharge these debts by virtue of this statute. And the case in question seemed a hard case to the Court, because the party himself was the cause why there was no appearance, by beating the party so heinously the very day before they ought to have appeared, that they were disabled thereby to appear. Hard. 334.

W. put 100*l.* out at interest to defendant, and took bond in the name of one J. who became felo de se, and the plaintiff was relieved against the King on this trust, in equity upon this statute. Sed quære, Whether this statute extends to any equity against the King, otherwise than in case of pleas by way of discharge? But it was likewise decreed in this cause that the plaintiff should be saved harmless from all others. Hard. 176.

And the matter so shewed be sufficiently proved.] Scire facias issued against T. the father and T. the son, to shew cause wherefore they did not pay the King 1000 l. for the mesne profits of certain lands holden by them from his Majesty, for which land judgment was given for him in the Exchequer, and the mesne rates were found by inquisition, which returned that the said mesne profits came to 1000*l.* upon which inquisition this scire facias issued; whereupon the Sheriff returned that T. the father was dead, and T. the son appeared, and pleaded that he took the profits but as a servant to his father, and by his command, and rendered an account to his father for the profits, and also that judgment for the lands was given against his father and him for default of sufficient pleading, and not for the truth of the fact; and he shewed this statute, which he pretended aided him for his equity; whereupon the King demurred. Tanfield, Ch. B. said, that the matter in equity ought to be sufficiently proved, and here is nothing but the allegation of the party, and the demurrer for the King; and if the demurrer be in law an admittance of the allegation, and so a sufficient proof within the statute, is to be advised on; and for that point the case is but this: A scire facias issues to have execution of a recognizance, which, within this act, ought, by pretence and allegation of the defendant, to be discharged for matter in equity, and the defendant pleads his matter in equity, and the King, supposing this not to be equity within this statute, demurs in law, whether that demurrer be an insufficient proof of the allegation within the statute or not? Adjornatur. Lane 51.

By § 33 of the said stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 39, it is provided, that the said act shall not take away any liberties belonging to the duchy and county palatine of Lancaster.

Process and executions for debts in the Court of Exchequer shall be made in the Exchequer by such officer as hath been used, as by this act is limited. § 34.

The stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4, enacts, That all the lands, &c. which any accomptant of the Queen, her heirs and successors,

cessors, hath while he remains accountable, shall for the payment of the debts of the Queen, her heirs and successors, be liable, and put in execution in like manner, as if such accountant had stood bound by writ obligatory (having the effect of the statute staple) to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for payment of the same. § 1.

The Queen, by her letters patent, granted catalla utlugatorum & felonum de se, within such a precinct; one who was indebted to the Queen is felo de se within the precinct. It was ruled, that notwithstanding the grant by the letters patents, the Queen shall have the goods for satisfying her debt. 3 Leo. 113: Mo. 126, 127. S. C. between the Queen of the first part, the Bishop of Sarum of the second part, and Oliver Coxhead of the third part; and there per Manwood, Ch. B. the patent does not extend to have the goods of felo de se against the Queen for her debt, because it wanted the words (licet tangat nos); but he agreed, that if the lands of the felon be liable to [sufficient to answer] all the debt of the queen, the Court may in discretion take all the lands in extent, and leave the goods to the patentee. And as to a petition of Coxhead praying a discharge of the lands, &c. by him purchased of the officer debtor to the Queen, it was answered, that the land was subject to the Queen's extent for all arrears of receipts by his office, received before the conveyance thereof, though the receipt be after the conveyance, and that by reason of the statute; but as to another office accepted after the conveyance of the land, the arrears of that shall not charge the land so conveyed.

B. L. having purchased a long term for years in houses, afterwards purchased the inheritance; afterwards he became receiver of North Wales, and having occasion for 500*l.* assigned over the term by way of mortgage to J. S. Afterwards on the marriage of E. L. his son, he settled the houses in St. Clement's (inter alia) on himself for life, remainder to E. L. his son, and the heirs of his body. There was issue of the marriage a daughter, the wife of P. after this B. L. mortgages these houses to N. for 1800*l.* The King extends these houses for the debt of B. L. N. gets an assignment of the extent, and a privy seal for the debt. Resolved, 1st, That by the statute of Elizabeth, the land and the real estate of B. L. was bound and stood liable to answer the King's debt, although he was not actually a debtor to the King, nor any extent against him in several years after. 2dly, That where a term is attendant on the inheritance, he shall have a right to the term; but if it be a term in gross, and assigned before any actual extent, the assignment will stand good, and the term not liable to the King's debt. 2 Vern. 389, 390.

If either of the Queen's officers, on rendering of his account, shall be found in arrear, and such arrears shall not be paid within six months after the account past, the Queen, &c. may sell so much of his estate as will answer the debt, and the overplus of the sale is to be rendered to the accomptant or his heirs, by the officer that receives the purchase money, without further warrant. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4. § 2, 3.

Upon this statute many questions were moved. 1st, If the debtor died, whether the land might be sold? 2dly, When the account is determined after his death? 3dly, When the accountant, after becoming debtor, and in arrear makes feoffment, or other estate over, or charges or incumbers the land, either to his issue, or others of his blood, to prevent the Queen's selling, or on other consideration, whether she may sell the land, the words of the act being make sale, &c. of so much of the lands, &c. of every such accountant or debtor so found in arrear, &c. and that the sale shall be good and available in law against the party accountant, and his heirs claiming as heirs. 4thly, If the accountant was seised of land in tail, whether this land may be sold to be good against the issue; for the ousting of which doubts the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 3, was made; but this gives remedy only, that the land shall be sold after the death of the debtor, and when the account is made after his death; therefore to remedy the other mischiefs, the statute 29 Eliz. c. 7, was made (but the same being only a temporary act is expired). Mo. 646, &c. pl. 895: (where part of the last-mentioned act is set forth and explained.)

If such accountant or debtor purchase lands in others names in trust for their use, that being found by office or inquisition, those lands also shall be liable to satisfy the debt in such manner as before is expressed. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4. § 5.

Lands purchased by accountants since the beginning of the Queen's reign, either in their own names, or in the names of others in trust for their use, shall be also liable to be sold for the discharge of their debts as aforesaid, rendering the overplus to the accountant. § 6.

Provided, That bishops' lands shall be only chargeable for subsidies or tenths, as they were before making this act, and not otherwise. § 9.

Neither shall this act extend to charge any accountant whose yearly receipt exceeds not 300*l.* otherwise than as he was lawfully chargeable before this act. § 10.

Neither shall this act extend to such accountants, as by order of their offices, and charge, immediately after their accounts past, are to lay out money again; such as are treasurers of war, garrisons, navy, provision of victuals, or for fortifications or buildings, and the master of the wardrobe; unless the Queen, &c. command present pay. § 11, 12.

Neither does this act extend to Sheriffs, escheators, or bailiffs of liberties, concerning whose accounts the course remains the same as before. § 13.

Lands bought of an accountant bona fide, and without notice of any fraudulent intent in the accountant shall be discharged; and if they be bound by office, yet shall they, on traverse, be discharged without livery, ouster le main, or other suit. § 14.

If a man is receiver to the King, and not indebted, but is clear and sells his land, and ceases to be receiver, and afterwards is appointed receiver again, and then a debt is contracted with the King, the former sale is good. 2 Mod. 247.

The Queen, &c. being satisfied by sale of lands, the sureties shall be discharged for so much, and if any yet remain unpaid, the sureties shall pay the residue rateably according to their abilities. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4. § 15.

By stat. 27 Eliz. c. 3, the Queen, &c. may make sale of the accountant's lands, &c. as well after his death as in his lifetime, and as well where the account is made, and the debt known within eight years after his death, as where the account is made, and the debt known in his lifetime. § 2.

By

By § 3, it is provided, that after the accountant's death, and before the lands be sold, a scire facias shall be awarded to garnish the heirs, to shew cause why lands, &c. should not be sold, &c. whereupon, if the heir, upon such garnishment or two nihils returned, do not prove that the executors or administrators of the accountant have sufficient, then ten months after such two nihils or garnishment returned, the land, &c. shall be sold and disposed according to the statute of 13 Eliz. c. 4.

Nevertheless, the heir's sale bona fide upon good consideration before the scire facias awarded, shall be good to him who is not consenting to defraud the Queen, &c. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 3. § 4.

This statute shall extend to all officers of receipts and accounts to her Majesty, and to no other. § 5.

If the debt grow in the Courts of the duchy of wards, a privy seal shall issue out against the heir to appear at a certain day, to shew cause, &c. when, if he appear not, on affidavit made that it was duly served, an attachment with proclamation shall issue against him, to be proclaimed in some open market in the county where he dwelt twenty days (at least) before the return thereof, whereupon, if he appear not, the lands, &c. shall be sold and disposed as aforesaid. § 6.

The heir's lands shall not be sold during his minority; but at any time within eight years after his full age they shall be liable as aforesaid. § 7.

VII. In King John's Magna Charta of Liberties, there was a clause making it lawful for the barons of the realm to choose twenty-five barons to see the charter observed by the King; with power, on any Justice or other minister of the King's failing to do right, and acting contrary thereto, for four of the said barons to address the King, and pray that the same might be remedied; and if the same were not amended in forty days, upon the report of the four barons to the rest of the twenty-five, those twenty-five barons, with the commonalty of the whole land, were at liberty to distress the King, take his castles, lands, &c. until the evils complained of should be remedied, according to their judgment; saving the person of the King, Queen, and their children. And when the evils were redressed, the people were to obey the King as before. King John's Magna Chart. c. 73. But this clause was omitted in King Henry IIId's Magna Charta; though in a statute made at Oxford, anno 42 Hen. III. to reform misgovernment, it was enacted, that twenty-four great men should be named, twelve by the King, and twelve by the Parliament, to appoint Justices, Chancellors, and other officers, to see Magna Charta observed.— These regulations seem (like the constitution, framed by an assembly in a neighbouring nation, before they had directly discarded a monarchical form of government) too laboured and unnatural to succeed in practice: the checks now formed, by the law, on the power of the Crown are of a nature in reality more forcible, though in appearance more loyal, than a measure which placed the Sovereign in subjection to a dangerous Aristocracy.

The Barons' wars seem to have proceeded in some measure from a like power granted to them as by the charter of King John; and probably the Parliament's wars in the time of King Charles I. from their examples.

But, whatever attempts might have been previously made, it cannot but be observed, that most of the laws for ascertaining, limiting, and restraining the prerogative of the Crown, have been made within the compass of little more than a century past, from the Petition of Right in 3 Car. I. to the present time: so that the powers of the Crown are now to all appearance greatly curtailed and diminished since the reign of King James I. particularly by the abolition of the Star Chamber, and High Commission Courts in the reign of Charles I; and by the disclaiming of martial law, and the power of levying taxes on the Subject, by the same Prince; by the disuse of forest laws for a century past; and by the many excellent provisions enacted under Charles II; especially by the abolition of military tenures, purveyance, and preemption, the Habeas Corpus act, and the act to prevent the discontinuance of parliaments for above three years; and, since the Revolution, by the strong and emphatical words in which our liberties are asserted, in the Bill of Rights, and Act of Settlement; by the act for triennial, since turned into septennial, elections; by the exclusion of certain officers from the House of Commons; by rendering the seats of the Judges permanent, and their salaries liberal and independant; and by restraining the King's pardon from obstructing parliamentary impeachments. Besides all this, if we consider how the Crown is impoverished and stripped of all its antient revenues, so that it must greatly rely on the liberality of Parliament for its necessary support and maintenance, we may, perhaps, be led to think, that the balance is inclined, pretty strongly, to the popular scale; and that the executive magistrate has neither independance nor power enough left, to form that check upon the Lords and Commons which the Founders of our Constitution intended.

On the other hand, however, it is to be considered, that every prince in the first parliament after his accession, has by long usage a truly royal addition to his hereditary revenue settled upon him for his life; and has never any occasion to apply to Parliament for supplies, but upon some public necessity of the whole realm. This restores to him that constitutional independance, which at his first accession seems, it must be owned, to be wanting. And then, with regard to power, we may find perhaps, that the hands of Government are at least sufficiently strengthened, and that an English Monarch is now in no danger of being overborne either by the Nobility or the People. The instruments of power are not, perhaps, so open and avowed, as they formerly were, and therefore are the less liable to jealous and invidious reflections; but they are not the weaker upon that account. In short, our national debt and taxes have, in their natural consequences, thrown such a weight of power into the executive scale of government, as we cannot think was intended by our patriot ancestors; who gloriously struggled for the abolition of the then formidable parts of the prerogative, and by an unaccountable want of foresight established this system in their stead. The entire collection and management of so vast a revenue, being placed in the hands of the Crown, have given rise to such a multitude of new officers created by, and removable at, the royal pleasure, that they have extended the influence of Government to every corner of the nation. To this may be added, the frequent opportunities of conferring particular obligations, by preference in loans, subscriptions, tickets, remittances, and other money transactions, which will greatly increase this influence, and that over those persons whose attachment, on account of their wealth, is frequently the most desirable. And the same may be said with regard to the officers in our numerous army, and the places which the army has created. All which, put together, give the Executive Power so persuasive an energy, with respect to the persons themselves, and so prevailing an interest with their friends and families, as will amply make amends for the loss of external prerogative.

Upon the whole, therefore, it seems clear, that whatever may have become of the nominal, the real power of the Crown has not been too far weakened by any transactions in the last century. Much is, indeed, given up; but much is also acquired. The stern commands of prerogative have yielded to the milder voice of influence; the slavish and exploded doctrine of non-resistance has given way to a military establishment by law; and to the disuse of parliaments has succeeded a parliamentary trust of an immense perpetual revenue. When, indeed, by the free operation of the Sinking Fund, our national debts shall be lessened, when the posture of foreign affairs, and the universal introduction of a well-planned and national militia, will suffer our formidable army to be thinned and regulated; and when, in consequence of all, our taxes shall be gradually reduced; this adventitious power of the Crown will slowly and imperceptibly diminish, as it slowly and imperceptibly rose; but, till that shall happen, it will be our special duty, as good Subjects and good Englishmen, to reverence the Crown, and yet guard against corrupt and servile influence from those who are intrusted with its authority; to be LOYAL, yet FREE; OBEDIENT, and yet INDEPENDENT; and, above every thing, to hope, that we may long, very long, continue to be governed by a Sovereign, who, in all those public acts that have personally proceeded from himself, hath manifested the highest veneration for the free Constitution of Britain; hath already, in more than one instance, remarkably strengthened its outworks, and therefore will never harbour a thought, or adopt a persuasion, in any the remotest degree, detrimental to public liberty. 1 Comm. c. 8.

I. THE Court of King's Bench, is so called because the King used formerly to sit there in person, the stile of the Court still being coram ipso rege. During the reign of a Queen it is called the Queen's Bench; and under the usurpation in Cromwell's time, it was stiled the Upper Bench.

This Court consists of a Chief Justice, and three puisne Judges, formerly, according to Fortescue, c. 51, four or five. See Raym. 475: 3 Comm. 41, in. n. These Judges are, by their office, the sovereign Conservators of the peace, and supreme Coroners of the land. Yet, though the King used himself to sit in this Court, and still is supposed so to do; he did not, neither by law is he empowered to, determine any cause or motion, but by the mouth of his Judges, to whom he has committed his whole judicial authority. 4 Inst. 71: See 4 Burr. 851: 2 Inst. 46.

It has been said, that King Hen. III. sate in person with the Justices in Banco Regis several times, being seated on a high bench, and the Judges in a lower one at his feet. This, however, is a doubtful point. King Edward IV. sate three days in the second year of his reign, wholely to see, as he was young, the form of administring justice. King James I. it is also said, sate there for a similar reason. See 3 Comm. c. 4. in n.

This Court, which is the remnant of the ancient Aula Regia, is not, nor can it be, from the very nature and constitution of it, fixed to any certain place, but may follow the King's person wherever he goes. See stat. 28 Eliz. 1. stat. 3. c. 5. For which reason all process issuing out of this Court in the King's name is returnable, "ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia;—wheresoever We shall then be in England." See titles Courts; Common Pleas. It hath, indeed, for some centuries past, usually sate at Westminster, being an antient palace of the Crown; but might remove with the King to York or Exeter, if he thought proper to command it. And we find, that after Edw. I. had conquered Scotland, it actually sate at Roxburgh. M. 20, 21 E. 1: Hale, H. C. L. 200. And this moveable quality, as well as its dignity and power, are fully expressed by Bracton, when he says, that the Justices of this Court are "capitales, generales, perpetui, et majores; à latere regis residentes: qui omnium aliorum corrigere tenentur injurias et errores. Bract. l. 3. c. 10." And it is moreover especially provided in the Articula super cartas, 28 E. 1. c. 5, that the King's Chancellor, and the Justices of his Bench, shall follow him; so that he may have at all times near unto him some that be learned in the laws.

After the division of the Courts, and the establishment of the Court of Common Pleas, for the express purpose of determining civil suits, the Court of King's Bench was accustomed, in ancient times, to be especially exercised in all criminal matters and pleas of the Crown, leaving the judging of private contracts and civil actions to the Common Pleas and other courts. Glanvil. lib. 1. c. 2, 3, 4; lib. 10. c. 18: Smith de Rep. Ang. lib. 2. c. 11: 4 Inst. fol. 70.

Toward the latter end of the Norman period, the Aula Regis, which was before one great Court where the Justiciar presided, was divided into four distinct Courts, i. e. the Court of Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer. Madox, c. 19: Bract. lib. 3. c. 7. fol. 105: see titles Courts; Common Pleas, &c.

The Court of King's Bench retained the greater similitude with the ancient Curia, or Aula Regis, and was always ambulatory, and removed with the King where-wherever he went. It hath always retained a supreme original jurisdiction in all criminal matters; for in these the process both issued from, and was returnable into, this Court; but in trespass it might be made returnable into either the King's Bench or Common Pleas, because the plea was criminal as well as civil, 2 Inst. 24: 4 Inst. 70: Co. Lit. 71: Dyer 187: Cromp. of Courts 78: 1 Rol. Abr. 94.

II. The jurisdiction of this Court is very high and transcendant. It keeps all inferior jurisdictions within the bounds of their authority, and may either remove their proceedings to be determined here, or prohibit their progress below. It superintends all civil corporations in the kingdom. It commands magistrates and others to do what their duty requires, in every case where there is no other specific remedy. It protects the liberty of the Subject by speedy and summary interposition. It takes cognizance both of criminal and civil causes; the former, in what is called the Crown side or Crown-office; the latter in the plea-side of the Court. 3 Comm. c. 4.

On the Crown-side, that is, in the Crown-Office, this Court takes cognizance of all criminal causes, from high treason down to the most trivial misdemeanor or breach of the peace. Into this Court also indictments from all inferior Courts may be removed by writ of certiorari, and tried either at bar, or at nisi prius, by a Jury of the county out of which the indictment is brought. The Judges of this Court are the supreme Coroners of the kingdom. And the Court itself is the principal Court of criminal jurisdiction known to the laws of England. For which reason, by the coming of the Court of King's Bench into any county, (as it was removed to Oxford on account of the sickness in 1665,) all former commissions of oyer and terminer, and general gaol-delivery, are at once absorbed and determined ipso facto.

But this is now altered, with respect to the Session of Gaol-delivery for Middlesex, by stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 18; which enacts, that when any session of oyer and terminer, and gaol-delivery of the gaol of Newgate, for the county of Middlesex, shall have been begun to be holden before the essoign day of any term, that the same sessions shall be continued to be holden, and the business thereof finally concluded, notwithstanding the happening of such essoign day of any term, or the sitting of his Majesty's Court of King's Bench at Westminster, or elsewhere in the county of Middlesex; and that all trials, &c. had at such session so continued to be holden, shall be good and effectual to all intents and purposes. See this Dictionary, title Justices of Oyer, &c.

Into this Court of King's Bench hath reverted all that was good and salutary of the jurisdiction of the Court of Star-Chamber (Camera Stellata), which was a Court of very ancient original, finally abolished, on account of the abuse of its jurisdiction, by stat. 16 C. 1. c. 10. See this Dictionary, title Star-Chamber. 4 Comm. c. 19.

To state its powers more particularly, this Court is termed the Custos Morum of all the realm, and by the plenitude of its power, wherever it meets with an offence contrary to the first principles of justice, and of dangerous consequence if not restrained, adapts a proper punishment to it. 1 Sid. 168: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 4.

The Justices of B. R. are the sovereign Justices of oyer and terminer, gaol-delivery, and of eyre, and coroners of the land; and their jurisdiction is general all over England: by their presence the power of all other Justices in the county, during the time of this Court's sitting in it, is suspended as has already been noticed; for in præsentia majoris cessat potestas minoris; but such Justices may proceed by virtue of a special commission, &c. H. P. C. 156: 4 Inst. 73: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3.

If an indictment in a foreign county be removed before commissioners of oyer and terminer into the county where the King's Bench sits, they may proceed; for the King's Bench not having the indictment before them cannot proceed for this offence. But if an indictment is found in the vacation-time in the same county in which the King's Bench sits, and in term time the King's Bench is adjourned, there may be a special commission to hear it. 4 Inst. 73.

Justices of this Court have a sovereign jurisdiction over all matters of a criminal and public nature, judicially brought before them, to give remedy either by the common law or statute: and their power is original and ordinary: when the King hath appointed them, they have their jurisdiction from the law. 4 Inst. 74.

This Court has a particular jurisdiction, not only over all capital offences, but also over all other misdemeanors of a public nature, tending either to a breach of the peace, or to oppression or faction, or any manner of misgovernment; and it is not material whether such offences, being manifestly against the public good, directly injure any particular person or not. 4 Inst. 71: 11 Co. 98: 2 H. P. C. c. 3. § 3.

And for the better restraining such offences, it has a discretionary power of inflicting exemplary punishment on offenders, either by fine, imprisonment, or other infamous punishment, as the nature of the crime, considered in all its circumstances, shall require; and it may make use of any prison which shall seem most proper; and it is said, that no other Court can remove or bail persons condemned to imprisonment by this Court. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 5.—Newgate is as much the prison of this Court as the King's Bench prison is: every prison in the kingdom is the prison of this Court. 1 Burr. 541.

This Court hath so sovereign a jurisdiction in all criminal matters that an act of parliament appointing that all crimes of a certain denomination shall be tried before certain Judges, doth not exclude the jurisdiction of this Court, without express negative words; and therefore it hath been resolved, that stat. 33 Hen. 8. c. 12, which enacts, That all treasons, &c. within the King's house, shall be determined before the Lord Steward of the King's house, &c. doth not restrain this Court from proceeding against such offences. 2 Inst. 549: 2 Jones 53.

But where a statute creates a new offence which was not taken notice of by the common law, and erects a new jurisdiction for the punishment of it, and prescribes a certain method of proceeding, it seems questionable how far this Court has an implied jurisdiction in such a case. 1 Sid. 296: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 6.

This

This Court, by the plenitude of its power, may as well proceed on indictments removed by certiorari, out of inferior Courts, as on those originally commenced here, whether the Court below be determined, or still in esse, and whether the proceedings be grounded on the common law, or on a statute making a new law concerning an old offence. Dalt. 25: 44 Ed. 3. 31. b: Cromp. Jurisd. 131.

But the Court of King's Bench will not give judgment on a conviction in the inferior Court, where the proceedings are removed by certiorari, but will allow the party to waive the issue below, and to plead de novo, and to go to trial upon an issue joined in B. R. Carth. 6.

Nor can a record, removed into the King's Bench from an inferior Court, regularly be remanded after the term in which it came in; yet if the Court perceives any practice in endeavouring to remove such record, or that it is intended for delay, they may in discretion refuse to receive it, and remand it back before it is filed. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 7, and several authorities there cited.

Also by the construction of the statutes, which give a trial by nisi prius, the King's Bench may grant such a trial in cases of treason or felony, as well as in common cases, because for such trial, not the record, but only a transcript is sent down. 4 Inst. 74: Raym. 364: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 7.

And by stat. 6 Hen. 8. c. 6, it is enacted, "That the King's Bench have full authority by discretion, to remand as well the bodies of all felons removed thither, as their indictments, into the counties where the felonies were done; and to command the Justices of gaol-delivery, Justices of the peace, and all other Justices, to proceed thereon after the course of the common law, as the said Justices might have done, if the said indictments and prisoners had not been brought into the said King's Bench." This act extends not to high treason. Raym. 367: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 8, 9.

As the Judges of this Court are the sovereign Justices of oyer and terminer, gaol-delivery, Conservators of the peace, &c. as also the sovereign Coroners, therefore, where the Sheriff and Coroners may receive appeals by bill, à fortiori the Judges may; also this Court may admit persons to bail in all cases according to their discretion. 4 Inst. 73: 9 Co. 118. b: 4 Inst. 74: Vaugh. 157.

In the county where the King's Bench sits, there is every term a grand inquest, who are to present all criminal matters arising within that county, and then the same Court proceeds upon indictments so taken; or if, in vacation, there be any indictment of felony before the Justices of peace of oyer and terminer or gaol delivery there sitting, it may be removed by certiorari into B. R. and there they proceed de die in diem, &c. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 3.

It may award execution, against persons attainted in parliament, or any other Court; when the record of their attainder or a transcript is removed, and their persons brought thither by habeas corpus. Cro. Car. 176: Cro. Jac. 495. Pardons of persons condemned by former Justices of gaol-delivery, ought to be allowed in B. R. the record and prisoner being removed thither by certiorari and habeas corpus. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 6. § 19.

Into the Court of B. R. indictments from all inferior Courts and orders of sessions, &c. may be removed by certiorari; and inquisitions of murder are certified of course into this Court, as it is the supreme Court of criminal jurisdiction: hence also issue attachments, for disobeying rules or orders, &c. 4 Inst. 71, 72.

III. On the plea-side, or civil branch, this Court hath an original jurisdiction and cognizance of all actions of trespass, or other injury alleged to be committed vi et armis; of actions for forgery of deeds, maintenance, conspiracy, deceit, and actions on the case which allege any falsity or fraud: all of which savour of a criminal nature, although the action is brought for a civil remedy; and make the defendant liable in strictness to pay a fine to the King, as well as damages to the injured party. The same doctrine is also now extended to all actions on the case whatsoever. F. N. B. 86, 92: 1 Lil. Prac. Reg. 503. But no action of debt or detinue, or other mere civil action, can by the common law be prosecuted by any Subject in this Court, by original writ out of Chancery. 4 Inst. 76: Trye's Jus. Filezar, 101. Though an action of debt, given by statute, may be brought in the King's Bench as well as in the Common Pleas. Carth. 234. And yet this Court might always have held plea of any civil action, (other than actions real,) provided the defendant was an Officer of the Court, or in the custody of the Marshal, or prison-keeper of this Court, for a breach of the peace or any other offence. 4 Inst. 71. And in process of time, it began, by a fiction, to hold plea of all personal actions whatsoever, and has continued to do so, for ages; it being surmised that the defendant is arrested for a supposed trespass, which he never has in reality committed; and being thus in the custody of the Marshal of this Court, the plaintiff is at liberty to proceed against him for any other personal injury; which surmise, of being in the Marshal's custody, the defendant is not at liberty to dispute. See 4 Inst. 72.

These fictions of law, though at first they may startle the Student, he will find upon farther consideration to be highly beneficial and useful: especially as this maxim is ever invariably observed, that no fiction shall extend to work an injury; its proper operation being to prevent a mischief, or remedy an inconvenience, tnat might result from the general rule of law. 3 Rep. 30: 2 Roll. Rep. 502. So true it is, that in fictione juris semper subsistit æquitas. 11 Rep. 51: Co Litt. 150. In the present case, it gives the Suitor his choice of more than one tribunal, before which he may institute his action; and prevents the circuity and delay of justice, by allowing that suit to be originally, and in the first instance, commenced in this Court, which after a determination in another, might ultimately be brought before it on a writ of error. 3 Comm. c. 4.

On the first division of the Courts, it was intended to confine the jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench to matters merely criminal; and accordingly soon afterwards it was enacted by Magna Charta, c. 11, That common pleas should not follow the King's Court, but be held in a certain place; hence it is, that the Court of King's Bench cannot determine a mere real action. 17 Ed. 3. 50: 1 Rol. Abr. 536, 537.

But notwithstanding common pleas cannot be immediately holden in Banco Regis, yet where there is a defect in the Court, where by law they be holden originally, they may be holden in B. R; as if a record come out of the the Common Pleas by writ of error, there they may hold plea to the end; so where the plea in a writ of right is removed out of the county by a pone in B. R. on a writ of mesne replevin, &c. 2 Inst. 23: 4 Inst. 72, 113; and see Saund. 256: Show. P. C. 57.

So any action vi & armis, where the King is to have fine, as ejectment, trespass, forcible entry, &c. being of a mixed nature, may be commenced in B. R. 2 Inst. 23.

Also any officer or minister of the Court entitled to the privilege thereof may be there sued by bill in debt, covenant, or other personal action; for the act takes not away the privilege of the Court. 2 Inst. 23: 4 Inst. 71: 2 Bulst. 123.

From hence, as was hinted before, the notion arose, that if a man was taken up as a trespasser in the King's Bench, and there in custody, they might declare against him in debt, covenant, or account; for this likewise was a case of privilege, since the Common Pleas could not procure the prisoners of the King's Bench to appear in their Court; and therefore it was an exception out of Magna Carta. 4 Inst. 71: Cro. Car. 330.

By the statute of Gloucester, 6 E. 1. c. 8, none shall have writs of trespass before Justices, unless he swear by his faith that the goods taken away were worth forty shillings. This oath is now disused; yet if the damages laid in the declaration (in cases cognizable in inferior Courts) do not amount to 40*s.* the Court will not hold plea of the matter. If laid to the amount of 40*s.* and there is not any set-off, and the plaintiff recovers under 40*s.* defendant may suggest it on the roll, and plaintiff shall not have more costs than damages. See 2 Inst. 311. The stat. 43 Eliz. c. 6, directs, that if in personal actions in the Courts at Westminster (not being for any title or interest of lands, nor concerning the freehold or inheritance of lands, nor for any battery,) the debt or damages is under 40*s.* the plaintiff shall recover no more costs than damages. See this Dictionary, title Costs.

If upon a nonsuit in an inferior Court 16*s.* is given for costs, by stat. 23 Hen. 8. c. 15, debt lies for it in this Court of King's Bench, because given by a statute subsequent to the statute of Gloucester. Cro. Eliz. 96: Leon. 316.

This Court is likewise a Court of Appeal, into which may be removed, by writ of error, all determinations of the Court of Common Pleas, and of all inferior Courts of record in England; and to which a writ of error also lay from the Court of King's Bench in Ireland, previous to the stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 28. See this Dictionary, title Ireland. Yet even this, so high and honourable, Court is not the dernier resort of the Subject: for if he be not satisfied with any determination here, he may remove it, by writ of error, into the House of Lords, or Court of Exchequer Chamber, as the case may happen, according to the nature of the suit, and the manner in which it has been prosecuted. See 3 Comm. c. 4.

To this Court it regularly belongs to examine errors of all Judges and Justices in their judgments and proceedings; the Court of Exchequer excepted. F. N. B. 20, 21. It hath been held, that a writ of error lies in B. R. of an attainder before the Lord High Steward. 1 Sid. 208. And upon judgment given in the Chancery, (i. e. in the petty bag side,) as well as other Courts, writ of error in many cases will lie returnable in the Court of King's Bench. But on proceedings in B. R. by original writ, error lies not, but to the parliament. The Court of B. R. being the highest Court of common law, hath power to reform inferior Courts, reverse erroneous judgments given therein, and punish the magistrates and officers for corruption, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 10.

The Court of King's Bench, as it is the highest Court of common law, hath not only power to reverse erroneous judgments for such errors as appear the defect of the understanding; but also to punish all inferior magistrates and all officers of justice, for wilful and corrupt abuses of their authority against the obvious principles of natural justice; the instances of which are so numerous, and so various in their kinds, that it seems needless to attempt to insert them. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 3. § 10: Vaugh. 157: 1 Salk. 201.

This Court grants writs of Habeas Corpus to relieve persons wrongfully imprisoned; and may bail any person whatsoever. See titles Bail; Habeas Corpus. Writs of Mandamus are granted by this Court, to restore officers in corporations, colleges, &c. unjustly turned out; and freemen wrongfully disfranchised: also writs and informations in the nature of quo warranto against persons, or corporations, usurping franchises and liberties against the King; and on misuser of privileges to seize the liberties, &c. In this Court also the King's letters patent may be repealed by scire facias, &c. Prohibitions are also issued from this Court to keep inferior Courts within their proper jurisdiction. See all these several titles in this Dictionary.

This Court in ancient times was, (as already observed,) ordinarily exercised only in criminal matters, and pleas of the Crown; leaving private contracts and civil actions to the Common Pleas, and other Courts. 4 Inst. 70.

IV. The officers on the Crown-side are; the King's Coroner and Attorney, commonly called the Clerk of the Crown, or Master of the Crown-office, who taxes costs, nominates all special Juries on the Crown-side, takes recognizances, inquisitions upon the death of any prisoner dying in the King's Bench prison, &c.—The Secondary, who draws up the paper books, and makes up an escheat of all fines, &c. forfeited to the Crown. The Clerk of the Rules; the Examiner; and Calendar-keeper; Clerks in Court.

The officers on the Plea-side are, the Chief Clerks; Secondary or Master; their Deputy, Marshal, Clerk of the Rules, Clerk of the Papers, Clerk of the Day-rules, Clerk of the Dockets, Clerk of the Declarations, Clerk of the Bail, Posteas, and Escheats, Signer of Writs, Signer of the Bills of Middlesex, Custos Brevium, Clerk of the Upper Treasury, Clerk of the Outer Treasury, Filacer, Exigenter and Clerk of the Outlawries, Clerk of the Errors, Deputy Marshal, Marshal and Associate to the Chief Justice, Train-bearer, Clerk of the Nisi Prius in London and Middlesex, Clerks of the Nisi Prius to the different counties appointed by the Custos Brevium, Crier at Nisi Prius in London and Middlesex, Receiver General of the Seal Office, Criers, Ushers, Tipstaffs.

The Secondary or Master constantly attends the fitting of the Court, to receive matters referred to him by the Judges, to be examined and reported to the Court; he signs all judgments, and taxes costs, &c. And he also informs the Court in point of practice. The Deputy of him and of the Chief Clerks has the custody of the stamp, for signing all writs, &c. and keeps remembrances of all records; writs returned are filed in his office, and common bails, &c. The Custos Brevium files originals, and other writs whereon proceedings are had to outlawry, examines and seals all records of Nisi Prius for trials at the assises, and has several Clerks under him for making up records throughout England. The Clerk of the Papers makes up the paper books of all special pleadings and demurrers, which the plaintiff's attorney commonly speaks for, and afterwards gives a rule for the defendant's attorney to bring to him again to be entered, &c. The Clerk of the Declarations files all declarations, and continues them on the back from the term of declaring till issue is joined. The Signer and Sealer of bills keeps a book of entry of the names of the plaintiffs and the defendants in all such writs and processes; and the defendants enter their appearances with him. The Clerk of the Rules takes notice of all rules and orders made in Court, and afterwards draws them up and enters them in a book at large, and attends the Court to take minutes thereof; with him also are given all rules of course on a cepi corpus, habeas corpus, writs of inquiry, &c. and he files all affidavits used in Court, and makes copies of them. The Clerk of the Errors allows all writs of error, and makes supersedeas thereupon into any county, and transcribes and certifies records. The Clerk of the Bails and Posteas files the bail pieces, and marks the Posteas, &c. The Filacers or Filizers of counties make the mesne process after the original, in suing to the outlawry; and have the benefit of all process and entries, thereupon. The Marshal, by himself or deputy always attends the Court, to receive into his custody such prisoners as shall be committed. The Cryer makes proclamations of summoning and adjourning the Court, calls nonsuits, and swears jurymen, witnesses, &c.

The style of the Court is, "PLEAS before our Lord the King at Westminster, of the Term of Saint Michael, in the thirty-second year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, and in the Year of our Lord 1791."

In this Court there are two ways of proceeding; viz. by Original Writ, or by Bill. The former is generally used in case the debt is large, because the defendant, if he means to delay execution of the judgment, must bring his writ of error returnable in Parliament, which greatly enhances the expence; but the latter is more expeditious. See this Dictionary, titles Error; Bill.

If the party is privileged as an attorney or other person entitled to privilege, this Court holds plea on a writ of privilege which is the first process issued against the defendant to compel him to appear and make his defence. If attornies, officers, or ministers of this Court are sued by persons not entitled to privilege, they must be sued by bill, which expresses either the grievance or wrong which the Plaintiff hath suffered by the Defendant, or some faults by him committed against some law or statute of the realm. See titles Attorney; Privilege.

Also a Peer (Comp. 184,) Knight, Citizen, or Burgess, or other person entitled to privilege of Parliament may be sued in this Court by original writ, or by original bill, in manner as directed by stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 3, upon which a bill of summons and distringas may issue to compel his appearance. But no writ of summons will lie against a person, not entitled to privilege, on a bill filed against him in this Court; though many have attempted that mode of proceeding, which has been set aside with costs. Impey, K. B.

It has been held, that action upon the statute of Winchester, of robbery, does not lie by original in the Court of B. R. because it is a common plea; but it has been adjudged otherwise, and allowed on bill. 2 Danv. Abr. 279, 282.

An appeal in B. R. must be arraigned on the Plea-side; except it come in by certiorari, when it is said it ought to be arraigned on the Crown-side. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 28. § 4. Where the Court of B. R. proceeds on an offence committed in the same county wherein it sits, the process may be made returnable immediately; but when it proceeds on an offence removed by certiorari from another county, there must be fifteen days between the teste and return of every process, &c. 9 Rep. 118: 1 Inst. 134: 1 Sid. 72.

KIPE, from Sax. Cypa.] A basket or engine made of osiers, broad at one end, and narrower by degrees, used in Oxfordshire and other parts of England for the taking of fish; and fishing with those engines is called Kipping. This manner of fishing with baskets of the same kind and shape, is practised by the barbarous inhabitants of Ceylon in the East Indies, as appears in the relation and figure of it given by Mr. Knox in his travels, p. 28.

KIPPER-TIME. No salmon shall be taken between Gravesend and Henley upon Thames in Kipper-time, viz. between the Invention of the Cross (3 May) and the Epiphany. Rot. Parl. 50 Edw. 3. Cowell. See title Fish.

KIRBY's QUEST, An ancient record remaining with the Remembrancer of the Exchequer; so called, from its being the inquest of John de Kirby, treasurer to King Edw. I.

KIRK-MOTE, See Chirchgemot.

KNAVE, An old Saxon word, which had at first a sense of simplicity and innocence, for it signified a boy; Sax. cnapa; whence a Knave-child, i. e. a boy, as distinguished from a girl, in several old writers; "a Knave-child between them two they gate." Gower, Poem, p. 52, 106; and Wickliffe, in his old translation; Exod. i. 16; if it be be a Knave-child, i. e. a son or male child. After, it was taken for a servant boy, and at length for any servant man: also it was applied to a minister or officer that bore the weapon or shield of his superior, as scild-knapa, whom the Latins call armiger, and the French escuyer. See the old statute 14 Ed. 3. c. 3. And it was sometimes, of old, made use of as a titular addition; as Johannes C. filius Willielmi C. de Derby, Knave, &c. 22 H. 7. 36. In the vision of Piers Plowman, 'Cokes and her Knaves cryden hotes pyes, hote,' i. e. Cooks and their boys, or scullions. Cowell.—The present use of the word to denote a false, dishonest, or deceitful fellow, has arisen by long perversion.

KNIGHT, Sax. Cnyt, Lat. Miles; and eques auratus, from the gilt spurs he usually wore, and thence called anciently Knights of the spur: the Italians term them Cavalieri; the French Chevaliers; the German Ruyters; the Spaniards Cavallaro's, &c.

Blackstone remarks, that it is observable that almost all nations call their Knights by some appellation derived from an horse. 1 Comm. 404. Christian in his Note on this place adds, that it does not appear the English word Knight has any reference to a horse; for Knight, or Cniht, in the Saxon, signified puer, Servus, an attendant. See Spelm. in vv. Knight; Miles. There is now only one instance where it is taken in that sense, and that is Knight of a shire, who properly serves in parliament for such a county; but in all other instances it signifies one who bears arms, who, for his virtue and martial prowess, is by the King, or one having his authority, exalted above the rank of gentleman, to a higher degree of dignity. The manner of making them, Camden in his Britannia, thus shortly expresseth: Nostris vero temporibus, qui equestrem dignitatem suscipit, flexis genibus leviter in humero percutitur, princeps his verbis Gallicè affatur; sus vel sois Chevalier au nom de Dieu, i. e. Surge aut sis eques in nomine Dei. This is meant of Knights bachelors, which is the lowest, but most ancient degree of knighthood with us. As to the privilege belonging to a Knight, see in Fern's Glory of Generosity, p. 116.

Of Knights there are two sorts, one spiritual, so called by divines in regard of their spiritual warfare, the other temporal. Cassaneus de Gloria Mundi, par 9. considerat. 2. See Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 770.

Chief Justice Popham affirmed, he had seen a commission granted to a Bishop, to Knight all the persons in his diocese. Godb. 398.

Of the several orders, both of spiritual and temporal Knights, see Mr. Ashmole's Inst. of the Knights of the Garter.

He who served the King in any civil or military office or dignity, was formerly called miles: it is often mentioned in the old charters of the Anglo-Saxons, which are subscribed by several of the nobility, viz. after Bishops, dukes, and earls, per A. B. militem, where miles signifies some officer of the Courts, as minister was an officer to men of quality. Thus we read in Ingulphus, De dono F. quondam Militis Kenulfi Regis, fol. 860.

Afterwards the word was restrained to him who served only upon some military expedition; or rather to him who by reason of his tenure was bound to serve in the wars; and in this sense the word miles was taken pro vassallo. Thus in the laws of William the Conqueror: Manibus ei sese dedit, cuncta sua ab eo miles à Domino recepit. And he who by his office or tenure was bound to perform any military service, was furnished by the chief lord with arms, and so adoptabatur in militem, which the French call adouber, and we to dub such a person a Knight. But before they went into the service, it was usual to go into a bath and wash themselves, and afterwards they were girt with a girdle; which custom of bathing was constantly observed, especially at the inauguration of our Kings, when those Knights were made, who for that reason were called Knights of the Bath, Cowell.

They were, says Blackstone, called milites, because they formed a part of the royal army, in virtue of their feudal tenures; (see title Tenures III. 2;) one condition of which was, that every one who held a Knight's fee immediately under the Crown, (which in Edw. II's time amounted to 20*l.* per annum. Stat. de milit. 1 Ed. 2,) was obliged to be knighted, and attend the King in his wars, or fine for his non-compliance. The execution of this prerogative, as an expedient to raise money in the reign of Charles I., gave great offence; though then warranted by law, and the recent example of Queen Elizabeth. It was therefore abolished by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 20. Considerable fees used to accrue to the King on the performance of the ceremony. Ed. VI. and Queen Elizabeth, had appointed Commissioners to compound with the persons who had lands to the amount of 40*l.* a year, and who declined the honour and expence of knighthood. See 1 Comm. 404; and also 2 Comm. 62, 9: 1 Inst. 69, b: 2 Inst. 593, and the Notes on 1 Inst.

KNIGHTS BACHELORS, from Bas Chevalier, an inferior Knight. 1 Comm. 404, in n.] The most ancient, though the lowest order of knighthood amongst us; for we have an instance of King Alfred's conferring this order on his son Athelstan. Wil. Malmf. lib. 2: 1 Comm 404. See Knights of the Chamber.

KNIGHTS BANERET, Milites Vexillarii.] Knights made only in the time of war; and though knighthood is commonly given for some personal merit, which therefore dies with the person, yet John Coupland, for his valiant service performed against the Scots, had the honour of Baneret conferred on him and his heirs for ever, by patent; 29 Ed. 3. See this Dictionary, title Baneret. These Knights rank in general next after Knights of the Garter. By stats. 5 R. 2. st. 2. c. 4: 14 R. 2. c. 11, they are ranked next after Barons; and their precedence before the younger sons of Viscounts, was confirmed by order of King James I. in the 10th year of his reign. But in order to be entitled to this rank, they must be created by the King in person in the field, under the royal banners in time of open war, else they rank after Baronets. 1 Comm. 403.

KNIGHTS OF THE BATH, Milites Balnei.] Have their name from their bathing the night before their creation. See Knight. This order of Knights was introduced by King Hen. IV. and revived by King George I. in the year 1725; who erected the same into a regular military order for ever, by the name and title of The Order of the Bath, to consist of thirty-seven Knights, besides the Sovereign. See the antiquity and ceremony of their creation in Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire, fol. 531, 532. They have each three honorary Esquires; and they now wear a red ribbon across their shoulders; have a prelate of the order, (the Bishop of Rochester) several heralds, and other officers, &c. See 1 Comm. 404.

KNIGHTS OF THE CHAMBER, Milites Cameræ.] Seem to be such Knights Bachelors as are made in time of peace, because knighted in the King's chamber, and not in the field: they are mentioned in Rot. Parl. 28 Ed. 3: 29 E. 3. p. 1. m. 39: 2 Inst. 666.

KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER, Equites garterii; vel periscelidis, otherwise called Knights of the Order of St. George.] An order of Knights, founded by King Edw. III. A.D 1344, who, after he had obtained many notable victories, for furnishing this honourable order, made choice in his own realm, and all Europe, of twenty-five the most excellent and renowned persons for virtue and honour, and ordained himself and his successors Kings of England, to be the Sovereign thereof, and the rest to be fellows and brethren, bestowing this dignity on them, and giving them a blue garter, decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones, and a buckle of gold, to wear daily upon the left leg only; a kirtle, crown, cloak, chaperon, a collar, and other magnificent apparel, both of stuff and fashion exquisite and heroical, to wear at high feasts, as to so high and princely an order was meet. Smith's Repub. Angl. lib. 1. c. 20. And, according to Camden and others, this order was instituted upon King Edw. III. having great success in a battle, wherein the King's garter was used for a token. See Selden's Tit. of Hon. 2, 5, 41.

But Polydore Virgil gives it another original, and says, that the King in the height of his glory, the Kings of France and Scotland being both prisoners in the Tower of London at one time, first erected this order, anno 1350, (see infra) from the Countess of Salisbury's dropping her garter, in a dance before his Majesty, which the King taking up, and seeing some of his nobles smile, he said, Honi soit qui mal y pense; interpreted, 'Evil (or shame) be to him that evil thinketh;' which has ever since been the motto of the garter; declaring such veneration should be done to that silken tie, that the best of them should be proud of enjoying their honours that way.

Camden in his Britannia saith, that this order of Knights received great ornament from King Edw. IV. And King Charles I. as an addition to their splendor, ordered all the Knights companions to wear on their upper garment, the cross incircled with the garter and motto. The honourable society of this order is a college or corporation, having a Great Seal, &c.

The scite of the college is the royal castle of Windsor, with the chapel of St. George, and the chapter-house in the castle, for their solemnity on St. George's day, and at their feasts and installations.

Besides the King their Sovereign, and twenty-five companions, Knights of the Garter, (and also an increase in number of such of the King's sons as shall be admitted to this honour,) they have a Dean and Canons, &c. and twenty-six poor Knights, that have no other subsistence but the allowance of this house, which is given them in respect of their daily prayer to the honour of God and St. George; and these are vulgarly called Poor Knights of Windsor.

There are also certain officers belonging to the order; as Prelate of the Garter, which office is inherent to the Bishop of Winchester, for the time being; the Chancellor of the Garter, the Bishop of Sarum; Register, always Dean of Windsor; the principal King at Arms, called Garter, to manage and marshal their solemnities, and the Usher of the Garter, being likewise Usher of the Black Rod.

A Knight of the Garter wears daily abroad, a blue garter decked with gold, pearl, and precious stones on the left leg; and in all places of assembly, upon his coat on the left side of his breast, a star of silver embroidery; and the picture of St. George enamelled upon gold, and beset with diamonds, at the end of a blue ribbon that crosses the body from the left shoulder; and when dressed in his robes, a mantle, collar of S S, &c.

KNIGHTS OF THE ORDER OF ST. JOHN OF JERUSALEM, Milites Sancti Johannis Hierosolymitani.] Were an order of knighthood, that began about A. D. 1120, Honorius being Pope. They had their denomination from John the charitable patriarch of Alexandria, though vowed to St. John the Baptist their patron; Fern's Glory of Generosity, p. 127. They had their primary abode in Jerusalem, and then in the Isle of Rhodes, until they were expelled thence by the Turks, anno 1523. Since which time, their chief seat is in the Isle of Malta, where they did great exploits against the Infidels, but especially in the year 1595. They lived after the order of friars, under the rule of St. Augustine, of whom mention is made in the stats. 25 Hen. 8. c. 2: 26 Hen. 8. c. 2. They had in England one general prior that had the government of the whole order within England and Scotland; Reg. Orig. fol. 20; and was the first prior in England, and sat in the House of Lords. But towards the end of Henry VIII's days they in England and Ireland, being found to adhere to the Pope too much against the King, were suppressed, and their lands and goods given to the King, by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24. For the occasion and propogation of this order more especially described, see the treatise, entitled, The Book of Honour and Arms, lib. 5. c. 18. See also this Dictionary, titles Hospitallers; Templars; and the succeeding articles.

KNIGHTS OF MALTA. These Knights took their name and original from the time of their expulsion from Rhodes, anno 1523. The island of Malta was then given them by the Emperor Charles V. whence they were therefore called Knights of Malta. See the preceding article.

Gloss.* in voce Mareschallus. See Constable; Marshal.

KNIGHTS OF RHODES. The Knights of St. John of Jerusalem, after they removed to Rhode island. See stats. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24. and ante, title Knights of the Order of St. John.

KNIGHTS OF THE SHIRE, Milites Comitatûs.] Otherwise called Knights of parliament; two Knights or gentlemen of worth, chosen on the King's writ, in pleno comitatu, by the freeholders of every county that can dispend 40*s.* a year; and these, when every man that had a Knight's fee was customarily constrained to be a Knight, were obliged to be milites gladio cincti, for so runs runs the writ at this day; but now notabiles armigeri may be chosen. Their expences were formerly borne by the county, during their sitting in parliament, under stat. 35 H. 8. c. 11. They are to have 600*l.* per annum freehold estate, &c. See stat. 9 Ann, c. 5; and further this Dictionary, title Parliament.

KNIGHTEN-GYLD, Was a gyld in London, consisting of nineteen Knights, which King Edgar founded, giving them a portion of void ground lying without the walls of the city, now called Portsoken Ward. Stow's Annals, p. 151. This in Mon. Angl. par. 2. fol. 82. a. is written cnittene-geld.

KNIGHTS COURT, A Court Baron, or honour-court, held twice a year under the Bishop of Hereford, at his palace there; wherein those who are lords of manors, and their tenants, holding by Knight's service of the honour of that bishoprick, are suitors; which Court is mentioned in Butterfield's Surv. fol. 244. If the suitor appear not at it, he pays 2*s.* suit-silver for respite of homage. Cowell.

KNIGHTS FEE, Feodum militare.] Is so much inheritance, as is sufficient yearly to maintain a Knight with convenient revenue; which in Henry III's days was 15*l.* Camd. Brit. pag. 111. In the time of Edward II. 20*l.* See ante title Knight. Sir Thomas Smith (in his Repub. Ang. lib. 1. c. 18,) rates it at 40*l.* Stow, in his Annals, p. 285, says, there were found in England, at the time of the Conqueror, 60,211 Knights fees, according to others 60,215; whereof the religious houses, before their suppression, were possessed of 28,015—Octo carucatæ terræ faciunt feodum unius militis. Mon. Ang. p. 2. fol. 825, a. Of this fee more in Selden's Titles of Honour, fol. 691; and Bracton, lib. 5. tract. 1. 4. 2. also 1 Inst. 69, a.—A Knight's fee contained twelve plow-lands, 2 Inst. fol. 596; or 480 acres. Thus Virgata terræ continet 24 acras, 4 virgatæ terræ make an hide, and five hides make a Knight's fee, whose relief is five pounds. Cowell. Selden insists that a Knight's fee was estimable neither by the value nor the quantity of the land, but by the services or numbers of the Knights reserved. Tit. Hon. part. 2. c. 5. § 26. See ante Knight.

KNOPA, A knob, nob, bosse, or knot.

LACHES, from the Fr. lascher, i. e. laxare; or lasche, ignavus.] Slackness or negligence; as it appears in Littleton, where Laches of entry means a neglect in the heir to enter. And probably it may be an old English word; for when we say there is Laches of entry; it is all one as if it were said, there is a Lack of entry; and in this signification it is used. Lit. 136. No Laches shall be adjudged in the heir within age; and, regularly, Laches shall not bar either infants or feme-coverts, in respect of entry or claim, to avoid descents; but Laches shall be accounted in them, for non-performance of a condition annexed to the state of the land. *Co. LAMMAS-DAY, The first of August, so called quasi lamb mass; on which day the tenants that held land of the cathedral church of York (which is dedicated to St. Peter ad Vincula) were bound by their tenure to bring a live lamb into the church at high-mass. It is otherwise said to come from the Sax. hlaffmæsse, viz. loaf mass, as on that day the English made an offering of bread made with new wheat.

LANCASTER, was erected into a county palatine, anno 50 Edw. III. and granted by the King to his son John for life, that he should have jura regalia, and a King-like power to pardon treasons, outlawries, &c. and make justices of peace and justices of assise within the said county, and all processes and indictments to be in his name. See this Dict. title Counties Palatine.

There is a seal for the county palatine and another for the Duchy, i. e. such lands as lie out of the county palatine, and yet are part of the duchy: for such there are, and the Dukes of Lancaster hold them, but not as counties palatine, for they had not jura regalia over those lands. 2 Lutw. 1236: 3 Salk. 110, 111. See title Chancellor of the Duchy. The statute 37 H. 8. c. 16, annexed lands to the duchy of Lancaster, for the enlargement of it.—Fines levied before the justices of assise of Lancaster, of lands in the county palatine, shall be of equal force with those acknowledged before the justices in the Common Pleas. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 19. Process against an outlawed person in the county palatine of Lancaster, is to be directed to the Chancellor of the duchy, who shall thereupon issue like writs to the sheriff, &c. stat. 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 26. LAND, terra.] Signifies generally not only arable ground, meadow, pasture, woods, moors, waters, &c. but also messuages and houses; for in conveying the land, the buildings pass with it. Co. Lit. 4, 19. In a more restrained sense it is arable ground: and the land of every man is said in the law to be inclosed from that of others, though it lie in the open field; so that for any trespass therein, he shall have the writ quare clausum fregit, &c. Doct. & Stud. 8. In a grant land may extend to meadow, or pasture, &c. But in writs and pleadings, it signifies arable only. 1 Vent. 260.

Coke on Lit. lib. 1. cap. 2. sect. 14, says, Terra est nomen generalissimum & comprehendit omnes species terræ, but properly terra dicitur à terendo, quia vomere teritur; and anciently it was written with a single r, and in that sense includes whatever may be plowed. The earth hath in law a great extent upwards, for cujus est solum ejus est usque ad cœlum. Co. 9 Rep. Alured's case. See 2 Comm. cc. 1, 2: and this Dict. title Hereditaments.

LANDCHEAP, Saxon Land-ceap, from Ceapan, to buy and sell.] An ancient customary fine, paid at every alienation of land lying within some manor, or liberty of a borough. At Malden in Essex, there is to this day a custom called by the same name, that for certain houses and lands sold within that place, thirteen pence in every mark of the purchase-money shall be paid to the town; and this custom of land-cheap, they claim (inter alia) by a grant from the Bishop of London, made anno 5 H. 4.

LAND-GABLE, A tax or rent issuing out of land, according to Domesday. Spelman says a penny for every house; the Welsh use pridgavel or landgavel.

This Landgavel or Landgabel, in the register of Domesday, was a quit-rent for the scite of a house, or the land whereon it stood, the same with what we now call ground-rent. Domesday; in Lincoln.

LANDIMERS, Agrimensores, Measurers of land, so called of old; from the Sax. Gemæra, i. e. Terminus; and hence we say Meers.

LANDIRECTA. In the Saxon times the duties which were laid upon all that held land, were termed Trinoda necessitas, viz. Expedition, burghbote and brigbote; which duties the Saxons did not call servitia: because they were not feodal, arising from the condition of the owners, but landirecta, rights that charged the very land, whoever did possess it. Spelm of Feuds. See Trinoda Necessitas.

LAND-MAN. Terricola, The terre-tenant.

LAND-TAX. A tax imposed on land, (and personal property,) by statutes annually past for that purpose. This and the malt-tax are considered as annual taxes imposed on the Subject; the other taxes are permanent.

The assessment or valuation of estates hereafter mentioned, made in the year 1692, though by no means a perfect one, had this effect, that a supply of half a million sterling was equal to 1*s.* in the pound of the value of the estates given in. And according to this valuation, from the year 1693 to the present, the land-tax has continued an annual charge upon the Subject, above half the time at 4*s.* in the pound; sometimes at 3*s.*; sometimes at 2*s.*; twice at 1*s.* (A. D. 1732 and 3); but without any total intermission.

The method of raising it (shortly stated) is by charging a particular sum upon each county, according to the valuation in 1692: and this sum is assessed and raised upon individuals (their personal estates as well as real being liable thereto) by commissioners appointed in the act, being the principal landholders in the county, and their officers.

The commissioners are appointed annually in the renewed act, but they cannot execute the office in any county, except in Wales, under a penalty of 50*l.* unless they have some estate or interest in land within the county, of the clear yearly value of 100*l.* and which was taxed for that sum at least the year before. See the statutes 5 Geo. 3. c. 21: 28 Geo. 3. c. 2. § 49.—The assessors and collectors are principal inhabitants appointed by the commissioners. 1 Comm. c. 8.

The colleges in the two Universities, as also at Windsor, Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, are exempted from the Land-tax in respect to the scite of their colleges, and the salaries of the Master, Fellows, &c. and also the lands annexed to them and other hospitals before 1693, not leased to under-tenants.—The stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 5, also exempted superannuated sea-officers and their widows.

Clerks appointed under the Land-tax Acts receive their allowance under an annual warrant, and their appointment is at least for a year. 1 Term Rep. 147.

For the particular provisions of the Land-tax Act, see Burn's Justice; and for the origin of the Land-tax, this Dict. title Taxes. What follows may not be unacceptable in this place.

The ancient method of taxation was by escuage, which was on land held by knight service; and by tallage on the cities and boroughs, and it was made in this manner: When the King wanted money for his wars, those tenants that did not attend him in person, paid him an aid, and the aid was assessed before the Justices itinerant. It was generally a gift of all the inhabitants as a body corporate; if they did not give according to the wants of the Crown, the Justiciar enquired into their behaviour, and if there were any forfeitures of their charters, quo-warrantos quo warranto's came out, to seize their liberties into the King's hands. But Edw. I. found this way of taxing by escuage and talliage to be very incomplete; because wars were drawn out into great length and expence; and therefore he formed into distinct bodies the tenants in capite that held great baronies, and these were called the barones majores, (the now Peers of Parliament;) and the representatives of the barones minores and of several corporations, viz. the citizens and burgesses, of whom he made one body; which now composes the House of Commons. Gilb. Treat. of the Excheq. 192.

King Edward I. granted the people Magna Charta, which they had long contended for, and also the charter of the forests; and for Magna Charta they granted the King a fifteenth, by the name of Quindecimum partem omnium bonorum; so that instead of particular assessments in cities and boroughs, there was one universal assessment of the fifteenth of all their substance: this fifteenth seems to have been at first made out of the ecclesiastical tenth; for the Popes claimed the tenths of all benefices; it was therefore easy to know, by the Pope's collections of his tenths, what was the value of every ecclesiastical benefice, for the Pope's tenth was reckoned at 2*s. per* pound, and therefore the fifteenth must be 1*s.* 4*d.* The benefice consisted of the glebe and the tenth part of the township; therefore by the value of the benefice deducting the glebe, they knew the true value of the township, and how to set a fifteenth upon it: so that the fifteenth of the townships were certain sums, set by the King's taxors and collectors under the act of parliament; and commissions were granted to the taxors and collectors of them under the Great Seal; but in collecting of the fifteenths the sums only appeared in the books below. And the collectors of every township either returned their collection into the Exchequer, or else there were head collectors for the whole county, who returned it thither; there were likewise commissioners appointed, to supervise such taxation and collections. But about the time of Edw. III. there were certain established sums set upon every township; and so as the King's wants increased, they gave one, two, or three fifteenths. Gilb. 193, 194.

We find in the times of Henry VIII., Queen Elizabeth, and King James I., that they raised both subsidies and fifteenths; this was, because the value of things increased, and therefore the old fifteenths were not according to the then true value of townships. And therefore they contrived that the subsidy should be raised by a pound-rate upon lands, and likewise a pound-rate upon goods; and we find in the subsidy 4 Car. (which is said to be the greatest subsidy that ever was given, and which passed upon the Petition of right) there was 4*s.* in the pound laid upon land, and 2*s.* 8*d.* upon goods; now 4*s.* upon land amounts to three fifteenths, and 2*s.* 8*d.* which was upon goods, to two fifteenths; but in this they had no regard to the old rates made in the taxbook of the several townships, otherwise than to discover the value of the lands; but a method is chalked out by the act of parliament to appoint commissioners, assessors, and collectors, in order to rate and get in the said subsidy. Ibid.

This was found very inconvenient, because the commissioners used to be favourable to their own county, therefore it was found necessary to revive so far the ancient method, as to appoint a certain sum; and in the time of the civil war, the Long Parliament would not settle any persons to appoint commissioners, but the appointment of commissioners was made in the act itself: And in this new manner of taxing, they appointed the sum to be levied on each particular county, in the act itself; as well as the commissioners' names, and where to levy it; and the six associated counties, viz. London, Middlesex, Kent, Sussex, Surrey, and Hertford, being not spoiled and pillaged in the civil wars, and more hearty to the Parliament interest, were taxed higher than any other counties in England. Gilb. 194, 195, 196.

After the Revolution, to support King William in his wars with France, it was necessary to come into a land-tax; and from 1684 to 1693, the tax was made by a pound-rate, like the former subsidies; but when the people found that the war was like to hold, about 1693, the tax was mightily lessened, every body being willing to ease his neighbour; and then they came to lay a rate upon every county, and the associating counties, being very zealous for the government in the Revolution, and having taxed themselves higher than their neighbours in 1693, it was argued that those counties were better able to bear the tax, and therefore, in 1693, they laid the disproportioned sums, that are now the standard of the land-tax. Ibid.

On comparing the subsidy law, 4 Car. 1, with the present land-tax, and considering the manner of gathering them, the following observations arise:—In the old time, according to the way of making war then used, the tenants per baroniam, and by knight-service, were obliged to be in the camp 40 days, at their own expence, and the escuage was levied upon the defaulters; but when the art of war improved, and armies were brought into the field that continued a long time, they made their taxation by way of subsidy; which was so much in the pound upon the personal and real estate; and where there were different times of taxation and collecting, they were called so many different subsidies; and the Spiritualty gave their tax in convocation, and the Temporalty in Parliament; but the convocation-tax always passed both houses of Parliament, since it could not bind as a law till it had the consent of the legislature. Their tax was made according to the rate in the King's books, and since a tenth was paid yearly to the Crown, they only taxed the other nine parts as they stood in those books. The Temporalty and Spiritualty were taxed in the same manner as to their personal estate; but as to their real estate, what was given in convocation excused their tax quoad their spiritualties. The commissioners for executing the act were appointed by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, or other great officers of the Crown, or any two of them, the Lord Chancellor being one. Gilb. 197, 198.

The present land-tax, though it follows the plan of the subsidies, viz. in taxing so much on the personal, and so much on the real estate, yet it differs in two material circumstances, viz. that there is a sum imposed on each particular county, and that the commissioners are named in the act itself; this came in, in the time of the civil war, in this manner; they at first taxed according to the pound-rate, but when the zeal of the people fell off, they found it necessary to set a sum upon each particular county; so that they taxed them according to the highest sum that had been levied in such county, and obliged them them to make it up; and they being then in opposition to the Crown, they named the commissioners in the act itself, and this way of taxing was afterwards followed at the restoration, because they found it for the ease of the Crown to name particular sums in the act of Parliament, and then they named commissioners also, who were to assess and rate each particular inhabitant. Gilb. 198.

The commissioners by the subsidy, were duly to execute that act; but by the land-tax they were directed in a particular manner how they should do it: that is to say, by making the distribution of the particular sum upon each particular hundred, lathe and wapentake; but by both laws, they were to subdivide themselves, and the respective commissioners were not to act out of their district. The commissioners by the land-tax acts are to give a note to the receiver-general, of the names of the acting commissioners, and sums in each division. We do not find this clause in the old subsidy law, because it was not necessary, where there was not a particular sum imposed on each county. Ibid.

The commissioners, both in the subsidy and land-tax, were to issue their precepts to the constables and other inhabitants, and to appoint assessors; and by both laws, the commissioners are to give them in charge, to mark a just assessment, and to return such assessments to the commissioners; who by the land-tax were to return the names of collectors. And by both laws, the persons aggrieved might appeal from the assessors to the commissioners; and also stock upon land is excused from paying as personal estate. Gilb. 199, 200.

By the subsidy law, the commissioners appointed collectors; but by the land-tax, the assessors brought in the names of the collectors; because the place was answerable for the sums so assessed, until they were paid in to the receiver-general; and therefore it was necessary that the assessors should appoint collectors; but by the subsidy law, there was no particular sum locally fixed; and therefore the collectors were appointed by the commissioners, who acted in behalf of the crown; and the collectors names were returned in, by both laws, to the receiver-general or high collectors; and this disposition was that the receiver might know in whose hands the money was. In the subsidy, the commissioners appointed the high collectors in each shire and division, to whom the sub collectors were accountable, and the high collectors were accountants to the Exchequer; and one duplicate of the assessments was given to the high collector, and the other returned into the Exchequer, to be a charge upon the high collector's receipt: But according to the frame of the land-tax, the receiver is now appointed by the Lord Treasurer; and by this law a duplicate of each particular division is to be given to the receiver-general, and another to be returned into the Exchequer; the duplicate returned to the receiver, is to charge the collectors, and that returned into the Exchequer, to charge the receiver-general. Ibid. 200, 201.

The high collectors by the subsidy law, gave security to the commissioners by recognizance, to answer the money by them received; but now the receiver-general, by the constitution of the Treasury, gives security to the Crown. In the subsidy law and land-tax, the under-collector was to distrain the parties refusing to pay the sum assessed: and by the subsidy law, the under-collectors paid in the money collected to the high collector, who was an accountant at the Exchequer; but by the land-tax, the collectors are to pay in the money to the receiver, and he is the accountant at the Exchequer. If the collectors did not pay in the money they had collected to the receivers, the commissioners were to imprison them, and seize their effects; but if the proportion was not answered, the place itself was answerable, by a reassessment of the commissioners. By both laws, the collectors had precepts and assessments delivered; and, under such precepts, had authority to distrain the lands and goods of the persons so assessed, by virtue of the act. By both laws the parties were to be taxed for goods, in the place where they dwelt. By both laws the distress was to be sold, and the overplus paid to the owner; by the subsidy law, in eight days, by the land-tax, in four days: and for neglect or refusal to pay, and failure of distress, the party to be imprisoned. By the subsidy law, all the commissioners join in one certificate; but now the commissioners return their estates, which in each division are a charge upon the receiver-general; but in the land-tax, if a non-payment in any place be certified by the receiver under his hand, Exchequer-process is to issue against the acting commissioners. By the land-tax, if land doubly taxed comes into protestant hands, and they get a certificate from the commissioners, and prove the truth of the certificate before the barons, by two credible witnesses, the Court of Exchequer is empowered to discharge such sum from the parish or township in which the lands lie, and that discharge is carried to the House of Commons, in order to be discharged out of the general sum the next year. Ibid. 203, 204.

LARCENY.

Fr. Larrecin; Lat. Latrocinium.] A Theft or Felony of another's goods, in his absence: It is usually divided into Grand Larceny, and Petty Larceny.

Grand Larceny is a felonious taking and carrying away the personal goods of another, above the value of 12*d*. not from the person, or by night, in the house of the owner.

Petit Larceny is when the goods stolen do not exceed the value of 12*d*. It agrees with grand Larceny in all things except only the value of goods; so that wherever any offence would be grand Larceny, if the thing stolen was above 12*d*. value; it is petit Larceny, if it be but of that value, or under. H. P. C. 60, 69.

Blackstone, with more immediate reference to its derivation, Latrocinium, always spells the term thus, Larciny; and distinguishes the offence into two sorts; simple Larciny, or plain theft unaccompanied with any other atrocious circumstance; and mixed or compound Larciny; which also includes in it the aggravation of a taking from the house or person. 4 Comm. c. 17. As to that species of the latter which consists in an open and violent taking from the person, see this Dictionary, title Robbery.

The Offence of Larceny or Larciny then, (for either mode of spelling may be adopted) shall be considered according to the following arrangement:

I. 1. Of Simple Larciny.
   2. Of its Punishment.

II. Of mixed or compound Larceny.
   1. From the House.
   2. Privately from the Person.

I. 1. Simple Larceny is, "the felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another."

First, It must be a taking. This implies the consent of the owner to be wanting. Therefore no delivery of the goods from the owner to the offender upon trust, can ground a Larceny. As if A. lends B. a horse, and he rides away with him; or if one sends goods by a carrier, and he carries them away, these are no Larcenies. 1 Hal. P. C. 504. But if the carrier opens a bale or pack of goods, or pierces a vessel of wine, and takes away part thereof, or if he carries it to the place appointed, and afterwards takes away the whole, these are Larcenies; for here the animus furandi is manifest, since in the first case he had otherwise no inducement to open the goods, and in the second the trust was determined, the delivery having taken its effect. 3 Inst. 107. But bare non-delivery shall not of course be intended to arise from a felonious design; since that may happen from a variety of other accidents. Neither by the common law was it Larceny in any servant to run away with the goods committed to him to keep, but only a breach of civil trust. But by statute 33 Hen. 6. c. 1. the servants of persons deceased, accused of embezzling their master's goods, may, by writ out of Chancery (issued by the advice of the two Chief Justices and Chief Baron, or any two of them) and proclamation made thereupon, be summoned to appear personally in the Court of King's Bench, to answer their master's executors in any civil suit for such goods, and shall on default of appearance, be attainted of felony. And by stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 7. if any servant embezzled his master's goods to the value of 40*s.* it is made felony; except in apprentices and servants under eighteen years old. See titles Apprentice; Servant. But if he had not the possession, but only the care and oversight of the goods, as the butler of plate, the shepherd of sheep, and the like, the embezzling of them is felony and Larceny at common law. 1 Hal. P. C. 506: 3 Inst. 108. So if a guest robs his inn or tavern of a piece of plate, it is Larceny; for he hath not the possession delivered to him, but merely the use. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 6. And so it is declared to be by stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. if a lodger runs away with the goods from his ready-furnished lodgings. A wife cannot be guilty with her husband upon this statute, for she is under his coercion. O. B. 1783. No. 30. Nor without her husband, if it should appear the lodgings were let to him. O. B. 1761. No. 17. Nor even if it should appear that the lodgings were let jointly to both the husband and wife; for it shall be construed to be the act of the husband only. O. B. 1758. No. 105. The offender must be a lodger at the time the Larceny is committed. O. B. 1785. No. 74. The indictment must also set forth the name of the person by whom the lodgings were let. O. B. 1784. No. 747. And the property stolen must be such as may reasonably be construed the furniture of the sort of lodging taken. Leach's Hawk. P. C. 1. c. 33. § 13, in n.

If the Clerk of a Banker or Merchant has the care of money, or if he has access to it; for special and particular purposes, and, is sent to the bag or drawer for money, for the purpose of paying a bill, or if he is sent for the purpose of bringing money generally out of the bag or drawer; and, at the time he brings that money, he clandestinely and secretly takes out other money for his own use, he is as much guilty of a felony as if he had no permission or access to it whatever. So if a servant be sent to a library for one particular book, and he takes another, or being sent for a hat and sword, and he steals a cane; in all these cases it has been said the offenders are guilty of felony, for though the property is delivered, the possession of it remains in the true owners. O. B. 1784. p. 1295, 1304. So also where a person being left in an apartment pawns the furniture or other property under his care, with a felonious design to steal it, it is felony. O. B. 1785. p. 717: O. B. 1786: Leach's Hawk. P. C. 1. c. 33. § 6, in n.

Under some circumstances also a man may be guilty of felony in taking his own goods; as if he steals them from a pawnbroker, or any one to whom he hath delivered and entrusted them, with intent to charge such bailee with the value; or if he robs his own messenger on the road, with intent to charge the Hundred with the loss according to the statute of Winchester. Fost. 123, 4.

So where the owner delivers goods to a carrier, and afterwards secretly steals them from him with an intent to charge him for them, &c. because the carrier had a special property, and the possession for a time. 3 Inst. 110: Dalt. 373: Pult. 126.

In further explanation of this part of the subject the following is deserving of attention:

To make the crime of Larceny, there must be a felonious taking; or an intent of stealing the thing, when it comes first to the hands of the offender, at the very time of the receiving. 3 Inst. 107: Dalt. 367. And if one intending to steal goods, gets possession of them by ejectment, replevin, or other process at law unduly obtained, by false oath, &c. it is a felonious taking. 3 Inst. 64: Kel. Rep. 43, 44. If a man hath possession of goods once lawfully, though he afterwards carry them away with an ill intention, it is no Larceny: where a taylor embezzles cloth delivered to him, to make a suit of clothes, &c. it is not felony. H. P. C. 61: 5 Rep. 31. And if I lend a person my horse to go to a certain place, and he goes there, and then rides away with him, it is not Larceny; but remedy is to be had by action for the damage; though if one comes on pretence to buy a horse, and the owner gives the stranger leave to ride him, if he rides away with the horse, it is felony; for here an intention is implied. Wood's Inst. 364, 365. In the above cases, there is a lawful possession by delivery, to extenuate the offence: but persons having the possession of goods by delivery, may in some instances be guilty of felony, by taking away part thereof; as if a carrier open a pack, and take out a part of the goods; a miller, who has corn to grind, takes out part of the same, with an intent to steal it, &c. in which cases, the possession of part, distinct from the whole, was gained by wrong, and not delivered by the owner, &c. H. P. C. 62: S. P. C. 25: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 5.

To constitute Larceny the property must also be taken from the possession of the owner; therefore, to state a case more at large which has already been repeatedly alluded to, where A. intending to go a distant journey, hires a horse fairly and bona fide for that purpose, and evidences the truth of such intention by actually proceeding on his way, and afterwards rides off with the horse, it is no theft; because the felonious design was hatched subsequent to the delivery; and the delivery having been obtained without fraud or design, the owner parted with his possession as well as his property. O. B. 1784. p. 1294; and thereby gave to A. dominion over the horse; upon trust, that he would return him when the journey was performed. O. B. 1786. p. 335. 4. But if the delivery of property be obtained with a preconcerted design to steal the thing delivered, although the owner, in this case, parts with the thing itself, he still retains in law the constructive possession of it; therefore, where a man, having feloniously obtained the delivery of a bill of exchange under the fraudulent and delusive pretence of discounting it, converted it to his own use, and it appearing upon the evidence that the owner never meant to part with possession, it was held to be felony. O. B. 1784. p. 292. So also where a horse was obtained with the same design, upon pretence of trying its paces. O. B. 1779. p. 463: O. B. 1784. p. 293. So also to obtain the delivery of money, with design feloniously to take it away, under the false pretence of having found a diamond ring of great value, has been determined by nine Judges to be a taking from the possession of the owner, and consequently felony. O. B. 1785. p. 160. So also to obtain the delivery of goods under the pretence of purchasing them, and then to run away with them. Raym. 276. And in general where the delivery of the property is made for a certain, special, and particular purpose, the possession is still supposed to reside, unparted with, in the first proprietor. Therefore, where a master delivers goods to his servant to carry to a customer, but instead of so doing he converts them on his way to his own use, it is a felonious taking; for the master had a right to countermand the delivery of them, and therefore the possession remained in him at the time of the conversion. O. B. 1782. No. 375: O. B. 1783. No. 28. So also if a watchmaker steals a watch, delivered to him to clean. O. B. 1779. No. 83. Or if one steal clothes delivered for the purpose of being washed. O. B. 1758. No. 18. Or goods in a chest delivered with a key for safe custody. O. B. 1770. No. 83. Or guineas delivered for the purpose of being changed into half guineas. O. B. 1778. No. 52. Or a watch delivered for the purpose of being pawned. O. B. 1784. No. 613. In all these instances the goods taken have been thought to remain in the possession of the proprietor, and the taking of them away held to be felony. Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 5, in n.

If one servant delivers goods to another servant, this is a delivery by the master; yet if the master or another servant delivers a bond, or cattle to sell, and the servant goes away with the bond, and receives the money thereon due, or receives the money for the cattle sold, and goes away with the same, this is no felony or Larceny within the statute. 21 Hen. 8. c. 7: Dalt. 388: H. P. C. 62: 3 Inst. 105. So if a servant receives his master's rents; for the master did not deliver the money to the servant, and it must be of things delivered to keep: and if goods delivered to the servant to keep, are under 40*s.* value, and he goes away with them, this is only a breach of trust, by reason of the delivery; but if the goods were not delivered to him, it is felony and Larceny to go away with or embezzle them, though under the value of 40*s* &c. Dalt. 369.

A man puts a child of seven years old to take goods and bring them to him, and he carries them away; the child is not guilty by reason of his infancy, yet it is Larceny in the other. 1 Hale, P. C. 514.

If a man reduced to extreme necessity (not owing to his own unthriftiness) steals victuals merely to satisfy his present hunger, and keep him from starving, by our ancient books, this is neither felony nor Larceny. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 20.

It is true a Judge ought to be tender in such cases, and use much discretion and moderation. 1 Hale 565. But it seems to be an unwarranted doctrine borrowed from the notions of Civilians; at least it is now antiquated, the law of England admitting no such excuse at present; it being in the power of the Crown to pardon the offenders; and the laws therefore not lying under the necessity of being explained away, as is the case in Democracies, where no such power of pardoning exists. See 4 Comm. 31: 1 Hale 54.

Secondly, There must not only be taking, but a carrying away; cepit et asportavit, was the old law Latin. A bare removal from the place in which he found the goods, though the thief does not quite make off with them, is a sufficient asportation or carrying away. As if a man be leading another's horse out of a close, and be apprehended in the fact, or if a guest, stealing goods out of an inn, has removed them from his chamber down stairs, these have been adjudged sufficient carryings away to constitute a Larceny. 3 Inst. 108, 109. Or if a thief, intending to steal plate, takes it out of a chest in which it was, and lays it down upon the floor, but is surprised before he can make his escape with it, this is Larceny. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 18.

A man was detected in taking the contents of a bale of goods in a waggon. It appeared that the bale laid horizontally, and that he had set it on its end; but as it had not been removed from the spot, this was held upon a case reserved, not to be a sufficient carrying away. But where a man with a felonious intention had removed goods from the head to the tail of a waggon, it was held a sufficient removal to constitute a carrying away. O. B. 1784. p. 734. So a diamond ear-ring snatched from a lady's ear, but lodging in the curls of her hair, and not taken by the thief, was held to be a sufficient asportation. O. B. 1784. No 537: Leach's Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 18, in n.

Thirdly, This taking and carrying away, must also be felonious; that is, done animo furandi. This requisite, besides excusing those who labour under incapacities of mind or will, indemnifies also mere trespassers, and other petty offenders. As if a servant takes his master's horse, without his knowledge and brings him home again; if a neighbour takes another's plough that is left in the field, and uses it upon his own land, and then returns it; if, under colour of arrear of rent where none is due, one distrain another's cattle or seize them; all these are misdemeanors and trespasses, but no felonies. 1 Hal. P. C. 509. The ordinary discovery of a felonious intent, is where the party doth it clandestinely; or, being charged with the fact, denies it; but this is by no means the only criterion of criminality, for in cases that may amount to Larceny, the variety of circumstances is so great, and the complications thereof so mingled, that it is impossible to recount all those which may evidence a felonious intent, or animum furandi; wherefore they must be left to the due and attentive consideration of the Court and Jury.

Fourthly, This felonious taking and carrying away must be of the personal goods of another; for if they are things real, or savour of the realty, Larceny at the common law cannot be committed of them. Lands, tenements, and hereditaments (either corporeal or incorporeal) cannot, in their nature, be taken and carried away. And of things likewise that adhere to the freehold, as corn, grass, trees, and the like, or lead upon a house, no Larceny could be committed by the rules of the common law; but the severance of them was, and in many things is still, merely a trespass; which depended on a subtlety in the legal notions of our ancestors. These things were parcel of the real estate, and therefore, while they continued so, could not by any possibility be the subject of theft, being absolutely fixed and immovable. And if they were severed by violence so as to be changed into moveables, and at the same time by one and the same continued act, carried off by the person who severed them; they could never be said to be taken from the proprietor in this their newly acquired state of mobility, (which is essential to the nature of Larceny,) being never, as such, in the actual or constructive possession of any one but of him who committed the trespass. He could not, in strictness, be said to have taken what at that time were the personal goods of another, since the very act of taking was what turned them into personal goods. But if the thief sever them at one time, whereby the trespass is completed, and they are converted into personal chattels, in the constructive possession of him on whose soil they are left or laid; and come again at another time, when they are so turned into personalty, and takes them away, it is Larceny; and so it is, if the owner, or any one else, has severed them. 3 Inst. 109: 1 Hal. P. C. 510. See 8 Rep. 33: Dalt 372.—This question is now, however, very much put at rest by the following statute. By stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 32, to steal or rip, cut or break, with intent to steal, any lead, or iron bar, rail, gate, or palisado, fixed to a dwelling-house or out-house, or in any court or garden thereunto belonging, or to any other building, is made felony, liable to transportation for seven years;—to steal, damage, or destroy underwood or hedges, and the like; to rob orchards or gardens of fruit growing therein; to steal or otherwise destroy any turnips, potatoes, cabbages, parsnips, pease, or carrots, or the roots of madder when growing, are all punishable criminally by whipping, small fines, imprisonment, and satisfaction to the party wronged according to the nature of the offence. See stats. 43 Eliz. c. 7: 15 Car. 2. c. 2: 31 Geo. 2. c. 35: 6 Geo. 3. c. 48: 9 Geo. 3. c. 41: 13 Geo. 3. c. 32. Moreover, the stealing by night of any trees, or of any roots, shrubs, or plants, to the value of 5*s.* is, by stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 36, made felony in the principals, aiders, and abettors, and in the purchasers thereof, knowing the same to be stolen:—By stats. 6 Geo. 3. c. 48: 13 Geo. 3. c. 33, the stealing any timber trees therein specified, (oak, beech, chesnut, walnut, ash, elm, cedar, fir, asp, lime, sycamore, birch, poplar, alder, larch, maple, and hornbeam,) and of any root, shrub, or plant, by day or night, is liable to pecuniary penalties for the two first offences, and for the third is constituted a felony, liable to transportation for seven years. Stealing ore also out of mines is no Larceny, upon the principle of adherence to the freehold, with an exception only to mines of black lead; the stealing of ore out of which, or entering the same with intent to steal, is felony, punishable with imprisonment and whipping, or transportation not exceeding seven years; and to escape from such imprisonment, or return from such transportation, is felony without benefit of clergy, by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 10.—Upon nearly the same principles the stealing of writings relating to a real estate is no felony, but a trespass, because they concern the land; or (according to the technical language of the law) savour of the realty; and are considered as part of it, so that they descend to the heir, together with the land which they concern. 1 Hal. P. C. 510: Stra. 1137.

Bonds, Bills, and Notes, which concern mere choses in action, were held also at the common law not to be such goods whereof Larceny might be committed; being of no intrinsic value, and not importing any property in possession of the person from whom they are taken. 8 Rep. 33. But by stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 25, they are now put upon the same footing with respect to Larcenies, as the money they were meant to secure. See also the stats. 15 Geo. 2. c. 13: 24 Geo. 2. c. 11: 5 Geo. 3. c. 25: 7 Geo. 3. c. 50; which make embezzlements by the servants of the Bank, South-Sea Company, and Post-Office, capital felonies. See those titles.

Larceny also could not at common law be committed of treasure-trove, or wrecks, waifs, estrays, &c. till seized by the King, or him who hath the franchise: for till such seisure, no one hath a determinate property therein. See Dalt. 370: 3 Inst. 208: H. P. C. 67.—

But

But by stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 19, plundering or stealing from any ship in distress (whether wreck or no wreck) is felony without benefit of clergy.

Larceny cannot also be committed of such animals, in which there is no property either absolute or qualified, as of beasts that are feræ naturæ, and unreclaimed, such as deer, hares, and conies, in a forest, chace, or warren; fish in an open river or pond; or wild fowls at their natural liberty. 1 Hal. P. C. 511: Fost. 366. But if they are reclaimed and confined, and may serve for food, it is otherwise, even at common law: for of deer so inclosed in a park that they may be taken at pleasure, fish in a trunk, and pheasants or partridges in a mew, Larceny may be committed. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 26: 1 Hal. P. C. 511: And see the stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, in this Dict. titles Black-Act; Hunting; as also stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 30, under the title Deer Stealers: and stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 14, under title Fish. Stealing Hawks in disobedience to the rules prescribed by the stat. 37 Edw. 3. c. 19, is also felony. 3 Inst. 98. It is also said that, if swans be lawfully marked, it is felony to steal them, though at large in a public river; and that it is likewise felony to steal them, though unmarked, if in any private river or pond: otherwise it is only a trespass. Dalt. Just. c. 156. But, of all valuable domestic animals, as horses and other beasts of draught, and of all animals domitæ naturæ, which serve for food, as neat or other cattle, swine, poultry, and the like, and of their fruit or produce, taken from them while living, as milk or wool, Larceny may be committed. Dalt. 21: Crompt. 36: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 28: 1 Hal. P. C. 507: The King v. Martin by all the Judges P. 17 Geo. 3. And also of the flesh of such as are either domitæ or feræ naturæ, when killed. 1 Hal. P. C. 511. As to those animals which do not serve for food, and which therefore the law holds to have no intrinsic value, as dogs of all sorts, and other creatures kept for whim and pleasure, though a man may have a base property therein, and maintain a civil action for the loss of them, yet they are not of such estimation, as that the crime of stealing them amounts to Larceny. 1 Hal. P. C. 512. But by stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 18, very high pecuniary penalties, or a long imprisonment and whipping in their stead, may be inflicted by two Justices of the peace, on such as steal, or knowingly harbour, a stolen dog, or have in their custody the skin of a dog that has been stolen.

Notwithstanding, however, that no Larceny can be committed unless there be some property in the thing taken, and an owner, yet, if the owner be unknown, provided there be a property, it is Larceny to steal it; and an indictment will lie for the Larceny of the goods of a person unknown, 1 Hal. P. C. 512. This is the case of stealing a shroud out of a grave, which is the property of those, whoever they were, that buried the deceased; but stealing the corpse itself, which has no owner, (though a matter of great indecency,) was no felony, unless some of the grave-clothes were stolen with it. It was however punishable by indictment as a misdemeanor, even though the body were taken for the improvement of the science of anatomy; it being a practice contrary to common decency, and shocking to the general sentiments and feelings of mankind. See 2 Term Rep. 733; and further this Dictionary, title Robbery.

Where a person finds the goods of another that are lost, and converts them to his own use, it is no Larceny. H. P. C. 61. But it seems that in some extraordinary cases, the law will rather feign a property, where in strictness there is none, than suffer an offender to escape justice. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 29.

It is said, that a property must be proved in somebody at the trial, or it shall be presumed in the prisoner from his plea of not guilty. 2 Hale P. C. 290: 8 Mod. 249. But in a case where one Hickman was indicted for stealing lead from Hendon church, which was laid to be the property, 1st of the Vicar; 2dly, of the Churchwardens; 3dly, of the Inhabitants and Parishioners. The property being fixed to the freehold, it was doubted whether it could be the subject of Larceny; and if it could, whether the property resided as laid in any of the counts in the indictment. The Judges were of opinion, 1st, that "a church" is included within these general words of the act, (4 Geo. 2. c. 32,) "or any other building whatsoever." 2dly, That the act having made the offence to consist in "stealing from any dwelling house or other building, &c." the charge in the indictment; that it was stole from Hendon church was alone a certain and sufficient description of the offence to support the indictment; that the residence of the property was immaterial, and that the conviction was proper upon the first count. O. B. 1785. p. 782: Leach's Hawk. P. C. 1. c. 58. App. 1. § 13. in n.

2. Many learned and scrupulous men have questioned the propriety, if not lawfulness, of inflicting capital punishment for simple theft. The natural punishment for injuries to property seems to be the loss of the offender's own property; and might be universally the case, were all men's fortunes equal. But as those who have no property themselves are generally the most ready to attack the property of others, it has been found necessary, instead of a pecuniary, to substitute a corporal punishment.

Our antient Saxon laws nominally punished theft with death, if above the value of twelvepence; but the criminal was permitted to redeem his life by a pecuniary ransom; but in the ninth year of Henry I. this power of redemption was taken away, and all persons guilty of Larceny above the value of 12*d.* were directed to be hanged; which law continues in force to this day. 1 Hal. P. C. 12: 3 Inst. 53. For though the inferior species of theft, or petit Larceny, is only punished by imprisonment or whipping at common law, 3 Inst. 218: or, by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11, may be punished with transportation for seven years, (as was also expresly directed in the case of the Plate-glass Company, stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 38,) yet the punishment of grand Larceny, or the stealing above the value of 12*d.* (which sum was the standard in the time of King Athelstan, eight hundred years ago), is at common law regularly death; which, considering the great intermediate alteration in the price or denomination of money, seems at present a very rigorous constitution.

It has been held, that if two persons steal goods to the amount of 13*d.* it is Grand Larceny in both; and if one, at different times, steals divers parcels of goods from the same person, which together exceed the value of 12*d.* they may be put together in one indictment, and the offender found guilty of grand Larceny. H. P. C. 70: Pult. 125: 3 Inst. 109: Hutt. Rep. 66. But this is

is very seldom done; on the contrary, the mercy of Juries will often make them bring in Larceny to be under the value of 12*d.* when it is really of much greater value: but this, though evidently justifiable and proper, when it only reduces the present nominal value of money to the antient standard, is otherwise a kind of pious perjury. 2 Inst. 189. And it is now settled that the value of the property stolen, must not only be in the whole of such an amount as the law requires to constitute a capital offence; but the stealing must be to that amount at one and the same particular time. For the law will not permit things stolen at different times, which are, in fact, different acts of stealing, to be added together; and as no number of petit Larcenies will amount to a grand Larceny, so no number of grand Larcenies will amount to a capital offence. O. B. 1784. p. 206. It is likewise true, that by the merciful extensions of the benefit of clergy by our modern statute law, a person who commits a simple Larceny to the value of 13*d.* (or thirteen hundred Pounds), though guilty of a capital offence, shall be excused the pains of death; but this is only for the first offence. And in many cases of simple Larceny, the benefit of clergy is taken away by statute; as from horse-stealing, in the principals and accessories, both before and after the fact. Stat. 1 Eliz. 6. c. 12: 2 & 3 Eliz. 6. c. 33: 31 Eliz. c. 12. Theft by great and notorious thieves in Northumberland and Cumberland. Stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 3. Taking woollen cloth from off the tenters; or linens, fustians, callicoes, or cotton goods from the place of manufacture; which extends, in the last case, to aiders, assisters, procurers, buyers, and receivers. See Stats. 22 C. 2. c. 5: 15 Geo. 2. c. 27: 18 Geo. 2. c. 27. Feloniously driving away, or otherwise stealing one or more sheep or other cattle specified, or killing them with intent to steal the whole or any part of the carcase, or aiding or assisting therein. Stats. 14 Geo. 2. c. 6: 15 Geo. 2. c. 34. Thefts on navigable rivers above the value of 40*s.* or being present, aiding, or assisting thereat. Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 45.—Plundering vessels in distress, or that have suffered shipwreck. Stats. 12 An. st. 2. c. 18: 26. Geo. 2. c. 19. —Stealing letters sent by the post. Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 50. —Also stealing deer, fish, hares, and conies, under the peculiar circumstances mentioned in the Waltham Black Act. Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. Which additional severity, is owing to the great malice and mischief of the theft in some of these instances; and, in others, to the difficulties men would otherwise be under to preserve those goods, which are so easily carried off.—But in all these cases, where benefit of clergy is excluded, it seems that the Larceny must exceed the value of 12*d.* See 4 Comm. c. 17. p. 241. in n.

An acquittal of Larceny in one county, may be pleaded in bar of a subsequent prosecution for the same stealing in another county: and an averment that the offences in both indictments are the same, may be made out by witnesses, or inquest of office, without putting it to trial by jury; though that of later years hath been the usual method. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 35. § 4. But it is no plea in appeal of Larceny, that the defendant hath been found not guilty in an action of trespass brought against him by the same plaintiff for the same goods; for Larceny and trespass are entirely different; and a bar in an action of an inferior nature, will not bar another of a superior. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 35. § 5. If a person be indicted for felony or Larceny generally, and upon the evidence it appears that the fact is but a bare trespass, he cannot be found guilty, and have judgment on the trespass, but ought to be indicted anew; though it may be otherwise where the jury find a special verdict, or when the fact is specially laid, &c. In trespass where the taking is felonious, no verdict ought to be given, unless the defendant hath before been tried for the felony. 2 Hawk P. C. c. 47. § 6. All felony includes trespass, so that if the party be guilty of no trespass in taking the goods, he cannot be guilty of felony or Larceny in carrying them away; and in every indictment of Larceny, there must be the words felonicè cepit & asportavit, &c. H. P. C. 61. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 33. § 2.

The stats. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11: 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, empower the Judges, on conviction for grand or petit Larceny, (except the case of buying or receiving of stolen goods knowing them to be such,) to transport the offenders, where they are entitled to benefit of clergy; or where being excluded clergy, they are pardoned on condition of transportation. See titles Felony; Clergy; Transportation.

There are no accessories in petit Larceny, therefore if two be indicted, one for privately stealing from the person a handkerchief value 12*d.* and another for receiving it, and the principal be found guilty value 10*d.* only, the accessory ought to be discharged. Fost. 73. See this Dictionary, title Accessory.

II. 1. Larceny from the House, though it seems to have a higher degree of guilt than simple Larceny, yet is not at all distinguished from the other at common law: unless where it is accompanied with the circumstance of breaking the house by night; and then it falls under another description, viz. that of Burglary. See that title. But now, by several acts of Parliament, the benefit of clergy is taken from Larcenies committed in an house in almost every instance. The multiplicity of the general acts is apt to create confusion; but upon comparing them diligently we may collect, that the benefit of clergy is denied upon the following domestic aggravations of Larceny, viz.—First, in Larcenies above the value of 12*d.* committed, 1st. In a church or chapel with or without violence or breaking the same. Stats. 23 Hen. 8. c. 1: 1 Eliz. 6. c. 12: 1 *Hal. P. By breaking any dwelling-house, or any out-house, shop, or warehouse thereunto belonging, in the day time, although no person be therein; which also now extends to aiders, abettors, and accessories, before the fact. Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 15: See also stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9: Hale 508, 522: Kely. 31.—2d. By privately stealing goods, wares, or merchandize in any shop, warehouse, coach-house, house, or stable, by day or by night, though the same be not broken open, and though no person be therein; which likewise extends to such as assist, hire, or command the offence to be committed. Stat. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23: See Fost. 78.—Lastly, in Larcenies to the value of 40*s*, from a dwelling-house, or its out-houses, although the same be not broken, and whether any person be therein or no, unless committed against their masters by apprentices under the age of fifteen: This also extends to those who aid or assist in the commission of any such offence. Stat. 12 Ann. stat. 1. c. 7.

2d. The offence of privately stealing from a man's person, as by picking his pocket, or the like, privily without his knowledge, was debarred the benefit of clergy, so early as by stat. 8. Eliz. c. 4. But then it must be such a Larceny as stands in need of benefit of clergy, viz. of above the value of 12*d.* else the offender shall not have judgment of death: for the statute creates no new offence; but only prevents the prisoner from praying the benefit of clergy, and leaves him to the regular judgment of the antient law. This severity seems to be owing to the ease with which such offences are committed, the difficulty of guarding against them; and the boldness with which they were practised (even in the Queen's court and presence) at the time when this statute was made: besides that it is an infringement of property, in the manual occupation or corporal possession of the owner, which was an offence even in a state of nature. 4 Comm. c. 17.

LARDARIUM, The larder, or place where the lard and meat were kept. Paroch. Antiq. p. 496.

LARDERARIUS REGIS, The King's larderer, or clerk of the kitchen. Cowell.

LARDING-MONEY. In the manor of Bradford in the county of Wilts, the tenants pay to their lord a small yearly rent by this name; which is said to be for liberty to feed their hogs with the mast of the lord's woods, the fat of a hog being called lard: Or it may be a commutation for some customary service of carrying salt or meat to the lord's larder. This was called lardarium in old charters; & decimum lardarii de baga. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 321.

LARONS, Fr.] Thieves; mentioned in the statute 18 Ed. 2, for view of frank-pledge.

LASTATINUS, Often occurs in Walsingham, and signifies an assassin or murderer. Anno 1271.

LAST, Sax. hlaestan, i. e. onus, Fr. lest.] Denotes a burden in general, and particularly a certain weight or measure of fish, corn, wool, leather, pitch, &c. As a last of white herrings, is twelve barrels, of red herrings, twenty cades or thousand, and of pilchards, ten thousand; of corn, ten quarters, and in some parts of England twenty-one quarters; of wool, twelve sacks; of leather, twenty dickers, or ten score; of hides or skins, twelve dozen; of pitch, tar, or ashes, fourteen barrels; of gunpowder, twenty-four firkins, weighing a hundred pound each, &c. See Stats. 32 Hen. 8. c. 14: 1 Jac. 1. c. 33: 15 Car. 1. c. 7: and this Dictionary, title Weights & Measures.

LAST-COURT, In the Marshes of Kent, is a court held by the twenty-four jurats, and summoned by the bailiffs; wherein orders are made to lay and levy taxes, impose penalties, &c. for the preservation of the said marshes. Hist. of Imbanking and Draining, f. 54.

LASTAGE, lastagium] A custom exacted in some fairs and markets, to carry things bought where one will, by the interpretation of Rastal: But it is more accurately taken for the ballast or lading of a ship. Lastage is also defined to be that custom which is paid for wares sold by the last; as herrings, pitch, &c.

LAST HEIR, Ultimus haeres] He to whom land comes by escheat for want of lawful heirs; that is, in some cases the Lord of whom they held, but in others the King. Bract. lib. 7. c. 17. See this Dictionary, titles Descent; Escheat; Heir; Tenure.

LATERA, Sides-men, companions, assistants. Cowell.

LATHE, LETHE, LEID, or LEITHEN, Lastum, Leda, Sax. lathe.] A great part of a county, containing three or four hundreds, or wapentakes; as it is used in Kent and Sussex, in the latter of which it is called a rape. 1 Comm. 116: *Leg. LATHREVE, LEDOREVE or TRITHINGREVE, The Officer under the Saxon government who had authority over that division called a Lathe. See Trithing-reeve.

LATIMER, Is used by Sir Edward Coke for an interpreter, 2 Inst. 515. It seems that the word is mistaken, and should be Latiner because heretofore he that understood Latin, which in the time of the Romans was the prevailing language, might be a good interpreter. Camden agrees, that it signifies a Frenchman or interpreter, and says the word is used in an old inquisition. Britan. fol. 598. It may be derived or corrupted from the Fr. latinier, q. d. latiner. Cowell.

LATIN. There are three sorts of Latin. 1. Good Latin, allowed by grammarians and lawyers. 2. False or incongruous Latin, which in times past would abate original writs; though not make void any judicial writ, declaration, or plea, &c. And 3. Words of Art, known only to the Sages of the law, and not to grammarians, called Lawyers' Latin. 1 Lil. Abr. 146, 147: See stat. 36 Ed. 3. c. 15; which directed all pleas, &c. to be debated in English and recorded in Latin; but now, by stats. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26: 6 Geo. 2. c. 14, the records and proceedings are to be in English. Formerly the use of a word not Latin at all, or not so in the sense in which used, might in many cases be helped by an Anglicè; though where there was a proper Latin word for the thing intended to be expressed, nothing could help an improper one. And when there was no Latin for a thing, words made which had some countenance of Latin, were allowed good, as Velvetum Anglicè velvet, &c. 10 Rep. 135. See title Process.

LATINARIUS, An interpreter of Latin, or Latiner, from the Fr. latinier. 2 Inst. 515. See Latimer.

LATITAT, A writ whereby all men are originally called to answer in personal actions in the King's Bench; having its name upon a supposition that the defendant doth lurk and lie hid, and cannot be found in the county of Middlesex to be taken by bill, but is gone into some other county, to the sheriff of which this writ is directed, to apprehend him there. F. N. B. 78. Termes de Ley.

The origin of it is this; In antient time, while the King's Bench was moveable, when any man was sued, a writ was sent forth to the sheriff of Middlesex, or any other county where the court was resident, called a Bill of Middlesex, to take him; and if the sheriff returned Non est inventus, then a second writ was sued out, reciting, that it was testified that the defendant lurked and lay hid in another county, and thereby the sheriff of that county was commanded to attach the party in any other place, where he might be found: and when the tribunal of the King's Bench came to be settled at Westminster, the same course was observed for a long time; but afterwards, by the contrivance of clerks, it was devised to put both these writs into one, and so attach the defendant upon a fiction that he was not in the county of Middlesex, but lurking elsewhere; and that therefore he was to be apprehended by the sheriff of the county where he was suspected to be, and lie hid.

It is called a testatum writ, from the words "Testatum est, It is testified," issuing out of B. R. grounded upon a Bill of Middlesex, supposed to be sued out before, and returned Non est inventus; and is in nature of the original writ Clausum fregit, on which the practice is in the Common Pleas. 2 Lil. Abr. 147. See this Dict. titles Capias; Common Pleas. A Latitat cannot issue into the county of Middlesex, except the Court remove out of Middlesex into another county, for in the county where the Court of B. R. is, the process must be by Bill, and out of the county by Latitat. 2 Lil. Abr. 147.

If the writ of Latitat is issued during the vacation, it must be as of the last day of the term preceding: A process or note is to be made of it on paper for the officer by the plaintiff's attorney, together with a memorandum or minute of his warrant duly stamped, pursuant to stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 80. § 13. The Latitat being filled up, is to be carried with the note to the King's Bench Office, and there the writ is signed; from whence it is carried to the Seal-Office, where it is sealed. See Impey, K. B.—If it is intended to hold the defendant to bail, an affidavit of the debt must be made, an ac-etiam introduced into the body of the writ, the sum sworn to indorsed on the back previous to the signing and sealing of the writ, after which a warrant is to be procured from the sheriff of the county to execute the writ. See titles Arrest; Bail.

Where the defendant is in the actual or supposed custody of the Marshal of K. B. upon a Bill of Middlesex or Latitat, &c. the bill exhibited against him as a prisoner of the Court, is considered as the commencement of the suit; and the Bill of Middlesex or Latitat merely as process to bring him into Court. 1 Wils. 40, 144: 2 Burr. 960. But see 3 Burr. 1244.—Such process, therefore, may be sued out, though the defendant ought not to be arrested upon it, before the cause of action. Cro. Eliz. 271: Cro. Jac. 561: 1 Ventr. 28: 8 Mod. 343: 1 Wils. 142: 2 Burr. 967: Doug. 62. And the plaintiff is allowed to give in evidence a cause of action, arising after it is sued out, and before the exhibiting of the bill. Cowp. 454.

It has been frequently ruled, however, that for certain purposes a Bill of Middlesex or Latitat, out of B. R., may be taken to be in nature of an Original Writ in the Common Pleas, Cowp. 456. And a Latitat, even without a Bill of Middlesex, if properly issued and continued on the roll, has been holden to be a good commencement of the suit to avoid a plea of the statute of limitations; or a tender made after suing it out. As to the former, see Sty. 156, 178: 1 Sid. 53, 60: 2 Lord Raym. 880: 1 Stra. 550: 2 Stra. 736: 2 Ld. Raym 1441: 2 Burr. 961: and as to the latter, Cro. Car. 264: 1 Wils. 141. Lord Holt made a distinction between a civil and penal action; but upon a Writ of Error, all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber held that a Latitat is a kind of Original in the King's Bench. See Carth. 233: 2 Ld. Raym. 883. And accordingly in two subsequent cases it was holden to be a good commencement of the suit in a penal action. Bridges v. Knapton: Hardiman v. Whitaker: cited 2 Burr. 950: 3 Burr. 1243: Cowp. 454.

Hence it appears that a Latitat may be considered either as the commencement of the action, or only as process to bring the defendant into Court; at the election of the plaintiff. Bull. N. P. 151: 1 Wils. 146. Though if it be stated as the commencement of the action to avoid a tender, the defendant may deny that the plaintiff had any cause of action at the time of suing it out. 1 Wils. 141. Or if it be replied to a plea of the statute of limitations, the defendant, in order to maintain his plea, may aver the real time of suing it out in opposition to the Teste. 2 Burr. 950. See Tidd's Practice, K. B. c. 14; and this Dictionary, title Limitation of Actions.

It was formerly holden that a writ of Latitat did not run into Wales; but the contrary has since been determined, and is now the common practice. See 1 Wils. 193: Doug. 202—3, (213.)

For other matters connected with and explanatory of the subject of this title, see this Dict. titles Process; Practice; Ac-etiam; King's Bench; Common Pleas; Capias, &c.

LATRO, Latrocinium.] He who had the sole jurisdiction de latrone in a particular place: it is mentioned in Leg. Wil. I. See Infangthef.

LAVATORIUM, A Laundry, or place to wash in: Applied to such a place in the porch or entrance of cathedral churches, where the priest and other officiating members were obliged to wash their hands before they proceeded to divine service. See Liber Statut. Eccl. Paul. London, MS. f. 59.

LAVERBREAD. In the county of Glamorgan, and some other parts of Wales, they make a sort of food of a sea plant, which seems to be the oyster-green, or sea liver-wort; and this they call Laverbread.

LAW, Sax. lag; Lat. lex, from lego, or legendo, choosing; or rather à ligando, from binding.] The rule and bond of men's actions: or it is a rule for the well-governing of Civil Society, to give to every man that which doth belong to him.

Law, in its most general and comprehensive sense, is thus defined by Blackstone, in the Commentaries: A Rule of Action; and is applied indiscriminately to all kinds of action, whether animate or inanimate, rational or irrational.—And it is that rule of action which is prescribed by some Superior, and which the Inferior is bound to obey. 1 Comm. Introd. § 2.

Laws in their more confined sense, and in which it is the business of works of this nature to consider them, denote the rules, not of action in general, but of human action or conduct. And this perhaps (it has been acutely observed) is the only sense in which the word Law can be strictly used; for in all cases where it is not applied to Human conduct, it may be considered as a metaphor, and in every instance a more appropriate term (as quality or property) may be found. When Law is applied to any other object than Man, it ceases to contain two of its essential ingredients, disobedience and punishment. 1 Comm. Introd. § 2: and Mr. Christian's note there.

Municipal Law, is by the same great Commentator defined to be—"A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the Supreme Power in a State; commanding what is right, and prohibiting what is wrong."—The latter clause of this sentence seems to Mr. Christian to be either superfluous or defective. If we attend to the learned Judge's exposition, perhaps we may be inclined to use the words "establishing and ascertaining what is right or wrong;" and all cavil or difficulty will vanish. See 1 Comm. pp. 43—53.

Every Law may be said to consist of several parts—Declaratory; whereby the rights to be observed, and the wrongs to be eschewed, are clearly defined and laid down: —Directory; whereby the Subject of a State is instructed and enjoined to observe those rights, and to abstain from the commission of those wrongs:—Remedial; whereby a method is pointed out to recover a man's private rights or redress his private wrongs:—Vindicatory; which imposes the sanction whereby it is signified what evil or penalty shall be incurred by such as commit any publick wrongs, and transgress or neglect their duty. See 1 Comm. 53.

According to Bracton, Lex est sanctio justa, jubens honesta et prohibens contraria: And the schoolman says, Lex humana est quoddam dictamen rationis, quo diriguntur humani actus. The Law is rectum, as it discovers that which is crooked or wrong; and these three qualities are incident to the Law, viz. It must be justa, jubens honesta, prohibens contraria: And justa requires five properties; possibilis, necessaria, conveniens, manifesta, nullo privato commodo. 2 Inst. 56, 587.

Laws are arbitrary or positive, and natural; the last of which are essentially just and good, and bind every where and in all places where they are observed: Arbitrary Laws are either concerning such matter as is in itself morally indifferent, in which case both the Law and the matter, and subject of it, is likewise indifferent, or concerning the natural Law itself, and the regulating thereof; and all arbitrary Laws are founded in convenience, and depend upon the authority of the legislative power which appoints and makes them, and are for maintaining public order: those which are natural Laws are from God; but those which are arbitrary, are properly human and positive institutions. Selden on Fortescue, c. 17.

The Laws of any country began, when there first began to be a State in the land: and we may consider the world as one universal society, and then that Law by which nations were governed, is called jus gentium; if we consider the world as made up of particular nations, the Law which regulates the public order and right of them, is termed jus publicum; and that Law which determines the private rights of men, is called jus civile. Selden, ubi supra. See Montesquieu on this subject.

No Law can oblige a people without their consent; this consent is either verbis or factis, i. e. it is expressed by writing, or implied by deeds and actions; and where a Law is grounded on an implied assent, rebus & factis, it is either Common Law or Custom; if it is universal, it is Common Law; and if particular to this or that place, then it is Custom. 3 Salk. 112.

The Law in this land hath been variable; the Roman Laws were in use anciently in Britain, when the Romans had several colonies here, each of which was governed by the Roman Laws: afterwards we had the Laws called Merchenlage, West Saxonlage, and Danelage; all reduced into a body, and made one by King Edw. Confess. Magna Charta, c. 1. & 14: Camd. Britan. 94.

At present the Laws of England are divided into three parts: 1. The Common Law, which is the most ancient and general Law of the realm, and common to the whole kingdom; being appropriate thereto, and having no dependence upon any foreign Law whatsoever. See title Common Law.

2. Statutes or Acts of Parliament, made and passed by the King, Lords, and Commons in Parliament; being a reserve for the Government to provide against new mischiefs arising through the corruption of the times: and by this the Common Law is amended where defective, for the suppression of public evils; though where the Common Law and Statute Law concur or interfere, the Common Law shall be preferred. See title Statutes.

3. Particular Customs; but they must be particular, for a general Custom is part of the Common Law of the land. Co. Lit. 15, 115. See title Custom.

Blackstone divides the Municipal Law of England into two kinds, Lex non scripta, the unwritten or Common Law; and the Lex scripta, the written, that is, the Statute Law.

The Lex non scripta, or unwritten Law, includes not only general Customs, or the Common Law properly so called; but also the particular Customs of certain parts of the kingdom; and likewise those particular Laws, that are by custom observed only in certain courts and jurisdictions. 1 Comm. Introd. § 3.

There is another division of our Laws; more large and particular; as into the Prerogative or Crown Law; the Law and Custom of Parliament; the Common Law; the Statute Law; Reasonable Customs; the Law of Arms, War, and Chivalry; Ecclesiastical or Canon Laws; Civil Law, in certain Courts and Cases; Forest Law; the Law of Marque and Reprisal; the Law of Merchants; the Law and Privilege of the Stannaries, &c. But this large division may be reduced to the common division; and all is founded on the Law of Nature and Reason, and the revealed Law of God, as all other Laws ought to be. 1 Inst. 11.

The

The Law of Nature is that which God at man's creation infused into him; for his preservation and direction; and this is lex æterna, and may not be changed: and no Laws shall be made or kept, that are expresly against the Law of God, written in his Scripture; as to forbid what he commandeth, &c. 2 Shep. Abr. 356.

All Laws derive their force à lege naturæ; and those which do not, are accounted as no Laws. Fortescue. No Law will make a construction to do wrong; and there are some things which the Law favours, and some it dislikes; it favoureth those things that come from the order of nature. 1 Inst. 183, 197. Also our Law hath much more respect to life, liberty, freehold, inheritance, matters of record, and of substance; than to chattels, things in the personalty, matters not of record, or circumstances. Ibid. 137: 4 Rep. 124.

As to the mode of interpreting Laws, see 1 Comm. § 2.—Of the general foundation of the Laws of England, Id. § 3.—And of the countries subject to the Laws of England, Id. § 4.—See also this Dict. titles Ireland; Scotland; Plantations; Statutes; Common Law; Canon Law; Civil Law, &c. &c.

Law hath also a special signification, wherein it is taken for that which is lawful with us, and not elsewhere; as tenant by the Curtesy of England, is called tenant by the Law of England.

LAW OF ARMS, Lex armorum.] Is that Law which gives precepts how to proclaim war, make and observe leagues and treaties, to assault and encounter an enemy, and punish offenders in the camp, &c. The Law and Judgment of Arms are necessary between two strange princes of equal power, who have no other method of determining their controversies, because they have no superior or ordinary Judge, but are supreme and public persons; and by the Law of Arms, Kings obtain their rights, rebels are reduced to obedience, and peace is established: but when the Law of Arms and war do rule, the civil Laws are of little or no force. Treat. Laws 57.

It is a kind of Law among all Nations, that in case of a solemn war, the Prince that conquers gains a right of dominion, as well as property over the things and persons he has subdued; and it is for this reason, because both parties have appealed to the highest tribunal that can be, viz. the trial by Arms and War; wherein the Great Judge and Sovereign of the World, in a more especial manner, seems to decide the controversy. Hale's Hist. L. 73, 74.

Common things concerning Arms and War, are under the cognizance of the Constable and Marshal of England, 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 2. See titles Constable; Court of Chivalry.

*LAW-BOOKS. All books written in the Law are either historical, as the Year-Books; explanatory, such as Staundforde's Treatise of the Royal Prerogative; miscellaneous, as the Abridgments of the Law; monological, being on one certain subject, such as Lambard's Justice of Peace, &c.—Fulbeck's Parallel, c. 3. The books of Reports have such great weight with the Judges, that many of them are as highly valued as the Responsa Prudentum among the Romans, which were authoritative. Wood's Inst. 10.

The decisions of Courts (says Blackstone) are held in the highest regard, and are not only preserved as authentic records in the treasuries of the several Courts, but are handed out to public view in the numerous volumes of Reports which furnish the Lawyer's library. These Reports are histories of the several Cases, with a short summary of the proceedings, which are preserved at large in the record; the arguments on both sides, and the reasons the Court gave for its judgment, taken down in short notes by persons present at the determinations. And these serve as indexes to and also to explain the Records, which always, in matters of consequence and nicety, the Judges direct to be searched.

These Reports are extant in a regular series, from the reign of King Edward II. inclusive; and from this time to that of King Henry VIII. were taken by the Prothonotaries or Chief Scribes of the Court at the expence of the Crown, and published annually; whence they are known under the denomination of the Year-Books. Blackstone proceeds to express his wish that this beneficial custom had been continued. He laments the deficiency and inaccuracy of the many Reports from that time to the period in which he wrote; and the neglect of the appointment which King Jac. I., at the instance of Lord Bacon, made of two reporters, with a stipend for that purpose. 1 Comm. Introd. § 3.

This evil has however been since, in a great measure, remedied, by a very excellent periodical publication at the end of each Term; now quoted and well known by the name of the Term Reports; which contain the determinations in the Court of K. B., commencing with Michaelmas Term, 26 Geo. 3. A. D. 1785; conducted by two private gentlemen, then Students, now at the Bar, and one of them a Member of the Lower House of Legislature. This publication has been followed by others for the Courts of Chancery and C. P. The public encouragement given to these works, from the accuracy and ability with which they are conducted, seems a more adequate mode of reward than Royal munificence could devise; even in a reign distinguished for the patronage of learning and genius. And there is every reason to expect that a plan so well supported will continue to be adopted as long as it shall please Providence to preserve Law, and the Courts of Law, in Great Britain.

Some of the most valuable of the ancient Reports are those published by Lord Chief Justice Coke; and these are generally cited, by way of excellence, as The Reports; thus, 1 Rep: 2 Rep. &c. while other Reports are cited by the name of the Reporter, 1 Ventr: 1 Salk. &c.

Besides the Reporters, there are also other authorities to whom great veneration and respect is paid by the students of the Common Law. Such are Glanvil, Bracton, Britton, Fleta, Hengham, Littleton, Statham, Brooke, Fitzherbert, Staundforde, and others of ancient date.—[Hale, Hawkins, Foster, and others of modern date among whom the author of the Commentaries now holds an honourable rank.] Their treatises are cited as authority, and are evidence that cases have formerly happened in which such and such points were determined, which are now become settled and first principles. One of the last of these methodical writers (according to Blackstone) in point of time, whose works are of any intrinsick authority in the Courts of Justice, is Sir Edward Coke; commonly called Lord Coke, from his having been, as was already mentioned, Lord Chief Justice.—He left four volumes of Institutes; the first being a very extensive comment upon a little excellent treatise of Tenures compiled by Judge Littleton, in the reign of Edward IV. This is generally called Coke-Littleton, (meaning Coke upon Littleton,) and is so cited by lawyers; or still more usually as First Institute. This has been since enlarged by the very learned and laborious notes of Mr. Hargrave and Mr. Butler; and taken altogether, is a book of the greatest value and highest authority in the Law.

Of late also have appeared a vast variety of Abridgements of General Law; and Systems of particular branches of it; which, with the Statutes at Large, and other publications, swell Lawyers' libraries to a size which they perhaps, as well as their clients, would be glad to see lessened. But the delay imputed to, rather than suffered in, Courts of Justice, and the multiplication of cases and determinations, is a price which every free and opulent commercial nation must pay for the innumerable blessings it enjoys, under such a Government as that long established in this country. See Montesquieu Spir. of Laws, lib. vi. c. 2.

LAW-DAY, Lagedayum.] Called also View of Frankpledge, or Court-Leet; was any day of open court; and commonly used for the Courts of a county or hundred. Chart. 39 Hen. 3.

LAWING OF DOGS. The cutting off several claws of the fore-feet of dogs in the forest. Chart. Forest. c. 6. See Expeditate; Forest.

LAWLESS-COURT. A Court held on King's-Hill at Rochford in Essex, on Wednesday morning next after Michaelmas-Day yearly, at cock-crowing; at which Court they whisper and have no candle, nor any pen and ink, but a coal: and he that owes suit or service there, and appears not, forfeits double his rent. This Court is mentioned by Camden, who says, that this servile attendance was imposed on the tenants, for conspiring at the like unseasonable time to raise a commotion. Camd. Britan. It belongs to the honour of Raleigh, and is called Lawless, because held at an unlawful hour; or quia dicta sine lege. The title of it is in rhyme, and in the Court Rolls runs thus:

LAY INVESTITURE of BISHOPS. Election was, in very early times, the usual mode of elevation to the episcopal chair throughout all Christendom; and this was promiscuously performed by the Laity as well as the Clergy: till at length, it becoming tumultuous, the Emperors and other Sovereigns of the respective kingdoms of Europe took the appointment in some degree into their own hands; by reserving to themselves the right of confirming these elections, and of granting investiture of the temporalties, which now began almost universally to be annexed to this spiritual dignity; without which Confirmation and Investiture, the elected Bishops could neither be consecrated nor receive any secular profits. This right was acknowledged in the Emperor Charlemagne, A. D. 773, by Pope Hadrian I. and the council of Lateran, and universally exercised by other Christian princes: but the policy of the Court of Rome at the same time began by degrees to exclude the Laity from any share in these elections, to confine them wholly to the clergy, which at length was completely effected; the mere form of election appearing to the people to be a thing of little consequence, while the Crown was in possession of an absolute negative, which was almost equivalent to a direct right of nomination. Hence the right of appointing to Bishopricks is said to have been in the Crown of England, (as well as other kingdoms in Europe,) even in the Saxon times; because the rights of Confimation and Investiture were in effect (though not in form) a right of complete donation. But when, by length of time, the custom of making elections by the clergy only was fully established, the Popes began to except to the usual method of granting those Investitures, which was per annulum et baculum, by the Prince's delivering to the Prelate a ring, and pastoral staff or crosier; pretending, that this was an encroachment on the Church's authority, and an attempt by these symbols to confer a spiritual jurisdiction: and Pope Gregory VII. towards the close of the eleventh century, published a bulle of excommunication against all Princes who should dare to confer Investitures, and all Prelates who should venture to receive them. This was a bold step towards effecting the plan then adopted by the Roman see, of rendering the Clergy entirely independent of the civil authority: and long and eager were the contests occasioned by this papal claim. But at length, when the Emperor Henry V. agreed to remove all suspicion of encroachment on the spiritual character, by conferring Investitures for the future per sceptrum, and not per annulum et baculum; and when the Kings of England and France consented also to alter the form in their kingdoms, and receive only homage from the Bishops for their temporalties, instead of investing them by the ring and crosier; the Court of Rome found it prudent to suspend for a while its other pretensions

This concession was obtained from King Henry the First in England, by means of that obstinate and arrogant prelate Archbishop Anselm: but King John (about a century afterwards) in order to obtain the protection of the Pope against his discontented barons, was also prevailed upon to give up by a charter, to all the monasteries and cathedrals in the kingdom, the free right of electing their Prelates, whether Abbots or Bishops: reserving only to the Crown the custody of the temporalties during the vacancy; the form of granting a licence to elect, (which is the original of our congé d'eslire,) on refusal whereof the electors might proceed without it; and the right of approbation afterwards, which was not to be denied without a reasonable and lawful cause. This grant was expresly recognized and confirmed in King John's Magna Carta, and was again established by statute 25 Ed. 3. st. 6. § 3.

But by statute 25 H. 8. c. 20. the ancient right of nomination was, in effect, restored to the Crown. See 1 Comm. 377: and this Dict. title Bishop.

LAZZI. The Saxons divided the people of the land into three ranks; the first they called Edilingi, which were such as are now nobility; the second were termed Frilingi, from friling, signifying that he was born a freeman, or of parents not subject to any servitude, which are the present gentry: and the third and last were called Lazzi, as born to labour, and being of a more servile state than our servants, because they could not depart from their service without the leave of the lord; but were fixed to the land where born, and in the nature of slaves: hence the word lazzi, or lazy, signifies those of a servile condition. Nithardus de Saxonibus, lib. 24.—It is remarkable that the lower class of people, at Naples, are called Lazaroni.

LEA OF YARN, A quantity of yarn, so called; and at Kidderminster it is to contain 200 threads on a reel four yards about. See stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 8.

Breakers of leagues and truces, how punished for offences done upon the seas. See stats. 4 H. 5. c. 7: 31 H. 6. c. 4: See titles Conservator of the Truce; Truce.

LEAK, or LECHE, from Sax. Leccian, to let out water.] In the bishoprick of Durham is used for a gutter; so in Yorkshire any slough or watery hole upon the road is called by this name: and hence the water tub to put ashes in to make a lee for washing of clothes, is in some parts of England termed a Leche. Cowell.

LEAKAGE, An allowance of twelve per cent. to merchants importing wine, out of the Customs; and of two barrels in twenty-two of ale to brewers, &c. out of the duty of Excise. Merch. Dict.

LEAP, A net, engine or wheel, made of twigs, to catch fish in. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23. See Lepa.

LEAP-YEAR. See titles Bissextile; Year.

LEASE,

FROM locatio, letting; otherwise called a Demise, dimissio, from dimittere to depart with.] A letting of lands, tenements or hereditaments to another for term of life, years, or at will, for a rent reserved. Co. Lit. 43.

A Lease is properly a conveyance of any lands or tenements, usually in consideration of rent, or other annual recompence, made for life, for years, or at will; but always for a less time than the Lessor hath in the premises; for if it be for the whole interest it is more properly an assignment, than a Lease. He that letteth is called the Lessor, and he to whom the lands, &c. are let, is called the Lessee. Shep. Touchst. c. 14: 2 Comm. c. 20.

A Lease for years is also thus defined: A contract between Lessor and Lessee for the possession and profit of lands, &c. on the one side, and a recompence for rent or other income on the other. Bac. Abr. title Leases.

 This

This word is also sometimes, though improperly, applied to the estate, i. e. the title, time, or interest the Lessee hath in the thing demised; and then it is rather referred to the thing taken or had, and the interest of the taker therein; but it is more accurately applied rather to the manner or means of attaining or coming to the thing letten. See Shep. Touchst. c. 14.

The usual words of operation in a Lease are "Demise, grant, and to farm let,—dimisi, concessi, & ad firmam tradidi."—Farm or feorme, is an old Saxon word signifying provisions. Spelm. Gloss. 229. And it came to be used instead of rent or render, because antiently the greater part of rents were reserved in provisions; in corn, in poultry, and the like; till the use of money became more frequent; so that a farmer, firmarius, was one who held his lands upon payment of a rent or feorme; though at present, by a gradual departure from the original sense, the word farm is brought to signify the very estate or lands so held, upon farm or rent. By this conveyance an estate for life, for years, or at will, may be created either in corporeal or incorporeal hereditaments; though livery of seisin is indeed incident and necessary to one species of Leases, viz. Leases for life of corporeal hereditaments, but to no other.

Whatever restriction, by the severity of the feudal law, might in times of very high antiquity, be observed with regard to Leases; (see title Tenures;) yet by the Common Law, as it has stood for many centuries, all persons seised of any estate might let Leases to endure so long as their own interest lasted, but no longer. Therefore Tenant in fee-simple might let Leases of any duration, for he hath the whole interest; but tenant in tail, or tenant for life, could make no Leases which should bind the issue in tail or reversioner; nor could a husband, seised jure uxoris, make a firm or valid Lease for any longer term than the joint lives of himself and his wife, for then his interest expired. Yet some tenants for life, where the fee-simple was in abeyance, might (with the concurrence of such as have the guardianship of the fee) make Leases of equal duration with those granted by tenants in fee-simple; such as parsons and vicars with consent of the patron and ordinary. Co. Litt. 44. So also bishops and deans, and such other sole ecclesiastical corporations as are seised of the fee-simple of land in their corporate right, might, with the concurrence and confirmation of such persons as the law requires, have made Leases for years, or for life, estates in tail, or in fee, without any limitation or control. And corporations aggregate might have made what estates they pleased, without the confirmation of any other person whatsoever. Whereas now, by several statutes, this power where it was unreasonable, and might be made an ill use of, is restrained; and, where in the other cases the restraint by the Common Law seemed too hard, it is in some measure removed. The former statutes are called the restraining; the latter, the enabling statute. 2 Comm. c. 20. See post II.

I. 1. A Lease may be made either in writing or by word of mouth: it is sometimes made and done by record, as Fine, Recovery, &c. and sometimes and most frequently by writing, called a Lease by Indenture; albeit, it may be also made by deed-poll; and sometimes also it is (as it may be of land or any such like thing grantable without deed for life, or never so many years) by word of mouth, without any writing; and then it is called a Lease-parol. Shep. Touchst. c. 14.—But by the statute of frauds, stat. 29 C. 2. c. 3, Leases of lands must be in writing, and signed by the parties themselves, or their agents duly authorized, otherwise they will operate only as Leases at Will; except Leases not exceeding three years.

A parol agreement to lease lands for four years creates only a tenancy at will. 4 Term Rep. 680.

A Lease may be made by all the ways above mentioned, either for life, for years, or at will.—For life; as for life of the Lessee, or another, or both.—For years, i. e. for a certain number of years, as 10, 100, 1000, or 10,000 years, months, weeks, or days, as the Lessor and Lessee do agree. And then the estate is properly called a term for years; for this word term doth not only signify the limits and limitation of time, but also the estate and interest that doth pass for that time. These Leases for years do some of them commence in præsenti, and some in futuro at a day to come; and the Lease that is to begin in futuro is called an interesse termini, or future interest.—At will; i. e. when a lease is made of land to be held at the will and pleasure of the Lessor and Lessee together; and such a Lease may be made by word of mouth, as well as the former. Sheph. Touchst. c. 14.

If the Lease be but for half a year, or a quarter, or any less time, this Lessee is respected as a tenant for years, and is stiled so in some legal proceedings; a year being the shortest term which the law in this case takes notice of. Litt. § 58.

These estates for years were originally granted to mere farmers or husbandmen, who every year rendered some equivalent in money, provisions, or other rent, to the Lessors or landlords; but, in order to encourage them to manure and cultivate the ground, they had a permanent permanent interest granted them, not determinable at the will of the Lord; and yet their possession was esteemed of so little consequence, that they were rather considered as the bailiffs or servants of the Lord, who were to receive and account for the profits at a settled price, than as having any property of their own; and, therefore, they were not allowed to have a freehold estate; but their interest (such as it was) vested after their deaths in their executors, who were to make up the accounts of their testator with the Lord and his other creditors, and were entitled to the stock upon the farm. The Lessee's estate might also, by the ancient law, be at any time defeated by a common recovery, suffered by the tenant of the freehold, which annihilated all Leases for years then subsisting; unless afterwards renewed by the recoveror, whose title was supposed superior to his by whom those Leases were granted. Co. Litt. 46.

While estates for years were thus precarious, it is no wonder that they were usually very short, like the modern Leases upon rack-rent; and, indeed, we are told, that by the ancient law no Leases for more than forty years were allowable; because any longer possession (especially when given without any livery, declaring the nature and duration of the estate) might tend to defeat the inheritance. Mirr. c. 2. § 27: Co. Litt. 45, 6. Yet this law, if ever it existed, was soon antiquated: for we may observe, in Madox's collection of ancient instruments, some Leases for years of a pretty early date, which considerably exceed that period; and long terms for three hundred or one thousand years were certainly in use in the time of Edward III, and probably of Edward I. But certainly when by the stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 5, the termor (that is, he who is entitled to the term of years) was protected against these fictitious recoveries, and his interest rendered secure and permanent, long terms began to be more frequent than before; and were afterwards extensively introduced, being found extremely convenient for family settlements and mortgages; continuing subject however to the same rules of succession, and with the same inferiority to freeholds, as when they were little better than tenancies at the will of the landlord. 2 Comm. c. 9.

Every estate which must expire at a period certain and prefixed, by whatever words created, is an estate for years, and therefore this estate is frequently called a term, terminus, because its duration or continuance is bounded, limited, and determined; for every such estate must have a certain beginning and certain end. Co. Litt. 45. But id certum est, quod certum reddi potest: therefore, if a man make a Lease to another, for so many years as J. S. shall name, it is a good Lease for years; for though it is at present uncertain, yet when J. S. hath named the years, it is then reduced to a certainty. 6 Rep. 35. If no day of commencement is named in the creation of this estate, it begins from the making, or delivery of the Lease. Co. Litt. 46. A Lease for so many years as J. S. shall live, is void from the beginning; for it is neither certain, nor can ever be reduced to a certainty, during the continuance of the Lease. Co. Lit. 45. And the same doctrine holds if a parson make a Lease of his glebe, for so many years as he shall continue parson of Dale, for this is still more uncertain. But a Lease for twenty or more years if J. S. shall so long live, or if he should so long continue parson, is good; for there is a certain period fixed, beyond which it cannot last, though it may determine sooner on the death of J. S. or his ceasing to be parson there. Co. Litt. 45.

If a parson makes a Lease of his glebe for three years, and so from three years to three years, so long as he shall be parson, it is a good Lease for six years, if he continue parson so long. 6 Rep. 35: 3 Cro. 511.

The law reckons an estate for years inferior in interest, as compared to an estate for life, or an inheritance; an estate for life, even if it be pur auter vie, is a freehold; but an estate for a thousand years is only a chattel, and reckoned part of the personal estate. Co. Litt. 45. Hence it follows, that a Lease for years may be made to commence in futuro, though a Lease for life cannot. As if one grants lands to another to hold from Michaelmas next for twenty years, this is good; but to hold from Michaelmas next for the term of his natural life, is void. For no estate of freehold can commence in futuro, because it cannot be created at common law without livery of seisin, or corporal possession of the land; and corporal possession cannot be given of an estate now, which is not to commence now, but hereafter. 5 Rep. 94. And because no livery of seisin is necessary to a Lease for years, such Lessee is not said to be seised, or to have true legal seisin of the lands. Nor indeed does the bare Lease vest any estate in the Lessee; but only gives him a right of entry on the tenement, which right is called, as has been already remarked, his interest in the term, or interesse termini: but when he has actually so entered, and thereby accepted the grant, the estate is then and not before vested in him, and he is possessed, not properly of the land, but of the term of years; the possession or seisin of the land remaining still in him who hath the freehold. Co. Litt. 46. Thus the word term does not merely signify the time specified in the Lease, but the estate also and interest that passes by that Lease; and therefore the term may expire, during the continuance of the time, as by surrender, forfeiture, and the like. For which reason, if one grant a Lease to A. for the term of three years, and after the expiration of the said term, to B. for six years, and A. surrenders or forfeits his Lease at the end of one year, B's interest shall immediately take effect; but if the remainder had been to B. from and after the expiration of the said three years, or from or after the expiration of the said time, in this case B's interest will not commence till the time is fully elapsed, whatever may become of A's term. Co. Litt. 45.

Generally, to the making of a good Lease several things necessarily concur; there must be a Lessor not restrained from making a Lease; a Lessee not disabled to receive; a thing demised which is demisable, and a sufficient description of the thing demised, &c. If it be for years, it must have a certain commencement and determination; it is to have all the usual ceremonies, as sealing, delivery, &c. and there must be an acceptance of the thing demised. Litt. § 56: 1 Inst. 46: Plowd. 273, 523. Whether any rent be reserved upon a Lease for life, years, or at will, or not, is not material, except only in the cases of Leases made by tenant in tail, husband and wife, and ecclesiastical persons under stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. (See post II.) Sheph. Touchst. c. 14.

A freehold Lease for three lives, differs from a chattel Lease only in this, viz. That the habendum is to the Lessee, Leſſee, his heirs and aſſigns, for and during the natural lives of him the ſaid C. D. E. his wife, and T. D. his ſon, and during the life natural of every and either of them longeſt living. And in every covenant, the Leſſee covenants for himſelf, his heirs and aſſigns; and the covenants are the ſame as in a chattel Leaſe; with the addition of a letter of attorney at the end, to deliver poſſeſſion and ſeiſin, as in a deed of feoffment. Dict.

A demiſe having no certain commencement is void; for every contract ſufficient to make a Leaſe ought to have certainty in commencement, in the continuance, and in the end. Vaugh. 85: 6 Rep. 35. A Leaſe at will, is at the will of the Leſſor or Leſſee; or regularly at the will of both parties. 1 Inſt. 55.

Leaſes exceeding three years muſt be made in writing; and if the ſubſtance of a Leaſe be put in writing, and ſigned by the parties, though it be not ſealed, it ſhall have the effect of a Leaſe for years, &c. Wood's Inſt. 266. But a Leaſe in writing, though not under ſeal, cannot be given in evidence, unleſs it be ſtamped. 1 Term Rep. 735 Articles with covenants to let and make a Leaſe of lands, for a certain term, at ſo much rent, hath been adjudged a Leaſe. Cro. Eliz. 486. In a covenant with the words 'have, poſſeſs and occupy lands, in conſideration of a yearly rent, without the word demiſe,' it was held a good Leaſe: and a licence to occupy, take the profits, &c. which paſſeth an intereſt, amounts to a Leaſe. 3 Bulſt. 204: 3 Salk. 223. An agreement of the parties, that the Leſſee ſhall enjoy the lands, will make a Leaſe; but if the agreement hath a reference to the Leaſe to be made, and implies an intent not to be perfected till then, it is not a perfect Leaſe until made afterwards. Bridg. 13: 2 Shep. Abr. 374. If a man, on promiſe of a Leaſe to be made to him, lays out money on the premiſes, he ſhall oblige the Leſſor afterwards to make the Leaſe; the agreement being executed on the Leſſee's part, where no ſuch expence hath been, a bare promiſe of the Leaſe for a term of years, though the Leſſee have poſſeſſion, ſhall not be good without ſome writing. Preced. Can. 561. See title Agreement.

A paper containing words of preſent contract, with an agreement that the Leſſee ſhould take poſſeſſion immediately, and that a Leaſe ſhould be executed in future, operates only as an agreement for a Leaſe, and not as a Leaſe itſelf. 1 Term Rep. 735.

An inſtrument on an agreement-ſtamp reciting that A, in caſe he ſhould be entitled to certain copyhold premiſes on the death of B. would immediately demiſe the ſame to C; declaring, that he did thereby agree to demiſe and let the ſame, with a ſubſequent covenant to procure a licence to let, from the Lord, operates as an agreement for a Leaſe, and not as an abſolute demiſe. 2 Term Rep. 739.

Words in an agreement that A. ſhall hold and enjoy, &c. if not accompanied with reſtraining words, operate as words of preſent demiſe; otherwiſe, if they be followed by others, which ſhow that the parties intended that there ſhould be a Leaſe in future. The whole muſt depend on the intention of the parties. 5 Term Rep. 163.

Theſe words in an inſtrument, "Be it remembered that I. B. hath let, and by theſe preſents doth demiſe, &c." held to operate as a preſent demiſe, although the inſtrument contained a further covenant for a future Leaſe. 5 Term Rep. 165.

Though a Leaſe for life cannot be made to commence in futuro, by the common law, becauſe livery cannot be made to a future eſtate, yet where a Leaſe is made for life, habendum at a day to come, and after the day the Leſſor makes livery, there it ſhall be good: and a Leaſe in reverſion may be made for life, which commences at a day that is future. 5 Rep. 94: Hob. 314: 1 Inſt. 5. A Leaſe for years may begin from a day paſt, or to come, at Michaelmas laſt, Chriſtmas next, three or four years after, or after the death of the Leſſor, &c. though a term cannot commence upon a contingency which depends on another contingency. 1 Inſt. 5: 1 Rep. 156. If one make a Leaſe for years, after the death of A. B. if he die within ten years, this is a good leaſe, in caſe he dies within that time, otherwiſe not. Plowd. 70. And where a man has a leaſe of lands for eighty years, and he grants it to another to hold for thirty years, to begin after his death, it will be good for the whole thirty years, provided there be ſo many of the eighty to come at the time of the death of the Leſſor. Bro. Grant, 54: 1 Rep. 155. A Leaſe made from the Leſſor's death, until a certain year, (i. e. A. D. 1800,) is good: and if a Leaſe be during the minority of J. S. or until he ſhall come to the age of twenty-one years, theſe are good Leaſes; and if he dies before his full age, the Leaſe is ended. Hob. 155. A perſon grants a rent of 20*l.* a year, till an hundred pounds be paid, it is a Leaſe of the rent for five years. Co. Lit. 42. If a man makes a Leaſe of land to another, until he ſhall levy out of the profits one hundred pounds, or he is paid that ſum, &c. this will be a Leaſe for life, determinable on the payment of the hundred pounds, if livery and ſeiſin be made; but if there is no livery, it will not be good for years, but void for incertainty. 21 Aſſiſ. 18: Plowd. 27: 6 Rep. 35. See Livery of Seiſin.

A Leaſe for years to ſuch perſon as A. B. ſhall name, is not good; though it may be for ſo many years as he ſhall name, not as ſhall be named by his executors, &c. for it muſt be in the life-time of the parties. Hob. 173: Moor. 911.

If one makes a Leaſe for a year, and ſo from year to year, it is a Leaſe for two years; and afterwards it is but an eſtate at will. 1 Mod. 4: 1 Lutw. 213. And if from three years to three years, it is a good Leaſe for ſix years; alſo if a man make a Leaſe for years, without ſaying for how many, it may be good for two years, to anſwer the plural number. Wood's Inſt. 265.

Leaſe for one year, and ſo for two or three years, or any further term of years, as Leſſor and Leſſee ſhall think fit and agree, after the expiration of the ſaid term of one year; this is a good Leaſe for two years; and after every ſubſequent year begun, is not determinable till that be ended. 1 Wilſ. part 1. p. 262. But if the original contract were only for a year, or if it were at ſo much per ann. rent, without mentioning any time certain, it would be a tenancy at will after the expiration of the year; unleſs there were ſome evidence by a regular payment of rent annually or half yearly, that the intent of the parties was that he ſhould be tenant for a year. Bull. N. P. 84. (2d edit.)

A Leaſe in 1785 for three, ſix, or nine years, determinable in 1788, 91, 94, is a Leaſe for nine years, determinable at the end of three or ſix years, by either of the parties on giving reaſonable notice to quit. 3 Term Rep. 463.

If

If a tenant from year to year hold for four or five years, either he or his landlord, at the expiration of that time, may declare on the demise as having been made for such a number of years. 1 Term Rep. 380: See Salk. 414.

In case of a tenancy from year to year, as long as both parties please, if the tenant die intestate, his administrator has the same interest in the land which the Intestate had. 3 Term Rep. 13.

A Lessee hath a term for a year by parol, and so from year to year, so long as both parties please; if the Lessee enters on a second year, he is bound for that year, and so on: and if there is a Lease by deed for a year, and so from year to year as long as both parties agree, this is binding but for one year; though if the Lessee enters upon the second year, he is for that year bound: if it is for a year, and so from year to year, so long as both parties agree, till six years expire; this is a Lease for six years, but determinable every year at the will of either party: but if it is for a year, and so from year to year till six years determine, this is a certain Lease for six years. Mod. Ca. 215. If A. make a Lease of land to B. for ten years, and it is agreed between them, that he shall pay fifty pounds at the end of the said term, and if he do so, and pay fifty pounds at the end of every ten years, then the said B. shall have a perpetual demise and grant of the lands, from ten years to ten years continually following, extra memoriam hominum, &c. Though this be a good Lease for the first ten years, as for all the rest, it is incertain and void: by covenant a further Lease may be made for the like term of years. Plowd. 192: 2 Shep Abr. 376.

A. and B. covenant in a Lease for sixty-one years, "that at any time within one year after the expiration of twenty years of the said term of sixty-one years, upon the request of the Lessee, and his paying 6*l.* to the Lessors, they would execute another Lease of the premises unto the Lessee, for and during the further term of twenty years, to commence from and after the expiration of the said term of sixty-one years: and so in like manner, at the end and expiration of every twenty years, during the said term of sixty-one years, for the like consideration, and upon the like request, would execute another Lease for the further term of twenty years, to commence at and from the expiration of the term then last before granted." Under this covenant the Lessee cannot claim a further term of twenty years after the end of the Lease; if he has omitted to claim a further term at the end of the first and second twenty years in the Lease. 1 Term Rep. 229.

A Lease made to a man for seven years, if D. shall live so long, who is dead when the Lease is made; by this the Lessee hath an absolute Lease for seven years. 9 Rep. 63. Lease for life is granted, and says, that if the Lessee within one year do not pay 20*s.* then he shall have but a Lease for two years; here, if he pays not the money, he shall have only the two years, although livery of seisin be had thereon. 1 Inst. 218. If a Lease be made to A. B during his own life, and the lives of C. and D. it is one entire estate of freehold, and shall continue during the three lives, and the life of the survivor of them; and though the Lessee can have it no longer than his own life, yet his assignee shall have the benefit of it so long as the other two are living. 5 Rep. 13: Moor. 32. Where one grants land by Lease to A. B. and C. D. to hold to them during their lives, although the words 'and the longest liver of them' be omitted, they shall hold it during the life of the longest liver. 5 Rep. 9. A Lease is made to a person for sixty years, if A. B. and C D. so long live; and afterwards A. B. dies, by his death the Lease is determined. Though if the Lease be made to one for the lives of A. B. and C. D. the freehold doth not determine by the death of one of them; and if in the other case of a term, the words or 'either of them' be inserted in the Lease, it will be good for both their lives. 13 Rep. 66.

A Lease was made to a man for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; and if he died within the term, the son to have it for the residue of the term: this was adjudged void as to the son, because there can be no limitation of the residue of a term which is determined. Cro. Eliz. 216. But if the words of the Lease be, to hold during the residue of the ninety-nine years, and not during the rest of the term, in this case it may be good to the son also. 1 Rep. 153: Dyer 253.

A Lease was made for twenty-one years, if the Lessee lived so long, and in the service of the Lessor; the Lessor died within the term, and yet it was held that the Lease continued, for it was by the act of God that the Lessee could serve no longer. Cro. Eliz. 643.

If a Lease be to a man, and to her whom he shall take to wife, it is void; because there ought to be such persons at the time of the commencement of the Lease which might take. 4 Leon. 158. When a Lease in reversion is granted as such after another Lease, and that Lease is void by rasure, &c. the reversionary Lease, expectant upon the Lease for years that is void, is void also. Cro. Car. 289. But where a man recites a Lease, when in truth there is no Lease; or a Lease which is void, and misrecites the same in a point material, and grants a further Lease to commence after the determination thereof; in such case the new Lease shall begin from the time of delivery. Dyer 93: 6 Rep. 36: Vaugh. 73, 80, &c.

A man makes a Lease for years to one, and afterwards makes a Lease for years to another, of the same land; the second Lease is not void; but shall be good for so many years thereof, as shall come after the first Lease ended. Noy's Max. 67. And if one make a Lease for years, and afterwards the Lessor enters upon the lands let, before the term is expired, and makes a Lease of these lands to another; this second Lease is a good Lease until the Lessee doth re-enter: and then the first Lease is revived, and he is in thereby. 2 Lill. Abr. 152. It hath been held, that a Lease may be void as to one, and stand good to another; and Leases voidable, or void for the present, may after become good again. 1 Inst. 46: 3 Rep. 51. If a Lease be made to two, to hold to them and two others, it is voidable as to the two other persons; and when the two first die, the Lease is at an end. 2 Leon. 1.

A Lease which is only voidable, and not absolutely void, must be made void by the Lessor by re-entry; but if a Lease be void absolutely there needs no re-entry; and as a voidable Lease is made void by re-entry, and putting out the Lessee; so it is affirmed by accepting and receiving the rent which acknowledges the Lessee to be tenant. 21 Car. B. R: 2 Lil. 149. And where a Lessee for years accepts of a less term from the Lessor, even by word, it is said this is a surrender of the term which he had by deed. Style 448.

When a term for years in lease, and a fee-simple, meet in one person, the Lease is drowned in the inheritance; yet in some cases it may have continuance, to make good charges and payments, &c. Poph. 39: 2 Nels. Abr. 1100. If a Lease for years is made to a man and his heirs, it shall go to his executors. 1 Inst. 46, 388. And a Lease for years, notwithstanding it be a very long Lease, cannot be intailed by deed; but may be assigned in trust, to several uses. 2 Lil. Abr. 150. A Lease is sealed by the Lessor, and the Lessee hath not sealed the counterpart, action of covenant may be brought upon the Lease against the Lessor: but where the Lease is sealed by the Lessee, and not the Lessor, nothing operates. Yelv. 18. Owen 100.

A man out of possession cannot make a Lease of lands, without entering and sealing the Lease upon the land. Dalis. 81. The Lessee is to enter on the premises let; and such Lessee for years is not in possession, so as to bring trespass, &c. until actual entry; but he may grant over his term before entry. 1 Inst. 46: 2 Lil. 160. If a Lessee of a future interest never enters by virtue of his term, but enters before, and continues after the commencement of the term; and then the Lessor ousts him, the Lessee may assign over his term off the land. 1 Lev. 47. But a Lease to begin at Michaelmas, if the Lessee enters before Michaelmas, and continues the possession immediately, is a disseisin. Ibid. 46.

If a Lease be made of a close of land, by a certain name, in the parish of A. in the county of B. whereas the close is in another county, the said parish extending into both counties, such a Lease is good to pass such land: though where a house is leased without a name, and the parish is mistaken, it hath been held otherwise. Dyer 276, 292. Land and mines are leased to a tenant; this only extends to the open mines, and the Lessee shall not have any others, if there are such: and if land and timber are demised, the Lessee is not empowered to sell it. 2 Lev. 184: 2 Mod 193. A man makes a Lease of lands for life, or years, the Lessee hath but a special interest in the timber trees, as annexed to the land, to have the mast and shadow for his cattle; and when they are severed from the lands, or blown down with wind, the Lessor shall have them as parcel of his inheritance. 4 Rep. 62: 11 Rep. 81.

A demise of premises in Westminster, late in the occupation of A. particularly describing them, part of which was a yard, does not pass a cellar situate under that yard, which was then in the occupation of B. another tenant of the Lessor: and the Lessor in an ejectment brought to recover the cellar, is not estopped by his deed from going into evidence, to show that the cellar was not intended to be demised. Whether parcel or not of the thing demised is always matter of evidence. 1 Term Rep. 701.

Declarations by tenants are admissible evidence after their death, to show that a certain piece of land is parcel of the estate which they occupied; and proof that they exercised acts of ownership in it, not resisted by contrary evidence, is decisive. 2 Term Rep. 53.

If Lessee for years loses his Lease, if it can be proved that there was such a term let to him by Lease, and that is not determined, he shall not lose his term; so it is of any other estate in lands, if the deed that created it be lost, for the estate in the land is derived from the party that made it, and not from the deed otherwise than instrumentally and declarative of the mind and intent of the party, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 152. If a person be in possession of the lands of another, and hath usually paid rent for them; the proof of a quarter or half year's rent paid, will be good evidence of a Lease at will; though it cannot be expresly proved that the lands were demised at will to him in possession, it shall be presumed the rent was received by the owner of the land upon some private contract. Ibid. 151.

2. He that is seised of an estate for life, may make a Lease for his life according as he is seised; also he may make a Lease for years of the estate, and it shall be good as long as the estate for life doth last: one possessed of lands for years, may make a Lease for all the years, except one day, or any short part of the term; and if Lessee for years makes a Lease for life, the Lessee may enjoy it for the Lessor's life, if the term of years lasts so long; but if he gives livery and seisin upon it, this is a forfeiture of the estate for years. Wood's Inst. 267. If tenant in tail or for life make a Lease generally, it shall be construed for his own life. 1 Inst. 42.

By various acts of parliament, and also by private settlements, a power is granted of making Leases in possession, but not in reversion for a certain time; the object being that the estate may not be incumbered, by the act of the party, beyond a specific time. Yet persons who had this limited power of making in possession only, had frequently demised the premises to hold from the day of the date; and the Courts in several instances had determined, that the words 'from the day of the date,' excluded the day of making the deed: and that in consequence these were Leases in reversion, and void; but this question having been brought again before the Court of B. R. it was determined, that the words 'from the day' might either be inclusive or exclusive; and therefore that they ought to be construed so as to effectuate these important deeds, and not to destroy them. Pugh v. Leeds, (Duke,) Cowp. 714: and see Dougl. 53, 185, in notis.

The Lease of a tenant for life who has power of leasing under certain conditions, must strictly comply with the conditions; and if it vary from them in the interest demised, or the rent reserved, it cannot be supported against the remainder-man. 5 Term Rep. 567.

Of all kinds of powers the most frequent is that to make Leases. In the making such Leases all the requisites particularly specified in the power, must be strictly observed; and such Leases must contain all such beneficial clauses and reservations as ought to be, for the benefit of the remainder-man; the principle being, that the estate must come to him in as beneficial a manner as the ancient owners held it. See 1 Burr. 120, and this Dictionary, title Power.—If a man hath power to Lease for ten years and he leaseth for twenty, the Lease shall be good in equity for ten years. 1 Ch. Ca. 23. See further Shep. Touchst. c. 14, in n.

A Lease executed by the tenant for life, in which the reversioner who was then under age is named, but who does not execute the Lease, is void on the death of the tenant for life; and an execution by the reversioner only after-afterwards is no confirmation of it, so as to bind the Lessee in an action of covenant. 1 Term Rep. 86.

Under the settlement of an estate with a power to the tenant in possession to let all or any part of the premises, so as the usual rents be reserved, a Lease of tithes which had not been let before was held void. In these cases the intention of the parties is to govern the Court in construing the power. 3 Term Rep. 665.

Where tenant for life has a power "to grant Leases in possession, but not by way of reversion or future interest," a Lease per verba de presenti is not contrary to the power; though the estate at the time of making the Lease was held by tenants at will, or from year to year; if, at the time, they received directions from the grantor of the Lease to pay their rent to the Lessee. Dougl. 565, Goodtitle v. Funucan.

Under a power "to lease all manors, messuages, lands, &c. so as there be reserved as much rent as is now paid for the same," such parts of the estates enumerated in the power as have never been demised may be let; but in a family settlement of an estate consisting of some ground always occupied with the family seat, and of lands let to tenants upon rents reserved, the qualification annexed to the power of leasing, "that the ancient rent must be reserved," excludes the mansion-house and lands about it never let. Dougl. 565—9, 574.

Under a power to a tenant for life to lease for years, reserving the usual covenants, &c. a Lease made by him containing a proviso that in case the premises were blown down or burned, the Lessor should rebuild, otherwise the rent should cease, is void, the Jury finding that such covenant is unusual. 1 Term Rep. 705.

If an Infant be seised of land in fee-simple, and he make a Lease for years of it, rendering no rent, this Lease is void; but if there be a rent reserved upon the Lease, then the Lease is but voidable, and may, by the acceptance of the rent by the infant after his full age, be made good. Sheph. Touchst. c. 14, cites 9 H. 7. 24: 18 E. 4. 2: Plowd. 545. In 3 Burr. 1806, it is said to have been long settled, that an infant may make a Lease without rent, to try his title: and that all Leases by an infant, whether with or without rent, if made by deed, are voidable only. See this Dictionary, title Infant; and Bac. Abr. title Leases B.

If a tenant hold under an agreement for a Lease at a yearly rent, by which it is stipulated that the agreement shall continue for the life of the Lessor, and that a clause shall be inserted in the Lease, giving the Lessor's son power to take the house for himself when he came of age, the son must make his election in a reasonable time after he comes of age. The delay of a year is unreasonable, and the tenant cannot be ejected upon half a year's notice to quit, served after such a delay: but if the son had elected within a week or a fortnight, that would have been reasonable. 2 Term Rep. 436.

By stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 31, Infants, Lunaticks, and Femes covert, may apply to the Courts of Chancery or Exchequer, or to the Courts of Equity of the counties palatine of Chester, Lancaster, and Durham, or to the Courts of Great Session of Wales, by petition or motion in a summary way, and by the order of those Courts respectively, such persons may by deed only, without levying a fine, surrender Leases for lives or years, and take new Leases for lives or years of the premises comprised therein.

Joint-tenants, tenants in common, and coparceners, may make Leases for life, years, or at will, of their own parts, which shall bind their companions; and in some cases, persons who are not seised of lands in fee, &c. may make Leases for life or years, by special power enabling them to do it; when the authority must be exactly pursued. Wood's Inst. 267. But there is a difference, where there is a general power to make Leases, and a particular power. See ante, & 8 Rep. 69.

If Joint-tenants join in a Lease, this shall be but one Lease, for they have but one freehold; but if tenants in common join in a Lease, it shall be several Leases of their several interests. 2 Ro. Ab. 64: Com. Dig. title Estates (G. 6.): Bac. Abr. Leases (I. 5.)

3. A Lessor who hath the fee cannot reserve rent to any other but himself, his heirs, &c. And if he reserves a rent to his executors, the rent shall be to the heir, as incident to the reversion of the land. 1 Inst. 47. The Lessor may take a distress on the tenements let for the rent; or may have action of debt for the arrears, &c. Also land leased shall be subject to those lawful remedies which the Lessor provides for the recovery of his rent, possession, &c. into whose hands soever the land comes. Cro. Jac. 300.

If an house falls down by tempest, &c. the Lessee hath an interest to take the timber to re-edify it for his habitation. 4 Rep. 63.

Tenants suffering houses to be uncovered, or in decay; taking away wainscot, &c. fixed to the freehold, unless put up by the Lessee, and taken down before the term is expired; cutting down timber-trees to sell; permitting young trees to be destroyed by cattle, &c. ploughing up ground that time out of mind hath not been ploughed; not keeping banks in repair, &c. are guilty of waste. 1 Inst 52: Dyer 37: 1 Salk. 368.

Lessees are bound to repair their tenements, except it be mentioned in the Lease to the contrary. Though a Lessee for years is not obliged to repair the house let to him which is burnt by accident; if there be not a special covenant in the Lease, that he shall leave the house in good repair at the end of the term: yet if the house be burnt by negligence, the Lessee shall repair it, although there be no such covenant. Pasch. 24 Car. B. R. A Lessee at will is not bound to sustain or repair, as tenant for years is. If the house of such a tenant is burnt down by negligence, action lies not against the tenant; but action lies for voluntary waste, in pulling down houses, or cutting wood, &c. 5 Rep. 13. See title Fire.

A Lessee who covenants to pay rent and to repair with an exception of casualties by fire, is liable upon the covenant for rent, though the premises are burnt down, and not rebuilt by the Lessor after notice. 1 Term Rep. 310.

A proviso in a Lease for twenty-one years, that the Landlord shall re-enter on the tenant's committing any act of bankruptcy, whereon a commission shall issue, is good. 2 Term Rep 133.

The bankruptcy of the Lessee is no bar to an action of covenant (made before his bankruptcy) brought against him for rent due after the bankruptcy. 4 Term Rep. 94.

Though a bankrupt cannot give a lien on any particular goods, yet he may take a demise, and agree that the rent shall be payable on a particular day; e.g. he may agree to pay half a year's rent in advance; where, by the custom of the country, half a year's rent becomes due on the day on which a tenant enters. And in this case the law gives the landlord a power of distraining on that day. 2 Term Rep. 600. See this Dictionary, titles Rent; Distress.

A covenant in a Lease that the Lessee, his executors and administrators, shall constantly reside on the demised premises during the demise, is binding on the assignee of the Lessee, though he be not named. 2 H. Black. Rep. C. P. 133.

If both Lessee and Lessor sign a Lease, the Lessee is estopped from pleading nil habuit in tenementis, to an action of debt for rent by the Lessor. 6 Term Rep. 62.

Covenant will lie against an original Lessee, before he takes actual possession; and so before actual possession against an assignee, under an absolute indefeasible assignment of the whole interest in the term; but not against a mortgagee of the term, even after the mortgage is forfeited, till he takes actual possession. See Eaton v. Jaques, Dougl. 455—461, and the notes there.

Under a proviso that all assignments of a Lease shall be void if not enrolled, Under-Leases are not included; and an Under-Lease is no assignment to the effect of working a forfeiture under a proviso not to assign. Dougl. 56, 7, 8, 184. But what cannot be supported as an assignment shall be good as an Under-Lease, against the party granting it. Dougl. 188, in n.

When the whole term is made over by the Lessee, although in the deed by which that is done, the rent and a power of entry for non-payment is reserved to him and not to the original Lessor, this is an assignment, and not an Under-Lease. Palmer v. Edwards, Dougl. 187, 8, in n.

If a Lease contain a proviso that the Lessee, his executors, &c. shall not set, let, or assign over the whole or part of the premises without leave in writing, on pain of forfeiting the Lease; the administratrix of the Lessee cannot under-let without incurring a forfeiture, though for less time than the whole term: a parol licence to let part of the premises does not discharge the Lessee from the restriction of such a proviso. 2 Term Rep. 425.

A landlord cannot maintain an action of covenant for rent against an under tenant, who holds for a term less than the time granted in the original Lease. Dougl. 12, Holford v. Hatch. But if the whole of a term is made over by the Lessee, although in the deed he reserves the rent, and a power of entry for non-payment to himself and not to the original Lessor; and although he introduce new covenants; the person to whom it is made over may sue the original Lessor or his assignee of the reversion, or be sued by them as assignee of the term, on the respective covenants in the original Lease. Palmer v. Edwards, B. R. E. 23 Geo. 3: Dougl. 187, 8, in n.

An assignee of a bankrupt, a devisee, and a personal representative, are assignees in law to the purpose of being liable to actions on a covenant for rent in a Lease to the bankrupt, devisor, or intestate. Dougl. 184. But whether the transfer to them is such an assignment as will occasion a forfeiture under a proviso not to assign, is a much litigated, but as it seems unsettled, question; and it appears that it is not. 3 Wils. 237. But see Dougl. 184, in n.

A Lessee for twenty-one years at a pepper-corn rent for the first half year, and a rack rent for the rest of the term, who by agreement was to put the premises in repair, and covenanted to pay the land-tax, and all other taxes, rates, assessments, and impositions, having assigned his term for a small sum in gross, was held not to be liable to pay the expence of a party-wall; either by the provisions of stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 78, § 41, or by the covenant; but that charge must in such case be borne by the original landlord: for the statute intended to throw that burthen on persons to whom long Leases had been granted, with a view to an improvement of the estate, and who afterwards underlet at a considerable increase of rent. 3 Term Rep. 458.

By stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 34, grantees of reversions have the same remedy against Lessees, their executors, &c. as their grantors had. See title Covenant III.

Persons for whose lives estates are held by Lease, &c. remaining beyond sea, or being absent seven years, if no proof be made of their being alive, shall be accounted dead. St. 19 Car. 2. c. 6. See titles Life-Estate; Occupancy.

4. Lands are leased at will, the Lessee cannot determine his will before or after the day of payment of the rent, but it must be done on that very day; and the law will not allow the Lessee to do it to the prejudice of the Lessor, as to the rent; nor that the Lessor shall determine his will to the prejudice of the Lessee, after the land is sown with corn, &c. Sid. 339: Lev. 109. For where Lessee at will sows the land, if he does not himself determine the will, he shall have the corn: and where tenant for life sows the corn, and dies, his executors shall have it; but it is not so of tenant for years, where the term ends before the corn is ripe, &c. 5 Rep. 116. The Lessor and Lessee, where the estate is at will, may determine the will when they please; but if the Lessor doth it within a quarter, he shall lose that quarter's rent; and if the Lessee doth it, he must pay a quarter's rent. 2 Salk. 413. By words spoken on the ground, by the Lessor in the absence of the Lessee, the will is not determined; but the Lessee is to have notice. 1 Inst. 55. If a man makes a Lease at will, and dies, the will is determined; and if the tenant continues in possession, he is tenant at sufferance. Ibid. 57. But where a Lessor makes an estate at will to two or three persons, and one of them dies, it has been adjudged this doth not determine the estate at will. 5 Rep. 10. Tenant at will grants over his estate to another, it determines his will. 1 Inst. 57. It hath been said, that where a Lessee for years accepts of a less term from the Lessor even by word, this is a surrender of the term he had by deed. Sty. 448. Sed. q. No tenant shall take Leases of above two farms, in any town, village, &c. nor hold two unless he dwell in the parish, under penalties and forfeitures, by stat. 25 H. 8. c. 13. § 14. See also stat. 21 H. 8. c. 13. Statutes to which there is not any regard now paid.

Tenant for term of years hath, incident to and inseparable from his estate, unless by special agreement, the same estovers which tenant for life is entitled to; that is to say, house-bote, fire bote, plough-bote, and hay-bote. Co. Lit. 45. See titles Bote; Estovers.

With regard to emblements, or the profits of lands sowed by tenant for years, there is this difference between him and tenant for life; that where the term of tenant for years depends upon a certainty, as if he holds from Midsummer for ten years, and in the last year he sows a crop of corn, and it is not ripe and cut before Midsummer,

Midsummer, the end of his term, the landlord shall have it; for the tenant knew the expiration of his term, and therefore it was his own folly to sow what he could never reap the profits of. Litt. § 68. But where the Lease for years depends upon an uncertainty, as, upon the death of the Lessor, being himself only tenant for life, or being a husband seised in right of his wife; or if the term of years be determinable upon a life or lives; in all these cases the estate for years not being certainly to expire at a time foreknown, but merely by the act of God, the tenant, or his executors, shall have the emblements in the same manner that a tenant for life or his executors shall be entitled thereto. Co. Litt. 56. Not so it it determine by act of the party himself; as if tenant for years does any thing that amounts to forfeiture, in which case the emblements shall go to the Lessor, and not to the Lessee, who hath determined his estate by his own default. Co. Lit. 55: and see 2 Comm. 144.

Where a Lease came into the hands of the original Lessor by an agreement entered into between him and the assignee of the original Lessee, "that the Lessor should have the premises as mentioned in the Lease, and should pay a particular sum over and above the rent annually, towards the good-will already paid by such assignee," such agreement operates as a surrender of the whole term. 1 Term Rep. 441.

If a landlord lease for seven years by parol, and agree that the tenant shall enter at Lady-day, and quit at Candlemas; though the Lease be void by the statute of Frauds as to the duration of the term, the tenant holds under the terms of the Lease in other respects; and therefore the landlord can only put an end to the tenancy at Candlemas. 5 Term Rep. 471.

Where the term of a Lease is to end on a precise day, there is no occasion for a notice to quit; because the Lease is of course at an end, unless the parties come to a fresh agreement. In the case of a tenancy from year to year, there must be half a year's notice to quit ending at the expiration of the year. Six calendar months notice is not sufficient. And there is no distinction between houses and lands as to the time of giving notice to quit. 1 Term Rep. 54, 159, 162, 3.

Tenant from year to year before a mortgage or grant of the reversion is entitled to six months notice to quit, before the end of the year, from the mortgagee or grantee. 1 Term Rep. 380, 2.

Where an infant becomes entitled to the reversion of an estate leased from year to year, he cannot eject the tenant without giving the same notice to quit as the original Lessor must have given. 3 Term. Rep. 159. But ejectment will lie by a mortgagee against a tenant, under a Lease from the mortgagor, made subsequent to the mortgage, without notice to quit. Dougl. 21, Keech v. Hall.

Where the tenant of an estate holden by the year has a dwelling-house at another place, the delivery of a notice to quit, to his servant at the dwelling-house, is strong presumptive evidence that the master received the notice; and ought to be left to the Jury. 4 Term Rep. 464.

If notice to quit at Midsummer be given to a tenant holding from Michaelmas, he may insist on the insufficiency of the notice at the trial, though he did not make any objection at the time it was served. 4 Term Rep. 361.

II. The Enabling Statute, 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, empowers three manner of persons to make Leases, to endure for three lives, or one and twenty years, which could not do so before. As first, Tenant in tail may by such Leases bind his issue in tail, but not those in remainder or reversion. Secondly, a husband seised in right of his wife, in fee-simple or fee-tail, provided the wife joins in such Lease, may bind her and her heirs thereby. Lastly, all persons seised of an estate of fee-simple in right of their Churches, which extends not to parsons and vicars, may (without the concurrence of any other person) bind their successors. But then many requisites must be observed, which the statute specifies; otherwise such Leases are not binding. Co. Lit. 44. 1st, The Lease must be by indenture, and not by deed poll or parol. 2d, It must begin from the making, or day of the making, and not at any greater distance of time. 3d, If there be any old Lease in being, it must be first absolutely surrendered, or be within a year of expiring. 4th, It must be either for twenty-one years, or three lives; and not for both. 5th, It must not exceed the term of three lives, or twenty-one years, but may be for a shorter time. 6th, Under this stat. 32 Hen. 8, it must have been of corporal hereditaments, and not of such things as lie merely in grant; for no rent can be reserved thereout by the common law, as the Lessor cannot resort to them to distrain. But now by the statute 5 Geo. 3. c. 17, a Lease of tithes or other incorporeal hereditaments, alone, may be granted by any Bishop or any such Ecclesiastical or Eleemosynary Corporation, and the successor shall be entitled to recover the rent by an action of debt; which (in case of a freehold Lease) he could not have brought at the common law. 7th, It must be of lands and tenements most commonly letten for twenty years past; so that if they had been let for above half the time (or eleven years out of the twenty) either for life, for years, at will, or by copy of court-roll, it is sufficient. 8th, The most usual and customary feorm or rent for twenty years past, must be reserved yearly on such Lease. 9th, Such Lease must not be made without impeachment of waste. These are the guards imposed by the statute (which was avowedly made for the security of farmers, and the consequent improvement of tillage) to prevent unreasonable abuses, in prejudice of the issue, the wife, or the successor, of the reasonable indulgence here given.

Next follows, in order of time, the Disabling or Restraining statute, 1 Eliz. c. 19; (made entirely for the benefit of the successor;) which enacts, that all grants by Archbishops and Bishops, (which include even those confirmed by the Dean and Chapter, the which, however long and unreasonable, were good at common law,) other than for the term of twenty-one years, or three lives from the making, or without reserving the usual rent, shall be void. Concurrent Leases, if confirmed by the Dean and Chapter, are held to be within the exception of this statute, and therefore valid; provided they do not exceed, together with the Lease in being, the term permitted by the act. Co. Lit. 45. But, by a saving expressly made, this statute of 1 Eliz. did not extend to grants made by any Bishop to the Crown; by which means Queen Elizabeth procured many fair possessions to be made over to her by the prelates, either for her own use, or with intent to be granted out again to her favourites, whom she thus gratified without any expence to herself. To prevent which for the future, the stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 3, extends the prohibitions to grants and Leases made to the King, as well as to any of his Subjects. 11 Rep. 71.

Then came stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, explained and enforced by stats. 14 Eliz. cc. 11, 14: 18 Eliz. c. 11: 43 Eliz. c. 29; which extend the restrictions laid by the stat. 1 Eliz. c. 19, on Bishops, to certain other inferior Corporations, both sole and aggregate. From laying all which together, we may collect, that all colleges, cathedrals, and other ecclesiastical or eleemosynary corporations, and all parsons and vicars, are restrained from making any Leases of their lands, unless under the following regulations:—1. They must not exceed twenty-one years, or three lives, from the making. 2. The accustomed rent or more must be yearly reserved thereon. 3. Houses in corporations or market towns may be let for forty years, provided they be not the mansion-houses of the Lessors, nor have above ten acres of ground belonging to them; and provided the Lessee be bound to keep them in repair; and they may also be aliened in fee-simple for lands of equal value in recompence. 4. Where there is an old Lease in being, no concurrent Lease shall be made, unless where the old one will expire within three years. 5. No Lease, by the equity of the statute, shall be made without impeachment of waste. Co. Lit. 45. 6. All bonds and covenants tending to frustrate the provisions of the stats. 13 & 18 Eliz. shall be void.

Concerning these restrictive statutes two general observations are to be made. First, That they do not, by any construction, enable any persons to make such Leases as they were by common law disabled to make. Therefore a parson or vicar, though he is restrained from making longer Leases than for twenty-one years or three lives, even with the consent of the Patron and Ordinary, yet is not enabled to make any Lease at all, so as to bind his successor, without obtaining such consent. Co. Lit. 44. Secondly, That though Leases contrary to these statutes are declared void, yet they are good against the Lessor, during his life, if he be a Sole Corporation; and are also good against an Aggregate Corporation, so long as the Head of it lives, who is presumed to be the most concerned in interest. For the statute was intended for the benefit of the successor only; and no man shall make an advantage of his own wrong. Co. Litt. 45: 2 Comm. c. 20.

Where a new thing is demised with lands accustomably let, though there be great increase of rent, the Lease is void: but more rent than the accustomed rent may be reserved. 5 Rep. 5: 6 Rep. 37. The Leases according to the statute 32 Hen. 8, bind the issue in tail; but not those in reversion or remainder: for if tenant in tail makes a Lease warranted by the statute, and dies without issue, the Lease, as to him in reversion or remainder, is void; though by a common recovery, Leases may be made to bind him in remainder, &c. Wood's Inst. 267.

A guardian during the minority of an infant tenant in tail, who was but one year old, made a Lease for twenty years; and it was adjudged not good by the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, to bind the issue in tail; and it is the same in the case of tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, or husband seised in right of his wife, because they have no inheritance. Dyer 271.

If a Lease of the wife's land is not warranted by the statute, it is a good Lease against the husband, though not against the wife: the husband and wife cannot bind him in reversion or remainder. 1 Inst. 362.

A Lease by the husband of a feme covert's estate, though not within stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 28, is only voidable. But a mortgage of a feme covert's estate, though in form of a Lease, is void. Dougl. 53, 4, in n.

If a Bishop have two Chapters, as there may be two or more to one bishoprick; both Chapters must confirm Leases made by the Bishop. 1 Inst. 131. A Lease by a Bishop made to begin presently for twenty-one years, when there is an old Lease in being, is good, notwithstanding the statute of 1 Eliz. c. 19: Moor Cas. 241. But if such Lease is to commence at a day to come, it will be void. 1 Leon. 44. Lease for three lives by a Bishop of tithes, is void against the successor; although the usual rent be duly reserved. Moor Cas. 1078.

Leases of a Dean and Chapter are good, without confirmation of the Bishop. Dyer 273: 2 Nels. Abr. 1096. Where there is a Chapter and no Dean, they may make grants, &c. and are within the statute. 1 Mod. 204. A prebendary is seised in right of the church within the equity of the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28: 4 Leon. 51. A prebendary's Lease confirmed by the Archbishop who is his patron, is good, without confirmation of Dean and Chapter. 3 Bulstr. 290. But where a prebendary made a Lease for years of part of his prebend, and this was confirmed by Dean and Chapter; because it was not confirmed likewise by the Bishop, who was patron and ordinary of the prebend, the Lease was adjudged void. Dyer 60. If a prebendary hath rectories in two several dioceses belonging to his prebend, and his Lease of them is confirmed, by the Bishop Dean and Chapter of the diocese of which he is prebendary, it is good, though not confirmed by the other. Sid. 75.

A chancellor of a cathedral church may make a Lease, and it is said it will be good against the successor, though not confirmed, &c. Sid. 158. If a parson or vicar makes a Lease for life or years, of lands usually letten, reserving the customary rent, &c. it must be confirmed by Patron and Ordinary, for they are out of the statute 32 Hen. 8. c. 28. And if the Parson and Ordinary make a Lease for years of the glebe to the patron; and afterwards the patron assigns this Lease to another, such assignment is good, and is a confirmation of that Lease to the assignee. 5 Rep. 15. Ancient covenants in former Leases may be good to bind the successor, so as to discharge the Lessee from payment of pensions, tenths, &c. but of any new matter they shall not. 1 Vent. 223.

A Lease for years of a spiritual person, will be void by his death, if it is not according to the statutes; and a Lease for life is voidable by entry, &c. of the successor: and so in like cases, Leases not warranted by statute are void or voidable on the deaths of their makers: acceptance of rent on a void Lease shall not bind the successor. 2 Cro. 173.

If a Bishop be not Bishop de jure, Leases made by him to charge the Bishoprick are void, though all judicial acts by him are good. 2 Cro. 353. And where a Bishop makes a Lease, which may tend to the diminution of the revenues of the Bishoprick, &c. which should maintain the successor; there the deprivation or translation of the Bishop, is all one with his death. 1 Inst. 329.

There

There is yet another restriction with regard to College-Leases by stat. 18 Eliz. c. 6, which directs that one-third of the old rent then paid, should for the future be reserved in wheat or malt, reserving a quarter of wheat for each 6*s.* 8*d.* or a quarter of malt for every 5*s*; or that the Lessees should pay for the same according to the price that wheat and malt should be sold for, in the market next adjoining to the respective colleges, on the market day before the rent becomes due. This is said to have been an invention of Lord Treasurer Burleigh and Sir Thomas Smith, then principal Secretary of State; who observing how greatly the value of money had sunk, and the price of all provisions risen, by the quantity of bullion imported from the new-found Indies, which effects were likely to increase to a greater degree, devised this method for upholding the revenues of colleges. Their foresight and penetration have, in this respect, been very apparent: for though the rent so reserved in corn was at first but one-third of the old rent, or half of what was still reserved in money, yet now the proportion is nearly inverted, and the money arising from corn-rents is, communibus annis, almost double to the rents reserved in money. 2 Comm. c. 20.

It has been observed, that the price of a quarter of wheat brings at present near 50*s.* and the colleges receiving one-third of their rent in corn, i. e. a quarter of wheat, or its value for every 13*s.* 4*d.* which they are paid in money; it follows, that the corn-rent will be in proportion to the money-rent, nearly as four to one. But these rents united are very far from the present value. Colleges, therefore, in order to obtain the difference, generally take a fine upon the renewal of their Leases. It was a great object in colleges to restrain those in possession from making long Leases, and impoverishing their successors, by receiving the whole value of the Lease, by a fine at the commencement of the term. The corn-rent has made the old rent approach in some degree nearer to its present value; otherwise it should seem the principal advantage of a corn-rent is to secure the Lessor from the effect of a sudden scarcity of corn. Christian's Note to 2 Comm. c. 20. p. 322.

The Leases of beneficed clergymen are farther restrained in case of their non-residence, by stats. 13 Eliz. c. 20: 14 Eliz. c. 11: 18 Eliz. c. 11: 43 Eliz. c. 9; which direct, that if any beneficed clergyman be absent from his cure above fourscore days in any one year, he shall not only forfeit one year's profit of his benefice, to be distributed among the poor of the parish, but that all Leases made by him of the profits of such benefice, and all covenants and agreements of a like nature, shall cease and be void; except in the case of licensed pluralists, who are allowed to demise the living on which they are non-resident, to their curates only; provided such curates do not absent themselves above forty days in any one year. On these statutes it has been determined, that where an incumbent had leased his rectory, and had been afterwards absent for more than eighty days in a year, his tenant could not maintain an ejectment against a stranger who had got into possession, without any right or title whatever. 2 Term Rep. 749. If the curate leases over, the Lease will become void by his absence; but not by the absence of the incumbent. Gibs. 740.

III. 1. If a Bishop before the statute 1 Eliz. c. 19. § 5, leased part of his bishoprick for term of years, reserving rent, and then died; and after another was made Bishop, who accepted and received the rent when due; by this acceptance the Lease was made good; which otherwise the new Bishop might have avoided. It is the same if baron and feme seised of lands in right of the feme, join and make a Lease or feoffment, reserving rent; and the baron dies, after whose death the feme receives or accepts the rent; by this the Lease or feoffment is confirmed, and shall bar her from bringing a cui in vita. Co. Litt. 211. Tenant in tail made a Lease for years, rendering 20*s.* rent, and afterwards released 19*s.* and died; the issue in tail accepted the 12*d.* rent: the better opinion was, that by the acceptance of the shilling for rent he had affirmed the Lease, and could not distrain for the 19*s.* rent. Dyer 304. Tenant for life, remainder in tail; a stranger levies a fine to him in remainder, who leased the lands to the conusor, rendering rent, the tenant for life died, and the issue in tail accepted the rent: adjudged, that by the fine and acceptance of the rent, the Lease was affirmed. Dyer 299. See Smith v. Stapleton, Plowd. 426, 434.

Lord and tenant; the rent is behind many years, the tenant made a feoffment in fee, and the lord accepted the rent of the feoffee which became due in his time; adjudged, that by such acceptance he shall lose all the arrearages, and cannot avow for the same. 3 Rep. 65. Penant's case. Lease for years, rendering rent, with a clause of re-entry; the Lessee paid the rent, which the Lessor accepted and put into a bag, but afterwards finding brass money amongst it, he refused to carry it away, and entered for the condition broken; but adjudged unlawful; because after he had accepted the rent he is barred. 5 Rep. 113; Wade's case.

Acceptance of the next rent due, at a day afterwards, will bar one to enter for a condition broken before, by reason of non payment of the rent; because the Lessor thereby affirmeth the Lease to have continuance. Co. Lit. 211. And taking a distress affirmeth the continuance of the rent; but if rent was due at a day before, and thereby the condition was broken, one may receive that rent, and yet re-enter; and if he accept of part of the rent, he may enter for a condition broken, and retain the lands until he has the whole rent. 3 Rep. 64: Co. Lit. 203.

If an infant accepts of rent at his full age, it makes the Lease good, and shall bind him. Plow. 418.

If a Lessor accepts of rent from an assignee, knowing of the assignment, it bars him from action of debt against the Lessee; for the privity of contract is extinguished: but after such acceptance, the Lessor or his assigns may maintain an action against the first Lessee upon his covenant for payment of the rent. 1 Saund. 241: 3 Rep. 24. But acceptance of rent from the assignee has been adjudged a sufficient notice of the assignment, so that the Lessor could not resort to the first Lessee. 2 Bulst. 151.

Lessee for years assigned his term, and died intestate, the Lessor brought debt against his administrator, who pleaded the assignment, and that the plaintiff had notice, and had accepted the rent of the assignee: adjudged, that by the death of the Lessee, the privity of contract was determined, and the action would not lie against the the administrator. Cro. Eliz. 715; cited in Walker's case, 3 Rep. 24.

Tenant for life makes a Lease for years to commence on a certain day, and dies before the expiration of the Lease, in the middle of a year. The remainder-man receives rent from the Lessee, who continues in possession, (but not under a fresh Lease,) for two years together, on the days of payment mentioned in the Lease. This is evidence from which an agreement will be presumed between the remainder-man and the Lessee, that the Lessee should continue to hold from the day and according to the terms of the original demise; and notice to quit on that day is proper. 1 H. Black. Rep. C. P. 97.

2. If a Parson, &c. makes a Lease for years not warranted by the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 34, but is void by his death; acceptance of rent by a new parson or successor will not make it good. 1 Saund. 241. And if a tenant for life makes a Lease for years, there no acceptance will make the Lease good, because the Lease is void by his death. Dyer 46, 239.

Tenant in tail made a Lease for years, rendering rent to him and his heirs, and died; his son and heir accepted the rent, and was afterwards executed for treason, leaving issue a son; the king accepted the rent, but that did not make the Lease good, the lands being in his hands by the attainder, and not in the reverter. Dyer 115. Lease for years, with condition, that the Lessee shall not alien or assign, without the assent of the Lessor, and if he did, that then the Lessor should re-enter: he assigned part of the land without assent, &c. and then the Lessor, before notice of the assignment, accepts the rent, and afterwards entered for the condition broken; and adjudged lawful; for the condition being collateral, he might assign the land so secretly, that it may be impossible for the Lessor to know it. 3 Rep. 65, Penant's Case: Cro. Eliz. 553. S. C.

Lease for twenty-one years, rendering rent, on condition, that if the Lessee did let any part of it above three years, then the Lease to be void, and that the Lessor might enter; he let it out for three years, and so from three years to three years, during the term of twenty-one years, if he so long lived; the Lessor accepted the rent of the assignee, and afterwards entered: this was a breach of the condition, and the acceptance of it afterwards did not dispense with it, because the original Lease was void and determined. Cro. Car. 368. If tenant in tail make a Lease for years, to commence after his death, rendering rent, in such case acceptance of rent by the Issue will not make the Lease good to bar him, because the Lease did not take effect in the life of his ancestor. Plowd. 418.

Where one in remainder, after the expiration of an estate for life, gave notice to the tenant to quit on a certain day, and afterwards accepted half a year's rent; such acceptance being only evidence of a holding from year to year is rebutted by the previous notice to quit, and therefore the notice remains good. See 1 Term Rep. 161.

The Lessor's receiving rent after a forfeiture is no waiver, unless the forfeiture were known to him at the time. 2 Term Rep. 425.

A Lease void in its creation as against a remainder-man, does not become valid in law by his accepting rent, and suffering the Lessee to make improvements after his remainder vests in possession; though it seems that in such case equity would afford relief. See Doe v. Butcher, Dougl. 50—54, in n.

Where a Lease is ipso facto void by the condition or limitation, no acceptance of rent afterwards can make it have continuance as between the grantor and grantee; but it is otherwise of a Lease voidable only. See Dougl. 578, in n.

LEASES OF THE KING. Leases made by the King, of part of the dutchy of Cornwall, are to be for three lives, or thirty-one years, and not be made dispunishable of waste, whereon the ancient rent is to be reserved; and estates in reversion, with those in possession, are not to exceed three lives, &c. See stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 4.

All Leases and grants made by letters patent, or indentures under the great seal of England, or seal of the Court of Exchequer, or by copy of court-roll, according to the custom of the manors of the dutchy of Cornwall, not exceeding one, two, or three lives, or some term determinable thereon, &c. are confirmed; and covenants, conditions, &c. in Leases for lives or years, shall be good in law, as if the King were seised in fee-simple. Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 9. See stats. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 18: 12 Ann. c. 22. Leases from the Crown of lands in England and Wales, and under the seals of the dutchy of Lancaster, &c. for one, two, or three lives, or terms not exceeding fifty years, are allowed time for inrollment, &c. by stat. 10 Ann. c. 18. Leases made by the Prince of Wales of lands, &c. in the dutchy of Cornwall, for three lives, or thirty-one years, on which is reserved the most usual rent paid for the greatest part of twenty years before, shall be good against the King, the Prince, and their heirs, &c. and the conditions of such Leases be as effectual as if the Prince had been seised of an absolute estate in fee-simple in the lands. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 29. See titles Cornwall; King.

LEASE AND RELEASE, A conveyance of the fee-simple right or interest in lands or tenements, under the statute of Uses, 27 H. 8. c. 10; giving first the possession, and afterwards the interest, in the estate conveyed. Though the deed of feoffment was the usual conveyance at common law; yet since the statute of Uses, stat. 27 Hen 8. c. 10, the conveyance by Lease and Release has taken place of it, and is become a very common assurance to pass lands and tenements; for it amounts to a feoffment, the use drawing after it the possession without actual entry, &c. and supplying the place of livery and seisin, required in that deed: in the making it, a Lease or bargain and sale for a year, or such like term, is first prepared and executed; "to the intent," as is expressed in the deed, "that by virtue thereof the Lessee may be in actual possession of the lands intended to be conveyed by the Release; and thereby, and by force of the statute 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, for transferring of uses into possession, be enabled to take and accept a grant of the reversion and inheritance of the said lands, &c. to the use of himself and his heirs for ever:" Upon which the Release is accordingly made, reciting the Lease, and declaring the uses: and in these cases a pepper-corn rent in the Lease for a year is a sufficient reservation to raise an use, to make the Lessee capable of a Release. 2 Vent. 35: 2 Mod. 262.

Blackstone

Blackstone says, this species of conveyance was first invented by Serjeant Moore, soon after the Statute of Uses; and is now the most common of any, and therefore not to be shaken; though very great lawyers, as particularly Mr. Noy, Attorney-general to King Charles I. formerly doubted its validity. 2 Mod. 252. It is thus contrived: a Lease, or rather Bargain and Sale upon some pecuniary consideration for one year, is made by the tenant of the freehold, to the Lessee or bargainee. Now this, without any enrollment, makes the bargainor stand seised to the use of the bargainee, and vests in the bargainee the use of the term for a year; and then the statute immediately annexes the possession. He therefore being thus in possession is capable of receiving a Release of the freehold and reversion; which must be made to a tenant in possession, and accordingly the next day a Release is granted to him. This is held to supply the place of livery of seisin, and thus a conveyance by Lease and Release is said to amount to a feoffment. Co. Litt. 270: Cro. Jac. 604.

The form of this conveyance is originally derived to us from the common law; and it is necessary to distinguish in what respect it operates as a common-law conveyance, and in what it operates under the statute of uses. At the common law, where the usual mode of conveyance was by feoffment with livery of seisin, if there was a tenant in possession, so that livery could not be made, the reversion was granted, and the tenant attorned to the reversioner. As by this mode the reversion or remainder of an estate might be conveyed without livery, when it depended on an estate previously existing, it was natural to proceed one step further, and to create a particular estate for the express and sole purpose of conveying the reversion; and then by a surrender or Release, either of the particular estate to the reversioner, or of the reversion to the particular tenant, the whole fee vested in the surrenderee or Releasee. It was afterwards observed, that there was no necessity to grant the reversion to a stranger; and that if a particular estate was made to the person to whom it was proposed to convey the fee, the reversion might be immediately released to him, which Release operating by way of enlargement, would give the Releasee (or Relessee as he is sometimes termed) a fee. In all these cases the particular estate was only an estate for years; for at the common law the ceremony of livery of seisin is as necessary to create even an estate of freehold, as it is to create an estate of inheritance. Still an actual entry would be necessary on the part of the particular tenant; for without actual possession the Lessee is not capable of a Release, operating by way of enlargement. But this necessity of entry for the purpose of obtaining the possession, was superseded or made unnecessary by the statute of uses (27 Hen. 8. c. 10, above alluded to); for by that statute the possession was immediately transferred to the Cestui que use; so that a bargainee under that statute is as much in possession, and as capable of a Release before or without entry, as a Lessee is at the common law after entry. All, therefore, that remained to be done to avoid on the one hand the necessity of livery of seisin from the grantor, and to avoid on the other the necessity of an actual entry on the part of the grantee, was, that the particular estate (which, for the reasons above mentioned, should be an estate for years) should be so framed as to be a bargain and sale within the statute. Originally it was made in such a manner as to be both a Lease at the Common Law, and a bargain and sale under the Statute: but as it is held, that where conveyances may operate both by the Common Law and Statute, they shall be considered to operate by the Common Law, unless the intention of the parties appears to the contrary, it became the practice to insert, among the operative words, the words Bargain and Sell; (in fact, it is more accurate to insert no other operative words;) and to express that the bargain and sale, or Lease, is made to the intent and purpose that thereby, and by the statute for transferring uses into possession, the Lessee may be capable of a Release. The bargain and sale therefore, or Lease for a year, as it is generally called, operates, and the bargainee is in the possession, by the statute. The Release operates by enlarging the estate or possession of the bargainee to a fee. This is at the Common Law; and if the use be declared to the Releasee in fee-simple, it continues an estate at the Common Law; but if the use is declared to a third person, the statute again intervenes, and annexes or transfers the possession of the Releasee to the use of the person to whom the use is declared. It has been said, that the possession of the bargainee under the Lease is not so properly merged in, as enlarged by, the Release; but at all events it does not, after the Release, exist distinct from the estate passed by the Release. 1 Inst. 271. b. in n.

As the operation of a Lease and Release depends upon the Lease, or bargain and sale; if the grantor is a Body Corporate, the Lease will not operate under the statute of uses; for a Body Corporate cannot be seised to an use, and therefore the Lease of possession, considered as a bargain and sale under the statute, is void; and the Release then must be of no effect for want of a previous possession in the Releasee. In cases of this nature, therefore, it is proper to make the conveyance by feoffment, or by a Lease and Release with an actual entry by the Lessee previous to the Release; after which the Release will pass the reversion. It may also be observed, that in exchanges, if one of the parties die before the exchange is executed by entry, the exchange is void. But if the exchange be made by Lease and Release, this inconvenience is prevented, as the statute executes the possession without entry; and all incidents annexed to an exchange at Common Law will be preserved. 1 Inst. 271. b. in n.

When an estate is conveyed by Lease and Release, in the Lease for a year there must be the words, bargain and sell for money, and five shillings or any other sum, though never paid, is a good consideration, whereupon the bargainee for a year is immediately in possession on the executing of the deed, without actual entry: if only the words demise, grant and to farm let are used, in that case the Lessee cannot accept of a Release of the inheritance, until he hath actually entered, and is in possession. 2 Lil. Abr. 435. But where Littleton says, that if a Lease is made for years, and the Lessor releases to the Lessee before entry, such Release is void; because the Lessee had only a right, and not the possession; and such Release shall not enure to enlarge the estate, without the possession: though this is true at Common Law, it is not so now upon the statute of uses. 2 Mod. 250, 251. And if a man make a Lease for life, remainder for life, and the first Lessee dieth; on which the Lessor releases to him in remainder, before entry; this is a good Release to enlarge the estate, he having an estate in law capable of enlargement by Release, before entry had. 1 Inst. 270.

No person can make a bargain and sale, who hath not possession of the lands: but it is not necessary to reserve a rent therein; because the consideration of money raises the use. If a Lease be without any such consideration, the Lessee hath not any estate till entry, nor hath the Lessor any reversion; and therefore a release will not operate, &c. 1 Inst. 270, 278: Cro. Jac. 169: 1 Mod. 253. On Lease at will, a Release shall be good by reason of the privity between the parties; but if a man be only tenant at sufferance, the Release will not enure to him; and as to the person who hath the reversion it is void, for such tenant hath not any possession, there being no estate in him. Lit. § 461, 462: Cro. Eliz. 21: Dyer 251.

In a Lease and Release, to make a tenant to the præcipe to suffer a recovery, where the Release is made to A. B. and his heirs, (viz. the tenant to the præcipe,) it must be also said to the use of him the said A. B. and his heirs and assigns for ever; for the Relessee must be absolute tenant of the freehold. 2 Vent. 312: Lil. Conveyance, 251. And a Release made on trust, must be to A. B. his heirs and assigns, to the only use and behoof of the Relessee, his heirs and assigns for ever; in trust for C. D. who is to be a party to the deed, and the purchase money to be paid by the cestui que trust. If the words to the use, &c. are not inserted in the Release, the estate doth not execute by the statute of uses, and the trust is void. Lil. Conv. 233, 251. See titles Recovery; Trust.

A Lease and Release make but one conveyance, being in the nature of one deed. 1 Mod. 252.

LEATHER. There are several statutes relating to Leather: the stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 14, directs packers to be appointed for Leather intended to be transported; but the 18 Eliz. c. 9, prohibits the shipping of Leather, on penalty of forfeiture, &c. Though by stat. 20 Car. 2. c. 5, transportation of Leather was allowed to Scotland, Ireland, or any foreign country, paying a custom or duty; which statute was continued by divers subsequent acts. See stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22; and this Dictionary, title Navigation Acts. No person shall ingross Leather to sell again, under the penalty of forfeiture; none but tanners are to buy any rough hides of Leather, or calve-skins in the hair, on pain of forfeiture; and no person shall forestall hides, under the penalty of 6*s.* 8*d.* a hide. Leather not sufficiently tanned, is to be forfeited. In London, the Lord Mayor and Aldermen are to appoint and swear searchers of Leather, out of the company of shoemakers, &c. and also triers of sufficient Leather; and the same is to be done by mayors, &c. in other towns and corporations; and searchers allowing insufficient Leather, incur a forfeiture of 40*s.* Shoemakers making shoes of insufficient Leather, are liable to 3*s.* 4*d.* penalty. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22.

Red tanned Leather is to be brought into open Leather markets, and searched and sealed before exposed to sale, or shall be forfeited; and contracts for sale otherwise to be void. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 7. Hides of Leather are adjudged the ware and manufacture of the currier, and subject to search, &c. All persons dealing in Leather may buy tanned Leather searched in open market; and any person may buy or sell Leather hides or skins by weight. Stat. 1 W. & M. c. 33. Duties are granted on Leather, and entries to be made of tan-yards, under the penalty of 50*l.* and tanners and Leather-dressers using any private tan-yards, or concealing skins, &c. shall forfeit 20*l.* leviable by Justices of Peace, by distress, &c. Stats. 9 Ann. c. 11. See 5 Geo. 1. c. 2: 9 Geo. 1. c. 27. Artificers may freely buy their Leather, and cut it and sell it in small pieces. 12 Geo. 2. c. 25. LECTURER, Prælector.] A reader of lectures. In London, and other cities, there are Lecturers who are assistants to the rectors of churches in preaching, &c. These Lecturers are chosen by the Vestry, or chief inhabitants of the parish, and are usually the afternoon preachers: the law requires, that they should have the consent of those by whom they are employed, and likewise the approbation and admission of the Ordinary; and they are, at the time of their admission, to subscribe to the thirty-nine articles of religion, &c. required by the stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. They are to be licensed by the Bishop, as other ministers, and a man cannot be a Lecturer without a licence from a Bishop or Archbishop; but the power of a Bishop, &c. is only as to the qualification and fitness of the person, and not as to the right of the Lectureship; for if a Bishop determine in favour of a Lecturer, a prohibition may be granted to try the right. Mich. 12 W. 3. B. R. If Lecturers preach in the week-days, they must read the common prayer for the day when they first preach, and declare their assent to that book; they are likewise to do the same the first Lecture-day in every month, so long as they continue Lecturers, or they shall be disabled to preach till they conform to the same: and if they preach before such conformity, they may be committed to prison for three months, by warrant of two Justices of Peace, granted on the certificate of the Ordinary. stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4.

Where Lectures are to be preached or read in any cathedral or collegiate church, if the Lecturer openly, at the time aforesaid, declare his assent to all things in the book of Common Prayer, it shall be sufficient; and university sermons or Lectures are excepted out of the act concerning Lectures. There are Lectures founded by the donations of pious persons, the Lecturers whereof are appointed by the founders; without any interposition or consent of rectors of churches, &c. though with the leave and approbation of the bishop; such as that of Lady Lady Moier at St. Paul's, &c. But such is not entitled to the pulpit without the consent of the Rector, or Vicar, in whom the freehold of the church is. Cases B. R. 42c, 433.

The Court of B. R. will not grant a mandamus to a Bishop to licence a Lecturer without the consent of the Rector, where the Lecturer is supported by voluntary contributions, unless an immemorial custom to elect without such consent is shown. R. v. London, (Bp.) 1 Term Rep. 331. Nor will that Court grant a Mandamus to the Rector, to certify to the Bishop the election of a Lecturer, chosen by the inhabitants, where no such custom is shown, though the Lecturer has been paid out of the poor rates. But such immemorial custom, if in fact it exists, is binding on the Rector. 4 Term Rep. 125. R. v. Field.

LEGABILIS, Signifies what is not entailed as hereditary; but may be bequeathed by Legacy, in a last will and testament. Articula proposita in parliamento coram Rege; Anno 1234.

LEGACY,

Legatum.] A Bequest, or gift of goods and chattels by will or testament: the person to whom it is given is styled the Legatee: and if the gift is of the residue of an estate after payment of debts and Legacies, he is then styled the Residuary Legatee.

This Bequest transfers an inchoate property to the Legatee; but the Legacy is not perfect without the assent of the executor; for if one has a general or pecuniary Legacy of 100 l., or a specific one of a piece of plate, he cannot in either case take it without the consent of the executor. For in him all the chattels are vested; and it is his business first of all to see, whether there is a sufficient sum left to pay the debts of the testator. See Co. Litt. 111: Aleyn. 39: Bract. l. 2. c. 26. But if there is a fund to pay the debts, and the executor then refuses his assent to a Legacy, he may be compelled to give it, either by the Spiritual Court, or by a Court of Equity. March, Rep. 19.

In case of a deficiency of assets, all the general Legacies must abate proportionably, in order to pay the debts; but a specific Legacy (of a piece of plate, a horse, or the like) is not to abate at all, or allow any thing by way of abatement, unless there be not sufficient without it. 2 Vern. 111. Upon the same principle, if the Legatees have been paid their Legacies, they are afterwards bound to refund a rateable part in case debts come in, more than sufficient to exhaust the residue after the Legacies paid. 2 Vern. 205.

If the Legatee dies before the Testator, the Legacy is a lost or lapsed Legacy, and shall sink into the residue. And if a contingent Legacy be left to any one, as when he attains, or if he attains the age of twenty-one, and he dies before that time, it is a lapsed Legacy. Dy. 59; 1 Eq. Ab. 295. But a Legacy to one to be paid when he attains the age of twenty-one years, is a vested Legacy; an interest which commences in præsenti, although it be solvendum in futuro: and if the Legatee dies before that age, his representatives shall receive it out of the testator's personal estate, at the same time that it would have become payable in case the Legatee had lived. This distinction is borrowed from the civil law; and its adoption in our Courts is not so much owing to its intrinsick equity, as to its having been before adopted by the Ecclesiastical Courts. For since the Chancery has a concurrent jurisdiction with them, in regard to the recovery of Legacies, it was reasonable that there should be a conformity in these determinations; and that the Subject should have the same measure of justice in whatever Court he sued. 1 Eq. Ab. 295. But if such (contingent) Legacies be charged upon a real estate, in both cases they shall lapse for the benefit of the heir; for with regard to devises affecting lands, the Ecclesiastical Court hath no concurrent jurisdiction. 2 P. Wms. 601, 610. And in case of a vested Legacy due immediately, and charged on land, or money in the funds, which yield an immediate profit, interest shall be payable thereon from the testator's death; but if charged only on the personal estate, which cannot be immediately got in, it shall carry interest only from the end of the year after the death of the testator. 2 P. Wms. 26, 7.

Besides these formal Legacies contained in a man's will and testament, there is also permitted another death-bed disposition of property; which is called a donation, causâ mortis; a gift in prospect of death. And that is, when a person in his last sickness, apprehending his dissolution near, delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another the possession of any personal goods, (under which have been included bonds and bills drawn by the deceased upon his banker,) to keep in case of his decease. This gift, if the donor dies, needs not the assent of his executors; yet it shall not prevail against creditors; and is accompanied with this implied trust, that if the donor lives, the property thereof shall revert to himself, being only given in contemplation of death; mortis causâ. Pre. Ch. 269: 1 P. Wms. 406, 441: 3 P. Wms. 357. See 2 Vez. 431.

As this donation may be avoided by creditors, so may it by the wife or children of a freeman, if it break in on their customary shares. 2 Vern. 612. The delivery of receipts for South-Sea annuities does not amount to a gift of the annuities themselves. Ward v. Turner, 2 Vez. 442. It is undecided whether the delivery of a mortgage deed will amount to a gift of the money due on the security. See Richards v. Syms, cited 2 Vez. 436: Hassell v. Tynte, Ambl. 318.

One cannot sue in the Spiritual Court for a donatio causâ mortis. 2 Stra. 777. See further this Dictionary, title Donatio causâ mortis.

Having said thus much on the subject of Legacies in general, we may proceed more particularly to inquire,

1. Who may be Legatees; of lapsed and vested Legacies, and of the ademption of Legacies.
2. Of the Payment of Legacies; and herein of Specific Legacies.
3. Of Interest on Legacies.
4. Of Suits to recover Legacies.
5. Of Devises to Creditors, &c. in satisfaction of Demands due from the Testator.—Of Legacies to Executors in satisfaction of the Residue, See title Executor V. 8.

1. It seems necessary, that a Legatee should be born at the time of making the will; and it has been adjudged, where Legacies were given to a man's children, that those who were born afterwards should have no share thereof. 1 Bulst. 153. But it has been otherwise decreed in Chancery. 1 Ch. Rep. 301.

The name of a Legatee being very falsely spelt, it was referred to a master in Chancery, to examine who was the person intended. 1 P. Wms. 425. Some persons are incapable of taking by Legacy, under several statutes; as in stat. 13 W. 3. c. 6, Officers, Counsellors, Lawyers, &c. not taking the oaths; and 5 Geo. 1. c. 27, Artificers going abroad, &c. See further who may be Devisees, this Dictionary, title Will.

The general rule is, that if the Legatee die before the Testator, or before the condition upon which the Legacy is given be performed, or before it be vested in interest, the Legacy is extinguished. Treat. Eq. lib. 4. pt. 1. c. 2. § 3.—But a bequest may be so specially framed as to prevent the death of the Legatee operating a lapse of the Legacy. See 3 Atk. 572, 580.—Neither will the rule extend to a Legacy to two or more; for though, by the civil law, there is no survivorship amongst Legatees, yet it is settled that a Legacy to two or more is not extinguished by the death of one, but will vest in the survivor. Gilb. Rep. 137: 2 Atk. 220.—Nor will the rule extend to those cases where the Legacy is given over after the death of the first Legatee; for in such cases the Legatee in remainder shall have it immediately. 1 And. 33. pl. 82: 2 Vern. 207: 1 P. Wms. 274: 3 P. Wms. 113: Pre. Ch. 37: Mosel. 319: 2 Vern. 378.—Nor will a Legacy lapse by the death of the Legatee in the testator's life-time, if he be to take as a Trustee. See 1 Ves. 140: and 2 Vern. 468, in which latter case the point is doubted.

Where a father makes a provision for a child by his will, and afterwards gives to such child, being a daughter, a portion in marriage; or, being a son, a sum of money to establish him in life, (such portion or sum being in amount equal to, or greater than the Legacy,) it is an implied ademption of the Legacy; for the law will not intend that the father designed two portions to one child. 1 P. Wms. 680: 2 Ch. Rep. 85: 2 Vern. 115, 257: 2 Atk. 216: Ambl. 325: 2 Bro. C. R. 307.—But this implication will not arise, if the provision by the will be by bequest of the residue. 2 Atk. 216:—or if the provision in the father's life-time be subject to a contingency; 2 Atk. 491:—or be not ejusdem generis with the Legacy; 1 Bro. C. R. 425:—or if the testator be a stranger; 2 Atk. 516: 2 Bro. C. R. 493: And such implication is always liable to be refuted by evidence. 2 Atk. 516: 2 Bro. C. R. 165, 519.

A man devised 200*l.* a piece to the two children of A. B. at the end of ten years after the death of the testator; afterwards the children died within the ten years; and it was held a lapsed Legacy: for there is a difference where a devise is to take effect at a future time, and where the payment is to be made at a future time; and whenever the time is annexed to the Legacy itself, and not to the payment of it, if the Legatee dies before the time happens, it is a lapsed Legacy. 2 Salk. 415. A bequest of money to one at the age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, without saying to be paid at that time, and the Legatee dies before the term; this is a lapsed Legacy: And so it is if the devise had been to her when she shall marry; or when a son shall come of age, and they die before. Godb. 182: 2 Vent. 342.

But a devise of a sum of money, to be paid at the day of marriage, or age of twenty-one years; if the Legatee die before either of these happen, the Legatee's administrator shall have it, because the Legatee had a present interest, though the time of payment was not yet come; and it is a charge on the personal estate which was in being at the testator's death; and if it were discharged by this accident, then it would be for the benefit of the executor, which was never intended by the testator. 2 Vent. 366: 2 Lev 207. A father bequeathed goods to his son, when he should be of the age of twenty-one years, and if he die before that time, then his daughter should have them; afterwards the father died, and then the son died before he was of age; adjudged, that the daughter shall have the goods given in Legacy immediately, and not stay till her brother would have been of age, if he had lived. 1 And. 33. And where a Legacy was devised to an infant, to be paid when he shall come of age, and he died before that time; it was ruled that his administrator should have it presently, and not stay until the infant should have been of age, if he had lived. 1 Leon. 278. In a case of this nature, it has been decreed in equity, that although the administrator should have the Legacy, yet he must wait for it till such time as the child would have come to twenty-one. 2 Vern. 199.

That if the Legacy be to the Legatee payable to him at a certain age, and the Legatee die before he attain such age, this is a vested and transmissible interest in the Legatee; See 2 Vent. 342: 2 Ch. Ca. 155: 1 Vern. 462: 3 P. Wms. 138: 2 Vern. 199.—Otherwise, if the Legacy be to the Legatee generally, at or when he attains such age. 2 Vent. 342: 2 Salk. 415: 1 Eq. Ab. 295, 6; and see 1 Bro. C. R. 119.—If the Legacy be made to carry interest, though the words to be paid, or payable, are omitted, it is a vested and transmissible interest. 2 Vent. 342: 2 Ch. Ca. 155: 2 Vern. 673: 2 Ves. 263: 3 Atk. 645. So if the bequest be to A. for life, and after the death of A. to B. the bequest to B. is vested, upon the death of the testator; and will not lapse by the death of B. in the life-time of A. 2 Vent. 347: 1 P. Wms. 566: 2 Vern. 378: Ambl. 167: 1 Bro. C. R. 119: and the notes there; 1 Bro. C. R. 181.

Where a Legacy is to arise out of the real estate, it shall not go to the representative of the Legatee; but sink in the inheritance. And yet where 1000*l.* was given by a person out of lands, to his daughter, and interest to be computed from his death, &c. here, though the Legatee died before the time appointed for paying the the ſame, it was held the Legacy ſhould be raiſed notwithſtanding; and the Lord Chancellor ſaid, that this Legacy was a veſted one. 2 Vern. Rep. 617: Barnardiſt. 328, 330. A perſon by will, &c. gives a portion or Legacy to a child, payable at twenty-one years of age, out of a real and perſonal eſtate, and the child dies before the Legacy becomes payable; in that caſe, ſo much thereof as the perſonal eſtate will pay, ſhall go to the child's executors and adminiſtrators: but ſo far as the Legacy is charged upon the land, it is ſaid it ſhall ſink. 2 Peere Williams 613. Alſo if a Legacy be given to one to be paid out of ſuch a fund, and the ſame fails, it has been reſolved, that it ought to be paid out of the perſonal eſtate; and the failing of the manner appointed for payment ſhall not defeat the Legacy. 1 P. Wms. 779.

3. If a Legacy when due be paid to the father of an infant, it is no good payment; and the executor may be obliged in equity to pay it over again: and where any Legacy is bequeathed to a feme covert, paying it to her alone, is not ſufficient, without her huſband. 1 Vern. 261.

Executors are not bound to pay a Legacy, without ſecurity to refund. Chan. R. 149, 257. And if ſentence be given for a Legacy in the Eccleſiaſtical Court, a prohibition lies, unleſs they take ſecurity to refund. 2 Ventr. 358. If an executor pays Legacies, and, ſeven years after, covenant is broken, for which action is brought againſt the executor; the court inclined that it was a Devaſtavit, and that the executor ought to have taken ſecurity for his indemnity upon payment of the Legacies. Allen 38. Though it has been adjudged that a covenant is no duty till broken; and therefore ſince it is uncertain whether it will be broken or not, it ſhall be preſumed it will not; and the Legacies being a preſent duty, ſhall be paid by the executor, notwithſtanding any covenant not actually broken. Style. 37: 1 Nels. Ab. 786. If one binds himſelf and his executors in an obligation, &c. to perform a certain thing, and in his will gives divers Legacies and dies, leaving goods only ſufficient to pay the obligation when forfeited, this obligation ſhall be no bar to the Legacies, becauſe it is uncertain whether the ſame may ever be forfeited; though the executor may therefore make a delivery upon condition, viz. to return the Legacies if the obligation becomes forfeited, and the penalty be recovered. 1 Roll. Ab. 928: 2 Ventr. 358.

The executor is to pay the Legacies after the debts: but executors cannot in equity pay their own Legacies firſt, where there is not enough to pay all of them, but ſhall have an equal proportion with the reſt of the Legatees. Chan. R. 354. An executor has election, where any chattel is given to him, to have and take it in one right or the other, viz. as executor, or Legatee, which is to be made by a ſpecial taking, or declaration, &c. 10 Rep. 47: Plowd. 519: Dyer. 277.

If there be a ſpecific Legacy given of any thing, as a horſe, ſilver cup, &c. it muſt be delivered before any other Legacy, provided there be aſſets. Offic. Exec. 317. And if there be enough to pay all the Legacies after the debts are ſatisfied, the Legacies ſhall all be paid; but if there is not ſufficient to pay debts or more, the Legatees muſt loſe their Legacies, or a propor tionable part of them. Plowd. 526: See 1 Lill. Ab. 579.

A ſpecific Legacy is, where, by the aſſent of the executor, the property of the Legacy will veſt—As there is a benefit one way to a ſpecific Legatee, that he ſhall not contribute, (in caſe of a deficiency to pay all the Legacies,) ſo there is a hazard the other way—For inſtance, if ſuch ſpecific Legacy, being a leaſe, be evicted; or, being goods, be loſt or burnt; or, being a debt, be loſt by the inſolvency of the debtor: in all thoſe caſes ſuch ſpecific Legatee ſhall have no contribution from the other Legatees, and therefore ſhall pay none towards them. Hinton v. Pinke, 1 P. Wms. 539.

Theſe conſequences attending a ſpecific Legacy have raiſed, in the ſeveral caſes to be met with in the books, the queſtion, whether a Legacy was ſpecific or general?—A ſpecific Legacy (ſtrictly ſpeaking) is ſaid by Ld. Hardwicke in Purſe v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 417, to be a bequeſt of a particular chattel, ſpecifically deſcribed and diſtinguiſhed from all other things of the ſame kind; or, in other words, an individual Legacy.—Money, therefore, if ſufficiently diſtinguiſhed, may be the ſubject of a ſpecific bequeſt; as money in a certain cheſt, &c. Lawſon v. Stitch, 1 Atk. 508; or a particular debt; as to the ademption of which latter by payment in the teſtator's life-time, See Thomond (E.) v. Suffolk (E.), 1 P. Wms. 461.—So of Stock in Aſhton v. Aſhton, Talb. 152: Avelyn v. Ward, 1 Vez. 424: Drinkwater v. Falconer, 2 Vez. 623.—So a bequeſt of a part of a ſpecific chattel may be equally a ſpecific Legacy. 3 Atk. 103.

But the Legatees of ſpecific parts, though not liable to abatement with general Legatees, yet muſt abate proportionably among themſelves upon deficiency of the ſpecific thing bequeathed. Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Vez. 563; or on deficiency of the general aſſets for payment of debts. Long v. Short, 1 P. Wms 403.—So ſpecific Legatees of diſtinct chattels ſhall abate proportionably on a deficiency of general aſſets. Devon (D.) v. Atkins, 2 P. Wms. 382.

On the other hand, a mere bequeſt of quantity, whether of money or any other chattel, is a general Legacy; as of a quantity of Stock: Purſe v. Snaplin, 1 Atk. 414: Sleech v. Thorington, 2 Vez. 562: and where the teſtator has not ſuch Stock at his death, it is a direction to the executor to procure ſo much Stock for the Legatee, Partridge v. Partridge, Talb. 227.—So the purpoſe to which a general Legacy is to be applied will not alter its nature; as in the caſe of Hinton v. Pinke, 1 P. Wms. 539. Perſonal annuities given by will are general Legacies, Hume v. Edwards, 3 Atk. 693: Lewin v. Lewin, 2 Vez. 417. How far a Legacy of money, to be paid out of a certain fund, ſhall be adeemed by the failure of the fund, ſee Savile v. Blackett, 1 P. Wms. 778: 2 P. Wms. 330, Mr. Cox's Note (1): And ſee Treat. Eq. lib. 4. pt. 1. c. 2. § 5. in n.

A ſum bequeathed out of a debt muſt be paid though the debt is recovered by the teſtator; otherwiſe of a bequeſt of the debt itſelf. 2 Stra. 824.

As an executor is not obliged to pay a Legacy without ſecurity given him by the Legatee to refund, if there are debts, becauſe the Legacy is not due till the debts are paid, and a man muſt be juſt before he is charitable; ſo in ſome caſes, the executor may be compelled to give ſecurity to the Legatee for the payment of his Legacy; as where a teſtator bequeathed 1000*l.* to a perſon, to be paid at the age of twenty-one, and made an executor, and and died; afterwards the Legatee exhibited a bill in equity against the executor, setting forth that he had wasted the estate, and praying that he might give security to pay the Legacy when it should become due; and it was ordered accordingly. 1 Ch. Rep. 136, 257. See post, 4.

3. If a Legacy is devised, and no certain time of payment, and the Legatee is an infant, he shall have interest for the Legacy from the expiration of one year after the testator's death; for so long the executor shall have, that he may see whether there are any debts, and no laches shall be imputed to the infant: but if the Legatee be of full age, he shall have no interest but from the time of the demand of his Legacy. Where a Legacy is payable at a day certain, it must be paid with interest from that day. 2 Salk. 415: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1114. A person gives a Legacy charged upon land, which yields rents and profits, and there is no day of payment mentioned, the Legacy shall carry interest from the testator's death, because the land yields profit from that time: though were it charged on the personal estate, and the will mentions no time for paying it, there the Legacy bears interest only from the end of a year after the death of the testator; which is said to be the settled difference. 2 P. Wms. 26. It has been decreed in equity, that although a Legacy be devised to be paid at a certain time, it carries interest only from such time as it is demanded: it is otherwise of a debt; and in such case non-payment at the day has been held no breach, without demand and refusal. Preced. Chanc. 161. See Abr. Caf. Eq. 286. One having a Legacy given him, payable within a year, knew nothing of it till a great while afterwards, when the executor published it in the Gazette; here Chancery would allow no interest, but the bare Legacy. Preced. Chanc. 11.

4. Legacies being gratuities, and no duties, action will not lie at Common Law for the recovery of a Legacy; but remedy is to be had in the Chancery or Spiritual Court. Allen 38. The cognizance of a Legacy properly belongs to the Spiritual Courts, for such bequests were not good by the Common Law; but this is to be understood, where a Legacy is devised generally: if it is payable out of the land, or out of the profits of the land, an action on the case lies at Common Law; but the usual remedy is in Chancery. Sid. 44: 3 Salk. 223. By Holt Chief Justice, a Legatee may maintain an action of debt at Common Law against the owner of land, out of which the Legacy is to be paid; and since the statute of wills gives him a right, by consequence he shall have an action at law to recover it. 2 Salk. 415. And sometimes the Common Law takes notice of a Legacy, not directly, but in a collateral way; as where the executor promised to pay the money, if the Legatee would forbear to sue for the Legacy, this was adjudged a good consideration to ground an action; but that it would not lie for a Legacy in specie; which would be to divest the Spiritual Court of what properly belonged to their jurisdiction, by turning suits which might be brought there into actions on the case. Raym. 23 And it is now positively determined that no action at law lies for a Legacy; the Court of Chancery being the proper jurisdiction for that purpose. Deeks v. Strutt, 5 Term Rep. 690.—The reason given in this case seems to contradict the principle of another case in Cowp. 284, 9; where it was held, that if an executor, in consideration of assets in his possession, promises to pay a Legacy, an action of assumpsit lies against him in his own right.—In the first mentioned of these cases, however, no express promise was proved.—If security is given by bond to pay a Legacy, in such case an action at law is the proper remedy; by giving the bond, the Legacy is, as it were, extinct, and becomes a debt at Common Law, and the Legatee can never afterwards sue for it in the Spiritual Court. Yelv. 39. For the recovery of a debt or such like thing in action, given by way of Legacy, it is best to make the Legatee executor as to that debt, &c. or he must have a letter of attorney to sue in the executor's name. Wood's Inst. 330.

It is without question that the suit for a personal Legacy may be brought in Chancery; and if the matter has proceeded to a sentence in the Ecclesiastical Court, it is proper to go into Chancery for the executor's indemnity: where the Legatees are to give security to refund, and that Court will see money put out for children. On like principles a bill for the distribution of an intestate's personal estate is proper in Chancery, for the Spiritual Court in that case has but an ineffectual jurisdiction. See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. lib. 4. pt. 1. c. 1. § 2.

An executor being, in equity, considered as a trustee for the Legatee, with respect to his Legacy, and as a trustee in certain cases for the Next-of-kin as to the undisposed surplus, is the true ground of equitable jurisdiction in enforcing the payment of a Legacy, or distribution of personal estate. See 1 P. Wms. 544, 575.

That the jurisdiction of our Courts of Equity is, in such cases, more effective and protective of the interest of creditors and Legatees, is evident in several instances, particularly in compelling executors to give security for a Legacy payable at a future day, the executor appearing to have wasted the estate. 1 Ch. Ca. 121:—or to bring the fund into Court. 3 Bro. C. R. 365. And there are cases in which a Court of Equity will restrain proceedings in the Ecclesiastical Court for a Legacy; as where a husband is suing for a Legacy in right of his wife. See 2 Atk. 420: Toth. 114: Pre. Ch. 548.

The Spiritual Court administers redress in the case of subtraction or the withholding or detaining of Legacies, as a consequential part of their testamentary jurisdiction; but in this case the Courts of Equity exercise a concurrent jurisdiction, as incident to some other species of relief required: and as it is beneath the dignity of the King's Courts to be merely ancillary to other inferior jurisdictions, the cause, when once brought there, receives there also its full determination. See 3 Comm. 98. c. 7.

5. Where a testator gives his debtee a Legacy greater than his debt, it shall be taken in satisfaction of it: though where the Legacy is less, it shall not be deemed as any part thereof; but as a Legacy is a gift, sometimes the Legatee has been decreed both. 1 Salk. 155: 2 Salk. 508. If a greater Legacy is given by a codicil, to the same person that was Legatee in the will, it shall not be a satisfaction, unless so expressed. 1 P. Wms. 424.

Although a Legacy is to be taken as a gift, yet a man shall be intended to be just before he is kind; so that a bequest of the same sum by the debtor to the creditor shall be applied in satisfaction of the debt. Pre. Ch. 394: 2 P. Wms. 130: 3 P. Wms. 354: 1 Vez. 123:

Mosel.

Mosel. 7: See 2 P. Wms. 616.—Yet where there are assets, and the testator intended both, it may be as good equity to construe him both just and kind; and the construction of making a gift a satisfaction, has, in many cases, been carried too far. See 1 Salk. 155: 1 P. Wms. 410: 2 P. Wms. 616.

If a Legacy be less than the debt, it was never held to go in satisfaction. 2 Salk. 508: Pre. Ch. 394: 2 P. Wms. 616: 2 Vern. 478: Mosel. 295.—So if the Legacy were upon condition, or upon a contingency; for the will is intended for the Legatee's benefit; and therefore it could not be supposed that the testator would give him an uncertain recompence in satisfaction of a certain demand. Pre. Ch. 394: Salk. 508: 2 Atk. 300, 491: 2 P. Wms. 555: 2 Vez. 519.—So where the Legacy is not equally beneficial with the debt in some one particular, although it may be more so in another, as in time of payment. Pre. Ch. 236: 2 Vern. 478: 2 Atk. 300: 3 Atk. 96: 1 Bro C. R. 129, 295.—So if the thing were of a different nature, as land, it should not go in satisfaction of money, unless there was a defect of assets. 2 P. Wms. 616: Salk. 508: 3 P. Wms. 245.—So if the debt was contracted after the Legacy given; as the testator could not have it in contemplation to satisfy a debt not then in being. 2 Salk. 508: 2 P. Wms. 342: 1 P. Wms. 409: 3 P. Wms. 353.—So if the debt was upon an open or running account, so that it might not be known to the testator whether he owed any money to the Legatee or not. 1 P. Wms. 299.

Cases of this nature therefore depend upon circumstances; and where a Legacy has been decreed to go in satisfaction of a debt, it must be grounded upon some evidence, or at least a strong presumption that the testator did so intend it; for a Court of Equity ought not to hinder a man from disposing of his own as he pleases: and therefore the intention of the party is to be the rule: for where he says he gives a Legacy, the Court cannot contradict him, and say he pays a debt. See Treat. Eq. lib. 4. pt. 1. c. 1. § 5; and the notes there.

LEGATE, Legatus.] An ambassador or Pope's Nuncio. There are two sorts of Legates, a Legate à latere, and Legatus natus; the difference between whom is thus: Legatus à Latere was usually one of the Pope's family vested with the greatest authority in all ecclesiastical affairs over the whole kingdom where he was sent; and, during the time of his legation, he might determine even those appeals which had been made from thence to Rome: Legatus natus had a more limited jurisdiction, but was exempted from the authority of the Legate à latere; and he could exercise his jurisdiction in his own province. The Popes of Rome had formerly in England the archbishops of Canterbury their Legatus natus; and, upon extraordinary occasions, sent over a Legatus à latere.

LETTER OF ATTORNEY, Litera Attornati] A writing, authorising another person, who in such case is called the Attorney of the party appointing him, to do any lawful act in the stead of another: as to give seisin of lands; receive debts, or sue a third person, &c. A Letter of Attorney is either general or special. The nature of this instrument is to give the attorney the full power and authority of the maker, to accomplish the act intended to be performed: and sometimes these writings are revocable, and sometimes not so: but when they are revocable, it is usually a bare authority only; they are irrevocable when debts, &c. are assigned to another, in which case the word, irrevocably, is inserted; and the intention of them then, is to enable the assignee to receive the debt, &c. to his own use.

In cases of Letters of Attorney it was anciently held that the authority must be strictly pursued: if it be to deliver livery and seisin of lands between certain hours, and the attorney doth it before or after; or in a capital messuage, and he does it in another part of the land, &c. the act of the attorney to execute the estate shall be void. Plowd 475. But notwithstanding the ancient opinions for pursuing authorities with great strictness and exactness, yet in case of livery and seisin they have been always favourably expounded of later times, unless where it hath appeared, that the authority was not pursued at all; as if a Letter of Attorney be made to three, two cannot execute it, because they are not the parties delegated, and they do not agree with the authority. 2 Mod. Rep. 79. Where the attorney does less than the authority mentions, it is void: it is said if he doth more, it may be good for so much as he had power to do, and void for the rest; yet both these rules have divers exceptions and limitations. Vide 1 Inst. 258. Where two attornies were made jointly and severally to deliver seisin of lands, &c. and one of them delivered seisin of part of the land, and after another attorney, being tenant thereof for years, gave livery of the other part of the land: this was held good, though made at several times. 1 And. 247. And if a man make a deed of feoffment of lands in divers counties, with such a Letter of Attorney, the livery must be at several times; otherwise it cannot be made. Ibid. See 1 Leon. 192, 260.

If a Mayor and Commonalty make a feoffment of lands, and execute a Letter of Attorney to deliver seisin, the livery and seisin, after the death of the mayor, will be good, by reason the Corporation dieth not. 1 Inst. 52. In other cases, by the death of the party giving it, the power given by Letter of Attorney generally determines. A person made a Letter of Attorney to a creditor to receive all his wages and pay due from a ship, and afterwards died at sea; this authority was adjudged to be so determined, that all the rest of the creditors should have a share in his administration. Preced. Chanc. 125: 2 Vern. 391. Sailors generally make the attorney executor also. See title Navy. See further as to Letters of Attorney, Com. Dig. title Attorney (C).

LETTERS OF MARQUE, Are extraordinary Reprisals for reparation to merchants taken and despoiled by strangers at sea, grantable by the Secretaries of State, with the approbation of the King and Council; and usually in time of war, &c. Lex Mercat. 173.

The words Marque and Reprisal are used as synonimous, and signify, the latter a taking in return, the former the passing the frontiers in order to such taking. Dufresne title Marca.

As the delay of making war by the Sovereign Power of the Nation, may sometimes be detrimental to individuals who have suffered by depredations from foreign States; the laws of England have, in some respect, armed the Subject with powers to impel the prerogative of the Crown in this particular, by directing his ministers to issue Letters of Marque and Reprisal upon due demand; the prerogative of granting which is nearly related to, and plainly derived from, that of making war; (See title King;) this being indeed only an incomplete state of hostilities, and generally ending in a formal denunciation of war. These Letters are grantable by the Law of Nations, wherever the Subjects of one State are oppressed and injured by those of another; and justice is denied by that State to which the oppressor belongs. In this case, Letters of Marque and Reprisal may be obtained, in order to seize the bodies or goods of the Subjects of the offending State, until satisfaction be made, wherever they happen to be found; and in fact this custom of reprisals seems dictated by nature. The necessity however, is obvious of calling in the Sovereign Power to determine when reprisals may be made; else every private sufferer would be a judge in his own cause. In pursuance of which principle it is declared by stat. 4 Hen. 5. c. 7, that if any Subjects of the realm are oppressed, in the time of truce, by any foreigners, the King will grant Marque in due form, to all that feel themselves grieved; which form is thus directed to be observed: the sufferer must first apply to the Lord Privy Seal, and he shall make out Letters of Request under the Privy Seal; and if after such request of satisfaction made, the party required do not within convenient time make due satisfaction or restitution to the party grieved, the Lord Chancellor shall make him out Letters of Marque under the Great Seal; and by virtue of these, he may attack and seize the property of the aggressor nation, without hazard of being condemned as a robber and a pirate. See 1 Comm. c. 7. p. 258, 9.

It is observable that the above statute of Henry V. is confined to the time of a truce, wherein there is no express mention that all Marques and Reprisals shall cease. It seems that the manner of granting Letters of Marque under this statute has been long disused, as it could only be granted to persons actually grieved. But if, during a war, a Subject without any commission from the King should take an enemy's ship, the prize would not be the property of the captor, but would be one of the droits of Admiralty, and would belong to the King, or his grantee the Admiral. Carth. 399. Therefore, to encourage merchants and others to fit out privateers, or armed ships, in time of war, the Lord High Admiral or the Commissioners of the Admiralty are, from time to time, empowered by various acts of parliament to grant commissions to the owners of such ships; and the prizes captured are divided between the owners and the the captain and crew of the privateer. But the owners, before the commission is granted, shall give security to the Admiralty, to make compensation for any violation of treaties between those powers with whom the nation is at peace: And by stat. 24, Geo. 3. c. 47, they must also give security that such armed ship shall not be employed in smuggling. These commissions are now upon all occasions, as well as in the statutes, called Letters of Marque: See stats. 20 Geo. 2. c. 34: 19 Geo. 3. c. 67: 33 Geo. 3. c. 66. § 14—20.—Sometimes the Lords of the Admiralty have this authority by a proclamation from the King in Council, as was the case in December 1780, to empower them to grant Letters of Marque to seize the ships of the Dutch. See Christian's Note on 1 Comm. c. 7. ub. sup.

If a Letter of Marque wilfully and knowingly take a ship and goods belonging to another nation, not of that State against whom the commission is awarded, but of some other in amity, this amounts to a downright piracy. Rol. Abr. 430. See further title Reprisal.

LETTERS PATENT, Literæ patentes.] Sometimes called Letters overt; are writings of the King sealed with the Great Seal of England, whereby a person is enabled to do or enjoy that which otherwise he could not; and so called, because they are open with the seal affixed, and ready to be shewn for confirmation of the authority thereby given. And we read of Letters Patent to make denizens, &c. Letters Patent may be granted by common persons, but in such case they are not properly called Patentees; yet for distinction, the King's Letters Patent have been called Letters Patent Royal. See stat. 2 H. 6. c. 10. See titles Patents; Grants to the King.

LEVANT AND COUCHANT, Is a law term for cattle that have been so long in the ground of another, that they have lain down and are risen again to feed; in ancient records levantes et cubantes. When the cattle of a stranger are come into another man's ground, and have been there a good space of time, (supposed to be a day and a night,) they are said to be levant and couchant. Terms de Ley: 2 Lil. Abr. 167. Beasts of a stranger on the lord's ground may be distrained for rent, though they have not been levant and couchant; but it is otherwise if the tenant of the land is in fault in not keeping up his mounds, by reason whereof the beasts escape upon the land. Wood's Inst. 190. See title Distress I. 2.

LEVANUM, From Lat. Levare, to make lighter:] Leavened bread.

LEVARE FŒNUM, To make hay, or properly to cast it into wind-rows, in order to cock it up. Paroch. Antiq. pag. 320. Hence una levatio fœni was one day's hay-making, a service paid the lord by inferior tenants. Paroch. Antiq. 402.

LEVARI FACIAS, A writ of execution directed to the Sheriff for levying a sum of money upon a man's lands and tenements, goods and chattels, who has forfeited his recognizance. Reg. Orig. 298. This writ was given by the Common Law, before the statute West. 2. c. 18, gave the writ of elegit; and a Levari Facias commands the debt to be levied de exitibus & proficuis terræ, &c. And cattle of a stranger on the land have been held issues of the land, which is debtor. 1 Salk. 395.

On a judgment in an inferior court, and a Levari Facias, whereupon a warrant was made to levy the debt de terris et catallis, it was adjudged that the precept ought to be to levy the money de terris bonis et catallis, &c. 2 Lutw. 1410. A Levari Facias in debt lies against a parson, directed to the bishop, &c. to levy the money on his spiritual goods. 13 H. 4. 17.

There is a Levari Facias damna disseisitoribus, for the levying of damages, wherein the disseisor has formerly been condemned to the disseisee. Reg. Orig. 214. Also Levari Facias residuum debiti, to levy the remainder of a debt upon lands and tenements, or chattels of the debtor, where part has been satisfied before. Reg. Orig. 299. And a Levari Facias quando vicecomes returnavit quod non habuit emptores, commanding the sheriff to sell the goods of the debtor, which he has taken, and returned that he could not sell. Reg. Orig. 300. See title Execution.

LEUCA, A measure of land, consisting of 1500 paces. Ingulphus says, it is 2000 paces, pag. 910. In the Monastic. 1 tom. p. 313, it is 480 perches.

LEUCATA, A space of ground, as much as a mile contains. Monast. 1 tom. p. 768. And so it seems to be used in a charter of William the Conqueror to Battle Abbey. Cowell.

LEVELLUS, A level, even or upon the level. Cowell.

LEVITICAL DEGREES, See title Descent.

LEVY, Levare.] Is used in the law for to collect, or exact; as to levy money, &c. Sometimes it signifies to erect, or cast up; as to levy a ditch, &c. To levy a fine of land, is the usual term for the completing that conveyance: in ancient time, the word rere a fine, was made use of. 17 H. 6. See title Fine.

LEVYING MONEY WITHOUT CONSENT OF PARLIAMENT. No Subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm or the support of Government, but such as are imposed by his own consent, or that of his representatives in parliament. See stats. 25 Ed. 1. cc. 5, 6: 34 Ed. 1. stat. 4. c. 1: 14 Ed. 3. stat. 2. c. 1: The petition of right, 3 Car. 1. c. 1: stat. 1 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2; and this Dict. titles Liberties; Taxes.

LEVYING WAR AGAINST THE KING, See title Treason.

LEWDNESS. Open and notorious Lewdness, is an offence against religion and morality, either by frequenting houses of ill fame, which is an indictable offence, Poph. 208; or by some grossly scandalous and public indecency, for which the punishment is fine and imprisonment; and in Mich. T. 15 Car. 2, a person was indicted for open Lewdness in shewing himself naked on a balcony, and other misdemeanors, and was fined 2000 marks, imprisoned for a week, and bound to his good behaviour for three years. 1 Sid. 168. In times past, when any man granted a lease of his house, it was usual to insert an express covenant, that the tenant should not entertain any lewd woman, &c. See titles Bawdy-house; Fornication.

A temporal punishment may also in certain circumstances be inflicted for having bastard children. By stat. 18 Eliz. c. 3, two justices may take order for the punishment of the the mother and reputed father; but what that punishment shall be, is not therein ascertained, though the contemporary exposition was that a corporal punishment was intended. Dalt. J. c. 11. By stat. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4, a specific punishment, commitment to the house of correction, is inflicted on the woman only. But in both cases it seems that the penalty can only be inflicted if the bastard becomes chargeable to the parish; for otherwise the very maintenance of the child is considered as a degree of punishment. 4 Comm. c. 4. p. 65. See title Bastard II. 1.

Many offences of the incontinent kind fall properly under the jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Court; and are appropriated to it. But except those appropriated cases, the Court of King's Bench is the Custos Morum of the people; and has the superintendency of offences contrà bonos mores. 3 Burr. 1438. An information has been granted in that Court against a number of persons concerned in assigning a young girl as an apprentice to a gentleman under a pretence of learning musick, but for the purposes of prostitution. 3 Burr. 1438, &c. There is also an instance of an information for a conspiracy, granted against a Peer and several others, for enticing away a young lady from her father's house, and procuring her seduction by the Peer. 3 St. Tr. 519. And all such acts of indecency and immorality are also punishable by indictment in any criminal Court, as public misdemeanors. 4 Comm. c. 4. p. 64, in n.

LEX TALIONIS, Is juris positivi; and the taliones among the Jews were converted into pecuniary estimates, so that the price of an eye, &c. lost, was allowed to the person injured. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 12.

It does not appear that this is a principle applicable to laws of a civilized state: when it was once attempted to introduce into England the Law of Retaliation, it was intended as a punishment for such only as preferred malicious accusations against others; it being enacted by stat. 37 E. 3. c. 18, that such as preferred any suggestions to the King's Great Council, should put in sureties of taliation; that is, to incur the same pain that the other should have had in case the suggestion were found untrue. But after one year's experience, this punishment of taliation was rejected, and imprisonment adopted in its stead. Stat. 38 E. 3. c. 9. See 4 Comm. c. 1. p. 12, 14.

L I B E L:

LIBELLUS FAMOSUS.] A contumely or reproach, published to the defamation of the Government, of a Magistrate, or of a private person. Com. Dig. title Libel (A).

It is also defined to be, a malicious defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, or by signs, pictures, &c. tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and thereby exposing him to public hatred, contempt, and ridicule. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 1: Bac. Abr. title Libel: 5 Mod. 165: 5 Co. 121, 5.

Libels, says Blackstone, taken in their largest and most extensive sense, signify any writings, pictures, or the like, of an immoral or illegal tendency. Considered particularly as offences against the public peace, they are malicious defamations of any person, and especially a Magistrate, made public by either printing, writing, signs, or pictures, in order to provoke him to wrath, or expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule. The direct tendency of these Libels is the breach of the public peace, by stirring up the objects of them to revenge, and perhaps to bloodshed. 4 Comm. c. 11. p. 150: 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 125.

From the different modes in which a Libel may be conveyed, a distinction has been made between a Libel in scriptis, and one sine scriptis; i. e. in writing, or without writing. 3 Inst. 174.

I. A Libel is the greatest degree of scandal, and does not die like words which may be forgot, an action for which is confined to the person; but the cause of action for scandal in a Libel survives. 5 Rep. 125.

This species of defamation is usually termed written scandal; and thereby receives an aggravation, in that it is presumed to have been entered upon with coolness and deliberation; and to continue longer and propagate wider and farther than any other scandal. 5 Rep. 125: Bac. Abr. title Libel (A).

The important distinction between Libels and words spoken was fully established in the case of Villers v. Mousley, 2 Wils. 403. viz. That whatever renders a man ridiculous, or lowers him in the esteem and opinion of the world, amounts to a Libel; though the same expressions, if spoken, would not have been defamation: as, to call a person in writing an itchy old toad, was held in that case to be a Libel; although as words spoken they would not have been actionable. And on this ground a young lady of quality in the year 1793 recovered 4000*l.* damages for reflections upon her chastity, published in a news-paper, although she could have brought no action for the grossest verbal aspersions that could have been uttered against her honour. An action for a Libel also differs from an action for words in this particular; that the former may be brought at any time within six years, and any damages will entitle the plaintiff to full costs. Christien's note on 1 Comm. p. 125, 6. To print of any person that he is a swindler, is a Libel and actionable. 1 Term. Rep. 748.

All Libels are made against private men, or magistrates, and public persons; and those against magistrates deserve the greatest punishment: if a Libel be made against a private man, it may excite the person libelled, or his friends, to revenge and break the peace; and if against a magistrate, it is not only a breach of the peace, but a scandal to government, and stirs up sedition. 5 Rep. 121.

Where a writing inveighs against mankind in general, or against a particular order of men, this is no Libel; it must descend to particulars and individuals to make it a Libel. Trin. 11 W. 3. B. R. But a general reflection on the Government is a Libel, though no particular person is reflected on: and the writing against a known law is held to be criminal. 4 St. Tr. 672, 903. According to Holt C. J. scandalous matter is not necessary to make a Libel; it is enough if the defendant induces an ill opinion to be had of the plaintiff, &c. And if a man speak scandalous words, unless they are put in writing, he is not guilty of a Libel; for the nature of a Libel consisteth in putting the infamous matter into writing. 2 Salk. 417: 3 Salk. 226. A defamatory writing, expressing only one or two letters of a man's name, if it be in such a manner, that from what goes before and follows after, it must be understood, by the natural construction of the whole, to signify and point at such a particular person, is as properly a Libel as if the whole name were expressed at large. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 5. For, adds Hawkins, it brings the utmost contempt upon the law, to suffer its justice to be eluded by such trifling evasions: and it is a ridiculous absurdity to say that a writing which is understood by every the meanest capacity cannot possibly be understood by a Judge and Jury. On application for an information for this offence, some friend to the party complaining should in such case state by affidavit the having read the Libel, and that he understands and believes it to mean the party. 3 Bac. Abr. in n. And in the case of actions for Libels by signs or pictures, it seems necessary always to show by proper inuendoes and averments of the defendant's meaning, the import and application of the scandal, and that some special damage has followed, otherwise it cannot appear that such Libel by picture was understood to be levelled at the plaintiff, or that it was attended with any actionable consequences. 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 126.

Though a private person or magistrate be dead at the time of making the Libel, yet it is punishable; as it tends to a breach of the peace. Hob. 215: 5 Co. 125: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 1: 4 Term Rep. 126; 129 in n. But an indictment for publishing libellous matter reflecting on the memory of a dead person, not alleging that it was done with a design to bring contempt on the family of the deceased, and to stir up the hatred of the King's Subjects against them, and to excite his relations to a breach of the peace, cannot be supported; and judgment was in this case accordingly arrested. R. v. Topham, 4 Term Rep. 126. See R. v. Critchley, 4 Term Rep. 129, in n.

A private Libel for a private matter, as a letter scandalizing a person courting a woman, is indictable, and punishable by fine. Sid. 270. No writing is esteemed a Libel, unless it reflect upon some particular person; and a writing full of obscene ribaldry, is not punishable by any prosecution at Common Law; but the author may be bound to the good behaviour, as a person of evil fame. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 9. It was so agreed in Read's Case, 1 Mod. 142; but in the case of the K. v. Curl, Mich. 1 Geo. 2, for publishing an obscene book, the court were unanimous that it is a temporal offence, and that Read's case was not law. Stra. 788, 834: See also 4 Burr. 2527.

Printing or writing may be libellous, though the scandal is not directly charged, but obliquely and ironically; and where a writing, pretending to recommend to one the characters of several great men for his imitation, instead of taking notice of what they are generally famous for, pitches on such qualities only which their enemies charge them with the want of; as by proposing such a one to be imitated for his learning, who is known to be a good soldier, but an illiterate man, &c. this will amount to a Libel. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 4.

The petition of the Seven Bishops in the reign of King James II. against the King's declaration, setting forth, that it was founded on a dispensing power, which had been declared illegal in parliament, &c. was called a seditious Libel against the King: and they were committed to the Tower; but being after tried at bar, were acquitted. 3 Mod. 212. See State Trials. The printing of a petition to a committee of parliament, (which would be a Libel against the party complained of, were it made for any other purpose,) and delivering copies thereof to the members of the committee, is not the publication of a Libel, being justified by the order and course of proceedings in parliament. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 8.

Scandalous matter in legal proceedings by bill, petition, &c. in a court of justice amounts not to a Libel, if the court hath jurisdiction of the cause. Dyer, 285: 4 Rep. 14. But he who delivers a paper full of reflections on any person, in nature of a petition to a committee, to any other persons except the members of parliament who have to do with it, may be punished as the publisher of a Libel. 1 Hawk. c. 73. § 8. And by the better opinion, a person cannot justify the printing any papers which import a crime in another, to instruct counsel, &c. but it will be a Libel. Sid. 414.

An order made by a Corporation and entered in their books, stating, that A. B. (against whom a jury had found a verdict with large damages, in an action for a malicious prosecution for perjury, which verdict had been confirmed in C. B.) was actuated by motives of public public justice in preferring the indictment, is a Libel reflecting on the administration of public justice, for which the Court of K. B. will grant an information against the members making the order. 2 Term Rep. 199. But it is no Libel to assign on the books of a Quakers meeting their reasons for expelling a member. 1 Black. Rep. 386.

II. The communication of a Libel to any one person is a publication in the eye of the law; Moor 813; and therefore the sending an abusive private letter to a man is as much a Libel as if it were openly printed; for it equally tends to a breach of the peace; 2 Brownl. 151, 7: 12 Rep. 35: Hob. 215: Poph. 139: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 11: 4 Comm. c. 11. p. 150: Bac. Abr. title Libel B (2); in which latter book it is stated that this was a matter of doubt; but a case is mentioned where an information was granted under such circumstances; and at all events it is an offence against the King's peace, punishable by indictment; and if copies of it are afterwards dispersed, it aggravates the crime, or rather makes it a new crime, for which the party may have an action. Poph. 35: Hob. 62. Writing a letter to a man, and abusing him for his public charities, &c. is a libellous act, punishable by indictment. Hob. 215.

In the making of Libels, if one man dictates, and another writes a Libel, both are guilty; for the writing after another shews his approbation of what is contained in the Libel; and the first reducing a Libel into writing may be said to be the making it, but not the composing: if one repeats, another writes, and a third approves what is written, they are all makers of the Libel; because all persons who concur to an unlawful act are guilty. 5 Mod. 167. The making a Libel is the genus; and composing and contriving is one species; writing, a second species; and procuring to be written, a third; and one may be found guilty of writing only, &c. 2 Salk. 419, &c. But observe, a mere writing, without a publication, was not in question in Salkeld. It is conceived that for the mere writing of a Libel, not published, no action can be maintained, nor prosecution legally supported.

If one writes a copy of a Libel, and does not deliver it to others, the writing is no publication: but it has been adjudged, that the copying a Libel, without authority, is writing a Libel, and he that thus writes it, is a contriver; and that he who hath a written copy of a known Libel, if it is found upon him, this shall be evidence of the publication; but if such Libel be not publicly known, then the mere having a copy is not a publication. 2 Salk. 417: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1122. Writing a copy of a Libel is writing of a Libel, as it has the same pernicious consequence; and if the law were otherwise, men might write copies, and print them with impunity. 2 Salk. 419. And when a Libel appears under a man's own hand-writing, and no author is known, he is taken in the manner, and it turns the proof upon him; and if he cannot produce the composer, it is hard to find that he is not the very man. Ibid. If one reads a Libel, or hears it read, and laughs at it, it is not a publishing; for before he reads or hears it read, he cannot know it to be a Libel: though if he afterwards reads or repeats it, or any part thereof, in the hearing of others, it is a publication of it: yet if part of it be repeated in mirth without any malicious purpose of defamation, it is said to be no offence. 9 Rep. 59: Moor 862. Every one convicted of publishing a Libel ought to be esteemed the contriver or procurer: the procurer and writer of a Libel have been held to be both contrivers; also he who procures another to publish it, and the publisher, are both publishers: and the contriver, procurer, and publisher of a Libel, are punishable by fine, imprisonment, pillory, or other corporal punishment, at the discretion of the court, according to the heinousness of the crime, &c. Moor. 627: 5 Rep. 125: 3 Inst. 174: 3 Cro. 17. See 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73.

When any man finds a Libel, if it be against a private person, he ought to burn it, or deliver it to a magistrate; and where it concerns a magistrate, he should deliver it presently to a magistrate. 5 Rep. 125. If a Libel be found in a house, the master cannot be punished for framing, printing, and publishing it; but it is said he may be indicted for having it, and not delivering it to a magistrate; 1 Vent. 31; or it may in some cases be considered as evidence of his being the author or publisher. 2 Salk. 418.

The sale of the Libel by a servant in a shop, is primâ facie evidence of publication, in a prosecution against the master; and is sufficient for conviction, unless contradicted by contrary evidence showing that he was not privy, nor in any way assenting to it. 4 Term Rep. 126: 5 Burr. 2686, 7: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 10, in n.

Proof that the defendant gave a bond to the Stamp-office for the duties on the advertisements in a news-paper, under stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 50. § 10; and had occasionally applied at the Stamp-office respecting the duties, is evidence that he is the publisher. 4 Term Rep. 126.

III. It is immaterial, on a criminal prosecution, with respect to the essence of a Libel, whether the matter of it be true or false; because it equally tends to a breach of the peace; and the provocation, not the falsity, is the thing to be punished criminally: though doubtless the falsehood of it may aggravate its guilt and enhance its punishment. In a civil action, a Libel must appear to be false as well as scandalous: for if the charge be true the plaintiff has received no private injury, and has no ground to demand a compensation for himself, whatever offence it may be against the public peace: and therefore upon a civil action, the truth of the accusation may be pleaded in bar of the suit. But in a criminal prosecution, the tendency which all Libels have to create animosities and to disturb the public peace is the whole that the law considers. And therefore in such prosecutions, the only points to be enquired into are, first the making or publishing of a book or writing; and secondly, whether the matter be criminal; and if both these points are against the defendant, the offence against the Public is complete. 4 Comm. c. 11. p. 150, 1: See post. IV.

It seems to be clearly agreed, that, in an indictment or criminal prosecution for a Libel, the party cannot justify that the contents thereof are true, or that the person upon whom it is made had a bad reputation; since the greater appearance there is of truth in any malicious invective, so much the more provoking it is: for, as Ld. Coke observes, in a settled state of government the party grieved ought to complain for every injury done him, in the ordinary course of law; and not by any means to revenge himself by the odious course of libelling or otherwise. Bac. Abr. tit. Libel (A 5.) cites 5 Co. 125: Hob. 253: Moor 627: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73.

It is termed libellus famosus seu infamatoria scripta, and from its pernicious tendency has been held a public offence at the Common Law: for men not being able to bear the having their errors exposed to public view, were found by experience to revenge themselves on those who made sport with their reputations, from whence arose duels and breaches of the peace: and hence written scandal has been held in the greatest detestation, and has received the utmost discouragement in the courts of justice. Lamb. Sax. Law, 64: Bract. lib. 3. c. 36: 3 Inst. 174: 5 Co. 125: cited Bac. Abr. tit. Libel ad init.

The above authorities have been quoted, principally to obviate an error too generally received, that the late venerable Chief Justice of the King's Bench (the Earl of Mansfield) was the first who broached the doctrine, the greater the truth the greater the Libel. A maxim which appears to be as well founded in ancient authority, as it is in sound reason, so far as relates to criminal prosecutions; and the adoption of it cannot, by any reasoning or honest man, be thought to reflect disgrace upon the high and estimable character of that upright and respectable Judge.

But although it has been held, at least for these two centuries, that the truth of a Libel is no justification in a criminal prosecution, yet in many instances it is considered as an extenuation of the offence; and the Court of King's Bench has laid down this general rule: viz. that it will not grant an Information for a Libel, unless the prosecutor who applies for it makes an affidavit, asserting directly and pointedly that he is innocent of the charge imputed to him. But this rule may be dispensed with, if the person libelled resides abroad; or if the imputations of a Libel are general and indefinite; or if it is a charge against the prosecutor for language which he has held in parliament. Dougl. 271 (284); 372 (388): but in this latter case, a member cannot justify publishing the speech made by him in parliament, in the public newspapers, if it contain libellous matter. Earl of Abingdon's Ca. 6 Term Rep.

Where on application for an information the truth of the Libel is not denied, the court (except in the particular instances above mentioned) will leave the injury to be remedied in the ordinary course of justice by action or indictment. Stra. 498. See post. IV. But the Court will not grant this extraordinary remedy by information, nor should a Grand Jury find an indictment, unless the offence be of such signal enormity, that it may reasonably be construed to have a tendency to disturb the peace and harmony of the community. In such a case the public are justly placed in the character of an offended prosecutor, to vindicate the common right of all, though violated only in the person of an individual: for the malicious publication of even truth itself cannot in policy be suffered to interrupt the tranquillity of any well-ordered Society. This is a principle so rational and pure that it cannot be tainted by the vulgar odium which has accompanied the derivation of the doctrine from the tyranny of the Star-chamber: the adoption of it by the worst of courts can never weaken its authority; and without it all the comforts of Society might with impunity be hourly endangered or destroyed. Vide Law of Libels: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § 6, in n.

There are authorities that truth is not a justification even in an action for a Libel; and a very learned writer seems to doubt whether such a plea would now be admitted by the Courts, if the accusation in the Libel did not amount to an indictable offence. 3 Woodd. 182. It seems however that the contrary is the prevailing opinion; and that in every action for a Libel, if specific instances can be stated upon the record so as to support the general charge of the Libel, the courts would determine them to be a sufficient justification of the defendant. 1 Term Rep. 748.

It is not competent to a defendant charged with having published a Libel, to prove that a paper, similar to that for the publication of which he is prosecuted, was published on a former occasion by other persons who have never been prosecuted for it. 5 Term Rep. 436.

IV. The punishment of Libellers for either making, repeating, printing, or publishing the Libel is fine, and such corporal punishment (as imprisonment, pillory, &c.) as the Court in its discretion shall inflict; regarding the quantity of the offence, and the quality of the offender. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 73. § ult.

If a printer print a Libel against a private person, he may be indicted and punished for it; and so may he who prints a Libel against a magistrate, and much more one who does it against the King and State: nor can a person in such a case excuse himself by saying they were dying speeches, or the words of dying men; for a man may at his death justify his villainy; and he who publishes it is punishable: and it is no excuse for the printing or publishing a Libel, to say that he did it in the way of trade, or to maintain his family. 1 St. Tr. 982, 986.

Also if booksellers, &c. publish or sell Libels, though they know not the contents of them, they are punishable. It has been resolved, that where persons write, print, or sell, any pamphlets, scandalizing the public, or any private persons, such libellous books may be seized, and the persons punished by law: and all persons exposing any books to sale, reflecting on the Government, may be punished: also writers of news, (though not scandalous, seditious, or reflecting on the Government, if they write false news,) are indictable. 2 St. Tr. 477. See Scandalum magnatum; False News.

One was indicted for a Libel in scandalizing the King's witnesses, and reflecting on the justice of the nation, and had judgment of the pillory and fine. 3 St. Tr. 50. A person for libelling the Lord Chancellor Bacon, affirming that he had done injustice, and other scandalous matter, was sentenced to pay 1000*l.* fine, to ride on a horse with his face to the tail from the Fleet to Westminster, with his fault written on his head, to acknowledge his offence in all the Courts at Westminster, stand in the pillory, and that one of his ears should be cut off at Westminster, and the other in Cheapside, and to suffer imprisonment during life. Poph. 135. One who exhibited a Libel against a Lord Chief Justice, directed to the King, calling the Chief Justice, traitor, perjured judge, &c. had judgment to stand in the pillory, was fined 1000 marks, and bound to good behaviour during life. Cro. Car. 125.

With regard to Libels in general, there are, as in many other cases, two remedies; one by indictment or information, and the other by action. The former for the public offence; for, as has been repeatedly remarked, every Libel has a tendency to the breach of the peace, by provoking the person libelled to break it; which offence, we have seen, is the same in point of law, whether the matter contained be true or false; and therefore it is that the defendant, on an indictment for publishing a Libel, is not allowed to allege the truth of it by way of justification. But in the remedy by action on the case, which is to repair the party in damages for the injury done him, the defendant may, as for words spoken, justify the truth of the facts, and show that the plaintiff has received no injury at all. The chief excellence therefore of a civil action for a Libel consists in this, that it not only affords a reparation for the injury sustained, but it is a full vindication of the innocence of the person traduced. See 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 125, 6, & n.

It hath been held, that writing a seditious Libel is not an actual breach of the peace; and that a member of parliament writing such a Libel, is entitled to his privilege from being arrested for the same. 2 Wilf. 159.

In informations and law proceedings, there are two ways of describing a Libel; by the sense, and by the words: the first is cujus tenor sequitur, and the second quae sequitur in haec Anglicana verba, &c. in which the description is by particular words, and whereof every word is a mark; so that if there is any variance, it is fatal: in the other description by the sense, it is not material to be very exact in the words, because the matter is described by the sense of them. 2 Salk. 660. See Indictment; Information; Pleading.

The declaration for a Libel must lay it to be, "of and concerning the plaintiff," otherwise there can be no judgment. 2 Strange 934.

It has been frequently determined, that in the trial of an indictment for a Libel the only questions for the consideration of the Jury are the fact of publishing, and the truth of the inuendoes: that is, the truth of the meaning and sense of the passages of the Libel, as stated and averred in the record; whether the matter be or be not a Libel is a question of law for the consideration of the Court. 3 Term Rep. 428. But see the stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 60; and this Dictionary, title Jury IV. 2.

When a person is brought before the Court to receive judgment for a Libel, his conduct subsequent to his conviction may be taken into consideration, either by way of aggravation or mitigation of his punishment. 3 Term Rep. 432.

In all the instances where blasphemous, immoral, treasonable, schismatical, seditious, or scandalous Libels are punished by the English law, some with a greater, others with a less, degree of severity, the Liberty of the Press, properly understood, is by no means infringed or violated. THE LIBERTY OF THE PRESS is, indeed, essential to the nature of a Free State; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications; and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter, when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public: to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the Press: but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity. To subject the press to the restrictive power of a Licenser, as was formerly done both before and since the Revolution, is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man; and make him the arbitrary and infallible Judge of all controverted points in Learning, Religion, and Government. But to punish, as the law does at present, any dangerous or offensive writings, which, when published, shall on a fair and impartial trial be adjudged of a pernicious tendency, is necessary for the preservation of Peace and Good Order, of Government and Religion, the only solid foundations of Civil Liberty. Thus, the will of individuals is still left free; the abuse only of that free-will is the object of legal punishment. Neither is any restraint hereby laid upon freedom of thought or inquiry: liberty of private sentiment is still left. The disseminating or making public of bad sentiments, destructive of the ends of Society, is the crime which Society corrects. A man (says a fine writer on this subject) may be allowed to keep poisons in his closet, but not publicly to vend them as cordials. And to this we may add, that the only plausible argument heretofore used for the restraining of the just freedom of the press, "that it was necessary to prevent the daily abuse of it," will entirely lose its force when it is shown, (by a seasonable exertion of the laws,) that the press cannot be abused to any bad purpose, without incurring a suitable punishment; whereas it can never be used to any good one, when under the controul of an Inspector. So true it will be found, that to censure the licentiousness, is to maintain the liberty of the Press. 4 Comm. c. 11, ad fin.

The above observations deserve the serious attention of every Juryman, who wishes well to the Constitution and happiness of his country; to them we shall only add the remark of another celebrated writer on this subject. —The danger of such unbounded liberty, (of unlicensed printing,) and the danger of bounding it, have produced a problem in the science of Government, which human understanding seems hitherto unable to solve. If nothing may be published but what civil authority shall have previously approved, Power must always be the standard of Truth: if every dreamer of innovations may propagate his projects, there can be no settlement; if every murmurer at Government may diffuse discontent, there can be no peace; and if every sceptic in theology may teach his follies, there can be no religion. The remedy against these evils is to punish the Authors; for it is yet allowed that every Society may punish, though not prevent, the publication of opinions which that Society shall think pernicious. But this punishment, though it may crush the author, promotes the book; and it seems not more reasonable to leave the right of printing unrestrained, because writers may afterwards be censured, than it would be to sleep with doors unbolted, because by our laws we can hang a thief. Johnson, in vitâ Milton.

LIBEL, in the Spiritual Court, from libellus, a little book: the original Declaration of any action in the civil law. See stat. 2 E. 6. c. 13.

If upon a Libel for any ecclesiastical matter, the defendant make a surmise in B. R. to have a prohibition, and such surmise be insufficient, the other party may shew shew it to the Court, and the Judges will discharge it. 1 Leon. 10, 128. The Libel used in ecclesiastical proceedings, consists of three parts. 1. The major proposition, which shews a just cause of the petition. 2. The narration, or minor proposition. 3. The conclusion, or conclusive petition, which conjoins both propositions, &c. 3 Comm 100.

LIBER NIGER, See Black-book.

LIBERA, A livery or delivery of so much grass or corn to a customary tenant, who cut down or prepared the said grass or corn, and received some part or small portion of it as a reward or gratuity. Cowell.

LIBERA BATELLA. A free boat. Right of fishing. Plac. in itin. ap. Cestr. 14 H. 7.

LIBERA CHASEA HABENDA, A judicial writ granted to a person for a free chase belonging to his manor; after proof made by inquiry of a Jury, that the same of right belongs to him. Reg. Orig. 36.

LIBERAM LEGEM, amittere liberam legem, is to become infamous, and not to be accounted liber et legalis homo. See titles Battle; Champion.

LIBERA PISCARIA, A free fishery, which being granted to one, he hath a property in the fish, &c. 2 Salk. 637. See title Fish, Fisheries, and Fishing.

LIBER TAURUS. A free bull. Norf. 16 Ed. 1.

LIBERA WARA. See Wara.

LIBERATE, A writ that lies for the payment of a yearly pension or sum of money granted under the Great Seal, and directed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, &c. for that purpose. In another sense it is a writ to the Sheriff of a county for the delivery of possession of lands and goods extended, or taken upon the forfeiture of a recognisance. Also a writ issuing out of the Chancery directed to a gaoler for delivery of a prisoner that hath put in bail for his appearance. F. N. B. 132: 4 Inst. 116. This writ is most commonly used for delivery of goods, &c. on an extent; and by the extent the conusee of a recognisance hath not any absolute interest in the goods, until the Liberate. 2 Lil. 169. It has been adjudged, that where an extent is upon a statute-merchant, there needs no Liberate, for the Sheriff may deliver all in execution without it; but where an extent is upon a statute staple, or a recognisance, there must be a return made of such an extent, and then a Liberate before there can be a delivery in execution. 3 Salk. 159. See titles Extent; Execution.

LIBERATIO, Money, meat, drink, clothes, &c. yearly given and delivered by the Lord to his domestic servants. Blount.

LIBERTAS ECCLESIASTICA. This is a frequent phrase in our old writers, to signify church liberty, or ecclesiastical immunities; the right of investiture extorted from our Kings by force of papal power, was at first the only thing challenged by the clergy, as their Libertas ecclesiastica: but by degrees, under weak princes and prevailing factions, under the title of 'church liberty,' they contended for a freedom of their persons and possessions from all secular power and jurisdiction, as appears by the canons and decrees of the Council held by Boniface, Archbishop of Canterbury, at Merton, A. D. 1258, and at London, A. D. 1260, &c. Cowell.—See Lord Littleton's Hist. of Hen. II. and Robertson's Hist. of Emp. C. V.

LIBERTATE PROBANDA, An ancient writ which lay for such as, being demanded for villeins, offered to prove themselves free; directed to the Sheriff that he should take security of them for the proving of their freedom before the Justices of assise, and that in the mean time they should be unmolested. F. N. B. 77. See titles Tenures; Villein.

LIBERTATIBUS ALLOCANDIS, A writ lying for a citizen or burgess, impleaded contrary to his liberty, to have his privilege allowed. Reg. Orig. 262. And if any claim a special liberty to be impleaded within a city or borough, and not elsewhere, there may be a special writ de Libertatibus allocandis, to permit the burgesses to use their liberties, &c. These writs are of several forms, and may be used by a Corporation, or by any single person, as the case shall happen. New Nat. Br. 509, 510. The Barons of the Cinque Ports, &c. may sue forth such writs, if they are delayed to have their liberties allowed them. Ibid.

LIBERTATIBUS EXIGENDIS IN ITINERE, An ancient writ whereby the King commands the Justices in Eyre to admit of an attorney for the defence of another man's liberty. Reg. Orig. 19.

LIBERTIES or FRANCHISES These are synonimous terms, and their definition is, a royal privilege, or branch of the King's prerogative, subsisting in the hands of a Subject. The kinds of them are various, and almost infinite. See title Franchise.

A LIBERTY. A privilege held by grant or prescription, by which men enjoy some benefit beyond the ordinary Subject. Bract.

LIBERTY,

In its most general signification, is said to be a power to do as one thinks fit; unless restrained by the Law of the land: and it is well observed, that human nature is ever an advocate for this Liberty; it being the gift of God to man in his creation; therefore every thing is desirous of it, as a sort of restitution to its primitive state. Fortesc. 96. It is upon that account the laws of England in all cases favour Liberty, and which is accounted very precious, not only in respect of the profit which every one obtains by his Liberty, but also in respect of the public. 2 Lil. Abr. 169.

According to Montesquieu, Liberty consists principally in not being compelled to do any thing which the law does not require; because we are governed by civil laws, and therefore we are free, living under those laws. Spirit of Laws, lib. 26. c. 20.

The absolute Rights of Man, considered as a free agent, endowed with discernment to know good from evil, and with power of choosing those measures which appear to him to be most desirable, are usually summed up in one general appellation, and denominated The Natural Liberty of Mankind. This Natural Liberty consists properly in a power of acting as one thinks fit, without any restraint or controul, unless by the law of nature; being a right inherent in us by birth, and one of the gifts of God to man at his creation, when he endowed him with the faculty of free will. 1 Comm. c. 1.

But every man, when he enters into Society, gives up a part of his Natural Liberty, as the price of so valuable a purchase; and, in consideration of receiving the advantages of mutual commerce, obliges himself to conform form to those laws which the Community has thought proper to establish. This species of legal obedience and conformity, is infinitely more desirable than that wild and savage Liberty which is sacrificed to obtain it. For no man, who considers a moment, would wish to retain the absolute and uncontrouled power of doing whatever he pleases; the consequence of which is, that every other man would also have the same power; and then there would be no security to individuals in any of the enjoyments of life. See Mont. Spirit of Laws, lib. 11. c. 3.

Political or Civil Liberty, therefore, which is that of a member of Society, is no other than Natural Liberty, so far restrained by human laws, and no farther, as is necessary and expedient for the general advantage of the Public. 1 Comm. c. 1. p. 125.

Hence we may collect that the Law, which restrains a man from doing mischief to his fellow-citizens, though it diminishes the Natural, increases the Civil, Liberty of mankind: but that every wanton and causeless restraint of the will of the Subject, whether practised by a Monarch, a Nobility, or a Popular Assembly, is a degree of tyranny: nay, that even laws themselves, whether made with or without our consent, if they regulate and constrain our conduct in matters of mere indifference without any good end in view, are regulations destructive of Liberty; whereas, if any public advantage can arise from observing such precepts, the controul of our private inclinations, in one or two particular points, will conduce to preserve our general freedom in others of more importance, by supporting that state of Society which alone can secure our independence. So that Laws, when prudently framed, are by no means subversive, but rather introductive of Liberty; for where there is no Law there is no Freedom. Locke on Gov. part 2. § 57. But then, on the other hand, that constitution or form of Government, that system of laws, is alone calculated to maintain Civil Liberty, which leaves the Subject entire master of his own conduct, except in those points wherein the public good requires some direction or restraint. 1 Comm. 125, 6.

The above definition of the learned commentator is admitted by his latest editor to be clear, distinct, and rational, as far as relates to Civil Liberty; in the definition of which, however, he adds, it ought to be understood, or rather expressed, that the restraints introduced by the law should be equal to all; or as much so as the nature of things will admit. 1 Comm. 126, n.

Political Liberty is distinguished by Mr. Christian from Civil Liberty, and he defines it to be, the security with which from the constitution, form, and nature, of the established Government, the Subjects enjoy Civil Liberty. No ideas, continues he, are more distinguishable than those of Civil and Political Liberty; yet they are generally confounded; and the latter cannot yet claim an appropriate name. The learned Judge (Blackstone) uses Political and Civil Liberty indiscriminately; but it would perhaps be convenient uniformly to use those terms in the respective senses here suggested, or to have some fixed specific denominations of ideas which, in their natures, are so widely different. The last species of Liberty has probably more than the rest, engaged the attention of Mankind, and particularly of the People of England. Civil Liberty, which is nothing more than the impartial administration of equal and expedient laws, they have long enjoyed nearly to as great an extent as can be expected under any human establishment; and under a King who has no power to do wrong, yet all the prerogatives to do good, with the two Houses of Parliament, the people of England have a firm reliance that this Civil Liberty is secure, and that they shall retain and transmit its blessings, and those of Political Liberty also, to the latest posterity. See 1 Comm. 126, n.

There is another common notion of Liberty, which is nothing more than a freedom from confinement. This is a part of Civil Liberty, but it being the most important part, as a man in a gaol can have but the exercise and enjoyment of few rights, it is κατ' ἐξοχὴν, called Liberty.

The different definitions of the term Liberty, here given and commented upon, should not be thought tautologous or uninteresting; since it is a word which it is of the utmost importance to mankind that they should clearly comprehend; for though a genuine spirit of Liberty is the noblest principle that can animate the heart of Man, yet Liberty, in all times, has been the clamour of men of profligate lives and desperate fortunes: Falsò Libertatis vocabulum obtendi ab iis, qui, privatim degeneres, in publicum exitiosi, nihil spei nisi per discordias habeant. Tac. Ann. 11. c. 17.

The idea and practice of this Political or Civil Liberty flourish in their highest vigour in these kingdoms; where it falls little short of perfection, and can only be lost or destroyed by the folly or demerits of its owners: the Legislature, and of course the laws of England, being particularly adapted to the preservation of this inestimable blessing, even in the meanest Subject. 1 Comm. 126, 7.

The absolute rights of every Englishman, (which, taken in a political and extensive sense, are usually called their Liberties,) as they are founded on nature and reason, so they are coeval with our form of Government, though subject at times to fluctuate and change; their establishment, excellent as it is, being still human. At some times we have seen them depressed by overbearing and tyrannical princes: at others, so luxuriant as even to tend to anarchy, a worse state than tyranny itself; as any government is better than none at all. But the vigour of our free constitution has always delivered the nation from these embarrassments; and as soon as the convulsions consequent on the struggle have been over, the balance of our Rights and Liberties has settled to its proper level; and their fundamental articles have been, from time to time, asserted in Parliament as often as they were thought to be in danger.

First, By the Great Charter of Liberties, which was obtained, sword in hand, from King John; and afterwards, with some alterations, confirmed in Parliament by King Henry III. his son; which Charter contained very few new grants; but as Sir Edward Coke observes, (2 Inst. proëm.) was for the most part declaratory of the principal grounds of the fundamental laws of England.— Afterwards by the statute called Confirmatio Cartarum, 25 Ed. 1, whereby the Great Charter is directed to be allowed as the Common Law: all judgments contrary to it are declared void; copies of it are ordered to be sent to all cathedral churches, and read twice a year to the people; and sentence of excommunication is directed to be be as constantly denounced against all those who by word, deed, or counsel, act contrary thereto, or in any degree infringe it. Next, by a multitude of subsequent corroborating statutes from Edw. I. to Henry IV; of which the following are the most forcible.

Stat. 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 4. None shall be taken by petition or suggestion made to the King or his Council, unless it be by indictment of lawful people of the neighbourhood, or by process made by writ original at the Common Law. And none shall be put out of his franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer, and forejudged by course of law; and if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed and holden for none.

Stat. 42 Ed. 3. c. 3. No man shall be put to answer without presentment before Justices, or matter of record of due process, or writ original, according to the ancient law of the land. And if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be void in law, and held for error.

After a long interval these Liberties were still further confirmed by The Petition of Right; which was a parliamentary declaration of the Liberties of the people, assented to by King Charles I. in the beginning of his reign. This was closely followed by the still more ample concessions made by that unhappy Prince to his Parliament; (particularly the dissolution of the Star-chamber, by stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10;) before the fatal rupture between them; and by the many salutary laws, particularly the Habeas Corpus Act, passed under King Charles II.

To these succeeded The Bill of Rights, or Declaration delivered by the Lords and Commons to the Prince and Princess of Orange, February 13, 1688; and afterwards enacted in Parliament, when they became King and Queen; which, as peculiarly interesting, is here inserted at length.

Stat. 1 Wil. & Mar. st. 2. c. 2. § 1. Whereas the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, assembled at Westminster, representing all the Estates of the People of this realm, did upon the 13th of February 1688, present unto their Majesties, then Prince and Princess of Orange, a declaration, containing that,

The said Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, being assembled in a full and free representative of this nation, for the vindicating their ancient rights and liberties, DECLARE,

That the pretended power of suspending of laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of Parliament, is illegal;

That the pretended power of dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, as it hath been assumed and exercised of late, is illegal;

That the commission for erecting the late Court of Commissioners for ecclesiastical causes, and all other commissions and courts of like nature, are illegal and pernicious;

That levying money for or to the use of the Crown, by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal;

That it is the right of the Subjects to petition the King; and all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning, are illegal;

That the raising or keeping a standing army within the kingdom in time of peace, unless it be with consent of Parliament, is against law;

That the Subjects which are Protestants may have arms for their defence suitable to their conditions, and as allowed by law;

That election of members of Parliament ought to be free;

That the freedom of speech, and debates or proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place out of Parliament;

That excessive bail ought not to be required, nor excessive fines imposed, nor cruel and unusual punishments inflicted;

That Jurors ought to be duly impanelled and returned, and Jurors which pass upon men in trials for high treason ought to be freeholders;

That all grants and promises of fines and forfeitures of particular persons before conviction, are illegal and void;

And for redress of all grievances, and for the amending, strengthening, and preserving of the laws, Parliaments ought to be held frequently;

And they do claim, demand, and insist upon all and singular the premises, as their undoubted rights and liberties; and that no declarations, judgments, doings, or proceedings, to the prejudice of the People in any of the said premises, ought in any wise to be drawn hereafter into consequence or example:

Sect. 6. All and singular the Rights and Liberties asserted and claimed in the said Declaration are the true, ancient, and indubitable Rights and Liberties of the People of this Kingdom, and so shall be esteemed, allowed, adjudged, and taken to be; and all the particulars aforesaid shall be firmly holden as they are expressed in the said Declaration; and all officers shall serve their Majesties according to the same in all times to come.

Sect. 12. No Dispensation by non obstante of any statute shall be allowed, except a dispensation be allowed of in such statute; and except in such cases as shall be specially provided for during this session of Parliament.

Sect. 13. No charter granted before the 23d of October 1689, shall be invalidated by this act, but shall remain of the same force as if this act had never been made.

Lastly, These Liberties were again asserted at the commencement of the present century, in the Act of Settlement, stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2, whereby the Crown was limited to his present Majesty's illustrious House; and some new provisions were added at the same fortunate æra, for better securing our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, which the statute declares to be "the birthright of the people of England;" according to the ancient doctrine of the Common Law. Plowd. 55: see 1 Comm. c. 1.

Thus much for the Declaration of our Rights and Liberties. The Rights themselves thus defined by these several statutes, consist in a number of private immunities; which will appear, from what has been premised, to be indeed no other than either that residuum of Natural Liberty, which is not required by the laws of Society to be sacrificed to public convenience; or else those civil privileges which Society hath engaged to provide in lieu of the Natural Liberties so given up by individuals. These, therefore, were formerly, either by inheritance or purchase, the rights of all mankind; but in most other countries of the world, being now more or less debased or destroyed, they at present may be said to remain, in a peculiar and emphatical manner, the Rights of the People of England.

These Rights may be reduced to three principal or primary articles;

The Right of Personal Security.
The Right of Personal Liberty.
The Right of Private Property.

As there is no other known method of compulsion, or of abridging man's natural free will, but by an infringement or diminution of one or other of these important Rights, the preservation of these, inviolate, may justly be said to include the preservation of our civil immunities in their largest and most extensive sense. 1 Comm. 129.

The Right of Personal Security consists in a person's legal and uninterrupted enjoyment of his life, his limbs, his body, his health, and his reputation. The enjoyment of this right is secured to every Subject by the various laws made for the punishment of those injuries, by which it is any way violated; for a particular detail of which, see this Dictionary, titles Assault; Homicide; Mathem; Libel; Nusance, &c.

Life, however, may, by the divine permission, be frequently forfeited for the breach of those laws of Society which are enforced by the sanction of capital punishments. On this subject it is sufficient at present to observe, that whenever the constitution of a State vests in any man, or body of men, a power of destroying at pleasure, without the direction of laws, the lives or members of the Subject, such constitution is in the highest degree tyrannical; and that whenever any laws direct such destruction for light and trivial causes, such laws are likewise tyrannical, though in an inferior degree; because here the Subject is aware of the danger he is exposed to, and may, by prudent caution, provide against it. The Statute Law of England does therefore very seldom, and the Common Law does never, inflict punishment extending to life or limb, unless upon the highest necessity; and the constitution is an utter stranger to any arbitrary power of killing or maiming the Subject without the express warrant of law. The words of the Great Charter, c. 29, are "Nullus liber homo capiatur, imprisonetur, vel aliquo modo destruatur, nisi per legale judicium parium suorum aut per legem terræ. No Freeman shall be taken, imprisoned, or any way destroyed, unless by the lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land." Which words, aliquo modo destruatur, according to Coke, include a prohibition not only of killing or maiming, but also of torturing, (to which our laws are strangers,) and of every oppression by colour of an illegal authority. And it is enacted by stat. 5 E. 3. c. 9, that no man shall be attached by any accusation, nor forejudged of life or limb, nor shall his lands or goods be seised into the King's hands contrary to the Great Charter, and the law of the land. And again by stat. 28 E. 3. c. 3, that no man shall be put to death without being brought to answer by due process of law. 1 Comm. 133.

The Right of Personal Liberty consists in the power of loco motion, of changing situation, or moving one's person to whatsoever place one's own inclination may direct; without imprisonment or restraint, unless by due course of law. On this right there is at present no occasion to enlarge. For the provisions made by the laws of England to secure it, see this Dictionary, titles Habeas Corpus; False Imprisonment; Bail; Arrest, &c. &c.

The absolute Right of Property, inherent in every Englishman, consists in the free use, enjoyment, and disposal of all his acquisitions, without any controul or diminution, save only by the laws of the land. The origin of private property is probably founded in nature; but certainly the modifications under which we at present find it, the method of conserving it in the present owner, and of translating it from man to man, are entirely derived from Society; and are some of those civil advantages in exchange for which every individual has resigned a part of his Natural Liberty. The laws of England are, therefore, in point of honour and justice, extremely watchful in ascertaining and protecting this right. Upon this principle the Great Charter, c. 29, has declared, that no freeman shall be disseised or divested of his freehold, or of his Liberties or free customs, (or be outlawed, banished, or otherwise destroyed, nor shall the King pass or send upon him,) but by the judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. And by a variety of antient statutes it is enacted, that no man's lands or goods shall be seised into the King's hands, against the Great Charter and the law of the land: and that no man shall be disinherited, nor put out of his franchises or freehold, unless he be duly brought to answer and be forejudged by course of law; and if any thing be done to the contrary, it shall be redressed and holden for none. See stats. 5 E. 3. c. 9: 25 E. 3. st. 5. c. 4: ante 28 E. 3. c. 3.

So great moreover is the regard of the Law for private property, that it will not authorize the least violation of it: no, not even for the general good of the whole community. In instances where the property of an individual is necessary to be obtained for the accommodation of the public, as in the case of enlarging or turning highways, all that the Legislature does, is to oblige the owner to alienate his possessions for a reasonable price; and even this is an exertion of power indulged with caution, and which none but the Legislature, or those acting under their immediate direction, can perform. See stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 78; and this Dictionary, title Highways.

Another effect of this right of private property is, that no Subject of England can be constrained to pay any aids or taxes, even for the defence of the realm, or the support of the government, but such as are imposed by his own consent, or that of his representatives in Parliament. By stat. 25 Ed. 1. c. 5, 6, it is provided, that the King shall not take any aids or tasks, but by the common assent of the realm. And what that common assent is, is more fully explained by stat. 34 Ed. 1. st. 4. c. 1; which enacts, that no talliage or aid shall be taken, without the assent of the Archbishops, Bishops, Earls, Barons, Knights, Burgesses, and other freemen of the land: and again, by stat. 14 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 1, the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and Commons, Citizens, Burgesses, and Merchants, shall not be charged to make any aid, if it be not by the common assent of the great men and Commons in Parliament. And as this fundamental law had been shamefully evaded, under many preceding Princes, by compulsive loans and benevolences, extorted without a real and voluntary consent, it was made an article in the Petition of Right, 3 Car. 1, that no man shall be compelled to yield any gift, loan, or benevolence, tax, or such like charge, without common consent by act of Parliament. And, lastly, by the Bill of Rights, stat. 1 W. & M. st. 2. c. 2, it is declared, that levying money for or to the use of the Crown by pretence of prerogative, without grant of Parliament, or for longer time, or in other manner than the same is or shall be granted, is illegal. 1 Comm. 140.

The above is a short view of the principal absolute rights which appertain to every Englishman; and the Constitution has provided for the security of their actual enjoyment, by establishing certain other auxiliary, subordinate, rights, which serve principally as outworks or barriers to protect and maintain those principal rights inviolate. These are,

The Constitution, Powers, and Privileges of Parliament.
The Limitation of the King's Prerogative.
The Right of applying to Courts of Justice for Redress of Injuries.
The Right of Petitioning the King or Parliament.
The Right of having Arms for Defence.

This last auxiliary right of the Subjects of having arms for their defence, suitable to their condition and degree, and such as are allowed by law, is declared by the Bill of Rights; and it is, indeed, a public allowance, under due restrictions of the natural right of resistance and self-preservation, when the sanctions of Society and Laws are found insufficient to restrain the violence of oppression. See this Dictionary, title Arms.

As to the first and second of the subordinate rights above mentioned, see this Dictionary, titles Parliament; King. With respect to the third and fourth some short information is here subjoined.

Since the Law is, in England, the supreme arbiter of every man's life, liberty, and property, Courts of Justice must at all times be open to the Subject, and the law be duly administered therein. The emphatical words of Magna Carta, c. 29, spoken in the person of the King, who, in judgment of law, (says Sir Ed. Coke,) is ever present, and repeating them in all his Courts, are these: "Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum vel justitiam.—To none will we sell, to none will we deny, or delay, right or justice." And therefore every Subject, for injury done to him in his goods, his lands, or his person, by any other Subject, be he ecclesiastical or temporal, without any exception, may take his remedy by the course of law, and have justice and right for the injury done to him, freely without sale, fully without any denial, and speedily without delay. 2 Inst. 55.

It were endless to enumerate all the affirmative acts of Parliament wherein justice is directed to be done according to the law of the land; and what that law is every Subject knows, or may know if he pleases; for it depends not upon the arbitrary will of any judge, but is permanent, fixed, and unchangeable, unless by authority of Parliament. A few negative statutes may however be mentioned, whereby abuses, perversions, or delays of justice, especially by the prerogative, are restrained. It is ordained by Magna Carta, c. 29, that no freeman shall be outlawed, that is, put out of the protection and benefit of the law, but according to the laws of the land. By stats. 2 Ed. 3. c. 8: 11 Ric. 2. c. 10, it is enacted, "that no commands or letters shall be sent under the Great Seal, or the Little Seal, the Signet or Privy Seal, in disturbance of the law; or to disturb or delay common right; and though such commandments should come, the Judges shall not cease to do right." This is also made a part of their oath, by stat. 18 Ed. 3. st. 4. And by the Bill of Rights it is declared, that the pretended power of suspending or dispensing with laws, or the execution of laws, by regal authority, without consent of Parliament, is illegal.

Not only the substantial part, or judicial decisions of the law, but also the formal part, or method of proceeding, cannot be altered but by Parliament: for, if once those outworks were demolished, there would be an inlet to all manner of innovation in the body of the law itself. The King, it is true, may erect new Courts of Justice; but then they must proceed according to the old established forms of the Common Law. For which reason it is declared in the stat. 16 Car. 1. c. 10, upon the dissolution of the Court of Star-chamber, that neither his Majesty nor his Privy Council have any jurisdiction, power or authority, by English bill, petition, articles, or libel, (which were the course of proceeding in the Star-chamber borrowed from the Civil Law,) or by any other arbitrary way whatsoever, to examine or draw into question, determine or dispose of the lands or goods of any Subjects of this kingdom; but that the same ought to be tried and determined in the ordinary Courts of Justice, and by course of law. See this Dictionary, titles Judges; Courts; Chancery; &c.

The right of petitioning the King, or either House of Parliament, for the redress of grievances, appertains to every individual in cases of any uncommon injury, or infringement of the rights already particularized, which the ordinary course of law is too defective to reach. The restrictions, for some there are, which are laid upon this right of petitioning in England, while they promote the spirit of peace, are no check upon that of Liberty; care only must be taken, lest, under the pretence of petitioning, the Subject be guilty of any riot or tumult: as happened in the opening of the memorable Parliament in 1640.—And to prevent this, it is provided by st. 13 C. 2. st. 1. c. 5, that no petition to the King or either House of Parliament, for any alteration in Church or State, shall be signed by above twenty persons, unless the matter thereof be approved by three Justices of the peace, or the major part of the Grand Jury in the county; and in London by the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Common Council; nor shall any petition be presented by more than ten persons at a time. But, under these regulations, it is declared by the Bill of Rights, that the Subject hath a right to petition; and that all commitments and prosecutions for such petitioning are illegal. The sanction of the Grand Jury may be given either at the Assises or Quarter Sessions; the punishment for offending against the stat. 13 Car. 2, not to exceed a fine of 100*l.*, and three months' imprisonment. Upon the trial of Lord George Gordon, the Court of King's Bench

Bench declared, that they were clearly of opinion, that this statute was not in any degree affected by the Bill of Rights. Dougl. 571.

In the several articles above enumerated, consist THE RIGHTS, or as they are more frequently termed, THE LIBERTIES, OF ENGLISHMEN. Liberties more generally talked of than thoroughly understood; and yet highly necessary to be perfectly known and considered by every man of rank or property; lest his ignorance of the points whereon they are founded, should hurry him into faction and licentiousness on the one hand, or a pusillanimous indifference, and criminal submission, on the other. And all these Rights and Liberties it is our birthright to enjoy entire, unless where the laws of our country have laid them under necessary restraints: restraints in themselves so gentle and so moderate, as will appear on a minute inquiry, that no man of sense or probity would wish to see them slackened: for all of us have it in our choice to do every thing that a good man would desire to do; and are restrained from nothing but what would be pernicious either to ourselves or our fellow citizens. So that this review of our situation may fully justify the observation of a learned French author; (of former times!) who hath not scrupled to profess that the ENGLISH is the only Nation in the world where Political or Civil Liberty is the DIRECT END OF ITS CONSTITUTION. Montesq. Sp. L. xi. 5. See 1 Comm c. 1. ad fin.

LIBRÆ, ARSÆ, & PENSATÆ; & AD NUMERUM, A phrase which often occurs in the Domesday-Register, and some other memorials of that and the next age—as "Ailesbury in Buckinghamshire, the King's manor.—In totis valentiis reddit lvi libr. arsas & pensatas, & de theloneo x libr. ad numerum, i.e. in the whole value it pays fifty-six pounds burnt and weighed; and for toll ten pounds by tale." For they sometimes took their money ad numerum, by tale, in the current coin upon content: but sometimes they rejected the common coin by tale, and money coined elsewhere than at the King's mint, by cities, bishops, and noblemen who had mints, as of too great alloy, and would therefore melt it down to take it by weight when purified from the dross; for which purpose they had in those times always a fire ready in the Exchequer to burn the money, and then weigh it. Cowell.

LIBRA PENSA, A pound of money in weight. See the preceding article.

LIBRARY. Where a Library is erected in any parish, it shall be preserved for the uses directed by the founders; and incumbents and ministers of parishes, &c. are to give security therefore, and make catalogues of the books, &c. None of the books shall be alienable, without consent of the bishop, and then only where there is a duplicate of such books; if any book shall be taken away and detained, a justice's warrant may be issued to search for and restore the same: also action of trover may be brought in the name of the proper Ordinary, &c. And bishops have power to make rules and orders concerning Libraries, appoint persons to view their condition, and inquire of the state of them in their visitation. Stat. 7 Ann. c. 14.

LIBRATA TERRÆ, Four oxgangs of land, every oxgang containing thirteen acres. Skene, verb. Bovata terræ. So much land, anciently, as was worth twenty shillings a-year; for in Henry the Third's time, he that had quindecim libras terræ, was to receive the order of knighthood. See Farding deal.

LICENCE, licentia.] A power or authority given to a man to do some lawful act: and is a personal liberty to the party to whom given, which cannot be transferred over; but it may be made to a man, or his assigns, &c. 12 Hen. 7. 25. There may be a parol Licence, as well as by deed in writing; but if it be not for a certain time, it passes no interest. 2 Nels. Abr. 1123. And if there be no time certain in the Licence; as if a man licence another to dig clay, &c. in his land, but doth not say for how long, the Licence may be countermanded; though if it be until such a time, he cannot. Poph. 151. If a lessor licence his lessee (who is restrained by covenant from aliening without Licence) to alien, and such lessor dies before he aliens, this is no countermand of the Licence: so it is if the lessor grants over his estate. Cro. Jac. 133. But where a lord of a manor for life granteth a Licence to a copyhold tenant to alien, and dieth; the Licence is destroyed, and the power of alienation ceaseth. 1 Inst. 52. Copyhold tenants leasing their copyhold for a longer time than one year, are to have a Licence for it; or they incur a forfeiture of their estate. 1 Ind. 63. A. grants to B. a way over his ground, or Licence to go through it to the church; by this none but B. himself may go in it; but if one give me Licence to go over his land with my plough, or to cut down a tree therein, and take it away; by this I may take what help is needful to do the same. So if it be to hunt and kill and carry away deer; not if it be to hunt and kill only. 12 Hen. 7. 25: 13 Hen. 7. 8: 8 Rep. 146. See titles Trespass; Lease; Way; Copyhold, &c.

By Licence a man may practise physic and surgery in London; and do divers other things. Licences are also necessary for the carrying on various trades and professions, on which a duty is laid for the purpose of raising a revenue to Government. See this Dictionary, titles Excise; Taxes.

LICENCE TO ALIEN IN MORTMAIN. Alienations in Mortmain to ecclesiastical persons, &c. are restrained by several statutes; but the King may grant Licences to any person or bodies politic, &c. to alien or hold lands in Mortmain. See stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37; and this Dictionary, titles Mortmain; Charitable Uses.

LICENCE TO ARISE, licentia surgendi.] A Liberty or space of time anciently given by the Court to a tenant to arise out of his bed, who is essoined de malo lecti, in a real action: and it is also the writ thereupon. Bracton. And the law in this case is, that the tenant may not arise or go out of his chamber until he hath been been viewed by knights thereto appointed, and hath a day assigned him to appear; the reason whereof is, that it may be known whether he caused himself to be essoined deceitfully or not; and if the demandant can prove that he was seen abroad before the view or Licence of the Court, he should be taken to be deceitfully essoined, and to have made default. Bracton, lib. 5: Fleta, lib. 6. c. 10 See title Essoin.

LIEGE, ligeus.] Is used for Liege Lord, and sometimes for Liege Man: Liege Lord is he that acknowledgeth no superior; and Liege Man is he who oweth allegiance to his Liege Lord. The King's Subjects are called Liege People, because they owe and are bound to pay allegiance to him. Stats. 8 Hen. 6. c. 10: 14 Hen. 8. c. 2. But in ancient times, private persons, as lords of manors, &c. had their Lieges. Skene saith, that this word is derived from the Italian, Liga, a bond or league; others derive it from Litis, which is a man wholly at the command of the Lord. Blount. See title Allegiance.

[redacted] AND LIEGE PEOPLE, Ligati.] See Liege.

LIEN, Fr.] Is a word used in the law, of two significations: personal Lien, such as bond, covenant, or contract; and real Lien, a judgment, statute, recognisance, which oblige and affect the land. Terms de Ley.

It signifies an obligation, tie, or claim annexed to, or attaching upon, any property; without satisfying which such property cannot be demanded by its owner. Thus the costs of an attorney are a Lien upon deeds and papers in his hands; a factor has a Lien on goods in his hands for balance due from his principal, &c. See titles Attorney; Factor; Mortgage; Judgment; &c.

LIEU, Instead or in place of another thing. And when one thing doth come in the place of another, it shall be of the same nature as that was; as in case of an exchange, &c. 2 Shep. Abr. 359. See title Exchange.

LIEU CONUS, In law proceedings, signifies a castle, manor, or other notorious place, well known and generally taken notice of by those that dwell about it. 2 Lil. Abr. 641. A venire facias, for a Jury to appear, may be from a lieu conus: and a Fine or Recovery of lands in a lieu conus, is good; but it is said in a scire facias to have execution of such fine, the vill or parish must be named. 2 Cro. 574: 2 *Mod. LIEUTENANT, locum tenens.] Is the King's Deputy, or he that exercises the King's or any other's place, and represents his person; as the Lieutenant of Ireland. The word Lieutenant is also used for a military officer, next in command to the captain.

LIFE, Union and co-operation of soul with body; enjoyment or possession of terrestrial existence. Johns.

The Life of every man is under the protection of the law. Wood's Inst. 11. A lease made to a person during Life, is determinable by a civil death; but if it be to hold during natural Life, it will be otherwise. 2 Rep. 48.

LIFE ESTATES: Estates of freehold, not of inheritance. Of these some are conventional, or expresly created by the act of the parties; others merely legal, or created by construction and operation of law. See this Dictionary, titles Estate; Dower; Courtesy; Tail.

Estates for Life, expresly created by deed or grant, (which alone are properly conventional,) are, where a lease is made of lands or tenements to a man to hold for the term of his own Life, or for that of any other person, or for more Lives than one; in any of which cases he is styled Tenant for Life; only when he holds the estate by Life of another, he is usually called Tenant, pur autre vie; (for another's Life). Litt. § 56.

These Estates for Life are, like inheritances, of a feodal nature; and were for some time the highest estate that any man could have in a feud. See title Tenures. They are given and conferred by the same feodal rights and solemnities, the same investiture or livery of seisin, as fees themselves are; and they are held by fealty, if demanded, and such conventional rents and services, as the lord or lessor and his tenant or lessee have agreed on. 2 Comm. c. 8. p. 120.

Estates for Life may be created, not only by the express words before mentioned, but also by a general grant, without defining or limiting any specific Estate. As if one grant to A. B. the manor of Dale, this makes him Tenant for Life. Co. Lit. 42. For though, as there are no words of inheritance or heirs mentioned in the grant, it cannot be construed to be a fee, it shall however be construed to be as large an estate as the words of the donation will bear, and therefore an Estate for Life. Also such a grant at large, or a grant for term of Life generally, shall be construed to be an Estate for the Life of the grantee, in case the grantor hath authority to make such a grant; for an estate for a man's own Life is more beneficial and of a higher nature than for any other Life; and the rule of law is, that all grants are to be taken taken most strongly against the grantor, unless in the case of the King. Co. Lit. 42, 36.

Such Estates for Life will endure, generally speaking, as long as the Life for which they are granted; but there are some Estates for Life which may determine upon future contingencies, before the Life for which they are created expires. As if an Estate be granted to a woman during her widowhood, or to a man until he be promoted to a benefice; in these and similar cases whenever the contingency happens, when the widow marries, or when the grantee obtains a benefice, the respective Estates are absolutely determined and gone. Co. Lit. 42: 3 Rep. 20. Yet while they subsist, they are reckoned Estates for Life; because the time for which they will endure being uncertain, they may, by possibility, last for Life; if the contingencies upon which they are to determine do not sooner happen.

In case an Estate be granted to a man for his Life generally, it may also determine by his civil death; for which reason, in conveyances the grant is usually made for the term of a man's natural Life, which can only determine by his natural death. This civil death was formerly held to commence if any man was banished or abjured the realm, by the process of the Common Law; (see title Abjuration;) or entered into religion, that is, went into a monastery, and became there a monk professed; in which cases he was absolutely dead in law, and his next heir should have his Estate; for such banished man was entirely cut off from society; and such monk, upon his profession, renounced solemnly all secular concerns. But even in the times of popery the law of England took no cognisance of profession in any foreign country; because the fact could not be tried in our Courts; Co. Lit. 132: and therefore, since the Reformation, this disability is held to be abolished, 1 Salk. 162. as is also the disability of banishment consequent upon abjuration, by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. One species of civil death may, however, still exist in this country: that is, where a man by act of Parliament, is attainted of treason or felony; and, saving his life, is banished for ever; this Lord Coke declares to be a civil death: but he says, a temporary exile is not a civil death. Under this reasoning, where a man receives judgment of death, and afterwards leaves the kingdom for life, upon a conditional pardon, there can be very little doubt but this amounts to a civil death; this practice did not exist in the time of Lord Coke, who says, that a man can only lose his country by authority of Parliament. 1 Inst. 133. See 1 Comm. c. 1. p. 131, 3, & n.

The incidents to an Estate for Life are principally the following, which are applicable not only to those species of Tenants for Life, which are expresly created by deed, but also to those which are created by act and operation of law. See 2 Comm. c. 8.

First, Every Tenant for Life, unless restrained by covenant or agreement, may, of common right, take upon the land demised to him reasonable estovers or botes. Co. Litt. 41. For he hath a right to the full enjoyment and use of the land and all its profits, during his Estate therein. See titles Estovers; Common of Estovers. But he is not permitted to cut down timber, or do other waste upon the premises; for the destruction of such things, as are not the temporary profits of the tenement, is not necessary for the tenant's complete enjoyment of his Estate; but tends to the permanent and lasting loss of the person entitled to the inheritance. 1 Inst. 53. See this Dictionary, title Waste.

In the second place, Tenant for Life, or his representatives, shall not be prejudiced by any sudden determination of his Estate; because such a determination is contingent and uncertain. Co. Litt. 55. Therefore, if a Tenant for his own Life sows the lands, and dies before harvest, his executors shall have the emblements or profits of the crop; for the Estate was determined by the act of God; and it is a maxim in the law, actus Dei nemini facit injuriam. The representatives therefore of the Tenant for Life shall have the emblements, to compensate for the labour and expence of tilling, manuring, and sowing the lands; and also for the encouragement of husbandry, which being a public benefit, tending to the increase and plenty of provisions, ought to have the utmost security and privilege that the law can give it. Wherefore, by the feodal law, if a Tenant for Life died, between the beginning of September and the end of February, the Lord who was entitled to the reversion was also entitled to the profits of the whole year; but if he died between the beginning of March and the end of August, the heirs of the Tenant received the whole. From hence our law of emblements seems to have been derived, but with very considerable improvements; and its advantages are particularly extended to the parochial Clergy, by stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11: for all persons who are presented to any ecclesiastical benefice, or to any civil office, are considered as Tenants for their own Lives, unless the contrary be expressed in the form of the donation. 1 Comm. c. 8. p. 122, 3. See title Emblements.

A third incident to Estates for Life relates to the under-tenants or lessees. For they have the same, nay greater indulgencies than their lessors the original Tenants for Life. The same; for the law of estovers and emblements, with regard to the Tenant for Life, is also law with regard to his under-tenant, who represents him and stands in his place. Co. Litt. 55. Greater; for in those cases where Tenant for Life shall not have the emblements, because the Estate determines by his own act, the exception shall not reach his lessee, who is a third person. As in the case of a woman who holds durante viduitate: her taking a husband is her own act, and therefore deprives her of the emblements; but if she leases her Estate to an under-tenant, who sows the land, and she then marries, this her act shall not deprive the tenant of his emblements, who is a stranger, and could not prevent her. Cro. Eliz. 461: 1 Rol. Abr. 727. The lessees of Tenants for Life had also at the Common Law another most unreasonable advantage; for at the death of their lessors, the Tenants for Life, these under-tenants might, if they pleased, quit the premises, and pay no rent to any body for the occupation of the land, since the last quarter-day, or other day assigned for payment of rent. 10 Rep. 127. To remedy which, it is now enacted by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. § 15, that the executors or administrators of Tenant for Life, on whose death any lease determined, shall recover of the lessee a rateable proportion of rent, from the last day of payment to the death of such lessor. See this Dictionary, titles Rents; Leases.

LIGHTS. Stopping Lights of a house is a nusance; but stopping a prospect is not, being only matter of delight, not of necessity: and a person may have either an assise of nusance against the person erecting any such nusance, or he may stand on his own ground and abate it. 9 Rep. 58: 1 Mod 54. For any nusance erected or being on the soil of my neighbour, whereby I sustain damage, I may maintain an action on the case. If a man has a vacant piece of ground, and builds thereupon a house, with good Lights, which he sells or lets to another; and after he builds upon ground contiguous, or lets the same to another person, who builds thereupon to the nusance of the Lights of the first house, the lessee of the first house may have an action on the case against such builder, &c. LIMITATION, LIMITATIO.] A certain time, assigned by statute, within which an action must be brought.

I. The Nature, Origin, and general Rules as to Limitations of Actions.

II. More particularly of the Limitations of Actions as divided, into—1. Real,—2. Penal,—and 3. Personal.

III. Of the Time when the Right of Action accrued, so as to be affected by the Statutes; and of the Courts bound thereby.

I. THE time of Limitation is two-fold, first, in writs, by divers acts of Parliament; secondly, to make a title to any inheritance, and that is by the Common Law. Co. Lit. 114, 115.

It seems, that by the Common Law there was no stated or fixed time to bring actions; for though it be said by Bracton, that omnes actiones in mundo infra certa tempora limitationem habent; yet Lord Coke says, that the Limitation of Actions was by force of divers acts of Parliament; also, says he, this general position of Bracton's admitted of several exceptions. Bract. lib. 2. fol. 228: 2 Inst. 95: Co. Litt. 115: 4 Co. 10, 11.

But by the ancient law there was a stated time for the heir of the tenant to claim after the death of his ancestor, that is to say, a year and a day after he was fourteen years old, or else he lost his land, according to the feudal text; Prætèrea si quis infeudatus major quatuordecim annis sua incuria, vel negligentia per ann. & diem steterit, quod feudi investituram à proprio domino non petierit, transacto hoc spatio, feudum amittat & ad dominum redeat. Spelm. Gloss. 32.

The fixing upon the period of a year and a day, upon several other occasions, seems to have been deduced from this ancient rule; and on this occasion was pitched upon, because the services appointed seem to be annually computed; therefore the feud was ordered to be taken up within such time as such annual services became due, or else it was lost and returned to the lord; and the same time that was appointed to the tenant to claim from the lord was also appointed to make his claim upon any disseisor; and if no such claim was made, the disseisor dying seised cast the right of possession upon the heir; and this was to keep the same uniformity in point of time through the law, as also that the lord might be at a certainty whom he might take for his tenant, and admit upon every descent; and since the heir of the tenant anciently lost the whole land, in case he did not take it up within time, it was fit the tenant should lose the right and possession, in case he did not claim within the same time upon the disseisor; that the heir of the disseisor might be in peace, in case the person that had right did not make his claim upon him, and that from thenceforth the lord might receive him into his feud; and as upon the ancient plan of feudal constitution, constitution, if the heir did not take up the feud within a year and a day, a desertion and dereliction was presumed; so also if the dissei-see did not claim within the same time, the right of possession was relinquished. Spelm. Gloss. annus & dies 32, 33.

Before the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, certain remarkable periods were fixed upon, within which the titles, whereon men designed to be relieved, must have accrued; thus in the time of Hen. III. by the statute of Merton, 20 Hen. 3. c. 8, at which time the Limitation in a writ of right was from the time of King Henry I. it is reduced to the time of King Henry II.; and for assises of mort d'ancestor, they were thereby reduced from the last return of King John out of Ireland, which was 12 Johannis; and for assises of novel disseisin, à prima transfretatione Regis in Normanniam, which was 5 Hen. 3, and which before that had been post ultimum redditum Henrici 3. de Britannia; and this Limitation was also afterwards by the statutes Westm. 1. (3 Ed. 1.) c. 39, and Westm. 2. (3 Ed. 1.) c. 46, reduced to a narrower compass, the writ of right being limited to the first coronation of Hen. III. For these ancient limitations, see Co. Lit. 14. b. 115. a; 2 Inst. 94, 95: 2 Rol. Abr. 111: Hale's Hist. of the Law, 122: 2 Keb. 45. This last date of Limitation continued so long unaltered, that it became indeed no Limitation at all; it being above three hundred years from Henry III's coronation to the year 1540, when the statute of Limitations, 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, was made. This statute, therefore, instead of limiting actions from the date of a particular event, as before, which in process of years grew abused, took another and more direct course, which might endure for ever, by limiting a certain period of time previous to the commencement of every suit. See 3 Comm. c. 10. p. 189.

There are now several statutes of Limitation, by which a certain time is prescribed, beyond which no plaintiff can lay his cause of action. This, by stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, in a Writ of Right is 60 years. In assizes, writs of entry, or other possessory actions real, of the seisin of one's ancestors in lands; and either of their seisin or one's own, in rents, suits, and services; 50 years. And in actions real for lands grounded upon one's own seisin or possession, such possession must have been within 30 years. By stat. 1 Mary, st. 2. c. 5, this Limitation does not extend to any suit for Advowsons, upon reasons hereafter mentioned. See post. II. 1.

By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 2, a time of Limitation was extended to the case of the King, viz. sixty years precedent to February 19, 1623; 3 Inst. 189; but this becoming ineffectual by efflux of time, the same term of Limitation was fixed, by stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 16, to commence and be reckoned backwards, from the time of bringing any suit or other process, to recover the thing in question; so that a possession for sixty years is now a bar even against the prerogative, in derogation of the ancient maxim, nullum tempus occurrit regi. See this Dictionary, title King, V. 2.

By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, the time of Limitation in any writ of formedon, is 20 years; and by a consequence, the same term is also the Limitation in every action of Ejectment; for no ejectment can be brought, unless where the lessor of the plaintiff is entitled to enter on the lands; and by this statute (21 Jac.) no entry can be made by any man unless within 20 years after his right shall accrue. And by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, no entry shall be of force to satisfy the said statute of Limitations, or to avoid a fine levied of lands, unless an action be thereupon commenced within one year after, and prosecuted with effect. See this Dictionary, titles Ejectment; Entry; Fine.

By the same statute, 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, (which, from the general extent of it to almost all actions, is usually termed emphatically, The Statute of Limitations,) all actions of trespass, (quare clausum fregit, or otherwise,) detinue, trover, replevin, account, and case, (except upon accounts between merchants,) debt on simple contract, or for arrears of rent, are limited to 6 years after the cause of action commenced; (and see stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. post. III. ad fin.) Actions of assault, menace, battery, mayhem, and imprisonment, must be brought within 4 years; and actions for words within 2 years after the injury committed.

By stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 44, suits in Ecclesiastical Courts for defamatory words must be commenced within six months.

By stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5, all suits, indictments, and informations upon any penal statutes, where any forfeiture is to the Crown alone, shall be sued within 2 years; and when the forfeiture is to a Subject, or to the Crown and a Subject, within one year after the offence committed; unless where any other time is specially limited by the statute.

By stat. 10 W. 3. c. 14, no Writ of Error, Scire Facias, or other suit, shall be brought to reverse any Judgment, Fine, or Recovery for error, unless it be prosecuted within 20 years. See this Dictionary, titles Error; Fine of Lands; Judgment.

A writ of error to reverse a Common Recovery cannot be brought after twenty years, though the right of the plaintiff in error accrued within that time. 2 Stra. 1257.

No statute has fixed any Limitation to a Bond or Specialty; but where no interest has been paid upon a bond, and no demand proved thereon for twenty years, the Judges recommend it to the Jury to presume it discharged, and to find a verdict for the defendant. 2 Term Rep. 270. See this Dictionary, title Bond.

II. 1. By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 2, it is enacted, "That no person shall from thenceforth sue, have, or maintain, any writ of right, or make any prescription, title, or claim, to or for any manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, commons, pensions, portions, corodies, or other hereditaments, of the possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, and declare and alledge any further seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, but only of the seisin or possession of his ancestor or predecessor, which hath been or now is, or shall be seised of the said manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, commons, pensions, portions, corodies, or other hereditaments, within threescore years next before the teste of the same writ, or next before the said prescription, title, or claim so hereafter to be sued, commenced, brought, made, or had."

And it is further enacted by the said statute, par. 2, "That no manner of person shall sue, have, or maintain any assise of mort d'ancestor, cosenage, ayle, writ of entry upon disseisin, done to any of his ancestors or predecessors, or any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, of any further seisin or possession of his or their

their ancestor or predecessor, but only of the seisin or possession of his or their ancestor or predecessor, which was or hereafter shall be seised of the same manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, within fifty years next before the teste of the original of the same writ hereafter to be brought."

It is further enacted, par. 3, "That no person shall sue, have, or maintain any action for any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, of or upon his or their own seisin or possession therein, above thirty years next before the teste of the original of the same writ hereafter to be brought."

And further, par. 4. "That no person shall hereafter make any avowry or cognizance for any rent, suit or service, and allege any seisin of any rent, suit or service, in the same avowry or cognizance in the possession of any other, whose estate he shall pretend or claim to have, above fifty years next before the making of the said avowry or cognizance."

Fifty years is the true term of Limitation in this instance; though Rastall's and some other editions of the statutes make it only forty years; an error adopted by Coke, (2 Inst. 95,) and other writers. See 3 Comm. c. 10. p. 189, in n.

And it is further enacted by the said statute, par. 5, "That all formedons in reverter, formedons in remainder, and scire facias upon fines of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments, at any time hereafter to be sued, shall be sued and taken within fifty years next after the title and cause of action fallen, and at no time after the fifty years past."

Note; This statute hath the usual saving, for infants, feme coverts, persons in prison, and beyond sea.

In the construction of this statute it hath been holden,

That in a formedon in reverter or remainder, or on a scire facias, on a fine of such nature, the demandant need not mention the statute in order to make out his title; but the tenant, if he would take advantage of it, must plead it. Dyer 315. b. pl. 101. So in an avowry for rent. Moor 31. pl. 102: 1 Rol. Rep. 50.

It has been held, that this statute being in restraint of the Common Law, ought to be construed strictly; that therefore it does not extend to a formedon in descender, cessavit nor rescous. 4 Co. 8: 1 And. 16: Lit. Rep. 342.

To a bill in Chancery, to be relieved touching a rent-charge upon lands by a will, the defendant pleaded the statute of Limitations, and that there had been no demand or payment in forty years; and it was held, that this statute concerns only customary rents between landlord and tenant, and not any rent that commences by grant, whereof the commencement may be shewn. 2 Vern. 235.

The statute does not extend to the services of escuage, homage, and fealty, for a man may live above the time limited by the act; neither doth it extend to any other service which by common possibility may not happen or become due within sixty years, as to cover the hall of the lord, or to attend the lord in the war, &c. Co. Lit. 115. a: 2 Inst. 95: 4 Co. 10, Bevil's case: 8 Co. 65: 3 Lev. 21.

And where the tenure is by homage, fealty, and escuage uncertain, and by suit of court or rent, or any other annual service, the seisin of the suit or rent, or any other annual service, is a good seisin of the homage, fealty, or escuage, or other accidental services, as wardship, heriot-service, or the like. 2 Inst. 96: 4 Co. 8. b: Winch. 32: Hutt. 50: 2 Rol. Rep. 392.

By stat. 1 Mar. st. 2. c. 5, it is enacted, "That the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 2, shall not extend to any writ of right of advowson, quare impedit, or assise of darrein presentment, nor jus patronatûs, nor to any writ of right of ward, writ of ravishment of ward for the wardship of the body, or for the wardship of any castles, honours, manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments holden by knight service; but that such suits may be brought as before the making of the said act.

There is, therefore, no Limitation with regard to the time within which any actions touching advowsons are to be brought; at least none later than the times of Richard I. and Henry III. And this upon very good reason; because it may easily happen, that the title to an advowson may not come in question, nor the right have opportunity to be tried within 60 years; which is the longest period of Limitation assigned by the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 2. For Sir Edward Coke says, that there was a parson of one of his churches that had been incumbent there above fifty years; nor are instances wanting where two successive incumbents have continued for upwards of one hundred years. Had therefore the last of these incumbents been the clerk of an usurper, or had been presented by lapse, it would have been necessary and unavoidable for the patron, in case of a dispute, to have recurred back above a century, in order to have shown a clear title and seisin, by presentation and admission of the prior incumbent. But though, for these reasons, a Limitation is highly improper with respect only to the length of time, yet as the title of advowsons is, for want of some Limitations, rendered more precarious than that of any other hereditament, (especially since the stat. 7 Ann. c. 18, hath allowed possessory actions to be brought upon any prior presentation, however distant,) it might perhaps be better, if a Limitation were established, with respect to the number of avoidances; or rather if a Limitation were compounded of the length of time and the number of avoidances together: for instance, if no seisin were admitted to be alleged in any of these writs of patronage after sixty years and three avoidances were past. 3 Comm. c. 16. p. 250.

By stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, which the preamble declares to be for quieting men's estates, and avoiding of suits, it is enacted, "That all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, and formedon in reverter, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought of or for any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereunto any person or persons now hath or have any title, or cause to have or pursue any such writ, shall be sued and taken within twenty years next after the end of this present session of parliament; and after the said twenty years expired, no person or persons, or any of their heirs, shall have or maintain any such writ of or for any of the said manors, lands, tenements or hereditaments; and that all writs of formedon in descender, formedon in remainder, formedon in reverter, of any manors, lands, tenements, or other hereditaments whatsoever, at any time hereafter to be sued or brought by occasion or means of any title, or cause hereafter happening, shall be sued and taken within twenty years next after the title and cause of action first descended or fallen, and at no time after the said twenty years; and that no person or persons that now hath any right or title of entry, into any manors, lands, tenements, or hereditaments, now held from him or them, ſhall thereinto enter, but within twenty years next after the end of this preſent ſeſſion of parliament, or within twenty years next after any other title of entry accrued; and that no perſon or perſons ſhall at any time hereafter make any entry into any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, but within twenty years next after his or their right or title, which ſhall hereafter firſt deſcend or accrue to the ſame; and in default thereof ſuch perſons ſo not entering, and their heirs, ſhall be utterly excluded and diſabled from ſuch entry after to be made; any former law, &c.

"Provided, That if any perſon or perſons, that is or ſhall be entitled to ſuch writ or writs, or that hath or ſhall have ſuch right or title of entry, be or ſhall be, at the time of the ſaid right or title firſt deſcended, accrued, come, or fallen, within the age of one and twenty years, feme covert, non compos mentis, imprisoned, or beyond the ſeas; that then ſuch perſon and perſons, and his and their heir and heirs, ſhall or may, notwithſtanding the ſaid twenty years be expired, bring his action, or make his entry, as he might have done before this act; ſo as ſuch perſon and perſons, or his or their heir and heirs, ſhall within ten years next after his and their full age, diſcoverture, coming of ſound mind, enlargement out of priſon, or coming into this realm, or death, take benefit of and ſue forth the ſame, and at no time after the ſaid ten years."

In the conſtruction of this part of this ſtatute it hath been holden,

That the poſſeſſion of one joint-tenant is the poſſeſſion of the other, ſo far as to prevent this ſtatute. 1 Salk. 285.

That a claim of entry to prevent the ſtatute of Limitations muſt be upon the land, unleſs there be ſome ſpecial reaſon to the contrary. 1 Salk. 285.

That if a perſon be barred of his formedon, he is not thereby hindered to purſue his right of entry which afterwards accrues to him; no more than a perſon who has ſeveral remedies, and diſcharges one of them, is excluded thereby from purſuing the others. 1 Lutw. 781: 1 Salk. 339: 2 Salk. 422.

If A. has had poſſeſſion of lands for twenty years without interruption, and then B. gets poſſeſſion, upon which A. is put to his ejectment; though A. is plaintiff, yet the poſſeſſion of twenty years ſhall be a good title in him, as if he had ſtill been in poſſeſſion; becauſe a poſſeſſion for twenty years is like a deſcent which tolls entry, and gives a right of poſſeſſion, which is ſufficient to maintain an ejectment. 1 Salk. 421: ſaid to have been twice ſo ruled by Holt.

If one tenant in common receives the whole profits for twenty years, or more, yet this does not bar his companion; for the ſtatute of Limitations never runs againſt a man, but where he is actually ouſted or diſſeiſed. 1 Salk. 423.

It has been ruled, that copyholds are within the ſtatute of Limitations; becauſe it is an act made for the preſervation of the public quiet, and no ways tending to the prejudice of the lord or tenant. Moor 410.

Eccleſiaſtical perſons, it has been ſaid, are not bound by any of the ſtatutes of Limitations, becauſe it would be a ſide-wind to evade the ſtatutes made to prohibit their alienations. Comp. Incumb. 429.

2. By ſtat. 31 Eliz. c. 5. par. 5, it is enacted, "That all actions, ſuits, bills, indictments, or informations, which ſhall be brought for any forfeiture upon any ſtatute penal, made or to be made, whereby the forfeiture is or ſhall be limited to the Queen, &c. ſhall be brought within two years after the offence; and that all actions, ſuits, bills, or informations, which ſhall be brought for any forfeiture upon any penal ſtatute, made or to be made, except the ſtatutes of tillage, the benefit and ſuit whereof is or ſhall be by the ſaid ſtatute limited to the Queen, her heirs or ſucceſſors, and to any other that ſhall proſecute in that behalf, ſhall be brought by any perſon that may lawfully ſue for the ſame within one year next after the offence committed; and in default of ſuch purſuit, that then the ſame ſhall be brought for the Queen's Majeſty, her heirs or ſucceſſors, any time within the two years after that year ended. Where a ſhorter time is limited by any penal ſtatute, the proſecution muſt be within that time."

Alſo ſee ſtats. 18 Eliz. c. 5: 21 Jac. 1. c. 4; the former requiring a memorandum of the day of exhibiting an information, the latter an oath from the informer.

In the conſtruction of theſe ſtatutes it hath been holden,

That the ſtat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 4, does not extend to any offence created ſince that ſtatute; ſo that proſecutions on ſubſequent penal ſtatutes are not reſtrained thereby, but that ſtatute is to them as it were repealed pro tanto. 1 Salk. 372, 3: 5 Mod. 425. And that the ſaid ſtatute, 21 Jac. 1, only applies to thoſe penal ſtatutes, on which proceedings may be had before the Juſtices of Aſſiſe, Juſtices of the Peace, &c. 3 Term Rep. 362.

That if an offence prohibited by any penal ſtatute be alſo an offence at Common Law, the proſecution of it as of an offence at Common Law, is no way reſtrained by any of theſe ſtatutes. Hob. 270: 4 Mod. 144.

That if an information tam quam be brought after the year on a penal ſtatute, which gives one moiety to the informer, and the other to the King, it is naught only as to the informer, but good for the King. Cro. Car. 331: Cro. Jac. 366; and vide Dalt. 60.

When the forfeiture is to the Crown and a Subject, a common informer muſt ſue within one year, and the Crown may proſecute for the whole penalty at any time within two years after that year ended. 3 Comm. c. 20, p. 307, in n.

That if a ſuit on a penal ſtatute be brought after the limited time, the defendant need not plead the ſtatute, but may take advantage of it on the general iſſue. 1 Show. 353.

That the party grieved is not within the reſtraint of theſe ſtatutes, but may ſue in the ſame manner as before. Cro. Eliz. 645: Noy 71: 3 Leon. 237.

It ſeems doubtful, whether a ſuit by a common informer on a penal ſtatute, which firſt gives an action to the party grieved, and in his default, after a certain time, to any one who will ſue, be within the reſtraint of theſe ſtatutes. 1 Show. 353, 354.

It has been held by three judges, that ſuing out a latitat within the year was a ſufficient commencement of the ſuit to ſave the limitation of time on a penal ſtatute; becauſe the latitat is the original in B. R. and may be continued on record as an original. But Holt held otherwiſe, for the action being for a penalty given by a statute, the plaintiff might have brought an action of debt by original in B. R. because the statute gives the action; and he held, that there was a difference between a civil action, and an action given by statute; for in the first case, the suing out a latitat within the time, and continuing it afterwards, will be sufficient; but in the other case, if the party proceeds by bill, he ought to file his bill within time, that it may appear so to be upon the record itself. Carth. 232: Show. 353. But upon a writ of error, all the Judges in the Exchequer Chamber held, that a latitat is a kind of original in the King's Bench. 2 Ld. Raym. 883. And accordingly, in two subsequent cases, it was holden to be a good commencement of the suit in a penal action. 2 Burr. 950: 3 Burr. 1243: Cowp. 454.—See as to Limitations of Indictments, and Informations in criminal cases, this Dictionary, titles Appeal; Indictment; Information; Treason, &c.

3. By stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16, it is enacted, That all actions on the case for words shall be commenced and sued within TWO years next after the words spoken, and not after.

In the construction of this branch of the statute it hath been holden,

That an action of scandalum magnatum is not within the statute. Lit. Rep. 342: 3 Keb. 645.

That it extends not to actions for slander of title; for that is not properly slander, but a cause of damage; and the slander intended by the statute is to the person. Cro. Car. 141.

That if the words are of themselves actionable, without the necessity of alleging special damages, although a loss ensues, yet in this case the statute of Limitations is a good bar; but if the words at the time of the speaking of them are not actionable, but a subsequent loss ensues, which entitles the plaintiff to his action, in such case the statute is no bar. 1 Sid. 95: Raym. 61: and see 3 Mod. 111.

That if an action for words be founded upon an indictment, or other matter of record, it is not within this statute. 1 Sid. 95.

By the same stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, it is enacted, that all actions of trespass, of assault, battery, wounding, imprisonment, or any of them, shall be commenced and sued within FOUR years next after the cause of such actions or suits, and not after.

It seems, that if a man brings trespass for beating his servant, per quod servitium amisit, this is not such an action as is within this branch of the statute, being founded on the special damage. 1 Salk. 206: 5 Mod. 74.

If to an action of assault, battery, and imprisonment, the defendant pleads, as to the assault and imprisonment, the statute of Limitations, without answering particularly to the battery, otherwise than by using the words transgressio prædicta, it is sufficient; for these words are an answer to the whole. 1 Lev. 31.

By the same stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, it is enacted, that all actions of trespass quare clausum fregit, all actions of trespass, detinue, action sur trover and replevin for taking away of goods and chattels, all actions of account, other than such accounts as concern the trade of merchandize between merchant and merchant, their factors or servants, all actions on the case, (other than for slander,) all actions of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, and all actions of debt for arrearages of rent, shall be commenced and sued within SIX years next after the cause of action.

Provision is made for feme-coverts, persons that are non compos, imprisoned, or beyond sea.

Under the head of Actions upon the Case are included actions for libels, criminal conversation, seduction, and actions for such words as are not actionable without a special damage; and all other actions on the case, being of equal mischief, and plainly within the intention of the legislature. See Cro. Car. 245, 333: 2 Saund. 120: 2 Mod. 71: 1 Sid. 455: 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 307, in n. As to actions in the Admiralty for Seamen's wages, see post. III.

It hath been adjudged, that an action of debt on stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13, for not setting out tithes, is not within the statute; the action being grounded on an act of Parliament, which is the highest record. Cro. Car. 513; Talory v. Jackson: 1 Saund. 38: 2 Saund. 66: 1 Sid. 305, 415: 1 Keb. 95: 2 Keb. 462.

So an action of debt for rent reserved on a lease by indenture is out of the statute, the lease by indenture being equal to a specialty. Hutt. 109: 1 Saund. 38.

Also an action of debt for an escape is not within the statute; not only because it is founded in maleficio, and arises on a contract in law, which is different from those actions of debt on a lending or contract mentioned in the statute, but also because it is grounded on stat. 1 Rich. 2. cap. 12, which first gave an action of debt for an escape, there being no remedy for creditors before, but by action on the case. 1 Saund. 37; Jones v. Pope: 1 Lev. 191: 2 Keb. 903: 1 Sid. 305.

So this statute cannot be pleaded to an action of debt brought against a sheriff for money by him levied on a fieri facias; because the action is founded in maleficio, as also upon the judgment on which the fieri facias issued, which is a matter of record. 1 Mod. 212, 245: 2 Show. 79.

An action of debt on an award under the hand and seal of the arbitrators, though the submission was by parol, is not within the statute. 2 Saund. 64: Sid. 415: 1 Lev. 273: 2 Keb. 462, 496, 533.

An action of debt for a fine of a copyholder is not within the statute. 1 Keb. 536: 1 Lev. 273.

If a man recovers a judgment or sentence in France for money due to him, the debt must be considered here only as a debt by simple contract, and the statute of Limitations will run upon it. 2 Vern. 540 Sed qu. See Dougl. 1.

If the plaintiff be in England at the time the cause of action accrues, the time of Limitation begins to run, so that if he, or (if he dies abroad) his representative does not sue within six years, he is barred by the statute. 1 Wils. par. 1. 134. See stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. post. III.

It seems that to an assumpsit brought by the assignees of a bankrupt, for a debt due to the bankrupt, this statute is a good bar; for though the assignment is by force of an act of Parliament, yet the assignees stand only in the place of the bankrupt, and can have no other right nor remedy than he had. 2 Lev. 166: 3 Keb. 645: Comb. 70.

It seems clearly agreed, that though the statutes of Limitation bind the courts of equity, that yet a trust is not within these statutes. March 129. 2 Salk. 124.

A charity

A charity is not barred by length of time, nor within the ſtatute of Limitations. 2 Vern. 399.

So it hath been held, that a legacy is not within the ſtatute of Limitations. 1 Vern. 256.

It ſeems to be the doctrine of Courts of Equity, that mortgages are not within the ſtatute of Limitations; yet where a man comes in at an old hand, it hath been ſometimes decreed, that the poſſeſſor ſhould account no further than for the profits made in his own time, to diſcourage the ſtirring in ſuch dormant titles; alſo the courts have allowed length of time to be pleaded in bar, where the mortgaged eſtate hath deſcended as a fee without entry or claim from the mortgagor, and where the poſſeſſor would be intangled in a long account; and in theſe caſes the ſtatute of Limitations has been mentioned as a proper direction to go by. 1 Chan. Ca. 102. See title Mortgage.

III. This ſtatute cannot be a bar unleſs the ſix years are expired, after there hath been complete cauſe of action; as if a man promiſe to pay 10*l.* to J. S. when he came from Rome, or when he marries, and ten years after J. S. marries, or comes from Rome, the right of action accrues from the happening of the contingency; from which time the ſtatute ſhall be a bar, and not from the time of the promiſe. Godb. 437.

So in an action on the caſe wherein the plaintiff declared, that in conſideration that he would forbear to ſue the defendant for ſome ſheep killed by the defendant's dog, the defendant promiſed to make him ſatisfaction upon requeſt, and that at ſuch a time he requeſted, &c. it was held, that the right of action accrued from the requeſt, not from the time of killing the ſheep; that therefore the defendant could not plead the ſtatute of Limitations, the requeſt being within ſix years, though the killing the ſheep and promiſe of ſatisfaction was long before. Godb. 437: See 1 Lev. 48: 1 Sid. 66: 1 Keb. 177.

So if a note or bill of exchange is given, payable at a certain time after date, the cauſe of action does not accrue until after the expiration of the time ſpecified; and if an action is brought within ſix years after that time, the ſtatute is not a bar. But if the ſuit is not commenced within ſix years after that time, the defendant may plead that the cauſe of action did not accrue within ſix years, but he muſt not plead that he did not promiſe within ſix years, i. e. if he is the perſon firſt liable to the payment, becauſe the promiſe is made at the time of making the note, &c. It may be otherwiſe in the caſe of an indorſer, who is not liable until default made by the drawer of the note, or accepter of the bill; but in his caſe, Non accrevit infra ſex annos, is a ſafe and good plea. For ſimilar caſes, ſee 2 Salk. 422: 1 Vent. 191: 3 Keb. 613: Cro. Car. 245-6, 333: 1 Jon. 252: 3 Mod. 110, &c.: Allen 62: 2 Salk. 420: Comb. 26.

Where a party has been guilty of any fraud in his dealings or accounts, the Courts of Law and Equity have determined, that he ſhall only protect himſelf by the ſtatute of Limitations from the time his fraud is diſcovered. 3 P. Wms. 143: Doug. 630.

It is clearly agreed, that the ſtatute of Limitations is a good plea in a Court of Equity. March 129: 1 Salk. 424.

But it has been agreed, that the ſtatute of Limitations is no plea in the Court of Admiralty, or Spiritual Court, where they proceed according to their law, and in a matter in which they have cogniſance. 6 Mod. 25, 26: 2 Salk. 424: 3 Keb. 366, 392.

Therefore, for a ſuit upon a contract ſuper altum mare, no prohibition ſhould go upon their refuſal of a plea of the ſtatute of Limitations. 6 Mod. 26.

So it has been held not to be pleadable to a proceeding in the Spiritual Court, pro violenta manuum injectione in clericum, becauſe the proceeding is pro reformatione morum, not for damages. 2 Salk. 424.

It was formerly doubted, whether to a ſuit in the Admiralty for mariners wages, this ſtatute is a good plea; becauſe it is ſaid, that this is a matter properly determinable at Common Law; and the allowing the Admiralty juriſdiction therein, only a matter of indulgence. 2 Salk. 424: 6 Mod. 25.

But this is now ſettled by ſtat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16, by which it is enacted, That all ſuits and actions in the Court of Admiralty for Seamen's wages, ſhall be commenced and ſued within ſix years next after the cauſe of ſuch ſuits or actions ſhall accrue, and not after.

IV. 1. The ſtatute 21 Jac. 1. c. 16, being general, infants had been included, had they not been particularly excepted. 1 Lev. 31.

It hath been holden, that if an infant, during his infancy, by his guardian, bring an action, the defendant cannot plead the ſtatute of Limitations; although the cauſe of action accrued ſix years before, and the words of the ſtature are, that after his coming of age, &c. 2 Saund. 121.

It hath been held in Chancery, that if one receives the profits of an infant's eſtate, and ſix years after his coming of age, he brings a bill for an account, the ſtatute of Limitations is as much a bar to ſuch a ſuit, as if he had brought an action of account at Common Law; for this receipt of the profits of an infant's eſtate is not ſuch a truſt as, being a creature of the Court of Equity, the ſtatute ſhall be no bar to; for he might have his action of account againſt him at law, and therefore no neceſſity to come into this court for the account; for the reaſon why bills for an account are brought here, is from the nature of the demand, and that they may have a diſcovery of books, papers, and the party's oath, for the more eaſy taking of the account, which cannot be ſo well done at law; but if the infant lies by for ſix years after he comes of age, as he is barred of his action of account at law, ſo ſhall he be of his remedy in this court. 1 Abr. Eq. 304. c. 10: Pre. Ch. 518.

2. It hath been a matter of much controverſy, whether the exception relative to merchants' accounts extends to all actions and accounts relating to merchants and merchandize, or to actions of account open and current only; the words of the ſtatute being, "All actions of treſpaſs, &c. all actions of account and upon the caſe, other than ſuch actions as concern the trade of merchants;" ſo that by the words, other than ſuch actions, not being ſaid actions of account, it has been inſiſted that all actions concerning merchants are excepted. But it is now ſettled, that accounts open and current only are within the ſtatute; that therefore if an account be ſtated and ſettled between merchant and merchant, and a ſum certain agreed to be due to one of them, if in ſuch caſe he to whom the money is due, does not bring his action within the limited time, he is barred by the ſtatute. See 1 Jon. 401: 2 Saund. 124, 125: 1 Lev. 287,

298: 2 Keb. 622: 1 Vent. 90: 1 Mod. 270: 2 Mod. 312: 2 Vern. 456.

So it hath been adjudged, that by the exception in the statute concerning merchants accounts, no other actions are excepted but actions of account. Carth 226.

Also it hath been adjudged, that bills of exchange for value received, are not such matters of account as are intended by the exception in the statute of Limitations. Carth. 226.

An open current account, between tradesmen or others, is not within the statute, supposing the last article of the debt in the account was contracted within six years; otherwise, in such case, the statute is a bar. J. M.

This exception does not extend to a tradesman's account with his customer; for in this case there are not mutual dealings: and the tradesman is barred by the statute from recovering for more than those articles which have been sold within six years. Bull. N. P. 149.

3. The clause of the statute as to persons beyond sea, extends only to such as are actually so. For where to non assumpsit infra sex annos, the plaintiff replied, that when the cause of action accrued, he was resident in foreign parts out of the kingdom of England, viz. Glasgow in Scotland; this was held ill on demurrer; Scotland not being a foreign part within the meaning of the statute, the express words of which are, beyond the seas. Therefore a foreigner, or person resident abroad, shall never be barred from bringing his action, from any length of time while out of the kingdom, for the statute does not begin to run until he has come into it; though any of the persons who are under the disabilities mentioned in the statute, may nevertheless, during the time such disabilities exist, bring their actions. Espinasse, N. P. 149, 150.

It seems to have been agreed, that the exception extends only where the creditors or plaintiffs are so absent, and not to debtors or defendants, because the first only are mentioned in the statute; and this construction has the rather prevailed, because it was reputed the creditor's folly, that he did not file an original, and outlaw the debtor, which would have prevented the bar of the statute. Cro. Car. 245, 333: 1 Jon. 252: 1 Lev. 143: 3 Mod. 311: 2 Lutw. 950: 1 Salk. 420.

But as the creditor's being beyond sea is saved by stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 16, so now by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16, it is enacted, That if any person or persons, against whom there is or shall be any cause of suit or action for seamen's wages, or against whom there shall be any cause of action of trespass, detinue, action sur trover or replevin, for taking away goods or chattels, or of action of account, or upon the case, or of debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, of debt for arrearages of rent, or assault, menace, battery, wounding and imprisonment, or any of them, be, or shall be, at the time of any such cause of suit or action given or accrued, fallen or come, beyond the seas; that then such person or persons, who is or shall be entitled to any such suit or action, shall be at liberty to bring the said actions against such person and persons after their return from beyond the seas, within such times as are limited for the bringing of the said actions by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16.

If one only of a number of partners lives abroad, if the others be in England, the action must be brought within six years after the cause of action arises. 4 Term Rep. 516.

4. A. received money belonging to a person who before died intestate, and to whom B. after such receipt took out administration, and brought an action against A. to which he pleaded the statute of Limitations; the plaintiff replied, and shewed that administration was committed to him such a year, which was infra sex annos; though six years were expired since the receipt of the money, yet not being so since the administration committed, the action not barred by the statute. 1 Salk. 421: Skin. 555: 4 Mod. 376: Latch 335.

It is said in general, that where one brings an action before the expiration of six years, and dies before judgment, the six years being then expired, this shall not prevent his executor. 2 Salk. 424-5.

But if an executor sues upon a promissory note to the testator, and dies before judgment, and six years from the original cause of action are actually expired, and the executor brings a new action in four years after the first executor's death, the statute of Limitations shall be a bar to such action; for though the debt does not become irrecoverable, by an abatement of the action after the six years elapsed by the plaintiff's death; yet the executor should make a recent prosecution, to which the clause in the statute, § 4, that provides a year after the reversal of a judgment, &c. may be a good direction, or shew that he came as early as he could, because there was a contest about the will, or right of administration; for the statute was made for the benefit of the defendants, to free them from actions when their witnesses were dead, or their vouchers lost. 2 Stra. 907: Fitzgib. 81.

Under the equity of the above-mentioned section, in all cases of executors, if the six years be not elapsed at the time of the testator's death, and the executor takes out proper process within the year, it will save the bar by reason of the Limitation, even though the six years, within which the demand accrued, be elapsed before process sued out. Bull. N. P. 150, Carver v. James, Trin. 15 Geo. 2. C. B.

If there be no executor against whom the plaintiff may bring his action, he shall not be prejudiced by the statute of Limitations, nor shall any laches in such case be imputed to him. 2 Vern 695.

5. It seems agreed, that there being no Courts, or the Courts of Justice being shut, is no plea to avoid the bar of the statute of Limitations; as where after the Civil War an assumpsit was brought, and the defendant pleaded the statute of Limitations; to which the plaintiff replied, that a civil war had broke out, and that the government was usurped by rebels, which hindered the course of justice, and by which the courts were shut up, and that within six years after the war ended he commenced his action; this replication was held ill, for the statute being general, must work upon all cases which are not exempted by the exception. 1 Keb. 157: 1 Lev. 31: Carth. 157: 2 Salk. 420.

It is clearly agreed, that the defendant's being a Member of Parliament, and entitled to privilege, will not save a bar of the statute; because the plaintiff might have filed an original without being guilty of any breach of privilege. 1 Lev. 31, 111: Carth. 136, 7.

It is said, that if a man sues in Chancery, and pending the suit there, the statute of Limitations attaches on his demand, and his bill is afterwards dismissed, the matter being being properly determinable at Common Law; in such case the Court will preserve the plaintiff's right, and will not suffer the statute to be pleaded in bar to his demand. 1 Vern. 73, 74.

If the statute of Limitations be pleaded to an action, the plaintiff to save his action may reply, that he had commenced the suit in an inferior Court within the time of Limitation, and that it was removed to Westminster by habeas corpus; and this shall be allowed by a favourable construction of the statute of Limitations; although in strictness the suit is commenced in the Court above, when it is removed by habeas corpus. 1 Sid. 228: 3 Keb. 263: 1 Lev. 143: also vide 2 Salk. 424: 2 Stra. 719: Bull. N. P. 151. See post. 6.

6. It is clearly agreed, that the suing out an original will save a bar of the statute of Limitations, and that thereupon the defendant may be outlawed; and that if beyond sea at the time of the outlawry, though it shall be reversed after his return, yet the plaintiff may bring another original by journies accounts, and thereby take advantage of his first writ. Carth. 136: 1 Salk. 420: 3 Mod. 311.

Also it is agreed, that the suing out a latitat is a sufficient commencement of a suit, to save the Limitation of time, because the latitat is the original in B. R. and may be continued on record as an original writ. 1 Sid. 53, 60: Carth. 233: 1 Salk. 421: see ante II. 2.

Also it hath been ruled, that to a plea of the statute of Limitations the plaintiff may reply, that he sued out a latitat, and continued it down by a vicecomes non misit breve, without concluding prout patet per recordum; for the latitat roll is only for the private use of the Court, and no record. 2 Keb 46. The same is law, as to a bill of Middlesex. See Sty. 156, 178: 2 Ld. Raym. 880: 1 Stra. 550: 2 Stra. 736: 2 Ld. Raym. 1441; and 2 Burr. 961.

But if the suing out of a latitat be replied to a plea of the statute of Limitations, the defendant, in order to maintain that plea, may aver the real time of suing it out in opposition to the teste. 2 Bur. 950.—And though the suing out an original, or latitat, will be a sufficient commencement of a suit, yet the plaintiff, in order to make it effectual, must shew that he hath continued the writ to the time of the action brought. Carth. 144: 2 Salk. 420: 1 Lutw. 101, 254: 3 Mod. 33. That the attorney's writing the continuances on the writ in his chambers is sufficient, see 1 Sid. 53: 1 Keb. 140. Also vide Carth. 144: 2 Salk. 420: 1 Salk. 421. The continuances may be entered up, at any time, before the plaintiff replies. The process sued and filed, and the continuances thereon, must be set forth by the plaintiff in his replication. J. M. See 3 Term Rep. 662: 1 Wils. 167: Esp. N. P. 153.

7. It is clearly agreed, that if after the six years the debtor acknowledges the debt, and promises payment thereof, that this revives it, and brings it out of the statute; as if a debtor by promissory note, or simple contract, promises within six years of the action brought that he will pay the debt; though this was barred by the statute, yet it is revived by the promise; for as the note itself was at first but an evidence of the debt, so that being barred, the acknowledgment and promise is a new evidence of the debt; and being proved, will maintain an assumpsit for recovery of it. 1 Salk. 28, 29: Carth. 470: 5 Mod. 425, 426: 2 Show. 126: 2 Vent. 151.

Also it hath been adjudged, that a conditional promise will revive a debt barred by the statute of Limitations; as where to an assumpsit by an executor for goods sold and delivered by the testator, the defendant pleaded the statute, and upon evidence it appeared, that the defendant within six years, being applied to by the executor for the debt, said, "If you prove that I have the goods, I will pay you;" which being fully proved at the trial, it was held that this conditional promise revived the debt; and that though made to the executor, after the death of the testator, it was sufficient to maintain the issue; because the promise did not give any new cause of action, but only revived the old cause, and was of no other use, but to prevent the bar by the statute of Limitations. Carth. 470: 1 Salk. 29: 5 Mod. 425.

So it hath been held that a bare acknowledgment of the debt within six years of the action, is sufficient to revive it, and prevent the statute, though no promise was made. Carth. 470.

If an indebitatus assumpsit for goods sold, be brought against four persons, who plead the statute of Limitations, and it be found that one of them promised within six years, there can be no judgment against him; for the contract being intire, it must be found that they all promised. 2 Vent. 151.—But where there are two or more drawers of a joint and several promissory note, the acknowledgment of one may be given in evidence in a separate action against another, and will defeat the effect of the statute. Dougl. 629.

It seems to be the doctrine of the Courts of Equity, that if a man by will or deed subject his lands to the payment of his debts, debts barred by the statute of Limitations shall be paid, for they are debts in equity, and the duty remains; and the statute hath not extinguished that, though it hath taken away the remedy. 1 Salk. 154: 2 Vern. 141.

Also it hath been ruled in equity, that if a man has a debt due to him by note, or a book debt, and has made no demand of it for six years, so that he is barred by the statute of Limitations; yet if the debtor, or his executor, after the six years, puts out an advertisement in the Gazette, or any other news-paper, that all persons who have any debts owing to them, may apply to such a place, and that they shall be paid; this (though general, and therefore might be intended of legal subsisting debts only) yet amounts to such an acknowledgment of that debt which was barred, as will revive the right, and bring it out of the statute again. Abr. Eq. 305.

Any acknowledgment of the existence of the debt, however slight, will take it out of the statute, and the Limitation will then run from that time: and where an expression is ambiguous, it shall be left to the consideration of the Jury, whether it amounts or not to such acknowledgment. 2 Term Rep. 760.

One of two makers of a joint and several promissory note having become a bankrupt, the payee receives a dividend under his commission, on account of the note; this will prevent the other maker from availing himself of the statute of Limitations, in an action brought against him for the remainder of the money due on the note; the dividend having been received within six years before the action brought. 2 H. Black. Rep. 340.

If there be a mutual account of any sort between a plaintiff and defendant, for any item of which credit has been given within six years, that is evidence of an acknowledgment of there being such an open account between the parties, and of a promise to pay the balance so as to take the case out of the statute. 6 Term Rep. 189.

8. Where the cause of action is to arise from an executory consideration, as some act to be performed, and a promise to pay in consequence of it, there non assumpsit infra sex annos is not the proper plea; for the assumpsit does not arise till the consideration is performed, it should be actio non accrevit infra sex annos. Espinasse N. P. 156. See 2 Salk. 422: Bull. N. P. 151.

It seems to be admitted, that the statute of Limitations must be pleaded positively by him that would take advantage thereof; and that the same cannot be given in evidence, especially in an assumpsit, because the statute speaks of a time past, and relates to the time of making the promise. 1 Lev. 111: 1 Sid. 253; and see Cro. Jac. 115. See ante II. 2.

But in debt for rent, upon nil debet pleaded, the statute of Limitations may be given in evidence; for the statute has made it no debt at the time of the plea pleaded, the words being in the present tense. 1 Salk. 278.

In replevin the defendant pleaded Not guilty, De capt' prædict' infra sex annos jam ultimo elapsos; and though it was urged, that this was the same with pleading non cepit, and if he did not take, he could not be guilty of the detainer; and if this way of pleading were not allowed, the statute would be entirely evaded as to this action; yet the plea was held ill, because he ought to have answered to the detainer, as well as to the taking; also a thing may be lawfully distrained, although unlawfully kept; as by being put into a castle, &c. by which means it could not be replevied. 1 Sid. 81: 1 Keb. 279; and see Raym. 86: 1 Lev. 110: 1 Keb. 566.

If a debt be set off by way of plea, the statute of Limitations may be replied to it. 2 Stra. 1271.

LIMITATION OF THE CROWN, See this Dictionary, title King I.

LIMITATION OF ESTATE; A modification or settlement of an Estate, determining how long it shall continue; or is rather a qualification of a precedent Estate. A Limitation is denominated by Littleton, a condition in law. Litt. § 380: 1 Inst. 234.—It is generally made by such words as durante vita, quamdiu, dum, &c. And if there be not a performance according to the Limitation, it shall determine an Estate without entry or claim; which a condition doth not. 10 Rep. 41: 1 Inst. 204. See this Dictionary, title Condition I. 2.

Limitation is also taken for the compass and time of an Estate; as where one doth give lands to a man, to hold to him and his heirs male, and to him and the heirs female, &c. here the daughters shall not have any thing in it so long as there is a male, for the Estate to the heirs-male is first limited. Co. Lit. 3, 13.

If a Limitation of an Estate be uncertain, the Limitation is void; and the Estate shall remain as if there had been no such Limitation. Cro. Eliz. 216. But a thing that is limited in a will by plain words, shall not be afterwards made uncertain by general words which follow. Hil. 23 Car. B. R. Where a devise is to the eldest son, upon condition that he pays such legacies; and if he refuses, the land shall remain to the legatees: on his refusal, the legatees may enter by way of Limitation. Noy, 51. And in all cases, where, after a condition, an interest is granted to a stranger, it is a Limitation. 1 Leon. 269: Cro. Eliz. 204. See title Condition I. 2.

As to the origin and progress of the Limitation of Estates, See 1 Inst. 271. b. in n; and this Dictionary under title Conveyance:—See also titles Estate; Deed; Feoffment; Gift; Grant; Lease and Release; Trusts; Uses; Powers, &c. From the note above cited has been extracted the following summary with respect to the Limitations and modifications of landed property, unknown to the Common Law; which have been introduced under the Statute of Uses, stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10.

The principal of these are known by the general appellation of springing or secondary uses. No Estate could be limited upon or after a fee, though it were a base or qualified fee; nor could a fee or estate of freehold be made to cease as to one person and to vest in another, by any Common-law conveyance. But there are instances where even by the Common Law these secondary Estates seem to have been allowed, when limited, or rather when declared by way of use. See Jenk. Cent. 8. ca. 52. After the Statute of Uses the Judges seem to have long hesitated whether they should receive them. In Chudleigh's Case, (1 Rep. 120: Jenk. 276: Poph. 70: 1 And. 309,) it was strongly contended that it would be wrong to make any Estate of freehold and inheritance, lawfully vested, to cease as to one, and to vest in others against the rule of law; and that no Estates should be raised by way of use, but those which could be raised by livery of seisin at the Common Law. The Courts however admitted them. After they were admitted it was found necessary to circumscribe them within certain bounds: because when an Estate in fee-simple is first limited, there is no method by which the first taker can bar or destroy the secondary Estate; as it is not affected either by a Fine or Common Recovery.

It is now settled, that when an Estate in fee-simple is limited, a subsequent Estate may be limited upon it, if the event upon which it is to take place be such, that, if it does happen, it must necessarily happen within the compass of one or more life or lives in being, and 21 years and some months over; [i. e. as many months as it is possible a child may be legitimately born after the death of its father:] it was long before the Courts agreed on this period; which was not arbitrarily prescribed by our Courts of Justice with respect to these secondary fees, but wisely and reasonably adopted in analogy to the cases of freehold and inheritance, which cannot be limited by way of remainder, so as to postpone a complete bar of the entail, by Fine or Recovery for a larger space.

But the reason which induced the Courts to adopt this analogy, with respect to these Estates when limited upon an Estate in fee-simple, does not hold when they are limited upon or after an Estate in tail; because in this latter case, the tenant intail, by suffering a Common Recovery before the event takes place, bars or defeats the secondary Estate, and acquires the fee-simple absolutely discharged from it. See Page v. Haywood, 2 Salk. 570, and 1 Lev. 35: Goodman v. Cook, 2 Sid. 102. Hence, if these secondary Estates are limited upon or after an Estate in tail, they may be limited generally, without restraining or confining the event or contingency contingency upon which they are to take place to any period.

Thus, if an Estate be limited to A. and his heirs; and if B. (a person in esse) dies without leaving any issue of his body living at the time of his decease; or having such issue if all of them die before any of them attain the age of 21 years, then to C. and his heirs: here the Limitation to C. is limited after a previous Limitation in fee-simple, and it is a good Limitation; because the event upon which it is to take place, must, if it does happen at all, necessarily happen within the period of a life in being, and 21 years and a few months. But if the Estate were limited to A. and his heirs; and, after the decease of B., and a total failure of heirs or heirs-male of the body of B., to C. and his heirs; here as the secondary use is limited after a previous Limitation in fee-simple, and the event on which the fee limited to C. is to take place, is not such as must necessarily happen within the period prescribed by law (for B. may have issue, and that issue not fail till many years after the expiration of 21 years after B's decease), the Limitation to C. and his heirs is void. But suppose the Estates were limited to A. for life, then to trustees and their heirs, during his life, for preserving contingent remainders, then to A's first and other sons successively in tail-mail, with several remainders over; with a proviso, that if B. dies, and there should be a total failure of heirs or heirs-male of his body, the uses limited to A. and his sons, and the remainders over, shall determine; and the lands remain and go over to C. and his heirs: here the Limitation to C. and his heirs is limited upon or after previous Limitations for life or in tail; and the event upon which it is so to take effect, may possibly not happen till after a period of one or more life or lives in being and 21 years: but so far as it is limited on an event which may happen during the continuance either of one or more life or lives in being, it is within the bounds mentioned; and so far as it is limited on an event which may happen during the continuance of the Estate of the tenants in tail, or after them, the first tenant in tail in possession, by suffering a recovery before the event happens, may bar the Limitations over, and thereby acquire an Estate in fee-simple: and therefore the Limitation to C. and his heirs is good.

LITERARY PROPERTY.

The Property that the Author, or his assignee, hath in the copy of any work.

The right which an Author may be supposed to have in his own original literary compositions, so that no other person without his leave may publish or make profit of the copies, is classed by Blackstone among the species of property acquired by occupancy; being grounded on labour and invention. He expresses however some doubt whether it subsists by the Common Law; and this being still, after all the determinations on the subject, in some measure, vexata quæstio, the following extracts deserve the attention of the Student. See 2 Comm. 405.

When a man by the exertion of his rational powers, has produced an original work, he seems to have clearly a right to dispose of that identical work as he pleases; and any attempt to vary the disposition he has made of it, appears to be an invasion of that right. Now the identity of a literary composition consists entirely in the sentiment and the language. The same conceptions clothed in the same words, must necessarily be the same composition; and whatever method be taken of exhibiting that composition, to the ear or the eye of another, by recital, [See post, the case of Colman v. Wathen,] by writing, or by printing, in any number of copies, or at any period of time, it is always the identical work of the author which is so exhibited; and no other man, it hath been thought, can have a right to exhibit it, especially for profit, without the author's consent. This consent may perhaps be tacitly given to all mankind when an author suffers his work to be published by another hand, without any claim or reserve of right, and without stamping on it any marks of ownership: it being then a present to the publick, like building a church or bridge, or laying out a new highway. But in case the author sells a single book, or totally grants the copy-right, it hath been supposed, in the one case, that the buyer hath no more right to multiply copies of that book for sale, than he hath to imitate for the like purpose the ticket, which is bought for admission to an opera or a concert; and, in the other, that the whole property with all its exclusive rights, is perpetually transferred to the grantee. On the other hand it is urged; that though the exclusive property of the manuscript, and all which it contains, undoubtedly belongs to the Author before it is printed or published; yet from the instant of publication, the exclusive right of an Author, or his assigns to the sole communication of his ideas, immediately vanishes and evaporates; as being a right of too subtle and unsubstantial a nature, to become the subject of property at the Common Law, and only capable of being guarded by positive statutes and special provisions of the Magistrate. 2 Comm. 406.

The Roman law adjudged, that if one man wrote any thing on the paper or parchment of another, the writing should belong to the owner of the blank materials, meaning thereby the mechanical operation of writing; for which it directed the scribe to receive a satisfaction: for in works of genius and invention, as in painting on another man's canvas, the same law gave the canvas to the painter. As to any other property, in the works of the Understanding, that law is silent; though the sale of literary copies, for the purposes of recital or multiplication, is certainly as ancient as the times of Terence, Martial, and Statius. 2 Comm. 407.

But whatever inherent copy-right might have been supposed to subsist by the Common Law, the statute 8 Ann. c. 19, hath now declared, that the Author and his assigns shall have the sole liberty of printing and reprinting his works for the term of fourteen years, and no longer; [the words of the statute]; and hath protected that property by additional penalties and forfeitures: directing farther, that if at the end of that term the Author himself be living the right shall then return to him, for another term of the same duration. A similar privilege is extended to the new inventors of Prints and Engravings, by stats. 8 Geo. 2. c. 13: 7 Geo. 3. c. 38: 17 Geo. 3. c. 57.——The above parliamentary protections appear to have been suggested by the exception in the statute of monopolies, 21 Jac. 1. c. 3; which allows a Royal patent of privilege to be granted for fourteen years to any inventor of a new manufacture, for the sole working or making of the same: by virtue whereof it is held, that a temporary property therein becomes vested in the King's patentee. [See this Dictionary title Patents.] 1 Vern. 62: 2 Comm. 407.

Whether the productions of the mind could communicate a right of property, or of exclusive enjoyment, in reason and nature; and if such a moral right existed, whether it was recognized and supported by the Common Law of England; and whether the Common Law was intended to be restrained by the statute of Queen Anne, are questions upon which the learning and talents of the highest legal characters in this kingdom have been powerfully and zealously exerted. These questions have, by the supreme Court of Judicature in the kingdom, been so determined, that an Author has no right at present beyond the limits fixed by that statute. See the case of Donaldson v. Beckett, Bro. P. C.

As that determination, however, was contrary to the opinion of Lord Mansfield, of the learned Commentator, and of several other Judges, Mr. Christian has remarked, that every person may still be permitted to indulge his own opinion upon the propriety of it, without incurring the imputation of arrogance; and he proceeds to deliver his sentiments in the following manner.

Nothing is more erroneous than the common practice of referring the origin of moral rights, and the system of natural equity to that savage state, which is supposed to have preceded civilized establishments; in which literary composition, and of consequence the right to it, could have no existence. But the true mode of ascertaining a moral right, seems to be to inquire whether it is such as the reason, the cultivated reason of mankind, must necessarily assent to. No proposition seems more conformable to that criterion, than that every one should enjoy the reward of his labour, the harvest where he has sown, or the fruit of the tree which he has planted. And if any private right ought to be preserved more sacred and inviolate than another, it is that where the most extensive benefit flows to mankind from the labour by which it is acquired. Literary Property, it must be admitted, is very different in its nature from a property in substantial and corporeal objects; and this difference has led some to deny its existence as property; but whether it is sui generis, or under whatever denomination of rights it may more properly be classed, it seems founded upon the same principle of general utility to Society, which is the basis of all other moral rights and obligations. Thus considered, an author's copy-right ought to be esteemed an inviolable right, established in sound reason and abstract morality: no less than eight of the twelve Judges were of opinion, that this was a right allowed and perpetuated by the Common Law of England: but six held, either that it did not exist, or that the enjoyment of it was abridged by the statute of Queen Ann: and that all remedy for the violation of it was taken away after the expiration of the terms specified in the Act; and agreeable to that opinion was the final judgment of the House of Lords. 1 Comm. 407. in n.

For the arguments at length of the Judges of the King's Bench, and the opinions of the rest, see the case of Millar v. Taylor. 4 Burr. 2303: 1 Blackst. Rep. 675. In that case the Court of King's Bench determined that an exclusive and permanent copy-right did actually subsist in Authors by the Common Law. But the effect of their opinion was contradicted by the determination of the House of Lords, in Donaldson v. Beckett, as above stated.

In Ireland, there is yet no statute to protect the copyright of authors. The following is a general abstract of the English statutes relative to this interesting subject, and of some points determined on their construction.

The stat. 8 Ann. c. 19, enacts, That the author of any book, and his assigns, shall in future have the sole liberty of printing it for fourteen years, to commence from the day of publishing thereof: and if any person within the said time shall print, reprint, or import any such book without the consent of the proprietor in writing, or shall knowingly publish it without such consent, the offender shall forfeit the books and sheets to the proprietor, and also 1*d.* for every sheet found in his custody, either printed or printing; half to the Crown, and half to him who will sue in any Court at Westminster. § 1.

No bookseller, printer, or other person, shall be liable to these forfeitures, unless the title to the copy of the book, [the whole book and every volume thereof, stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 53, § 6,] shall before such publication be entered in the register book of the Company of Stationers, at their Hall in London, and unless the consent of the proprietor be entered, paying 6*d.* for each entry; § 2.; nor unless nine copies of each book be delivered to the Company's warehouse-keeper before publication, for the use of the Royal library, the libraries of the university of Oxford and Cambridge, of the four universities in Scotland, of Sion College in London, and of the advocates at Edinburgh, § 5. and see stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 53, § 6.

But an action may be brought, or an injunction obtained in a Court of Equity, though the publication be not entered in the register of the Stationers' Company. 2 Black. Rep. 330.

If the Clerk of the Stationers Company shall neglect to make such entry, or to give a certificate thereof, then notice being given in the Gazette, the proprietor shall have the same benefit as if an entry were actually made: and the clerk shall forfeit 20*l.* stat. 8 Ann. c. 19, § 3.

The above statute particularly provided, by § 9, that the right of the Universities or any other person, to the printing or reprinting of any book already printed, should not be either prejudiced or confirmed: after the determination of the case of Donaldson v. Beckett, the Universities were so much alarmed at the decision, that they applied for and obtained an Act, stat. 15 Geo. 3. c 53; which secured to the two Universities in England, the Colleges or Houses of learning within the same, the four Universities in Scotland, and the colleges of Eton, Westminster, and Winchester, a perpetuity in the copy-right of all books given, or to be given, or devised to, or in trust for, them by the authors; which was sanctioned by the same penalties as those contained in the stat. 8 Ann, so long as the books or copies belonging to the said Universities or Colleges are printed only at their own printing presses, within the Universities or Colleges, and for their sole benefit. § 8.

Musical Compositions have been held to be within the meaning and protection of the statute. Cowp. 623. A fair and bona-fide Abridgment of any book, is considered as a new work: and however it may injure the sale of the original, yet it is not deemed in law to be a piracy, or violation of the author's copy-right. 1 Bro. C. R. 451: 2 Atk. 141.

Where an Author transfers all his right or interest in a publication to another; and happens to survive the first fourteen years, the second term will result to his assignee, and not to himself. 2 Bro. C. R. 80.

Evidence that the defendant acted a piece on the Stage, of which the plaintiff had bought the copy-right, is not evidence of a publication by the defendant, within the meaning of the statute. Colman v. Wathen, 5 Term Rep. 245. But no one has a right to take down a play in short hand, and to print it before it is published by the Author. Ambl. 694.

The two following statutes were also made, with a view still further to secure the property in books, and also to encourage printing in this country. The stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 36, (in force by stat. 29 Geo. 3. c. 55. § 5, till September 29, 1795, and from thence to the end of the then next session); provided, that if any book be originally written or printed and published in this country, and afterwards (within twenty years) reprinted abroad, and imported and exposed to sale here, the importer and seller should forfeit all such books to be cancelled, and for every offence should forfeit also 5*l.* and double the value of the books to be recovered with costs. The stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 20. § 57, extends the penalty to 10*l.* and double the value of the books; and renders all persons having such books in their possession for sale, liable to the forfeiture; and empowers Custom-house or Excise officers to seise them, who shall be rewarded accordingly.

Under these statutes it seems immaterial whether the author's copy-right is extinct or not, if the book has been reprinted in England within twenty years. 1 Comm. 407, in n. Every distinct sale of one book or a parcel, is a distinct offence, by which a new penalty is incurred, though the sales be on the same day. 3 Term Rep. 509.

It is worthy of remark, that the determination of the House of Lords in Donaldson and Beckett, which was supposed, at the time, to have given a mortal blow to the property and prosperity of Authors and Booksellers, has in fact, been one great means of increasing both. Few books are now republished without considerable alterations, additions, or annotations, by means of which they become, in fact, new works; and it is not worth any body's while then to pirate them in their original state. This has proved a spur to the industry of Authors, and the liberality of Booksellers; and perhaps no period ever produced so many new publications of acknowledged utility, as that which has elapsed since the memorable decision above alluded to; which for the moment cast a melancholy gloom over those who now enjoy its beneficial effects.

The following are the principal features and distinctions of the three statutes relative to Prints and Engravings. The stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 13, gives an exclusive privilege of publishing, to those who invent or design any print, for fourteen years only. The stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 28, extends the term to twenty-eight years absolutely, to all who either invent the design, or make a print from another's design or picture; and those who copy such prints within that time, forfeit all their copies to be destroyed; and 5*s.* for each copy. The stat. 17 Geo 3. c. 57, gives the proprietor an action to recover damages and double costs for the injury he has sustained by the violation of his right.

The assignee of a print may maintain an action on this last statute against any person who pirates it; and in such an action it is not necessary to produce the plate itself in evidence; one of the prints taken from the original plate is good evidence. 5 Term Rep. 41.

In analogy also to the above doctrine of Literary Property, the stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 38, gives to the proprietors of new patterns in printed linens, cottons, muslins, &c. the sole right of printing them for two months; and gives the proprietor injured his remedy by an action for damages.

LITH OF PICKERING, In the county of York, viz. the liberty, or a member of Pickering, from the Saxon, lid, i. e. membrum.

LITIGIOUS. The litigiousness of a church, is where several persons have, or pretend to, several titles to the patronage, and present several clerks to the Ordinary; it excuses him from refusing to admit any of them, till a trial of the right by jure patronatûs, or otherwise. Jenk. Cent. 11.

LITTERA, Litter.—Tres carectas litteræ, three cart loads of straw or litter. Mon. Angl. 2. par. fol. 33. b.

LITTLETON, Was a famous lawyer in the days of King Edward the Fourth, as appeareth by Staundf. Prær. c. 21. fol. 72. He wrote a book of great account, called Littleton's Tenures. See title Law-books.

LIVERY, from livre, i. e. insigne gestamen; or livver, traders.] Hath three significations. In one sense, it was used for a suit of clothes, cloak, gown, hat, &c. which a nobleman or gentleman gave to his servants or followers, with cognisance or without; mentioned in stat. 1 R. 2. c. 7, and divers other statutes. Formerly great men gave liveries to several who were not of their family, to engage them in their quarrels for that year; but afterwards it was ordained, that no man of any condition whatsoever should give any livery, but to his domestics, his officers, or counsel learned in the law. By stat. 1 R. 2, it was prohibited on pain of imprisonment; and the stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 7, made the offenders liable to ransom at the King's will, &c. which statute was farther confirmed and explained, annis 2 & 7 Hen. 4, and by stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 4: and yet this offence was so deeply rooted, that Ed. IV. was obliged to confirm the former statutes, and further to extend the meaning of them, adding a penalty of 5*l.* to every one that gave such Livery, and the like on every one retained for maintenance either by writing, oath, or promise, for every month. Stat. 8 Ed. 4. c. 2. But most of the above statutes are repealed by stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 4.

Livery, in the second signification, meant a delivery of possession to those tenants who held of the King in capite, or Knights service; as the King by his prerogative hath primer seisin of all lands and tenements so holden of him. Staundf. Prærog. 12.

In the third sense, Livery meant the writ which lay for the heir of age, to obtain the possession or seisin of his lands at the King's hands. F. N. B. 155. By the statute 12 Car. 2. c. 24, all wardships, Liveries, &c. are taken away. See title Tenures.

LIVERY i. e. DELIVERY, OF SEISIN; Liberatio seisinæ.] A delivery of possession of lands, tenements, and hereditaments, unto one that hath a right to the same; being a ceremony in the Common Law used in the conveyance of lands, &c. where an estate of fee-simple, fee-tail, or other freehold passeth. Bract. lib. 2. c. 18. And it is a testimonial of the willing departing of him who makes the Livery, from the thing whereof the Livery is made; and of the willing acceptance of the other party receiving the Livery; first invented, that the common people might have knowledge of the passing or alteration of estates from man to man, and thereby be better able to try in whom the right of possession of lands and tenements were, if the same should be contested, and they should be impanelled on Juries, or otherwise have to do concerning the same. West. Symb. par. 1. lib. 2.

The Common-law conveyance by feoffment is by no means perfected by the mere words of the deed; this ceremony of Livery of Seisin is very material to be performed, for without this the feoffee has but a mere estate at will. Lit. § 66. This Livery of Seisin is no other than the pure feodal investiture or delivery of corporeal possession of the land or tenement, which was held absolutely necessary to complete the donation. 2 Comm. c. 20. p. 311. See this Dictionary, title Feoffment III; Conveyance; Deed; Estate; Tenures.

Investitures, in their original rise, were probably intended to demonstrate in conquered countries, the actual possession of the Lord; and that he did not grant a bare litigious right, which the soldier was ill qualified to prosecute; but a peaceable and firm possession. And at a time when writing was seldom practised, a mere oral gift, at a distance from the spot that was given, was not likely to be either long or accurately retained in the memory of the by-standers, who were very little interested in the grant. Afterwards they were retained as a public and notorious act, that the country might take notice of and testify the transfer of the estate; and that such as claimed title by other means might know against whom to bring their actions. 2 Comm. 311.

In

In all well-governed nations some notoriety of this kind has been ever held requisite in order to acquire and ascertain the property of lands. And even in ecclesiastical promotions where the freehold passes to the person promoted, corporal possession is required at this day to vest the property completely in the new proprietor: who, according to the canonists, acquires the jus ad rem, or inchoate and imperfect right by nomination and institution; but not the jus in re, or complete and full right, unless by corporal possession. Therefore in dignities possession is given by installment; in rectories and vicarages by induction; without which no temporal rights accrue to the Minister; though every ecclesiastical power is vested in him by institution. So also even in descents of lands by our law, which are cast on the heir by act of the law itself, the heir has not plenum dominium, or full and complete ownership, till he has made an actual corporal entry into the lands; for if he dies before entry made, his heir shall not be entitled to take the possession, but the heir of the person who was last actually seised. 2 Comm. 312; see title Descent.

The corporal tradition of lands being sometimes inconvenient, a symbolical delivery of possession was in many cases anciently allowed, by transferring something near at hand, in the presence of credible witnesses; which by agreement should serve to represent the very thing designed to be conveyed; and an occupancy of this sign or symbol was permitted as equivalent to occupancy of the land itself. With our Saxon ancestors the delivery of a turf was a necessary solemnity to establish the conveyance of lands. And to this day the conveyance of our copyhold estates is usually made from the seller to the Lord or his steward, by delivery of a rod or verge; and then from the Lord to the purchaser, by redelivery of the same in the presence of a jury of tenants. 2 Com. 313.

Conveyances in writing were the last and most refined improvement. The mere delivery of possession, either actual or symbolical, depending on the ocular testimony and remembrance of the witnesses, was liable to be forgotten and misrepresented, and became frequently incapable of proof. Besides, the new occasions and necessities, introduced by the advancement of commerce, required means to be devised of charging and incumbering estates, and of making them liable to a multitude of conditions and minute designations, for the purposes of raising money without an absolute sale of the land; and sometimes the like proceedings were found useful, in order to make a decent and competent provision for the numerous branches of a family, and for other domestic views. None of which could be effected by a mere simple corporal transfer of the soil from one man to another, which was principally calculated for conveying an absolute unlimited dominion. Written deeds were therefore introduced in order to specify and perpetuate the peculiar purposes of the party who conveyed: yet still, for a very long series of years, they were never made use of, but in company with the more ancient and notorious method of transfer by delivery of corporal possession. 2 Comm. 314.

Livery of Seisin, by the Common Law, is necessary to be made upon every grant of an estate of freehold, in hereditaments corporeal; whether of inheritance or for life only. In hereditaments incorporeal it is impossible to be made, for they are not objects of the senses; and in Leases for years, or other chattel-interests, it is not necessary; the solemnity being appropriated to the conveyance of a freehold. And this is one reason why freeholds cannot be made to commence in futuro, because they cannot, at the Common Law, be made but by Livery of Seisin; which Livery, being an actual manual tradition of the land, must take effect in præsenti, or not at all. 2 Comm. 314. See this Dictionary, titles Limitation of Estate; Remainder.

On the creation of a freehold remainder, at one and the same time with a particular estate for years at the Common Law, Livery must be made to the particular tenant, without which nothing passeth to him in remainder; it being for the benefit of him in remainder, and not the lessee, who hath only a term: and if the lessee entereth, before Livery and Seisin made to him, the Livery shall be void. Lit. 60: 1 Inst. 49. But if such a remainder be created afterwards, expectant on a lease for years now in being, the Livery must not be made to the lessee for years, for then it operates nothing: nam quod semel meum est, amplius meum esse non potest; but it must be made to the remainder-man by consent of the lessee for years: for without his consent no Livery of the possession can be given; partly because such forcible Livery would be an ejectment of the tenant from his term; and partly for reasons connected with the doctrine of attornments. 2 Comm. 314, 5. See 1 Inst. 48, 9.

A lease for years is granted to A. B. with remainder to his right heirs, whereon Livery is made; the remainder is void, because there is not any person in esse, who can presently take by the Livery. 4 Leon. 67. There was a Lease made to a man and his wife, and their daughter, to hold from Michaelmas next, and the lessor made Livery after Michaelmas; this was adjudged good, being made by the lessor himself; but it had been otherwise, if it had been to be done by attorney, or if the lessor had made Livery before Michaelmas. 2 Rol. Rep. 109. Lease for twenty years to a man to commence from a time past; and after the expiration of the said term, then to him and his wife, and their son, for their lives, and the longest liver of them, with a letter of attorney to make Livery and Seisin, &c. It is a good lease for years, with remainder for life, if Livery and Seisin be made by the attorney at the time of executing the Lease; but if the Livery and Seisin be made by the attorney some time afterwards, in such case it is said the Livery is void. Moor 14.

A man may make a letter of attorney to deliver seisin by force of the deed, which may be contained in the same deed; and a letter of attorney may be likewise made to receive Livery and Seisin. 5 Rep 91: 1 Inst. 49, 52.

This Livery of Seisin is either in deed or in law: the distinctions between which are stated and explained in this Dictionary, title Feoffment III. Anciently this seisin was obliged to be delivered coram paribus de vicineto, before the peers or freeholders of the neighbourhood, who attested such delivery in the body or on the back of the deed: according to the rule of the feodal law, pares debent interesse investiturae feudi, & non alii: for which this reason is expresly given; because the peers or vassals of the Lord, being bound by their oath of fealty, will take care that no fraud be committed to his prejudice, which strangers might be apt to connive at. And though afterwards the ocular attestation of the pares was held unneceſſary, and Livery might be made before any credible witneſſes, yet the trial, in caſe it was diſputed (like that of all other atteſtations) was ſtill reſerved to the pares, or Jury of the county: and this is the reaſon why, if lands conveyed by feoffment lie in ſeveral counties, there muſt be as many Liveries of ſeiſin as there are counties. 2 Comm. 315, 6. See title Feoffment III. In addition to what is there ſaid, the following determinations afford information on the ſubject.

Where a houſe and lands are conveyed, the houſe is the principal, and the lands acceſſory; and there the Livery muſt be made, and not upon the land. 2 Rep. 31: 4 Leon. 374.

If a houſe or lands belong to an office, by grant of the office by deed, the houſe or land paſſeth without Livery: and by a fine, which is a feoffment of record, by a leaſe and releaſe, bargain and ſale by deed inrolled, exchange, &c. a freehold paſſeth without Livery; and ſo in a deed of feoffment to uſes, by virtue of the ſtatute of uſes. 1 Inſt. 49. So that Livery and Seiſin is not ſo commonly uſed as formerly: neither can an eſtate be created now by Livery and Seiſin only, without writing. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. See titles Conveyance; Eſtate.

If a deed of feoffment be delivered upon the land, "in the name of ſeiſin of all the lands," it will be a good Livery and Seiſin; but the bare delivery of a deed upon the land, though it may make the deed, it ſhall not amount to Livery and Seiſin, without thoſe words. 1 Inſt. 52, 181. If one makes a feoffment to four perſons, and Seiſin is delivered to three of them, in the name of all; the eſtate is veſted in all of them. 3 Rep. 26.

No perſon ought to be in the houſe, or upon the land, when Livery is made, but the feoffor and feoffee; all others are to be removed from it: if the leſſor feoffor, makes Livery and Seiſin, the leſſee being upon the land contradicting it, the Livery is void. Cro. Eliz. 321. A leſſor enfeoffed a ſtranger, and came to make Livery and ſeiſin, the leſſee's wife being in the houſe, the leſſor enters, and by force turns the wife into the backſide, which was part of the land let, and then he makes Livery in the houſe, in the name of all the lands let; as the woman was remaining all the while upon the land, and contradicting the Livery, the Livery was held void; but if ſhe had voluntarily gone out of the houſe, upon part of the land; or the leſſor had turned her into the ſtreet, ſo that ſhe had not been upon any part of the land, it had been good. Daliſ. Rep. 94.

If a man agrees to make a feoffment upon condition, and after makes a charter of feoffment without any condition, and then makes Livery and ſeiſin, ſecundum formam chartæ, this is abſolute without any condition; for the Livery is not made according to the agreement, but according to the charter. 34 Aſſ. 4. But if a perſon enfeoffs another, as a ſecurity for the payment of money, and afterwards makes Livery of ſeiſin to him and his heirs generally, the eſtate hath been holden to be upon condition; ſince the intent of the parties was not changed, but continued at the time of the Livery. 1 Inſt. 222. And where a charter of feoffment is made, and in the deed there is no condition; but when the feoffor would make a Livery of ſeiſin to the feoffee, by force of the deed, he, expreſſing the eſtate, makes Livery of ſeiſin upon condition, the feoffment is of force as if it had not been made. Lit. Sect. 359: 2 Danv. Abr. 13.

LONDON.

THE METROPOLIS of this kingdom, formerly called Augusta, has been built above three thousand years, and flourished for fifteen hundred years. Its Exchange, where merchants of all nations meet, is not to be equalled; and for stateliness of buildings, extent of bounds, learning, arts and sciences, traffick and trade, this city gives place to none in the world. Stow.

London is a County of itself. 4 Inst. 248. See this Dictionary, title Counties-Corporate. So it is a corporation by prescription, known by several names. 2 Inst. 330, Quo Warranto, passim.

During the violent proceedings that took place in the latter end of the reign of King Charles II. it was, among other things, thought expedient to new-model most of the corporation towns in the kingdom: for which purpose many of those bodies were persuaded to surrender their charters; and informations in the nature of Quo Warranto were brought against others, upon a supposed, or frequently a real forfeiture of their franchises by neglect or abuse of them; and the consequence was, that the liberties of most of them were seised into the hands of the King, who granted them fresh charters, with such alterations as were thought expedient; and during their state of anarchy the Crown named all their magistrates. This exertion of power, though perhaps, in summo jure, it was for the most part strictly legal, gave a great and just alarm; the new-modelling of all corporations being a very large stride towards establishing arbitrary power; and therefore it was thought necessary, at the Revolution, to bridle this branch of the prerogative, at least so far as regarded the metropolis, by stat. 2 W. & M. st. 1. c. 8; which enacts, that the franchises of the city of London shall never hereafter be seised or forejudged for any forfeiture or misdemeanor whatsoever. The Quo Warranto against London issued in Trinity term, 35 C. 2, on which judgment was given in B. R. that the charter and franchises of the said city should be seised into the King's hands as forfeited. This judgment was reversed by the above stat. 2 W. & M. and all officers and companies restored, &c.; and the act provided, that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of the city of London should for ever thereafter be, and prescribe to be, a Body Corporate and politic, &c.; and enjoy all their franchises, &c. See 3 Comm. 263, 4. Before this, by Magna Carta, c. 9, it was provided, that the city of London should have all their ancient usages, liberties, and customs which they had used to enjoy; which is confirmed by stat. 14 Ed. 3. st. 1. c. 1.

It is divided into twenty-six Wards, over each of which there is an Alderman; and is governed by a Lord Mayor, who is chosen yearly, and presented to the King, or in his absence to his Justices, or the Barons of the Exchequer at Westminster. Chart. K Hen. III.

Before the time of Henry III, the city was divided into twenty-four Wards. By Parliament Anno 17 R. 2, Farringdon-without was severed from Farringdon-within, and made a distinct ward. By charter 1 Ed. 3, and patent 4 Ed. 6, the King granted to the citizens and their successors, the villa, manor, and borough of Southwark; whereupon, by an order of the Court of Mayor and Aldermen, confirmed by the Common Council, Southwark was made the 26th ward, by the name of the Bridge-Ward-without; on the last day of July, 4 Ed. 6. See Com. Dig. title London (A).

Before

Before and since the Conquest, to the time of Ric. I. London was governed by a Port-Reeve, and 1 R. 1. by two bailiffs, and afterwards by a Mayor appointed by the King; but King John, in the 10th of his reign, granted them liberty to chuse a Mayor. 2 Inst. 253. See 2 Stow. 450: Com. Dig. title London (C). The presenting and swearing of the Lord Mayor at Westminster, to be on the 9th of November, New Style. 24 Geo. 2. c. 48. § 11; to be admitted and sworn at Guildhall, London, the day preceding. Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 30. § 4.

The Lord Mayor of London, for the time being, is Chief Justice of gaol-delivery; Escheator within the liberties, and Bailiff of the river Thames, &c. He is a high officer in the city, having all Courts for distribution of justice under his jurisdiction, viz. The Court of Hustings, Sheriff's Court, Mayor's Court, Court of Common Council, &c. 2 Inst. 380.

There are three ways to be a freeman of London: by servitude of an apprenticeship; by birthright, as being the son of a freeman; and by redemption, i. e. by purchase, under an order of the Court of Aldermen. 4 Mod. 145.

The child of a freeman, when of age, may, in consideration of a present fortune, bar herself of her customary part. 2 Strange 947. An agreement on marriage, that the husband shall take up the freedom of London, binds the distribution of his effects. 1 Strange 455. See title Executor V. 9.

King Henry IV. granted to the Mayor and Commonalty of London the assise of bread, beer, ale, &c. and victuals, and things saleable in the city. In London every day, except Sunday, is a market overt, for the buying and selling of goods and merchandise. 5 Rep. 85. But no person, not being a freeman of London, shall keep any shop or other place to put to sale by retail any goods or wares, or use any handicraft trade for hire, gain or sale within the city, upon pain of forfeiting 5*l.* 8 Rep. 124: Chart. Car. I.

Persons making ill and unserviceable goods in London, the chief officers of the company to which such persons do or ought to belong, may seize and carry them to the Guildhall, and have the goods tried by a Jury; and if found defective, they may break them, &c. Trin. 34 Car. 2. B. R. A person must be a freeman of London to be entitled to carry on merchandise there. Chart. Car. I.

By charter Henry I. all the men of London, and all their goods shall be free from scot and lot, dane-gilt and murder; and from all toll, passage and Lestage, and all other customs through all England and the ports of the sea. So by charters 11 Hen. 3, and 50 H. 3. See 4 Inst. 252. But he who claims these privileges must not only be a freeman, but an inhabitant of London. 1 H. Black. Rep. 206: 4 Term Rep. 144.

The customs of London are many and various.—They are against the Common Law, but made good by special usage, and confirmed by act of Parliament. 4 Inst. 249: 8 Rep. 126. In setting forth a custom or usage in the city of London, it must be said antiqua civitas, or it will not be good. 2 Leon. 99.

There is a custom in London to punish by information in the Mayor's Court, in the name of the common serjeant of the city, assaults on Aldermen, and affronting language, &c. 7 Mod. 28, 29.

Where a woman exerciseth a trade in London, wherein her husband doth not intermeddle, by the custom she shall have all advantages, and be sued as a feme sole merchant: but if the husband meddle with the trade of the wife, or carry on the same trade, it is otherwise. 1 Cro. 63: 3 Keb. 902. See titles Baron and Feme; Bankrupt.

An arrest may be made in London on the plaintiff's entering his plaint in either of the Compters, and a serjeant of London need not shew his mace when he arrests one; and the liberties of the city extend to the suburbs and Temple Bar. Jenk. Cent. 291.

The customs of the city of London shall be tried by the certificate of the Mayor and Aldermen, certified by the mouth of their Recorder, upon a surmise from the party alleging it, that the custom ought to be thus tried; else it must be tried by the county. 1 Inst. 74: 4 Burr. 248: Bro. Abr. title Trial. pl. 96. As, the custom of distributing the effects of freemen deceased; (see this Dictionary, title Executor V. 9.) of enrolling apprentices: or that he who is free of one trade may use another; if any of these or other similar points come in issue. But this rule admits of an exception where the corporation of London is party, or interested in the suit: as in an action brought for a penalty inflicted by the custom: for there the reason of the law will not endure so partial a trial; but this custom shall in such case be determined by a Jury. Hob. 85. In some cases the Sheriff of London's certificate shall be the final trial; as if the issue be whether the defendant be a citizen of London or foreigner, in case of privilege pleaded to be sued only in the city Courts. 1 Inst. 74. See this Dictionary, title Customs of London.

Upon the customs of London concerning the payment of wharfage, &c. by every freeman to the corporation, the trial shall not be by the mouth of the recorder, as customs generally are, but by the country, and a Jury from Surry adjoining. Moor. c. 129.

The Mayor of London is to cause errors, defaults, and misprisions there to be redressed, under the penalty of 1000 marks; and the constable of the Tower shall execute process against the Mayor for default, &c. 28 Ed. 3. c. 10. See stats. 17 R. 2. c. 12: 1 H. 4. c. 15, by which latter the fine is to be at the discretion of the Justices.

The several Courts within the city of London (and other cities and corporations throughout the kingdom) held by prescription, charter, or act of parliament, are of a private and limited species. The chief of those in London are the Sheriff's Courts, holden before their Steward or Judge; from which a writ of error lies to the Court of Hustings, before the Mayor, Recorder, and Sheriffs; and from thence to Justices appointed by the King's Commission, who used to sit in the church of St. Martin-le-grand. F. N. B. 32. And from the judgment of those Justices a writ of error lies immediately to the House of Lords. 3 Comm. 80, n. See this Dictionary, titles Courts; Court of Hustings; Inferior Courts, &c.

The Court of Requests, or Court of Conscience for the recovery of debts not exceeding 40*s.* was first established in London, so early as the reign of Henry VIII. by an act of their Common Council; which however was certainly insufficient for that purpose, and illegal, till confirmed by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 15, which has since been explained and amended by stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 10; 3 Com. 81. See this Dictionary, title Courts of Conscience; and the Addenda at the end of this volume.

The gaol-delivery for the county of Middlesex, as well as that for London, being held at the Old Bailey in the the city of London, eight times in the year, it is by stat. 25 Geo. 3. c. 18, provided, that when such Session shall have begun before the Essoin-day of any Term, it may continue to be held, and be concluded notwithstanding the sitting of the Court of King's Bench. And this Act, by stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 48, is extended to the Middlesex Sessions. See title Justices of Gaol Delivery.

After the fire of London, a Judicature was erected for determining differences relating to houses burnt; and several rules were laid down for rebuilding the city, the several streets, lanes, &c. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen were to set out markets; the number of parishes and churches was ascertained, and a duty granted on coals for rebuilding of the churches, &c. See stats. 19 Car. 2. cc. 2, 3: 22 Car. 2. cc. 11, 14: 25 C. 2. c. 10.

A great variety of statutes have been passed to regulate various concerns of the city of London, besides those already alluded to: the following is a very short abstract of the purport of those most material.

By stat. Civ. London, 13 E. 1. st. 5, None shall walk the streets armed after curfeu; unless noblemen or their servants with lights; taverns and alehouses shall be shut at curfeu; fencing schools for buckler shall not be kept in London; none but freemen shall keep inns in the city; none shall be brokers in London but those who are admitted and sworn by the Mayor and Aldermen; (see post, Brokers;) the officers of the city shall not be punished for false imprisonment, unless it appear to be of malice.

LONGITUDE of a place, In geography, is an arch of the equator intercepted between the first meridian, and the meridian passing through the proposed place; which is always equal to the angle at the pole, formed by the first meridian, and the meridian of the place.

The first meridian may be placed at pleasure, passing through any place, as London, Paris, Teneriffe, &c. but with us it is generally fixed at London; and the degrees of Longitude counted from it, will be either East or West, according as they lie on the east or west side of that meridian.

In other words, to explain the subject in a familiar manner, to those wholly unacquainted with it, as by the Latitude we learn the distance North or South, so by knowing the Longitude, we know the distance from any given place, East or West; allowing for the difference of a degree of Longitude at the equator (or middle of the globe) and at the Arctic Circle, &c.

The Longitude is, as before described, in other words, the distance of a place, East or West, from that imaginary line drawn from North to South, through a place fixed on for that purpose, and called the first meridian, i. e, the meridian or boundary from whence we reckon, East or West; so that by ascertaining the Latitude and Longitude of a place, its situation on the [illegible] or artificial globe, with respect to all other p[illegible]

By stats 12 Ann st. 2. c. 15: 26 [illegible] Geo. 3. c. 14, the Lord Admiral and [illegible] the Admiralty were appointed Commi[illegible] proposals for the discovery of a meth[illegible] Longitude at sea: and were empowered [illegible] give rewards accordingly. Also by stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 6, if any ship discovers a passage between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans beyond the 52d degree of North latitude, the owner or commander, if a King's ship, shall receive 20,000*l.*; and 5,000*l.* shall be given in like manner to the first ship that shall approach within one degree of the North Pole.

LOQUELA, An imparlance; loquela sine die, a respite in law to an indefinite time. Paroch. Antiq. 210.

LORD, dominus.] A word or title of honour, diversely used, being attributed not only to those who are noble by birth or creation, otherwise called Lords of Parliament, and Peers of the realm; but to such, so called by the curtesy of England, as all the sons of a duke, and the eldest son of an earl; and to persons honourable by office, as the Lord Chief Justice, &c. and sometimes to a private person, that hath the fee of a manor, and consequently the homage of the tenants within his manor; for by his tenants he is called Lord. In this last signification, it is most used in our law-books; where it is divided into Lord Paramount, and Lord Mesne; and Very Lord, &c. Old. Nat. Br. 79. LORD AND VASSAL. In the time of the feodal tenures, the grantor of land was called the Proprietor; or Lord; being the person who retained the dominion or ultimate property of the feud or fee: and the grantee, who had only the use of possession, according to the term of the grant, was stiled the Feudatary or Vassal, which was only another name for the tenant or holder of the lands; though, on account of the prejudices we have justly conceived against the doctrines which were afterwards grafted on this system, we now use the word vassal, opprobriously as synonymous to slave or bondman. 2 Comm. 53. LOTTERIES. Several statutes have been from time to time made for raising money for the use of Government, by way of Lottery. These State Lotteries are publicly drawn, by commissioners appointed, according to schemes, which vary with almost every year.

It has been a disputed point among politicians, whether the benefits of a Lottery arising from the large sum thus voluntarily subscribed to the exigencies of the Government, are not more than counterbalanced by the evils through this means introduced, formerly by private Lotteries, and, of late years, by the more pernicious mode of gambling by insurance of numbers. Repeated attempts have been made to repress this fatal mischief, and the measure of treating the persons taking money for insurance as rogues and vagabonds, seems to have been attended with the most success. The following is a short summary of the acts now in force on this subject. See also this Dictionary, titles Advertisements; Gaming.

Statute 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 17, Declares ALL Lotteries public nuisances; and all patents for Lotteries void, and against law; (the State Lotteries are all managed under annual acts of parliament passed for each;) imposes a penalty of 500*l.* on every proprietor of a private Lottery, and 20*l.* on each adventurer.

Stat. 9 An. c. 6, Commands Justices of Peace to assist in suppressing private Lotteries.

Stat. 10 An. c. 26, Imposes the like penalty of 500*l.* on persons keeping offices for illegal insurances on marriages, &c. under various pretexts.

Stat. 5 Geo. 1. c 9, puts the sale of Chances on the footing of private Lotteries, and imposes a penalty of 100*l.* (above all other penalties), recoverable by the persons possessed of the ticket, the chance of which was sold; and the offender may also be committed to the county gaol for a year.

Stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 2, imposes a penalty of 500*l.* on persons keeping offices for the disposal of houses, lands, advowsons, &c. by Lottery; and adventurers to forfeit double the sum contributed.

 This

This statute and those of 10 & 11 W. 3, and 9 Ann. above mentioned, are explained and rendered more effectual by stat. 12 Geo. 2. c. 28, which imposes 10*l.* penalty on Justices neglecting their duy under those acts; and prohibits the games of Ace of Hearts, Pharoah, Basset, and Hazard, as Lotteries, and imposes 50*l.* penalty on the players: and see stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 19, as to the game of Passage and other games with dice.

Stats. 9 Geo. 1. c. 19, and 6 Geo. 2. c. 35, impose a penalty of 200*l.* and a year's imprisonment, on persons selling tickets in, or publishing schemes of, any foreign Lottery. Ireland is excepted under stat. 22 Geo 3. c. 47. Stat. 29 Geo. 2. c. 7. provides that offences against the English acts against private Lotteries, though committed in Ireland, shall be liable to all the penalties imposed, as if they were committed in England; [but qu. how far this act is in force since stat. 23 Geo. 3. c. 28? See this Dictionary, title Ireland.]

By stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 47, All Lottery-office keepers must take out a licence from the Stamp-office, for which they pay 50*l.* Offices to be open only from eight in the morning to eight in the evening (except the Saturday evening preceding the drawing). The sale of chances (and shares of tickets not their own), prohibited under 50*l.* penalty; shares to be stamped.

By stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 1, All unlicensed Lottery-office keepers, and all persons, directly or indirectly, as principals or servants, selling chances, or insuring or causing any person to insure for or against the drawing of any ticket in any State Lottery, shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds within the strict letter of stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 5, and other statutes relating to vagabonds. But the proprietor of a whole ticket may insure it, for its value only, with a licensed office-keeper for the whole time of drawing, (from the time of the insurance,) under a bonâ fide agreement (without stamps). Persons convicted as vagabonds are discharged from the pecuniary penalties.

MAEREMIUM, from Fr. Meresme.] Properly signifies any sort of timber, fit for building; seu quodvis materiamen. Claus. 16 Ed. 2. m. 3.

MAGBOTE or MÆGBOTE, from the Sax. Mæg. i. e. Cognatus & bote, compensatio.] A compensation for the slaying or murder of one's kinsman, in ancient times, when corporal punishments for murder, &c. were sometimes commuted into pecuniary fines, if the friends and relations of the party killed were so satisfied. Leg. Canuti, c. 2.

MAGICK, Magia, Necromantia.] Witchcraft and Sorcery. See Conjuration.

MAGISTER. This title, often found in old writings, signified that the person to whom attributed had attained some degree of eminency in scientia aliqua, præsertim literaria; and formerly those who are now called doctors, were termed magistri.

MAGISTRATE. magistratus.] A Ruler; and he is said to be custos utriusque tabulæ: the keeper or preserver of both tables of the law. If any magistrate, or minister of justice, is slain in the execution of his office, or keeping of the peace, it is murder for the contempt and disobedience to the King and his laws. 9 Co.

The most universal public relation by which men are connected together is that of government; namely, as governors and governed, or in other words as Magistrates and People. Of Magistrates some also are supreme, in whom the Sovereign Power of the State resides: others are subordinate, deriving all their authority from the supreme Magistrate, accountable to him for their conduct, and acting in an inferior secondary sphere. In all tyrannical Governments the Supreme Magistracy, or the right of both making and enforcing laws, is vested in one and the same man, or one and the same body of men: and wherever these two powers are united together, there can be no public liberty. The Magistrate, [or Magistracy,] may enact tyrannical laws, and execute them in a tyrannical manner: since he is possessed, in quality of dispenser of justice, with all the power which as legislator he thinks proper to give himself. But where the legislative and executive authority are in distinct hands, the former will take care not to entrust the latter with so large a power as may tend to the subversion of its own independence, and therewith of the liberty of the Subject. In England, therefore, this Supreme Power is divided into two branches; the one Legislative, to wit, the Parliament, consisting of King, Lords, and Commons; the other Executive, consisting of the King alone.

His Majesty's Great Officers of State, the Lord Treasurer, Lord Chamberlain, and principal Secretaries, or the like, are not, in the capacity of subordinate Magistrates, in any considerable degree the object of our laws; nor have they any very important share of Magistracy conferred upon them; except that the Secretaries of State are allowed the power of commitment in order to bring offenders to trial: 1 Leon. 70: 2 Leon. 175: Comb. 143: 5 Mod. 84: Salk. 347: Carth. 291. See this Dictionary, titles Commitment; Arrest. As to the office and authority of the Lord Chancellor and the other Judges of the superior Courts of Justice; see this Dictionary under those titles. The rights and dignities of Mayors and Aldermen, or other Magistrates of particular Corporations, are more private and strictly municipal rights, depending entirely upon the domestic Constitution of their respective franchises. The Magistrates and Officers whose rights and duties are most generally in use, and have a jurisdiction and authority dispersedly throughout the kingdom, are principally these, Sheriffs; Coroners; Justices of the Peace; Constables; Surveyors of the Highways; and Overseers of the Poor. See all those titles in this Dictionary; and 1 Comm. c. 2.

MAGNA CHARTA,

(Or, as it is always ſpelt by Blackſtone, MAGNA CARTA:)

The GREAT CHARTER OF LIBERTIES granted in the ninth year of King Henry III.—It is ſo called, either for the excellency of the laws therein contained, or becauſe there was another Charter called the Charter of the Foreſt, eſtabliſhed with it, which was the leſs of the two; or in regard of the great troubles in obtaining it, and the remarkable ſolemnity in denouncing excommunication and anathemas againſt the breakers thereof: Spelman calls it, Auguſtiſſimum Anglicarum Libertatum Diploma; & Sacra Anchora.

Edward the Confeſſor granted to the Church and State ſeveral privileges and liberties by Charter; and ſome were granted by the Charter of King Hen. I. Afterwards Stephen, and Hen. II. confirmed the Charter of Hen. I; and Rich. I. took an oath at his coronation to obſerve all juſt laws, which was an implicit confirmation of that Charter; and King John took the like oath: this King, likewiſe, after a difference between him and the Pope, and being imbroiled in wars at home and abroad, particularly confirmed the aforementioned Charter, with further privileges, but ſoon after broke it, and thereupon the Barons took up arms againſt him, and his reign ended in wars. To him ſucceeded Hen. III. who in the 37th year of his reign, after it had been ſeveral times confirmed by him, and as often broken, came to Weſtminſter-Hall, and in the preſence of the Nobility and Biſhops, with lighted candles in their hands, Magna Charta was read: the King all that while laying his hand on his breaſt, and at laſt ſolemnly ſwearing faithfully and inviolably to obſerve all things therein contained, as he was a Man, a Chriſtian, a Soldier, and a King: then the Biſhops extinguiſhed the candles, and threw them on the ground; and every one ſaid, Thus let him be extinguiſhed, and ſtink in hell, who violates this Charter: upon which the bells were ſet on ringing, and all perſons by their rejoicing approved of what was done.

But, notwithſtanding this very ſolemn confirmation of this Charter, the very next year King Henry invaded the rights of his People, till the Barons levied war againſt him; and after various ſucceſs, he confirmed this Charter, and the Charter of the Foreſt, in the parliament of Marlbridge, and in the 52d year of his reign. His ſon, Edw I, confirming theſe Charters, in the 25th year of his reign, made an explanation of the liberties therein granted to the People; adding ſome which are new, called Articuli ſuper Chartas; and Magna Charta was not confirmed then only, but more than thirty times ſince. Co. Litt. 81. See this Dictionary, title Liberty.

This excellent ſtatute, or rather body of ſtatutelaw, at that time ſo beneficial to the Subject, and of ſuch great equity, is the moſt ancient written law of the land. It is divided into thirty-eight chapters; the 1ſt of which, after the ſolemn preamble of its being made for the honour of God, the exaltation of Holy Church, and amendment of the kingdom, &c. ordains, That the Church of England ſhall be free, and all eccleſiaſtical perſons enjoy their rights and privileges. The 2d is of the nobility, knights-ſervice, reliefs, &c. The 3d concerns heirs, and their being in ward. The 4th directs guardians for heirs within age, who are not to commit waſte. The 5th relates to the cuſtody of lands, &c. of heirs, and delivery of them up when the heirs are of age. The 6th is concerning the marriage of heirs. The 7th appoints dower to women, after the death of their huſbands, a third part of the lands, &c. The 8th relates to ſheriffs and their bailiffs, and requires that they ſhall not ſeize lands for debts where there are goods, &c. the ſurety not to be diſtrained, where the principal is ſufficient. The 9th grants to London, and all cities and towns, their ancient liberties. The 10th orders, that no diſtreſs ſhall be taken for more rent than is due, &c. By the 11th the court of Common Pleas is to be held in a certain place. The 12th gives aſſiſes for remedy, on diſſeiſin of lands, &c. The 13th relates to aſſiſes of darrein preſentment, brought by eccleſiaſtics. The 14th enacts, that no freeman ſhall be amerced for a fault, but in proportion to the offence; and by the oaths of lawful men. The 15th, no town ſhall be diſtrained to make bridges, &c. but ſuch as of ancient times have been accuſtomed. The 16th is for repairing of ſea-banks and ſewers. The 17th prohibits ſheriffs, coroners, &c. from holding pleas of the Crown. The 18th enacts, that the King's debtor dying, the King ſhall be firſt paid his debt, &c. The 19th directs the manner of levying purveyance for the King's houſe. The 20th concerns caſtleward, where a knight was to be diſtrained for money for keeping his caſtle, on his neglect. The 21ſt forbids ſheriffs, bailiffs, &c. to take the horſes or carts of any perſon to make carriage without paying for it. By the 22d the King is to have lands of felons a-year and a day, and afterwards the lord of the fee. The 23d requires wears to be put down on rivers. The 24th directs the writ præcipe in capite, for lords againſt tenants offering wrong, &c. The 25th declares that there ſhall be but one meaſure throughout the land. The 26th, inquiſition of life and member, to be granted freely. The 27th relates to knight's-ſervice, petit-ſerjeanty, and other ancient tenures; (taken away together with wardſhip, &c. by ſtat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See title Tenures.) The 28th directs, that no man ſhall be put to his law, on the bare ſuggeſtion of another, but by lawful witneſſes. The 29th, no freeman ſhall be diſſeiſed of his freehold, impriſoned and condemned, but by judgment of his peers, or by the law of the land. The 30th requires that merchant ſtrangers be civilly treated, &c. The 31ſt relates to tenures coming to the King by eſcheat. By the 32d no freeman ſhall ſell land, but ſo that the reſidue may anſwer the ſervices. The 33d, patrons of abbeys, &c. ſhall have the cuſtody of them in the time of vacation. The 34th, a woman to have an appeal for the death of her huſband. The 35th directs the keeping of the county-court monthly, and alſo the times of holding the ſheriff's torn, and view of frank-pledge. The 36th makes it unlawful unlawful to give lands to religious houses in Mortmain. The 37th relates to escuage, and subsidy, to be taken as usual. And the 38th ratifies and confirms every article of this great charter of liberties.

The following is Blackstone's summary of this celebrated statute, and its occasion and effect.

In King John's time, and that of his son Henry III. the rigours of the feodal tenures and the forest laws were so warmly kept up, that they occasioned many insurrections of the Barons or principal Feudataries; which at last had this effect, that at first King John, and afterwards his son, consented to the two famous Charters of English liberties, Magna Carta and Carta de Foresta. Of these the latter was well calculated to redress many grievances and encroachments of the Crown in the exertion of Forest Law; and the former confirmed many liberties of the Church, and redressed many grievances incident to feodal tenures, of no small moment at the time; though now, unless considered attentively, and with this retrospect, they seem but of trifling concern.

But besides these feodal provisions, care was also taken by Magna Carta to protect the Subject against other oppressions, then frequently arising from unreasonable amercements, from illegal distresses, or other process for debts or services due to the Crown, and from the tyrannical abuse of the prerogative of purveyance and pre-emption. It fixed the forfeiture of lands for felony in the same manner as it still remains; prohibited for the future the grants of exclusive fisheries; and the erection of new bridges, so as to oppress the neighbourhood. With respect to private rights, it established the testamentary power of the Subject over part of his personal estate, the rest being distributed among his wife and children: It laid down the law of Dower as it hath continued ever since; and prohibited the appeals of women, unless for the death of their husbands. In matters of public police and national concern, it enjoined an uniformity of weights and measures; gave new encouragements to commerce, by the protection of merchant-strangers; and forbade the alienation of lands in mortmain. With regard to the administration of justice, besides prohibiting all denials or delays of it, it fixed the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, that the suitors might no longer be harassed with following the King's person in all his progresses; and at the same time brought the trial of issues home to the very doors of the freeholders, by directing assises to be taken in the proper counties, and establishing annual circuits. It also corrected some abuses then incident to the trials by wager of law and of battel; directed the regular awarding of inquests, for life or member; prohibiting the King's inferior Ministers from holding pleas of the Crown, or trying any criminal charge, whereby many forfeitures might otherwise have unjustly accrued to the Exchequer; and regulated the time and place of holding the inferior tribunals of justice, the County Court, Sheriff's Tourn, and Court-leet. It confirmed and established the liberties of the city of London, and all other cities, boroughs, towns, and ports of the kingdom. And lastly, (by which alone it would have merited the title that it bears, of the Great Charter,) it protected every individual of the nation in the free enjoyment of his life, his liberty, and his property, unless declared to be forfeited by the judgment of his peers, or the law of the land. 4 Comm. c. 33. p. 423, 4.

The following are the words of the celebrated 29th chapter of Magna Charta, the foundation of the liberty of Englishmen.

"Nullus liber homo capiatur, vel imprisonetur, aut disseisiatur de libero tenemento suo vel libertatibus vel liberis consuetudinibus suis, aut utlagetur, aut exulet, aut aliquo modo destruatur, nec super eum ibimus, nec super eum mittemus, nisi per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ.—Nulli vendemus, nulli negabimus, aut differemus rectum vel justitiam." See this Dictionary, title Liberty.

MAGNA PRECARIA, A great or general reap-day. And in 21 R. 2, the lord of the manor of Harrow on the Hill, in Com. Middlesex, had a custom that by summons of his bailiff on a general reap-day, then called Magna precaria, the tenants should do a certain number of days work for him; every tenant that had a chimney, being obliged to send a man. Phil. Purvey. p. 145.

MAGNUM CENTUM, The great hundred, or six score. Chart. 20 H. 2.

MAGNUS PORTUS, The town and port of Portsmouth.

MAHEMIATUS, Maimed or wounded.

MAHOMERIA, The temple of Mahomet; and because the gestures, noise, and songs there, were ridiculous to the Christians, therefore they called antic dancing, and any thing of ridicule a momerie. Mat. Paris.

MAIDS. Taking them away unmarried, without consent of father or mother or their guardians, is punishable by stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8. See this Dictionary, title Guardian, I. 1; Marriage; Rape.

MAIDEN ASSISES, Is when at any assises no person is condemned to die.

MAIDEN RENTS, A noble paid by every tenant in the manor of Builth, in Com. Radnor, at their marriage; anciently given to the lord for his omitting the custom of Marcheta, (see title Marchet.) More probably a fine for a licence to marry a daughter.

MAIGNAGIUM, Fr. maignen, i. e. faber ærarius.] A brasier's shop; though some say it signifies a house. Lib. Ramef. § 265.

MAIHEM or MAYHEM, maihemium, from the Fr. mehaigne, i. e. membri mutilatio.] A Maim, wound, or corporal hurt, by which a man loseth the use of any member, proper for his defence in fight. As if a man's skull be broke, or any bone broken in any other part of the body; a foot, hand, finger, or joint of a foot, or any member be cut off; if by any wound the sinews be made to shrink; or where any one is castrated; or if an eye be put out, or any fore-tooth bro[illegible] &c. But the cutting off an ear or n[illegible], the breaking of the hinder teeth, and such like, w[illegible] held no Maihem by the Common Law; as they were [illegible] a weakening of a person's strength, but a disfigur[illegible] and deformity of the body. Glanv. lib. 4. c. 7: Bra[illegible] lib. 3. tract. 2: Britton, c. 25: S. P. C. lib. 1 c. 41.

Maihem is accurately thus defined; the violently depriving another of the use of such of his members, as may render him the less able in fighting, either to defend himself, or to annoy his adversary. Brit. l. 1. c. 25: 1 Hawk. P. C c. 44.

By the Ancient Law of England, he that maimed any man, whereby he lost any part of his body, was sentenced to lose the like pa[illegible] membrum pro membro, 3 Inst. 118: Brit. c. 25. But this went afterwards out of use; partly partly becaufe the law of retaliation is at beft an inadequate rule of punifhment, and partly becaufe on a repetition of the offence, the punifhment could not be repeated: fo that by the Common Law, as it for a long time ftood, Maihem was only punifhable by fine and imprifonment. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 3. Unlefs perhaps the offence of Maihem by caftration, which all our old writers held to be felony; and this although the Maihem was committed upon the higheft provocation, fuch as the party maimed being caught in adultery with the wife of the offender. See Bract. fo. 144: 3 Inft. 62: S. P. C. 32: H. P. C. 133.

But fubfequent ftatutes have put the crime and punifhment of Maihem more out of doubt. For firft, by ftat. 5 H. 4. c. 5, to remedy a mifchief which then prevailed, of beating, wounding, or robbing a man, and then cutting out his tongue, or putting out his eyes, to prevent him from being an evidence againft the offenders, this offence is declared to be felony, if done of malice prepenfe; that is, as Coke explains it, voluntarily, and of fet purpofe, though done upon a fudden occafion. Next in order of time, is ftat. 37 H. 8. c. 6; which directs that if a man fhall malicioufly and unlawfully cut off the ear of any of the King's fubjects, he fhall not only forfeit treble damages to the party grieved, to be recovered by action of trefpafs at Common Law, as a civil fatisfaction; but alfo 10*l.* by way of fine to the King, which was his criminal amercement. The laft ftatute, but by far the moft fevere and effectual of all, is ftat. 22 & 23 C. 2. c. 1, called the Coventry Act; being occafioned by an affault on Sir John Coventry in the ftreet, and flitting his nofe, in revenge (as was fuppofed) for fome obnoxious words uttered by him in Parliament. By this ftatute it is enacted, that if any perfon fhall, of malice aforethought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully cut out or difable the tongue, put out an eye, flit the nofe, cut off a nofe or lip, or cut off or difable any limb or member of any other perfon, with intent to maim or disfigure him, fuch perfon, his counfellors, aiders, and abettors, fhall be guilty of felony, without benefit of clergy: though no attainder of fuch felony fhall corrupt the blood, or forfeit the dower of the wife, or lands or goods of the offender.

If a man attack another, of malice aforethought, in order to murder him, with a bill, or any fuch like inftrument, which cannot but endanger the maiming him, and in fuch attack, happen not to kill, but only to maim him, he may be indicted of felony on this ftatute; and it fhall be left to the jury on the evidence, whether there was a defign to murder by maiming, and confequently a malicious intent to maim as well as kill, in which cafe the offence is within the ftatute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 6: Woodburn and Cooke's Ca. 6 St. Trials, 212.

If the Maim comes not within any of the defcriptions of the Act, yet it is indictable at Common Law, and may be punifhed by fine and imprifonment. Or an appeal may be brought for it at the Common Law, in which the party injured fhall recover his damages. See poft; and title Appeal of Maihem. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 44. § 6, in n.

In a cafe where a gentleman had apprehended a pickpocket, an accomplice followed and gave the gentleman a wound acrofs the nofe with a knife; this was held to be a flitting of the nofe, and a maiming within the ftatute. Carrol's Ca. Leach, 83. It has been determined that if a man deliberately watches an opportunity, and carries his intention into execution, he may be faid to lie in wait; but where a perfon went up to a man ftealing turneps, who immediately cut him in the face, this was thought not to be a lying in wait within the ftatute. Tickner's Ca. Leach, 170. A wound or incifion in the throat has been held not to be a Maiming. Lee's Ca. Leach, 49.

Maihem may be punifhed by indictment or appeal, or a remedial action of trefpafs, vi et armis, may be brought to recover damages for the injury.

When upon an appeal of Maihem, the iffue joined is whether it be Maihem or no Maihem, this fhall be decided by the Court, upon infpection; for which purpofe they may call in the affiftance of furgeons. 2 Ro. Abr. 578. And by analogy to this it is, that in an action of trefpafs for Maihem, the Court (upon view of fuch Maihem as the plaintiff has laid in his declaration, or which is certified by the Judges who tried the caufe, to be the fame as was given in evidence to the Jury) may increafe the damages at their own difcretion. 1 Sid. 108. As may alfo be the cafe upon view of an atrocious battery. Hard. 408: See 1 Wilf. 5: 1 Barnes, 106: See Appeal of Maihem.

A perfon who maims himfelf that he may have the more colour to beg, may be indicted and fined. 1 Inft. 127. And by the like reafon, a perfon who difables himfelf that he may not be impreffed for a foldier. Burn. J.

MAII INDUCTIO, An ancient cuftom for the prieft and people of country villages to go in proceffion to fome adjoining wood on a May-day morning; and return with a may-pole, boughs, flowers, garlands, and other tokens of the fpring. This may-game, or rejoicing at the coming of the fpring, was for a long time obferved, and ftill is in fome parts of England; but it was condemned and probibited in the diocefe of Lincoln, by bifhop Grofthead.

MAIL, macula.] A coat of mail, fo called from the Fr. maille, which fignifies a fquare figure, or the hole of a net: fo maille de haubergeons was a coat of mail, becaufe the links or joints in it refemble the fquares of a net. Mail is likewife ufed for the leathern bag wherein letters are carried by the poft, from bulga, a budget.

MAILE, Anciently a kind of money; and filver halfpence were termed Mailes. 9 Hen. 5. By indenture in the Mint, a pound weight of old fterling filver was to be coined into three hundred and fixty fterlings or pennies, or feven hundred and twenty Mailes or half-pennies, or one thoufand four hundred and forty farthings. Lownds's Eff. on Coin, 38. See title Black-mail.

MAIMING; See Maihem.

MAINAD, A falfe oath, or perjury. Leg. Inæ, c. 34.

MAINE-PORT, In manu portatum.] A fmall tribute, commonly of loaves of bread, which in fome places the parifhioners pay to the rector of their church, in recompence for certain tithes. Cowell.

This mainport bread was paid to the vicar of Blyth. See Antiq. of Nottinghamfhire, p. 473.

MAINOVRE, or Mainœuvre, from the Fr. main, i. e. manus, and œuvrer, operari.] Handy-work; fome trefpafs committed by a man's hand. See ftat. 7 R. 2, c. 4: Brit. 62: and the fucceeding article.

MAINOUR, or MANOUR, or MEINOUR; from the Fr. manier, i. e. manu tractare] In a legal fenfe denotes the thing taken away, found in the hand of the thief thief who taketh away, or ſtealeth. Thus to be taken with the Mainour, Pl. Cor. fol. 179, is to be taken with the thing ſtolen about him: And again, fol. 194; It was preſented, that a thief was delivered to the ſheriff or viſcount, together with the Mainour; and again, fol. 186, If a man be indicted, that he feloniouſly ſtole the goods of another, where, in truth, they are his own goods, and the goods be brought into the court as the Mainour; and it be demanded of him, what he ſaith to the goods, and he diſclaim them; though he be acquitted of the felony, he ſhall loſe the goods. Cowell.

Thus the Court of Attachments in the Foreſt may attach all offenders againſt vert and veniſon, by their bodies, if taken with the Mainour, that is, in the very act of killing veniſon, or ſtealing wood, or preparing ſo to do; or by freſh and immediate purſuit after the act is done; elſe they muſt be attached by their goods. Carth. 79: 4 Inſt. 289.

One mode of proſecution, by the Common Law, without any previous finding by a Jury, was when a thief was taken with the Mainour; that is, with the thing ſtolen upon him, in manu; for he might, when ſo detected, flagrante delicto, be brought into Court, arraigned and tried without indictment. But this proceeding was taken away by ſeveral ſtatutes in the reign of Edward III. though in Scotland a ſimilar proceſs remains to this day. See 2 Hal. P. C. 149: 4 Comm. c. 23. p. 307, and title Court-Leet.

MAINPERNABLE, That may be let to bail; and what perſons are mainpernable appears by ſtat. Weſt. 1, 3 Ed. 1. c. 15: See titles Bail; Mainprize.

MAINPERNORS, manucaptores.] Are thoſe perſons to whom a man is delivered out of cuſtody or priſon, on their becoming bound for his appearing, &c. which, if he do not do, they ſhall forfeit their recognizances; and they are called Manucaptores, becauſe they do as it were manu capere & ducere captivum è cuſtodia vel priſona.

MAINPRISE, manucaptio, from the Fr. main, i. e. manus, & pris, captus.] The taking or receiving of a perſon into friendly cuſtody, who otherwiſe might be committed to priſon; upon ſecurity given that he ſhall be forth-coming, at a time and place aſſigned. Thus to let one to Mainpriſe is to commit him to thoſe that undertake he ſhall appear at the day appointed. Old Nat. Br. 42: F. N. B. 249.

Manwood makes this difference between Mainpriſe and Bail: He that is mainpriſed is ſaid to be at large, after the day he is ſet to Mainpriſe, until the day of his appearance; but where a man is let to bail, by any Judge, &c. until a certain day, there he is always accounted by the law to be in their ward for the time; and they may, if they will, keep him in priſon, ſo that he that is ſo bailed ſhall not be ſaid to be at large, or at his own liberty. Manwood, p. 167.

A man under Mainpriſe is ſuppoſed to go at large, under no poſſibility of being confined by his ſureties or mainpernors, as in caſe of bail. 4 Inſt. 179. Mainpriſe is an undertaking in a certain ſum; bail anſwers the condemnation in civil caſes, and in criminal, body for body. Sed. qu. If this, as to body for body, is now law? If it is, it is never put in force.

Mainpriſe may be where one is never arreſted, or in priſon; but no man is bailed but he that is under arreſt, or in priſon; ſo that Mainpriſe is more large than bail. H P. C. 96: Wood's Inſt. 582, 618. Upon a capias or exigent awarded againſt a man, he ſhall find Mainpriſe for his appearance: and if the defendant make default, his manucaptors are to be amerced, &c. And a bill of Mainpriſe, acknowledged and put into Court, is good, though it be not inrolled. Jenk Cent. 129.

There is an ancient writ of Mainpriſe, whereby thoſe who are bailable, and have been refuſed the benefit of it, may be delivered out of priſon. Reg. Orig. 269: F. N. B. 250.

The writ of Mainpriſe, Manucaptio, is a writ directed to the Sheriff, (either generally when any man is impriſoned for a bailable offence, and bail hath been refuſed; or eſpecially, when the offence or courſe of puniſhment is not properly bailable below,) commanding him to take ſureties for the priſoner's appearance, uſually called Mainpernors, and to ſet him at large. F. N. B. 250: 1 Hal. P. C. 141: Co. Bail & M. c. 10: And ſee 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 30.

Mainpernors differ from bail, in that a man's bail may impriſon or ſurrender him up before the ſtipulated day of appearance; mainpernors can do neither, but are barely ſureties for his appearance at the day. Bail are only ſureties that the party be anſwerable for the ſpecial matter for which they ſtipulate; Mainpernors are bound to produce him to anſwer all charges whatſoever. 3 Comm. c. 8. p. 128. cites Co. Bail & M. c. 3: 4 Inſt. 179.

Of the writ of Mainpriſe little notice is taken in the late books; yet the law relating to it ſeems to be ſtill in force in many caſes: and conſequently in ſuch caſes thoſe who are bailable, and have been refuſed the benefit of bail, may ſtill, by virtue thereof, be delivered out of priſon; (upon their finding ſureties to the Sheriff that they will appear and anſwer to the crimes alleged againſt them, before the Juſtices, in the writ mentioned, &c.) as thoſe who are impriſoned for a ſlight ſuſpicion of felony, or indicted of larceny before the Steward of a leet, or of treſpaſs before Juſtices of peace; and many other perſons. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 15. § 29.

MAINSWORN; See Male-ſworn.

MAINTAINORS, Are thoſe that maintain or ſecond a cauſe depending between others, by diſburſing money, or making friends, for either party, &c. not being intereſted in the ſuit, or attornies employed therein. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 14. See title Maintenance.

MAINTENANCE, manutenentia.] The unlawful taking in hand, or upholding of a cauſe or perſon; metaphorically drawn from the ſuccouring a young child that learns to go by one's hand; and in law is taken in the worſt ſenſe. See ſtat. 32 H. 8. c. 9. Alſo it is uſed for the buying or obtaining of pretended rights to lands. Stat. Ibid.

Maintenance is an offence that bears a near relation to Barretry; being an officious intermeddling in a ſuit that no way belongs to one, by maintaining or aſſiſting either party with money, or otherwiſe, to proſecute or defend it; a practice that was greatly encouraged by the firſt introduction of Uſes. 4 Comm. c. 10. p. 134.

Maintenance is either ruralis, in the country; as where one aſſiſts another in his pretenſions to lands, by taking or holding the poſſeſſion of them for him; or where one ſtirs up quarrels or ſuits in the country: or it is curialis, in a court of juſtice; where one officiouſly intermeddles in a ſuit depending in any court, which no way belongs to him, and he hath nothing to do with, by aſſiſting the plaintiff or defendant with money or otherwiſe, in the prosecution or defence of any such suit. Co. Lit. 368: 2 Inst. 213: 2 Rol. Abr. 115. And he who fears that another will maintain his adversary, may, by way of prevention, have an original writ grounded on the statutes, prohibiting him so to do. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 83. § 42: Reg. Orig. 182.

Who are guilty of Maintenance—Not only he who lays out his money to assist another in his cause, but he that by his friendship or interest saves him that expence which he might otherwise be put to, is guilty of Maintenance. Bro. Mainten. 7, 14, 17, &c. And if any person officiously give evidence, or open the evidence without being called upon to do it; speak in the cause, as if of counsel with the party; retain an attorney for him, &c. or shall give any public countenance to another in relation to the suit; as where one of great power and interest says that he will spend twenty pounds on one side, &c. or such a person comes to the bar with one of the parties, and stands by him while his cause is tried, to intimidate the Jury; if a Juror solicits a Judge to give judgment according to the verdict, after which he hath nothing more to do, &c. these acts are Maintenance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 83. But counsel may speak as amicus curiæ.—A man cannot be guilty of Maintenance, in respect of any money given by him to another, before any suit is actually commenced: nor is it such to give another advice, as to what action is proper to be brought, what method to be taken, or what counsellor or attorney to be employed; or for one neighbour to go with another to his counsel, so as he do not give him any money: and money may be lawfully given to a poor man, out of charity, to carry on his suit, and be no Maintenance: Attornies may lay out their money for their clients, to be repaid again; but not at their own expence, on condition of no purchase no pay, if they carry the cause or lose it. Fitz. Mainten. 18: 3 Rol. Abr. 118: 2 Inst. 564.

A man may maintain the suit of his near kinsman, servant, or poor neighbour, out of charity and compassion, with impunity. 4 Comm. 134. See 1 Hawk. P.C. c. 83. § 20, 35. Whether an attorney's laying out money for his client be Maintenance, See Freem. 7 1; 81.

It is said that if a man of great power, not learned in the law, tells another who asks his advice, that he hath a good title, it is Maintenance. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 83. § 9. In case any person who is no lawyer, and that hath no interest in the cause, shall take upon him to do the part of a lawyer, this will be unlawful Maintenance. And after a suit is begun, no man may encourage either of the parties, or yield them any aid or help, by money, or the like, but he that hath interest therein: but to lend another money to maintain his law-suit, is not Maintenance. 22 H. 6. 6: 19 E. 4. 3: 2 Shep. Abr. 406. If a person hath any interest in the thing in dispute, though in contingency only, he may lawfully maintain an action relating to it; as if tenant in tail, or for life, be impleaded, he in reversion or remainder, &c. may maintain the defence of the suit, with his own money; and a lessor may lawfully maintain his lessee. 2 Rol. Abr. 115. A lord may justify maintaining a tenant, in defence of his title; and the tenant may maintain his lord: one bound to warrant lands, may lawfully maintain the tenant impleaded; and a man may maintain those who are enfeoffed of lands in trust for him, concerning those lands, &c. An heir apparent, or the husband of such an heir, may maintain the ancestor in an action concerning the inheritance of the land whereof he is seised in fee; a master may maintain his servant, and assist him with money, but not in a real action, unless he hath some of his wages in his hands; and a servant by reason of relation may maintain his master in all things, except laying out his own money in the master's suit. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 83: 1 Inst. 368.

How punishable.—By the Common Law, persons guilty of Maintenance may be prosecuted by indictment, and be fined and imprisoned; or be compelled to make satisfaction by action, &c. And a Court of Record may commit a man for an act of Maintenance done in the face of the Court. Hetl. 79: 1 Inst. 368.

By stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 25, None of the King's officers shall maintain pleas, or suits, in the King's court, for lands, &c. under covenant to have part thereof, or any profit therein. And clerks of Justices are not to take part in quarrels, or delay right, on pain of treble damages. By stat. 1 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 14; further enforced by stat. 20 E. 3. c. 4, None of the King's ministers, nor no great man of the realm, by himself nor by any other, by sending of letter or otherwise, nor none other person, great or small, shall take upon them to maintain quarrels, to the let and disturbance of the Common Law. The King's counsellors, officers or servants, or any other person whatsoever, shall not sustain quarrels by Maintenance, upon pain to lose their offices and services, and of imprisonment and ransom. Stat. 1 R. 2. c. 4. No person whatsoever shall unlawfully maintain any suit concerning lands, or retain any person for Maintenance, by letters, rewards, or promises, under the penalty of 10*l.* for every offence, to be divided between the King and the prosecutor. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9.

What rights and titles, &c. are within the meaning of the law.—Maintaining suits in the Spiritual court, is not within the statutes relating to Maintenance. Cro. Eliz. 594. Though Maintenance in a Court-baron, is as much within the purview of the stat. 1 R. 2, as Maintenance in a Court of Record.—A pretended right to copyhold lands sold, is within the statute of 32 H. 8. c. 9. 4 Rep. 26. If A. be owner of land in possession, and another who hath no right granteth the land; although the grant upon it be void, yet the grantor and grantee are liable to this statute. 1 Inst. 369. So where he that hath a pretended right, and none in truth, shall get the possession wrongfully, and then sell the land, &c. But a remainder-man in fee may obtain the pretended title of a stranger. 1 Inst. 369: 3 Inst. 76, 77. And a person who hath good right and title, at the time of the bargain or lease, will not be within the above statute, although neither he nor his ancestors have been in possession thereof, &c. for a year before. Plowd. 47: Dyer, 74.

If a person make a lease to try a title in ejectment, unless it be to a great man, it is out of the statute. 1 Inst. 369: Dyer, 374. A lessor having good right to land, but not in possession, made a lease of it, and did not seal it on the land; it was adjudged within the stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 9: 1 Leon. 166.

The law will not suffer any thing in action, entry, &c. to be granted over; this is to prevent titles being granted to men of substance, to oppress the meaner sort of people. 1 Inst. 214. Where a bond was given for performance of covenants in a lease, and after the covenants nants being broken, the lessee assigned both the lease and bond to another, and then the assignee put the bond in suit; this was held Maintenance; so it would have been if the lessee had assigned the bond and not the lease, and afterwards the covenants were broken, and the bond put in suit. Godb. 81: 2 Nels. Abr. 1142. See further on this subject, 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 83: Vin. Abr. title Maintenance: and this Dictionary, titles Champerty; Embracery, &c.

MAJORITY. The only method of determining the acts of many, is by a Majority: the major part of members of parliament enact laws, and the Majority of electors choose members of parliament; the act of the major part of any corporation, is accounted the act of the corporation; and where the majority is, there, by the law, is the whole. See Stat. 19 Hen. 7. c. 7: Stud. Compan. 25.

MAIOR, A mayor, doth not come from the Lat. major, but from an old English word maier, i. e. potestas. Cowell.

MAISNADA, A family, quasi mansionata. Meigne; Mon. Angl. 2. 219.

MAISON DE DIEU, A monastery, hospital, or alms-house. All hospitals, Maisons de Dieu, and abiding places for poor, lame and impotent persons, erected by the statute 39 Eliz. c. 5, or at any time since founded, according to the intent of that statute, shall be incorporated and have perpetual succession, &c. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 1. See title Hospitals; Corporation.

MAISURA, A house or mansion; a farm; from the Fr. maison. MS. Antiq.

MAJUS JUS, Is a writ or law proceeding in some customary manors, in order to a trial of right of land: and the entry in the old books is thus: Ad hanc curiam venit A. B. in propria persona sua et dat Domino, &c. ad vidend. Rotul. Curiæ. Et petit inquirend' utrum ipse habeat Majus jus, in uno messuagio, &c. Et super hoc homag. dicunt, &c. Ex libro MS. Episcop. Heref. temp. Ed. 3.

MAKE, Facere.] To perform or execute; as to make his law, is to perform that law which he hath formerly bound himself to: that is, to clear himself of an action commenced against him, by his oath, and the oaths of his neighbours. Old Nat. Brev. 161: Kitchen, 192. This ancient law seems to have been borrowed from the Feudists, who call those men that came to swear for another in this case sacramentales. See Hotoman. The formal words used by him that made his law, were commonly these, Hear, O ye justices, that I do not owe this sum of money demanded, neither in all nor any part thereof, in manner and form declared. So help me God, and the contents of this book. Hence probably, To make oath, is to take oath.

MAKE SERVICES AND CUSTOMS, To perform them. Old Nat. Br. 14.

MALA, A male, or port-mail, A bag to carry letters, &c. Old N. B. 14.

MALANDRINUS, A thief or pirate. Walsing. 388.

MALBERGE, Mons placiti, A hill where the people assembled at a court, like our assises; which by the Scots and Irish are called Parley-hills. Du Cange.

MALECREDITUS, One of bad credit, who is suspected, and not to be trusted. Fleta, lib. 1. c. 38.

MALEDICTION, maledictio.] A curse which was anciently annexed to donations of lands made to churches and religious houses, against those who should violate their rights. Si quis autem (quod non optamus) hanc nostram donationem infringere temptaverit, perpessus sit gelidis glacierum flatibus et malignorum spirituum; terribiles tormentorum cruciatus evasisse non quiescat, nisi prius in regius pœnitentiæ gemitibus, et pura emendatione emendaverit. Chart. Reg. Athelstani Monast. de Wiltune, Anno 933. And we read in a Charter of William de Warren, Earl of Surry: Venientibus contra hæc et destruentibus ea, occurrat Deus in gladio iræ et furoris et vindictæ et Maledictionis æternæ: Servantibus autem hæc et defendentibus ea, occurrat Deus in pace, gratia et misericordia et salute eterna. Amen, Amen, Amen.

MALESWORN, More accurately perhaps Malsworn; sometimes, more corruptly still, Mainsworn. In the North signifies forsworn. Brownl. 4: Hob. 8.

MALETENT, Is interpreted to be a toll for every sack of wool, by statute: Nothing from henceforth shall be taken for sacks of wool, by colour of Maletent, &c. Stat. 25 Ed. 1. c. 7.

MALFEASANCE; from the Fr. malfaire, i. e. to offend.] Is a doing of evil, or transgressing. 2 Cro. 266.

MALICE, Is a formal design of doing mischief to another; it differs from hatred. 2 Inst. 42. In murder, it is Malice makes the crime. See title Homicide.

MALICIOUS MISCHIEF; See Mischief.

MALIGNARE, To malign, to slander; it has been interpreted to maim; See Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 11.

MALT. Bad Malt shall not be mingled with good, under penalties. Malt is to be three weeks in making and drying; except in June, July and August, and in those months not less than seventeen days; and half a peck of dust must be taken out of every quarter, by skreening, &c. before it shall be offered to sale, on pain of forfeiting 20*d. per* quarter. Where bad Malt is made, or bad Malt shall be mixed with good, a constable, by the direction of a Justice of Peace, may search for the same, and order it to be sold at a reasonable price, &c. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 10. By stat. 12 An. st. 1. c. 2, No Malt shall be imported, on pain of forfeiting the same, and the value thereof. And by the same statute, a duty of 6*d.* a bushel is laid upon all Malt made in England; which duty is under the management of the Commissioners of Excise, and has been continued by annual acts ever since. An additional perpetual Excise was also imposed by several acts, which were all repealed by the Consolidation-Act, Stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13: and in lieu of them a duty of 9½*d.* was laid upon every bushel of Malt in England, and half as much in Scotland. See also stats. 33 Geo. 2. c. 7: 1 Geo. 3. c. 3: and this Dictionary, title Taxes.

Various regulations are made by statute to enforce the payment, and to avoid the evasion, of these duties.

Maltsters are, once a month, to make an entry at the Excise Office of all Malt made, under the penalty of 10*l.* and to pay the duty in three months, or forfeit double value: and if any maltsters alter their steeping vessels without giving notice, or shall use any private cistern, they shall forfeit 50*l.* Also concealing Malt from the sight of the gauger, is liable to a penalty of 10*s.* per bushel; and wetting barley any where but in the cistern, incurs a forfeiture of 2*s.* 6*d.* a bushel, &c. But Justices of Peace have power to mitigate the penalties and forfeitures. Stat. 12 Ann. st. 1. c. 2. Malt made for exportation is discharged from duty; yet must be entered, and kept secrete (separate) from other Malt, on pain of 50*l.* and when made shall be put into storehouses with two locks, and not delivered out without presence of an officer, &c. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 4: and see stats. 33 Geo. 2. c. 7: 1 Geo. 3. c. 3. MALUM IN SE, Our Law-books make a distinction between malum in se and malum prohibitum. Vaugh. 332. All offences at Common Law generally are mala in se; but playing at unlawful games, and frequenting of taverns, &c. are only mala prohibita to some persons, and at certain times, and not mala in se. 2 *Rol. MAN, Isle of. An Island off the coast of Cumberland, Westmorland, and Lancashire, in the Channel that parts Ireland from England.

This Island was a distinct territory from England, and out of the power of our Chancery, or of original writs which issue from thence. And in the case of the Earl of Derby, it was adjudged, that no man had any inheritance in this Isle, but the Earl and the Bishop; and that they are governed by laws of their own, so that no statute made in England did bind there without express words, in the same manner as in Ireland, 1 Inst. 9: 4 Inst. 284: 7 Rep. 21: 2 And. 115.

According to Blackstone, it seems that this distinction is still preserved; he states that it is a distinct territory from England, and is not governed by our laws; neither doth any Act of Parliament extend to it, unless it be particularly named therein; and then an Act of Parliament is binding there. 1 Comm. 105: Introd. § 4: cites 4 Inst. 284: 2 And. 116.

It was formerly a subordinate feudatory kingdom, subject to the Kings of Norway; then to King John and Henry III. of England; afterward to the Kings of Scotland; and then again to the Crown of England: and at length we find King Henry IV. claiming the Island by right of conquest, and disposing of it to the Earl of Northumberland, upon whose attainder it was granted (by the name of the Lordship of Man) to Sir John de Stanley, by letters patent, 7 Hen. 4. In his lineal descendants it continued for eight generations, till the death of Ferdinando, Earl of Derby, A. D. 1594; when a controversy arose concerning the inheritance thereof, between his daughters and William his surviving brother; upon which, and a doubt that was started concerning the validity of the original patent, the Island was seized into Queen Elizabeth's hands, and afterwards various grants were made of it by King James I. All which being expired or surrendered, it was granted afresh in 7 Jac. 1. to William Earl of Derby and the heirs male of his body, with remainder to his heirs general; which grant was the next year confirmed by Act of Parliament, with a restraint of the power of alienation by the said Earl and his issue male. On the death of James Earl of Derby, A. D. 1735, the male line of Earl William failing, the Duke of Athol succeeded to the Island, as heir-general by a female branch. In the mean time, though the title of King had long been disused, the Earls of Derby, as Lords of Man, had maintained a sort of royal authority therein, by assenting to or dissenting from laws, and exercising an appellate jurisdiction; yet though no English writ or process from the Courts of Westminster was of any authority in Man, an appeal lay from a decree of the Lord of the Island, to the King of Great Britain in council. 1 P. Wms. 329. But the distinct jurisdiction of this little subordinate royalty being found inconvenient for the purposes of public justice, and for the revenue, (it affording a commodious asylum for debtors, outlaws, and smugglers,) authority was given to the Treasury, by stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28, to purchase the interest of the then proprietors for the use of the Crown; which purchase was at length completed in the year 1765, and confirmed by stats. 5 Geo. 3. cc. 26, 39. the first of which is called the Vesting Act, the latter the Regulating Act; whereby, in consideration of the sum of 70,000*l.* the whole Island and all its dependencies so granted as aforesaid, (except the landed property of the Athol family, their manerial rights and emoluments, and the patronage of the bishopric, and other ecclesiastical benefices,) are unalienably vested in the Crown, and subjected to the regulations of the British Excise and Customs. 1 Comm. Introd. § 4. p. 104, 6: See also stats. 5 Geo. 3. cc. 30, 43.

The bishopric of Man, or Sodor, or Sodor and Man, was formerly within the province of Canterbury, but annexed to that of York, by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 31.

The stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 50, extends the stat. 29 Car. 2, relating to taking affidavits in the country, to the Isle of Man, and empowers the King to appoint ports therein for landing and shipping goods. The stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 45, encourages and regulates the trade and manufactures of Man. Stat. 11 Geo. 3. c. 52, provides for repairing its harbours; and stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 58, was passed for encouraging the herring-fishery there.

MANCA, Was a square piece of gold coin, commonly valued at thirty pence; and mancusa was as much as a mark of silver, having its name from manu-cusa, being coined with the hand Leg. Canut. But the manca and mancusa were not always of that value; for sometimes the former was valued at six shillings, and the latter, as used by the English Saxons, was equal in value to our half-crown. Manca sex solidis æstimetur. Leg. H. 1 c. 69 Thorn in his Chronicle says, Mancusa est pondus duorum solidorum & sex denariorum; and with him agrees Du Cange, who says that twenty mancæ make fifty shillings. Manca and mancusa are promiscuously used in the old books for the same money. Spelm.

MANDAMUS.

A Prerogative Writ, introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police; and therefore ought to be used on all occasions where the law has established no specific remedy; and where in justice and good government there ought to be one. 3 Burr. 1265: See 1 Black. Rep. 352, 552: Cowp. 378.

This writ is granted to prevent failure of justice, and for the execution of the Common Law, or of a statute, or of the King's charter; but not as a private remedy to the party: unless in case of a member or officer of a corporation; if deprived of his office or franchise without sufficient cause, to whom this remedy by Mandamus is given, by stat. 9 Ann. c. 20: (see post) Hardw. 99.

A Writ of Mandamus (considered as a remedy for the refusal or neglect of Justice) is, in general, a command, issuing in the King's name from the Court of King's Bench, and directed to any Person, Corporation, or inferior Court of Judicature, within the King's dominions; requiring to do some particular thing therein specified, which appertains to their office and duty; and which the Court of King's Bench has previously determined, or at least supposes to be consonant to right and justice. 3 Comm. c. 7. p. 110.

It is a high prerogative writ of a most extensive remedial nature, and may be issued in some cases where the injured party has also another more tedious method of redress, as in the case of admission or restitution to an office; but it issues in all cases where the party hath a right to have any thing done, and hath no other specific means of compelling its performance. A Mandamus, therefore, lies to compel the admission or restoration of the party applying, to any office or franchise of a public nature, whether spiritual or temporal; to academical degrees; to the use of a meeting-house, &c. It lies for the production, inspection, or delivery of public books and papers; for the surrender of the regalia of a Corporation; to oblige Bodies Corporate to affix their common seal; to compel the holding of a Court; and for an infinite number of other purposes, which it is impossible to recite minutely. But on this part of the subject it is to be particularly remarked, that it issues to the Judges of any inferior Court, commanding them to do justice according to the powers of their office, wherever the same is delayed. For it is the peculiar business of the Court of King's Bench to superintend all inferior tribunals, and therein to enforce the due exercise of those judicial or ministerial powers with which the Crown or Legislature have invested them; and this not only by restraining their excesses, but also by quickening their negligence, and obviating their denial of justice. A Mandamus may therefore be had to the Courts of the city of London to enter up Judgment, (Raym. 214:) to the Spiritual Courts to grant an administration, to swear a churchwarden, and the like. 3 Comm. 110.

This writ is grounded on a suggestion, by the oath of the party injured, of his own right, and the denial of justice below; whereupon, in order more fully to satisfy the Court that there is a probable ground for such interposition, a rule is made, (except in some general cases where the probable ground is manifest,) directing the party complained of to show cause why a writ of Mandamus should not issue: and if he shows no sufficient cause, the writ itself is issued at first in the alternative either to do thus, or signify some reason to the contrary; to which a return or answer must be made at a certain day; and if the inferior Judge or other person to whom the writ is directed, returns or signifies an insufficient reason, then there issues in the second place a peremptory Mandamus, to do the thing absolutely, to which no other return will be admitted, but a certificate of perfect obedience and due execution of the writ. If the inferior Judge or other person makes no return, or fails in his respect and obedience, he is punishable for his contempt by attachment. But if he at the first returns a sufficient cause, although it should be false in fact, the Court of King's Bench will not try the truth of the fact upon affidavits; but will for the present believe him, and proceed no farther on the Mandamus. But then the party injured may have an action against him for his false return; and (if found to be false by the Jury) shall recover damages equivalent to the injury sustained; together with a peremptory Mandamus to the defendant to do his duty. 3 Comm. 111.

This writ of Mandamus is also (as has already been hinted) made, by stat. 9 Ann c. 20, a most full and effectual remedy, in the first place, for refusal of admission where a person is entitled to an office or place in any corporation. and secondly, for wrongful renewal when a person is legally possessed. There are injuries, for which, though redress for the party interested may be had by assise or other means, yet as the franchises concern the Public, and may affect the administration of justice, this prerogative writ also issues from the Court of King's Bench, Bench, commanding, upon good cause shown to the Court, the party complaining to be admitted or restored to his office. And the statute requires that a return be immediately made to the first writ of Mandamus; which return may be pleaded to or traversed by the prosecutor, and his antagonist may reply, take issue or demur, and the same proceedings may be had as if an action on the case had been brought for making a false return: and after judgment obtained for the prosecutor he shall have a peremptory writ of Mandamus to compel his admission or restitution: which latter, in case of an action, is effected by a writ of restitution. 11 Rep. 79. So that now the writ of Mandamus, in cases within this statute, is in the nature of an action; whereupon the party applying and succeeding may be entitled to costs in case it be the franchise of a citizen, burgess, or freeman. Stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 21. Also in general a writ of error may be had thereupon. 1 P. Wms. 351: 3*Comm. c.* 17. p. 265.

This writ of Mandamus may also be issued in pursuance of stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, in case within the regular time no election shall be made of the Mayor or other chief officer of any city, borough, or town-corporate; or being made it shall afterwards become void; requiring the electors to proceed to election, and proper Courts to be held for admitting and swearing in the magistrates so respectively chosen. 3 Comm. 265.

This is a writ of right, which the superior Court is obliged to issue, in the ordinary form, without imposing any terms on him who demands it. 3 New Abr.

But though it be a writ of right, yet the Court seldom grants it, without giving the party to whom it is prayed, a day to shew cause why it should not issue; also such matter must be laid before the Court, by which it may appear, that the party is entitled to it. 3 New Abr. And though the Court of King's Bench be intrusted with this jurisdiction of issuing out writs of Mandamus, yet they are not obliged to do so in all cases wherein it may seem proper, but herein may exercise a discretionary power, as well in refusing as granting such writ; as where the end of it is merely to try a private right; where the granting it would be attended with manifest hardships and difficulties, &c. So even since the statute 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, for obliging corporations to elect officers, it hath been held, that this Court hath a discretionary power of refusing a writ for that purpose, but may first receive information about the election, and, if dissatisfied about the right, may send the parties to try it in an information. 2 Stra. 1003. The King v. Mayor and Burgesses of Tintagel in Cornwall.

A Mandamus lies to restore a mayor, alderman, or capital burgess of a corporation; a recorder, town-clerk, attorney turned out of an inferior Court, steward of a Court, constable, &c. 11 Rep. 99: Raym. 153: 1 Keb. 549: 2 Nels. Abr. 1148, 1149.

By some opinions it doth not lie, to restore a Common Council-man. 2 Cro. 540. But see 1 Vent. 302. A Mandamus may be had to restore a freeman; and also to admit one to the freedom of the city, having served an apprenticeship. Sid 107. To restore a fellow of the College of Physicians, it lies; though not for a fellow of a college in the universities, if there is a visitor. 1 Lev. 19, 23.

It hath been resolved, that a Mandamus shall not be granted to restore a fellow or member of any college of scholars or physic, because these are private foundations. Carthew's Rep. 92. This writ lieth not for the deputy of an office, &c. yet he who hath power to make such deputy, may have it: Mod. C. 18: 1 Lev. 306; and he may have it to admit his deputy. Stra. 893, 5. It lies not, generally, to elect a man into any office; nor for a clerk of a company, which is a private office; or to restore a barrister expelled a society; a proctor, &c. 2 Lev. 14, 18: 2 Nels. 1150, 1151. But a Mandamus may lie to remove persons as well as restore them; by virtue of any particular statute, or breach thereof. 4 Mod. 233.

If Justices of Peace refuse to admit one to take the oaths, to qualify himself for any place, &c. Mandamus lies; so to a bishop or archdeacon, to swear a churchwarden; to grant a probate of a will, and to admit an executor to prove a will, or an administrator; to a rector, vicar, or churchwarden, to restore a sexton. Wood's Inst. 568. Mandamus lieth to admit a man to take the oath of allegiance, &c. and subscribe according to the act of toleration, in order to be qualified to be a dissenting minister. Mod. Cas. 310. Also a Mandamus will lie to the bishop, to grant a licence for a parson to preach, where it is denied, and he is in orders for it: and this writ lies to restore a person to university degrees. 2 Ld. Raym. 1206, 1334. But after a man is restored on a peremptory Mandamus, he may be displaced again, for the same matters for which he was before removed, and others. Ib. 1283.

The general jurisdiction and superintendancy of the King's Bench, over all inferior Courts, to restrain them within their bounds, and to compel them to execute their jurisdiction, whether such jurisdiction arises from a modern charter, subsists by custom, or is created by act of parliament, yet, being in subsidium justitiæ, is now exercised in a vast variety of instances. But though these kind of writs are daily awarded to Judges of Courts, to give judgment, or to proceed in the execution of their authority, yet they are never granted to aid a jurisdiction, but only to enforce the execution of it; nor are they ever granted where there is another proper remedy. Dict.

To enumerate, with any degree of particularity, the various offices and situations to which a person may be admitted or restored by this writ, would take up more space than the nature of our work allows. The following however is a summary of so general a nature as, with what has already been said, may give an idea of the extensive use and nature of this remedy. It has been granted to admit and restore, a Mayor, Alderman, Jurat, Common Council-man, Recorder, High Steward, Town Clerk, Livery-man, Member of the Court of Assistants, Burgess, Bailiff, Serjeant, or Freeman of a Company or a Corporation; and it lies where the persons complaining have the right, though they never had the possession; and to admit one in reversion after the death of another. It lies for any ancient office, being a freehold, and for every public officer who has no other remedy to be restored, as Steward of a Court Leet or Court Baron, Attorney of any Court, Treasurer of a Public Company, Scavenger, Clerk of the Peace, Master or Fellow of a College where no visitor is appointed, Chaplain, Fellow of the College of Physicians, Master, Under-Master or Usher of a School, Registrar or Deputy-Registrar in the Ecclesiastical Court, Sexton or Parish Clerk, Clerk, Clerk to Commiſſioners of Land Tax, Ale-taſter, Director of a chartered Company, Prebendary, Conſtable, Churchwarden, Overſeer, Surveyor of the Highways, Diſſenting Miniſter, Teacher and Paſtor, Curate, &c. &c. See Com. Dig. title Mandamus (A).

A Mandamus will be granted to inferior juriſdictions of all kinds, to compel them to do their duty; as to a Lord, to hold a Court Baron; to a Steward and Homage of a Manor, to hold Courts; to enforce the attendance of tenants of a Manor to make a Court; to Juſtices of Peace, to grant warrants, make rates, ſwear officers, &c. See Com. Dig. ub. ſup.

Two writs of Mandamus may be granted on the application of different parties for the ſame election. Hardw. 178. But the Court will not grant croſs or concurrent writs with at ſpecial reaſons. 2 Burr. 782.

On applications for a Mandamus to be reſtored, the party applying muſt ſhew that he has complied with all the requiſites, to give him a primâ facie title; becauſe, if properly admitted, he may bring an action for money had and received for the profits 3 Term Rep. 578.

Although the caſes are ſo various and numerous in which writs of Mandamus have been granted, yet the inſtances in which they have been refuſed are almoſt equal in number; and the caſes are ſometimes contradictory, particularly as relates to Fellows of Colleges, and ſome other conteſted caſes; which, in fact, have frequently been governed by ſo many private circumſtances as ſcarcely to afford precedents.

One general rule is, that a Mandamus does not lie for a private office, as Steward of a Court Baron, Proctor in the Spiritual Court, Clerk of a private Company in London, on the ground generally of a private juriſdiction over ſuch officers. It does not lie to any of the Inns of Court to compel them to admit a perſon to the bar; the only appeal in this caſe being to the twelve Judges. It lies to a viſitor of a college only, under ſpecial circumſtances, as to hear an appeal and give ſome judgment. It does not lie for an office not known, unleſs it be ſpecially deſcribed. See Com. Dig. title Mandamus (B).

It does not lie to reſtore a perſon where it is confeſſed he was rightly removed, though he had no notice at the time to appear and defend himſelf. Cowp. 523. Nor to reſtore to an office, though the party was irregularly ſuſpended; if it appear by his own ſhowing that there was good ground for the ſuſpenſion if the proceedings had been regular. 2 Term Rep. 177. If a rule to ſhow cauſe is obtained, and it appears in affidavits that the caſe was not proper for a Mandamus, the Court may diſcharge the rule with coſts. 1 Term Rep. 396.

Where an action will lie for a complete ſatisfaction equivalent to a ſpecific relief, a Mandamus will not lie. It will therefore not be granted againſt the Bank to transfer ſtock, becauſe a ſpecial action of aſſumpſit will lie. Dougl. 526, (508).

If an election is doubtful, it ſhould be tried by information in the nature of a Quo Warranto, not on Mandamus. 3 Burr. 1452.

A writ of Mandamus may not be directed to one perſon, or to a Mayor and Aldermen, &c. to command another to do any act; it muſt be directed to thoſe only who are to do the thing required, and obey the writ. 2 Salk. 446, 701. Under ſtat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, it may be granted to proceed to the election of any annual officer, as well as of the Mayor or head officer. 2 Term Rep. 732. This writ is not to be teſted before granted by the Court; and if the corporation to which the Mandamus is ſent, be above forty miles from London, there ſhall be fifteen days between the day of the teſte and the return of the firſt writ of Mandamus; taking both days incluſive; but if but forty miles, or under, eight days only; and the alias and pluries may be made returnable immediatè: alſo at the return of the pluries, if no return be made, and there is affidavit of the ſervice, attachment ſhall go forth for the contempt, without hearing counſel to excuſe it. 2 Salk. 434: Stra. 407.

A motion was made for an attachment, for not returning an alias Mandamus; and, by Holt, Chief Juſtice, in caſe of a Mandamus out of Chancery, no attachment lies till the pluries, for that is in nature of an action to recover damages for the delay; but upon a Mandamus out of B R. the firſt writ ought to be returned, though an attachment is not granted without a peremptory rule to return the writ, and then it goes for the contempt, &c. 2 Salk. 429.

There is to be judgment upon the return of the writ, before any action on the caſe can be brought for a falſe return of a Mandamus. 2 Lev. 238. Returns upon writs of Mandamus muſt be certain for the Court to judge upon. 11 Rep. 99, and muſt be made by thoſe to whom the writ is directed. See Com. Dig. title Mandamus (D).

If the return conſiſts of ſeveral independent matters not inconſiſtent with each other, but part of them good in law and part bad; the Court may quaſh the return as to ſuch part only as is bad, and put the proſecutor to plead to or traverſe the reſt. 2 Term Rep. 456.

A caſe has happened, and others of the like kind may happen, where an action could not be brought, nor the return pleaded to, or traverſed under the ſtatute 9 Ann. c. 20. In ſuch caſe it may perhaps be adviſeable to move the Court of King's Bench, for an information againſt the perſon or perſons making a falſe return, or ſuch a return as will lay the party, who moved for the Mandamus, under the dilemma mentioned above. Rex v. Pettiward et al. Juſtices of Peace for Surry. 4 Burr. 2452.

It has been held, that ſeveral perſons cannot have one Mandamus; nor can ſeveral join in an action on the caſe for a falſe return. 2 Salk. 433. But there has been an inſtance to the contrary, where the circumſtances of the caſe were ſuch, that it required a variety of perſons to join in the application, viz. on the highway act, to compel the Juſtices to nominate a ſurveyor out of the liſt returned by the inhabitants. 4 Burr. 2452. For further matter on this ſubject ſee Vin. Abr. and Com. Dig. title Mandamus; and alſo this Dictionary, title Quo Warranto.

MANDAMUS, Was alſo a writ that lay after the year and day, (where in the mean time the writ, called diem clauſit extremum, had not been ſent out) to the Eſcheator, on the death of the King's tenant in capite, &c. commanding him to enquire of what lands holden by knight's ſervice, the tenant died ſeized. F. N. B. 561: Dy. 209. pl. 19: 248. pl. 81: Lamb. 36.

Mandamus was likewiſe a writ or charge to the Sheriff, to take into the hands of the King all the lands and tenements of the King's widow, that againſt her oath formerly given, marrieth without the King's conſent. Reg. fo. 295.

MANDATARY, Mandatarius.] He to whom a charge or commandment is given. Also he that obtains a benefice by Mandamus.

MANDATE, Mandatum.] A commandment judicial of the King or his Justices to have any thing done for dispatch of justice: whereof there is great variety in the table of the Register Judicial; verbo Mandatum. The Bishop of Durham's Mandates to the Sheriffs are mentioned in stat. 31 Eliz. c. 9. Cowell. edit. 1727.

MANDATI DIES. Mandie or Maunday Thursday; the day before Good Friday, when they commemorate and practice the commands of our Saviour in washing the feet of the poor, &c. And our Kings of England, to shew their humility, long executed the ancient custom on that day, of washing the feet of poor men, in number equal to the years of their reign, and giving them shoes, stockings, and money.

MANDATO, PANES DE; Loaves of bread given to the poor upon Maunday Thursday. Chartular Glaston. MS. fol. 29.

MANENTES, Was anciently used for tenentes or tenants; qui in solo alieno manent; and it was not lawful for them or their children, to depart without leave of the Lord. Concil. Synodal. apud Cloversho. anno 822.

MANGONARE, To buy in the market. Leg. Æthelred. c 24.

MANGONELLUS, A warlike instrument made to cast small stones against the walls of a castle. Cowell.

It differs from a petrard as follows, viz.

Interea grossos petraria mittit ad intus
Assidue lapides mangonellus que minores.

Vide Spelm Gloss. voc. Manga, Manganum.

MANNER, from the Fr. manier, or mainer, i. e. manu tractare.] To be taken with the Manner, is where a thief having stolen any thing, is taken with the same about him, as it were in his hands; which is called flagrante delicto. S. P. C. 179. See Mainour.

MANNING, manopera.] A day's work of a man; and in ancient deeds there were sometimes reserved so much rent, and so many mannings.

MANNIRE, To cite any one to appear in court, and stand to judgment there: it is different from bannire; for though both of them signify a citation, one is by the adverse party, and the other by the Judge. Leg. H. 1. c. 10. Du Cange.

MANNOPUS, manopera.] Goods taken in the hands of an apprehended thief. Cowell.

MANNUS, A horse, a pad or saddle horse. In the laws of Alfred, we find man' theof, for a horse-stealer. Cowell. See Mantheof.

MANOR, manerium.] Seems to be derived of the Fr. manoir, habitatio, or rather from manendo, of abiding there, because the Lord did usually reside there. It is called manerium, quasi manurium, because it is laboured by handy work: it is a noble sort of fee, granted partly to tenants for certain services to be performed, and partly reserved to the use of the Lord's family, with jurisdiction over his tenants for their farms. That which was granted out to tenants, we call tenementales; those reserved to the Lord, were dominicales: the whole fee was termed a Lordship, of old a Barony; from whence the Court, that is always an appendant to the Manor, is called The Court-baron. See Skene de verb. signif.

Touching the original of Manors, it seems that in the beginning, there was a circuit of ground, granted by the King to some Baron or man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction more or less within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required; and that afterwards this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, enjoining them such services and rents as he thought good, and so, as he became tenant to the King, the inferiors became tenants to him. See Perkin's Reservations, 670: Horne's Mirror of Justices, lib. 1. cap. de Roy Alfred; Fulbeck, fol. 18. And according to this our custom, all lands holden in fee throughout France were divided into fiefs and arriere fiefs, whereof the former were such as were immediately granted by the King; the second such as the King's feudatories did grant to others. Gregorii Syntagm. lib. 6. c. 5. num. 3.

In these days, a Manor rather signifieth the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site. For a man may have a Manor in gross, (as the law termeth it) that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereunto belonging, and another or others have every foot of the land. Kitchen, fol. 4. Broke, hoc titulo per totum. Bracton, lib. 4. cap. 31. n. 3, divideth Manerium into capitale & non capitale. See Fee.

A Manor may be compounded of divers things, as of a house, arable land, pasture, meadow, wood, rent, advowson, court-baron, and such like; and this ought to be by long continuance of time beyond the memory of man; for at this day a Manor cannot be made, because a court-baron cannot now be made, and a Manor cannot be without a court-baron, and suitors or freeholders, two at the least; for if all the freeholds except one escheat to the Lord, or if he purchase all except one, there his Manor is gone causâ quâ supra, although in common speech it may be so called. Cowell. Vide Co. Lit. 58, 108; Lit. 73: 2 Rol. Abr. 121.

By a grant of the demesnes and services, the Manor passeth: and by grant and render of the demesnes only, the Manor is destroyed, because the services and demesnes are thereby severed by the act of the party; though it is otherwise, if by act of law, as by partition. 6 Rep. 63. There are two coparceners of a Manor; the demesnes are assigned to one, and the services to the other, the Manor is gone; but if one die without issue, and the Manor descends to her who had the services, the Manor is revived again, for the severance was by act in law. 1 Inst. 122: 8 Rep. 79: 3 Salk. 25, 40.

A new Manor may arise and revive by operation of law. 1 Leon. 204.

It may contain one or more villages or hamlets; or only great part of a village, &c. And there are capital Manors, or Honours, which have other Manors under them, the Lords whereof perform customs and services to the superior Lords. 2 Inst. 67: 2 Rol. Abr. 72. See title Honour. There may be also customary Manors, granted by copy of court-roll, and held of other Manors. 4 Rep. 26: 11 Rep. 17. But it cannot be a Manor in law, if it wanteth freehold tenants; nor be a customary Manor, without copyhold tenants. 1 Inst. 58: Lit. 73: 2 Rol. Abr. 121. But it is said, if there be but one freehold freehold tenant, the seigniory continues between the Lord and that one tenant. 1 And. 257: 1 Nelf. Abr. 524. The custom remains, where tenements are divided from the rest of the manor, the tenants paying their services: and he who hath the freehold of them, may keep a court of survey, &c. Cro. Eliz. 103. See title Copyhold.

MANORS, says Blackstone, are in substance as antient as the Saxon Constitution, though perhaps differing a little in some immaterial circumstances from those that exist at this day. Co. Cop. § 2, 10.

The tenemental lands of ancient Manors were, from the different modes of tenure, distinguished by two different names. First, book land, or charter-land, which was held by deed under certain rents and free-services, and in effect differed nothing from free socage lands. Co. Cop. § 3. And from hence have arisen most of the freehold tenants who hold of particular Manors, and owe suit and service to the same. The other species was called folk-land, which was held by no assurance in writing, but distributed among the common folk, or people, at the pleasure of the Lord, and resumed at his discretion; being indeed land held in villenage. See this Dictionary, title Villenage. The residue of the Manor being uncultivated, was termed the Lord's Waste, and served for public roads, and for common of pasture to the Lord and his tenants.

Manors were formerly called Baronies, as they still are Lordships; and each Lord or Baron was empowered to hold a domestic Court, called the Court-baron, for redressing misdemesnors and nusances within the Manor, and for settling disputes of property among the tenants. This Court is an inseparable ingredient of every Manor; and if the number of suitors should so fail as not to leave sufficient to make a Jury or Homage, that is, two tenants at the least, the Manor itself is lost.

In the early times of our legal constitution, the King's greater Barons, who had a large extent of territory held under the Crown, granted out frequently smaller Manors to inferior persons, to be holden of themselves, which do therefore now continue to be held under a superior Lord, who is called in such cases the Lord paramount over all these Manors: and his seignory is frequently termed an Honour, not a Manor, especially if it hath belonged to an antient feudal Baron, or hath been at any time in the hands of the Crown. (See this Dictionary, title Honour.) In imitation whereof, these inferior Lords began to carve out and grant to others still more minute estates, to be held as of themselves, and were so proceeding downwards in infinitum; till the superior Lords observed, that by this method of subinfeudation they lost all their feudal profits, of wardships, marriages, and escheats, which fell into the hands of these mesne or middle Lords, who were the immediate superiors of the terre-tenant, or him who occupied the land; and also that the mesne Lords themselves were so impoverished thereby, that they were disabled from performing their services to their own superiors. This occasioned, first, that provision in the 32d cap. of Magna Carta, 9 Hen. 3; (which is not to be found in the first charter granted by that prince, nor in the Great Charter of King John;) that no man should either give or sell his land, without reserving sufficient to answer the demands of his Lord; and afterwards the statute of Westm. 3, or quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1. c. 1; which directs that upon all sales or feoffments of lands, the feoffee shall hold the same not of his immediate feoffor, but of the chief Lord of the fee of whom such feoffor himself held it. But these provisions not extending to the Kings own tenants in capite, the like law concerning them is declared by the statutes of prerogativa regis, 17 E. 2. c. 6: 34 E. 3. c 15; by which last all subinfeudations, previous to the reign of King Edward I. were confirmed: but all subsequent to that period were left open to the King's prerogative. (See this Dictionary, title Tenures.) From hence it is clear, that all Manors existing at this day, must have existed as early as King Edward I. for it is essential to a Manor, that there be tenants who hold of the Lord; and by the operation of these statutes, no tenant in capite since the accession of that prince, and no tenant of a common Lord since the statute of quia emptores, could create any new tenants to hold of himself. 2 Comm. c. 6. p. 90—92.

MANSE, mansa.] An habitation, or farm and land. Spelm. See Mansum.

MANSER, A bastard. Cowell.

MANSION, mansio; à manendo.] Among the ancient Romans, was a place appointed for the lodging of the prince, or soldiers in their journey; and in this sense we read primam mansionem, &c. It is with us most commonly used for the Lord's chief dwelling-house within his fee; otherwise called the capital messuage, or manor-place. Skene.

Some say it is a dwelling of one or more houses without a neighbour: see Bract. lib. 5. p. 1: and mansion-house is taken in law for any house or dwelling of another; in cases of committing burglary, &c. 3 Co. Inst. 64.

The Latin word mansia, according to Sir Edward Coke, seems to be a certain quantity of land: bida vel mansia, and mansa, are mentioned in some old writers and charters. Fleta, lib. 6. And that which in ancient Latin authors was termed bida, was afterwards called mansus.

MANSLAUGHTER; See title Homicide.

MANSTEALING; See title Kidnapping.

MANSUM CAPITALE, The manor-house or manse, or court of the Lord. Kennet's Antiq. 150.

MANSUS, Anciently a farm. Seld. of Tithes, 62.

MANSUS PRESBYTERI, The manse or house of residence of the parish priest; being the parsonage or vicarage-house. Paroch. Antiq. 431.

MANTHEOF, from the Lat. mannus, a nag, and Sax. theoff. i. e. thief.] An horse-stealer. Leg Alfred. See Mannus.

MANTILE, A long robe; from the Fr. word manteau; mentioned in stat. 24 H. 8. c. 13.

MANUALIA BENEFICIA, Were the daily distributions of meat and drink to the canons and other members of cathedral churches, for their present subsistence. Lib. Statutor. Eccles. Sancti Pauli London. MS.

MANUALIS OBEDIENTIA, Is used for sworn obedience, or submission upon oath.

MANUCAPTIO, A writ that lies for a man taken on suspicion of felony, &c. who cannot be admitted to bail by the Sheriff, or others having power to let to mainprise. F. N. B. 249. See Mainprise.

MANUAL, manualis.] Signifies what is employed or used by the hand, and whereof a present profit may be made: as such a thing in the Manual occupation of one, is where it is actually used or employed by him. Staundf. Prerog. 54.

MANUFACTURES AND MANUFACTURERS. These are regulated by a vast variety of statutes adapted to the particular nature of each business, to which they are applied, to guard against the frauds and negligence of journeymen and workmen concerned therein. The following, here noticed, contain the most general provisions. For a reference to the several statutes relative to every particular branch, see this Dictionary under the several appropriate titles.

By stat. 3 Edw. 4. c. 4, the Masters and Wardens of every craft in every city, town, and village, and the Mayor or Bailiff of every such city, &c. are empowered to search at fairs and markets, shops open, and warehouses, all such wares pertaining to their proper crafts which shall be made within England: and if such wares be not lawful and duly wrought, to seize them as forfeit.

By stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 18, made perpetual by stat. 9 Ann. c. 30, if any person employed in the working up the woollen, linen, fustian, cotton, or iron manufactures shall embezzle or purloin any materials which he shall be intrusted with to work, or if any person shall receive such embezzled materials, the offender shall forfeit double the value to the poor, or be committed to the House of Correction, and there whipped and kept to hard labour for fourteen days. This statute was further enforced by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 8, which made a second offence liable to a forfeiture of four times the value. These provisions were however found insufficient.

By stats. 22 Geo. 2. c. 27: 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, any person employed in working up any woollen, linen, silk, leather, or iron manufacture, who shall purloin, embezzle, secrete, sell, pawn, exchange, or unlawfully dispose of any of the materials, shall be committed to the House of Correction for not less than fourteen days, nor more than three months, and whipped; and for a second offence to be committed, for not less than three months nor more than six, and whipped. The receiver to forfeit from 40*l.* to 20*l.* or be whipped; and for a second offence from 100*l.* to 50*l.* or be whipped. These statutes also empower Justices to grant warrants to search for embezzled materials, and to seize them, giving an opportunity to owners to prove the property, and also to compel workmen entrusted with materials, to work up the same within eight days, and to prevent their engaging in more than one service at a time. The provisions in stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 34, against unlawful clubs and societies of woolcombers, &c. to regulate the trade, are by the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 27, extended to dyers, hotpressers, hatmakers, and all journeymen in the manufactures of silk, mohair, fur, hemp, flax, linen, cotton, fustian, iron, or leather. The said stat. 17 Geo. 3. c. 56, also contains many other provisions against receivers of embezzled manufactures, and prohibits journeymen dyers in particular from receiving goods to dye without the consent of their employers.

By the said stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 18, all payments to workmen in the manufactures therein mentioned, shall be by lawful coin, and not by cloth, victuals, or commodities; and this humane provision against oppression and injustice, is extended by stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 8, to the manufacturers in leather; and by stat. 19 Geo. 3. c. 49, to the lace-manufacturers also.

By the said stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 18, all wool delivered out to be wrought up shall be delivered with the declaration of the true weight; and all wages, demands, and defaults of labourers in the woollen, linen, fustian, cotton, and iron manufactures, shall be heard and determined by two Justices of Peace, with an appeal to the Quarter Sessions.

To prevent the destruction of our home manufactures, by transporting and seducing our artists to settle abroad, it is provided by stat. 5 Geo. 1. c. 27, that if any entice or seduce any artificer in wool, iron, steel, brass, or other metal, clockmaker, watchmaker, or other artificer, such seducer shall be fined 100*l.* and be imprisoned three months; and for the second offence shall be fined at discretion, and be imprisoned a year; and the artificers so going into foreign countries, and not returning, within six months after warning given them by the British Ambassador where they reside, shall be deemed aliens, and forfeit all their lands and goods, and shall be incapable of any legacy or gift. By stat. 23 Geo. 2. c. 13, the seducers of the artists above specified, or of those in mohair, cotton, or silk, incur for the first offence a forfeiture of 500*l.* for each artificer contracted with to be sent abroad, and imprisonment for 12 months; and for the second 1000*l.* and are liable to two years imprisonment: and by the same statute, connected with stat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 71, if any person export any tools or utensils used in the silk, linen, cotton, or woollen manufactures; (except wool cards to North America, stat. 15 Geo. 3. c. 5;) he forfeits the same, and 200*l*; and the captain of the ship, having knowledge thereof, 100*l*: and if any captain of a King's ship, or officer of the Customs, knowingly suffers such exportation, he shall forfeit 100*l.* and his employment; and is for ever made incapable of bearing any public office; and every person collecting such tools or utensils in order to export the same, shall, on conviction at the assises, forfeit such tools, and also 200*l.* By stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 37, if any person shall put on board any ship, not bound to any place in Great Britain or Ireland, or shall have in his custody, with intent to export, any engine, tool, or implement used in the woollen, cotton, linen, or silk manufactures, he shall forfeit the same, and also the sum of 200*l.* and shall be imprisoned 12 months, and till the forfeiture is paid. And every captain and Custom-house officer who shall knowingly receive such an article, or take an entry of it, shall forfeit 200*l.* By stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 60, if any person shall entice or encourage any artificer employed in printing callicoes, cottons, muslins, or linens, to leave the kingdom, he shall forfeit 500*l.* and be imprisoned one year: and persons who export, or attempt to export, any engines or instruments used in that manufacture, shall forfeit 500*l*: and captains of ships and Custom-house officers conniving at these offences forfeit 100*l.* and become incapable of holding any office under the Crown. By stats. 25 Geo. 3. c. 67: 26 Geo. 3. c. 89, persons who attempt to export any instruments, specified by name in those acts, (the latter of which particularly regulates the exportation thereof to the West Indies,) shall forfeit 200*l.* and be imprisoned one year: and captains and Custom-house officers conniving at the offence are subject to the same penalty, and become incapable of exercising any public employment.

MANUMISSION, manumissio.] The freeing a villein or slave out of bondage; which was formerly done several ways: Some were manumitted by delivery to the sheriff, and proclamation in the county, &c. others by charter; one way of Manumission was for the lord to take the bondman by the head, and say, I will that this man be free, and then shoving him forward out of his hands. And there was a Manumission implied, when the lord made an obligation for payment of money to the bondman, or sued him where he might enter without suit, &c. The form of manumitting a person in the time of Will. 1. called The Conqueror, is thus set down.—Si quis velit servum suum liberum facere, tradat eum vicecomiti per manum dextram, in pleno comitatu, et quietum illum clamare debet à jugo servitutis suæ per manumissionem, *et ostendat ei liberas portas et vias, et tradat illi libera arma, scilicet lanceam et gladium, et deinde liber homo efficitur. MANUS, Anciently used for the person taking an oath, as a compurgator. And it often occurs in old records; Tertia, quarta, &c. manu jurare; that is, the party was to bring so many, to swear with him, that they believed what he vouched was true: and in case of a woman accused of adultery; Mulieri hoc neganti purgatio sexta manu extitit indicta, i. e. she was to vindicate her reputation upon the testimony of six compurgators. Reg. Eccl. Christ. Cant. If a person swore alone, it was propriâ manu et unicâ. The use of this word came probably from laying the hand upon the New Testament, on taking the oath.

MARCHERS or LORDS MARCHERS, Were those noblemen that lived on the Marches of Wales or Scotland; who in times past (according to Camden) had their laws, and potestatem vitæ, &c. like petty Kings; which are abolished by stat. 27 H. 8. c. 26. See also stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 10; and this Dictionary, title Wales. In old records the Lords Marchers of Wales were styled Marchiones de Marchia Walliæ.

MARCHES, marchia, from the Germ. march, i. e. limes; or from the Fr. marque, signum; being the notorious distinction between two countries, or territories.] The limits between England and Wales, or Scotland, when those were considered as enemies' countries; which last are divided into West and Middle Marches. See stats. 4 Hen. 5. c. 7: 22 Ed. 4. c. 8: 24 Hen. 8. c. 9. There was formerly a Court called the Court of the Marches of Wales, where pleas of debt or damages, not above the value of fifty pounds, were tried and determined; and if the Council of the Marches held plea for debts above that sum, &c. a prohibition might be awarded. Cro. Car. 384.

MARCHET, marchetum.] Consuetudo pecuniaria, in mancipiorum filiabus maritandis. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 8. This custom, with some variation, is observed in some parts of England and Wales, as also in Scotland, and the isle of Guernsey: and in the manor of Dinevor, in the county of Carmarthen, every tenant at the marriage of his daughter pays ten shillings to the lord, which in the British language is called Gwabr Merched, i. e. a maid's fee. The custom for the lord to lie the first night with the bride of his tenant was very common in Scotland, and the North of England; but it was abrogated by Malcolm the Third, at the instance of his Queen; and instead thereof a mark was paid to the lord by the bridegroom: from whence it is denominated mercheta mulieris. See titles Maiden-Rents; Borough-English.

MARINARIUS, A mariner or seaman: and marinariorum capitaneus was the Admiral or warden of the ports; which offices were commonly united in the same person; the word Admiral not coming into use, till the latter end of the reign of King Ed. 1. before which time the King's letters ran thus:—Rex capitaneo marinariorum et eisdem marinariis salutem. Paroch. Antiq. 322. See title Admiral.—For the various regulations on the subject of Mariners, see this Dictionary, titles Insurance; Navy; Seamen. As to Mariners wandering up and down, see title Vagrants.

MARITAGIUM, That portion which is given with a daughter in marriage. See Glanvil, lib. 2. c. 18. As MARK, marca, Sax. mearc.] Of silver, is now thirteen shillings and fourpence: though in the reign of Hen. 1. it was only six shillings and a penny in weight; and some were coined, and some only cut in small pieces; but those that were coined, were worth something more than the others. In former times, money was paid, and things valued oftentimes by the mark. We read of a mark of gold of eight ounces, of 6*l.* in silver; or as others write 6*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* Stow's Annal. 32. Rot. Mag. Pipæ, Ann. 1 Hen. 2.

MARK TO GOODS, Is what ascertains the property or goodness thereof, &c. And if one man shall use the mark of another, to the intent to do him damage, upon injury proved, action upon the case lieth. 2 Cro. 471. The penalty of counterfeiting the marks on wax, appointed by stat. 23 Eliz. c. 8. is 5*l.* or pillory and imprisonment.

MARKET, mercatus; from mercando, buying and selling.] The liberty by grant or prescription, whereby a town is enabled to set up and open shops, &c. at a certain place therein, for buying and selling, and better provision of such victuals as the Subject wanteth; it is less than a fair; and usually kept once or twice a week. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 24: 1 Inst. 220.

The establishment of public marts, or places of buying and selling, such as markets and fairs, with the tolls thereunto belonging, is enumerated by Blackstone as one of the King's prerogatives. These can only be set up by virtue of the King's grant, or by long and immemorial usage and prescription, which presupposes such a grant. 2 Inst. 220.

According to Bracton, one Market ought to be distant from another, sex leucas, vel milliar. et dimidiam, et tertiam partem dimidiæ. If one hath a Market by charter or prescription, and another obtains a Market near it, to the nuisance of the former, the owner of the former may avoid it. 1 Inst. 406: F. N. B. 184: 2 Ro. Ab. 140 But in order to make this out to be a nusance, it is necessary —1. That the prosecutor's Market or Fair be the elder, otherwise the nuisance lies at his own door: 2. That the second Market be erected within the third part of 20 miles from the other; (i. e. as above expressed, six miles and a half, and one-third of half a mile:) for the dieta, or reasonable day's journey mentioned by Bracton, (l. 3. c. 16.) is construed by Hale to be 20 miles. See 2 Inst. 567. So that if the new Market be not within the distance abovementioned of the old one, it is no nusance; as it is held reasonable that every man should have a Market within one-third of a day's journey from his own house; that the day being divided into three parts, he may spend one part in going, another in returning, and the third in transacting his necessary business there. If such Market or Fair be on the same day with the old one, it is primâ facie a nusance to that, and there needs no proof of it, but the law will intend it to be so; but if it be on another day, it may be a nusance, though whether it is so or not, cannot be intended or presumed, but must be proved to a Jury. 3 Comm. c 13. p. 218. Also where a man has a Fair or Market, and one erects another to his prejudice, an action will lie. Rol. 140: 1 Mod. 69.

The Fair or Market is taken for the place where kept: and formerly it was customary for Fairs and Markets to be kept on Sundays; but by stat. 27 H. 6. c. 5, no Fair or Market is to be kept upon any Sunday, or upon the feasts of the Ascension, Corpus Christi, Good Friday, All Saints, &c. except for necessary victuals, and in time of harvest: and they ought not to be held in church-yards, stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 6. All Fairs are Markets: and there may be a Market without an owner; though where there is an owner, a butcher cannot prescribe to sell meat in his own house upon a Market-day; for the Market must be in an open place, where the owner may have the benefit of it. 4 Inst. 272. No Market shall be held out of the city of London within seven miles: though all butchers, victuallers, &c. may hire stalls and standings in the Markets there, and sell meat and provisions, on four days in a week, &c. Cit. lib. 101.

Property may, in some cases, be transferred by sale, though the vendor hath none at all in the goods; for it is expedient that the buyer, by taking proper precautions, may at all events be secure of his purchase; otherwise all commerce between man and man must be soon at an end. The general rule of law, therefore, is, that all sales and contracts of any thing vendible in Fairs or Markets overt, (that is, open,) shall not only be good between the parties, but also binding on all those that have any right or property therein. 2 Inst. 713. And for this purpose the Mirror says, tolls were established, viz. to testify the making of contracts; for every private contract was discountenanced by law: insomuch that our Saxon ancestors prohibited the sale of any thing above the value of 20*d.* unless in open Market; and directed every bargain and sale to be made in the presence of credible witnesses. Mirr. c. 1. § 3: Ll. Ethel. 10. 12: Ll. Eadg. Wilk. 80. Market overt in the country is only held on the special days provided for particular towns by charter or prescription; but in London every day except Sunday is Market-day. Cro. Jac. 68. The Market-place, or spot of ground set apart by custom for the sale of particular goods, is also in the country the only Market overt. Godb. 131. But in London every shop in which goods are exposed publicly to sale, is Market overt; for such things only as the owner professes to trade in. 5 Rep. 83: 12 Mod. 521: though if the sale be in a warehouse, and not publicly in the shop, the property is not altered. 5 Rep. 83: Moor, 300. But if goods are stolen from one, and sold out of Market overt, the property is not altered, and the owner may take them wherever he finds them. And it is expressly provided by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 21, that the sale of any goods, wrongfully taken, to any pawn-broker in London, or within two miles thereof, shall not alter the property; for this being usually a clandestine trade, is therefore made an exception to the general rule. And even in Market overt, if the goods be the property of the King, such sale, though regular in all other respects, will in no case bind him; though it binds infants, femes-covert, idiots or lunatics, and persons beyond sea, or in prison. 2 Inst. 713. If the goods be stolen from a common person, and then taken by the King's officer from the felon, and sold in open Market, still if the owner has used due diligence in prosecuting the thief to conviction, he loses not his property in the goods. Bac. Use of the Law, 158. So likewise if the buyer knoweth the property not to be in the seller; or there be any other fraud in the transaction; if he knoweth the seller to be an infant, or feme-covert not usually trading for herself; if the sale be not originally and wholly made in the Fair or Market, or not at the usual hours, the owner's property is not bound thereby. 2 Inst. 713, 4: 5 Rep. 83. If a man buys his own goods in a Fair or Market, the contract of sale shall not bind him, so that he shall render the price; unless the property had been previously altered by a former sale. Perk. § 93. And notwithstanding any number of intervening sales, if the original vendor, who sold without having the property, comes again into possession of the goods, the original owner may take them, when found in his hands who was guilty of the first breach of justice. 2 Inst. 713. But the owner of goods stolen, who has prosecuted the thief to conviction, cannot recover the value of his goods from any one who has purchased them, and sold them again, even with notice of the theft before the conviction. 2 Term Rep. 750. By these regulations the Common Law has secured the right of the proprietor in personal chattels from being divested, so far as is consistent with that other necessary policy, that purchasers bona fide, in a fair, open, and regular manner, should not be afterwards put to difficulties by reason of the previous knavery of the seller. 2 Comm. 449, 450.

Persons that dwell in the country, may not sell wares by retail in a Market-town, but in open fairs: but countrymen may sell goods in gross there. Stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 7.

All contracts for any thing vendible in Markets, &c. shall be binding, and sales alter the property, if made according to the following rules, viz. 1. The sale is to be in a place that is open, so that any one that passeth by may see it, and be in a proper place for such goods. 2. It must be an actual sale, for a valuable consideration. 3. The buyer is not to know that the seller hath a wrongful possession of the goods sold. 4. The sale must not be fraudulent, betwixt two, to bar a third person of his right. 5. There is to be a sale, and a contract, by persons able to contract. 6. The contract must be originally, and wholly, in the Market overt. 7. Toll ought to be paid, where required by statute, &c. 8. The sale is not to be in the night, [or on a Sunday,] but between sun and sun; (though if the sale be so made it may bind the parties.) A sale thus made shall bind the parties, and those that are strangers, who have a right. 5 Rep. 83.

The statutes which ordain, that toll-takers shall be appointed in Markets and Fairs, to enter in their books the names of the buyers, sellers, vouchers, and prices of horses sold, and deliver a note thereof to the buyer, &c. secure the property of stolen horses to the owner, although sold in a Fair or Market, if he repays what was bonâ fide paid for the horse. Stats. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 7: 31 Eliz. c. 12. See title Horses.

Every one that hath a Market, shall have toll for things sold, which is to be paid by the buyer, and by ancient custom may be paid for standing of things in the Market, though nothing be sold; but not otherwise. A piepowder court is incident as well to a Market as a Fair; (see title Court of Piepowders;) and proprietors of Markets ought to have a pillory, and tumbrel, &c. to punish offenders. 1 Inst. 281: 2 Inst. 221; 4 Inst. 272. Keeping a Fair or Market, otherwise than it is granted, as by keeping them upon two days, when only one is granted; or on any other day than appointed; extorting toll or fees where none are due, &c. are causes of forfeiture. Finch 164. If a person erects stalls in a Market, and does not leave room for the people to stand and sell their wares, so that they are thereby forced to hire such stall, the taking money for the use of them, in that case, is extortion. 1 Ld. Raym. 149. See further titles Fair; Clerk of the Market.

MARLE, marla, from the Sax. margel, i. e. medulla.] Otherwise called Malin; A kind of earth or mineral, which in divers counties of this kingdom is used to fertilize land. See stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 4.

MARLERIUM, or MARLETUM, A marle pit. Chart. Antiq.

MARQUE, from the Saxon mearc, signum.] A mark or sign; but in our ancient statutes it signifies Reprisals. See title Letters of Marque.

MARQUESS, or MARQUIS, Marchio.] Is now a title of honour before an Earl, and next to a Duke; and by the opinion of Hotoman, the name is derived from the German March, signifying originally Custos Limitis, or Comes et præfectus limitis. In the reign of King Rich. II. came up first the title of Marquis, which was a governor of the marches; for before that time, those that governed the marches were called commonly Lords Marchers, and not Marquesses, as Judge Doderidge has observed in his law of Nobility and Peerage. Selden's Mare claus. lib. 2. c. 19. A Marquis is created by patent; and anciently by cincture of sword, mantle of state, &c. See titles Lords Marchers; Peers; Nobility.

MARRIAGE,

MARITAGIUM.] A civil and religious contract, whereby a man is joined and united to a woman, for the purposes of civilized society: Maritagium, in the feudal law, signified the interest of bestowing a ward or widow in marriage by the Lord. Mag. Chart. c. 6. See title Tenures II. 4.

Maritagium

Maritagium is likewise applied to land given in Marriage; and is that portion which the husband receives with his wife. Bract. lib. 2. c. 34: Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1. In this sense there are divers writs, De Maritagio, &c. Reg. 171.

There is further a term called Duty of Marriage, signifying an obligation to marry; imposed on women who formerly held lands, charged with personal services, in order to render them by their husbands. Cowell. See Tenure, title II. 4.

Marriage is generally the conjunction of man and woman, in a constant society, and agreement of living together; until the contract is dissolved by death or breach of faith, or some notorious misbehaviour, destructive of the end for which it was intended. It is one of the rights of human nature; and was instituted in a state of innocence, for preservation thereof: and nothing more is requisite to a complete Marriage, by the laws of England, than a full, free, and mutual consent between parties, not disabled to enter into that state by their near relation to each other, infancy, pre-contract, or impotency. Dict. See post. stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33.

As to the solemnization of Marriage, this is regulated by the laws and Customs of the nation where we reside; and every State allows such privileges to the parties as it deems expedient, and denies legal advantages to those who refuse to solemnize their Marriage, in the manner the State requires; but they cannot dissolve a Marriage celebrated in another manner, Marriage being of divine institution, to which only a full and free consent of the parties is necessary. Before the time of Pope Innocent III. there was no solemnization of Marriage in the church; but the man came to the house where the woman inhabited, and led her home to his own house, which was all the ceremony then used. See 1 Rol. Abr. 359: 1 Sid. 64.

Marriages by Romish priests, whose orders are acknowledged by the church of England, are deemed to have the effects of a legal Marriage in some instances; but Marriages ought to be solemnized according to the rites of the church of England, to entitle the parties to the privileges attending legal Marriage, as dower, thirds, &c. And by stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. § 13, Popish Recusants convict, married otherwise than according to the orders of the church of England, by a minister lawfully authorised, and in some open church, &c. shall be disabled, the man to be tenant by the curtesy, and the woman to claim her dower, jointure, or widow's estate, &c.

Marriage at Common Law is either in right, or in possession; and Marriage de facto, or in reputation, as among Quakers, &c. is allowed to be sufficient to give title to a personal estate. 1 Leon. 53: Wood's Inst. 59. But in the case of a Dissenter, married to a woman by a minister of the congregation, who was not in orders; it was held that when a husband demands a right to himself as husband, by the Ecclesiastical Law, he ought to prove himself a husband by that law, to entitle him to it: and notwithstanding the wife, and the children of this Marriage, may entitle themselves to a temporal right by such Marriage; yet the husband shall not, by the reputation of the Marriage, unless he hath a substantial right: and this Marriage is not a mere nullity, because by the law of nature the contract is binding; for though the positive law of man ordains Marriage to be made by a priest, that law only makes this Marriage irregular, and not expresly void. 1 Salk. 119. But this is, in some cases, altered by the Marriage-act, stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33: the substance of which see post.

The Marriages that are made in an ordinary course, are to be by asking in the church, and other ceremonies appointed by the book of Common Prayer. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 21. By the ordinances of the church, when persons are to be married, the banns of matrimony shall be published in the church where they dwell three several Sundays or holidays, in the time of divine service; and if, at the day appointed for their Marriage, any man do alledge any impediment; as pre-contract, consanguinity, or affinity, want of parent's consent, infancy, &c. why they should not be married, (and become bound with sufficient sureties to prove his allegation,) then the solemnization must be deferred until the truth is tried. Rubrick. And no minister shall celebrate matrimony between any persons without a faculty or licence, except the banns of Marriage have been first published as directed, according to the book of Common Prayer, on pain of suspension for three years; nor shall any minister, under the like penalty, join any persons in Marriage, who are so licensed, at any unseasonable times, or in any private place, &c. Canon 62. Also on the granting of licences, oath is made, and bond is to be taken, that there are no impediments of pre-contract, consanguinity, &c. nor any suit or controversy depending in any Ecclesiastical Court, touching any contract of Marriage of either of the parties with any other; that neither of them are of better estate than is suggested; and that the Marriage be openly solemnized in the parish church where one of the parties dwelleth, or the church mentioned in the licence, between the hours of eight and twelve in the morning. Licences to the contrary shall be void; and the parties marrying are subject to punishment as for clandestine Marriages. Can. 102.

But, by special licence or dispensation from the Archbishop of Canterbury, Marriages, especially of persons of quality, are frequently in their own houses, out of canonical hours, in the evening, and often solemnized by others in other churches than where one of the parties lives, and out of time of divine service, &c.

Marriages are prohibited in Lent, and on fasting days, because the mirth attending them is not suitable to the humiliation and devotion of those times; yet persons may marry with licences in Lent, although the banns of Marriage may not then be published. Formerly, during the establishment of the Catholic religion in these kingdoms, priests were restrained from Marriage, and their issue accounted bastards, &c. and the stat. 31 H. 8. c. 14, made such Marriages felonious. But on the Reformation, laws were made, declaring that the Marriage of priests should be lawful, and their children legitimate; though the preambles to those statutes set forth, that it would be better for priests to live chaste, and separate from the company of women, that they might with the more fervency attend the ministry of the Gospel. See stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 21. But this statute, like all other reforms in the church, was repealed by Queen Mary, and was not revived again till by stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 25; though the thirty-nine articles had passed in convocation in 5th year of Queen Elizabeth, the 32d of which declares, clares, that it is lawful for the bishops, priests, and deacons, as for all other Christian men, to marry at their own discretion. The Clerks in Chancery, though laymen, were not allowed to marry, till stat. 14 & 15 H. 8. c. 8. And no lay-doctor of civil law if he was married, could exercise any ecclesiastical jurisdiction, till stat. 37 H. 8. c. 7.

Taking Marriage in the light of a civil contract, the law treats it as it does all other contracts: allowing it to be good and valid in all cases where the parties at the time of making it were in the first place willing to contract; secondly, able to contract; and, lastly, actually did contract, in the proper forms and solemnities required by law. 1 Comm. c. 15. p. 433.

First, They must be willing to contract; "Consensus non concubitus facit nuptias," is the maxim of the Civil Law in this case; and it is also adopted by the Common Lawyers. 1 Inst. 33.

Secondly, They must be able to contract. In general all persons are able to contract themselves in Marriage, unless they labour under some particular disabilities and incapacities. What those are we shall therefore inquire.

These disabilities are of two sorts: first, such as are canonical, and therefore sufficient by the Ecclesiastical Laws to avoid the Marriage in the Spiritual Court; but these in our law only make the Marriage voidable, and not ipso facto void, until sentence of nullity be obtained. Of this nature are pre-contract, consanguinity, or relation by blood; affinity, or relation by Marriage; and some particular corporeal infirmities. These canonical disabilities are either grounded upon the express words of the divine laws, or are consequences plainly deducible from thence; it therefore being sinful in the persons who labour under them, to attempt to contract matrimony together, they are properly the object of the Ecclesiastical Magistrates' coercion; in order to separate the offenders and inflict penance for the offence, pro salute animarum. But such Marriages not being void ab initio, but voidable only by sentence of separation, they are esteemed valid to all civil purposes, unless such separation is actually made during the life of the parties. For after the death of either of them the Courts of Common Law will not suffer the Spiritual Court to declare such Marriages to have been void; because that declaration cannot now tend to the reformation of the parties. 1 Inst. 33: 2 Inst. 614. Therefore when a man had married his first wife's sister, and after her death the Bishop's Court was proceeding to annul the Marriage, and bastardize the issue, the Court of King's Bench granted a prohibition quod hoc; but permitted them to proceed to punish the husband for incest. Salk. 548.

These canonical disabilities being entirely within the province of the Ecclesiastical Courts, our books are perfectly silent concerning them. But there are a few statutes which serve as directories to those Courts, of which it will be proper to take notice. By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 38, it is declared, that all persons may lawfully marry but such as are prohibited by God's law: and that all Marriages contracted by lawful persons in the face of the church, and consummate with bodily knowledge and fruit of children, shall be indissoluble. And (because in the times of popery a great variety of degrees of kindred were made impediments to Marriage, which impediments might however be bought off for money) it is declared by the same statute, that nothing, God's law except, shall impeach any Marriage, but within the Levitical degrees, the farthest of which is, that between uncle and niece. Gilb. Rep. 158.

By the same statute all impediments, arising from pre-contracts to other persons, were abolished, and declared of none effect, unless they had been consummated with bodily knowledge; in which case the Common Law holds such contract to be a Marriage de facto. But this branch of the statute was repealed by stat. 2 & 3 E. 6. c. 23. How far that clause of the Marriage-Act, stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, which prohibits all suits in Ecclesiastical Courts to compel a Marriage in consequence of any contract, may collaterally extend to revive this clause of stat. 32 Hen. 8, and abolish the impediment of pre-contract, deserves the consideration of the canonists. See 1 Comm. c. 15. p. 434, 5. A contract per verba de præsenti tempore, used to be considered in the Ecclesiastical Courts ipsum matrimonium; and if either party had afterwards married, this, as a second Marriage, would have been annulled in the Spiritual Courts, and the first contract enforced. See an instance, 4 Co. 29. But as this pre-engagement can no longer be carried into effect as a Marriage, it seems undoubted that it will never more be an impediment to a subsequent Marriage actually solemnized and consummated. 1 Comm. 435, in n.

In the above stat. 32 H. 8. c. 38, the prohibitions by God's law are not specified; but in stats. 25 H. 8. c. 22: 28 H. 8. c. 7, the prohibited degrees are particularized. It is doubtful whether these two last statutes are in force. 2 Burr. Eccl. L. 405. But so far they seem to be only declaratory of the Levitical Law. The former declared null and void the Marriage between Henry VIII. and Catherine of Arragon, widow of his eldest brother, Prince Arthur, for which a dispensation had been obtained from the Pope. 1 Comm. 435, in n.

The prohibited degrees are all which are under the 4th degree of the Civil Law, except in the ascending and descending line; and by the course of nature it is scarcely a possible case, that any one should ever marry his issue in the 4th degree: but between collaterals it is universally true, that all who are in the fourth or any higher degree are permitted to marry: as first cousins are in the fourth degree, and therefore may marry: a nephew and great aunt, or niece and great uncle, are also in the fourth degree, and may intermarry; and though a man may not marry his grandmother, it is certainly true that he may marry her sister. Gibs. Cod. 413. The same degrees by affinity are prohibited. Affinity always arises by the Marriage of one of the parties so related; as a husband is related by affinity to all the consanguinei of his wife; and, vice versâ, the wife to the husband's consanguinei: for the husband and wife being considered one flesh, those who are related to the one by blood, are related to the other by affinity. Gibs. Cod. 412. Therefore a man after his wife's death cannot marry her sister, aunt, or niece. But the consanguinei of the husband are not at all related to the consanguinei of the wife. Hence two brothers may marry two sisters; or father and son a mother and daughter. If a brother and sister marry two persons not related, and the brother and sister die, the widow and widower may intermarry; for though I am related to my wife's brother by affinity,

I am

I am not so to my wife's brother's wife, whom, if circumstances would admit, it would not be unlawful for me to marry. 1 Comm. 435, in n. See 1 Inst. 235, a. in n.

The son of a father by another wife, and daughter of a mother by another husband, cousins german, &c. may marry with each other: a man may not marry his brother's wife, or wife's sister; an uncle his niece, an aunt her nephew, &c. But if a man take his sister to wife, they are baron and feme, and the issue are not bastards, till a divorce. Levit. c. 18, 20: 2 Inst. 683: 1 Rol. Abr. 340, 357: 5 Mod. 448.

A person may not marry his sister's daughter: and a sister's bastard daughter is said to be within the Levitical law of affinity; it being morally as unlawful to marry a bastard as one born in wedlock, and it is so in nature; and if a bastard doth not fall under the prohibition ad proximum sanguinis non accedas, a mother may marry her bastard son. 5 Mod. 168: 2 Nelf. Abr. 1161.

There are persons within the reason of the prohibition of Marriage, though not mentioned, and must be prohibited; as the father from marrying his daughter, the grandson from marrying the grandmother, &c. Vaugh. 321.

The other sort of disabilities are those which are created, or at least enforced by the Municipal Laws. And though some of them may be grounded on natural law, yet they are regarded by the laws of the land, not so much in the light of any moral offence, as on account of the civil inconveniencies they draw after them. These civil disabilities make the contract void ab initio, and not merely voidable: not that they dissolve a contract already formed, but they render the parties incapable of forming any contract at all; they do not put asunder those who are joined together, but they previously hinder the junction. And if any persons under these legal incapacities come together, it is a meretricious, and not a matrimonial, union. 1 Comm. 436.

The first of these legal disabilities is a prior marriage, or having another husband or wife living; in which case, besides the penalties consequent upon it as a felony, the second Marriage is to all intents and purposes void. Br. Ab. title Bastardy, pl. 8. See this Dictionary, title Bigamy.

The next legal disability is want of age. If a boy under 14 or girl under 12 years of age marries, this Marriage is only inchoate and imperfect; and when either of them comes to that age, which is for this purpose termed their age of consent, they may disagree and declare the Marriage void, without any divorce or sentence in the Spiritual Court. This is founded on the Civil Law. But the Common Law pays a greater regard to the constitution than the age of the parties; for if they are habiles ad matrimonium, it is a good Marriage, whatever their age may be. And in law it is so far a Marriage, that if at the age of consent they agree to continue together, they need not be married again. Co. Lit. 79. If the husband be of years of discretion, and the wife under 12, when she comes to years of discretion, he may disagree as well as she may; for in contracts the obligation must be mutual; both must be bound or neither; and so it is, vice versâ, when the wife is of years of discretion, and the husband under. Co. Litt. 79.

If persons are married before the age of consent, they may at that age disagree and marry again, without any divorce: though if they once give consent when at age, they cannot afterwards disagree; and when they are married before, there needs not a new Marriage, if they agree at that age. 1 Inst. 33: 2 Inst. 182. A woman cannot disagree within her age of twelve years, till which the Marriage continues; and before that time her disagreement is void. 1 Danv. 699. Though if a man marries a woman under that age, and afterwards she, within her age of consent, disagrees to the Marriage, and at her age of twelve years marries another; now the first Marriage is absolutely dissolved, so that he may take another wife; for although the disagreement within the age of consent was not sufficient, yet her taking another husband at the age of consent, and cohabiting with him, affirms the disagreement, and so the first Marriage is avoided. Moor, 575, 764. If after disagreement of the parties, at the age of consent they agree to the Marriage, and live together as man and wife, the Marriage hath continuance, notwithstanding the former disagreement; but if the disagreement had been before the Ordinary, they could not afterwards agree again to make it a good Marriage. 1 Danv. Abr. 699. But now the agreement after 12 or 14 would not be binding on the infant, if the Marriage was without banns; or by licence, and without consent of parents, guardians, &c. and the infant was not a widow or widower; for the Marriage-Act makes all such Marriages void. See stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33: 1 Inst. 79, b. in n.

If either party be under seven years of age, contracts of Marriage are absolutely void; but Marriages of Princes made by the State in their behalf, at any age, are held good; though many of those contracts have been broken through. Swinb. Matrimon. Contr. See Ward's Law of Nations.

The above proposition, "that in contracts the obligation must be mutual," has been censured as too generally expressed; for there are various contracts between a person of full age and a minor, in which the former is bound and the latter is not. The authorities seem decisive, that it is true with regard to the contract of Marriage, referred to the ages of 14 and 12; but it has also long been clearly settled, that it is not true with regard to contracts of Marriage, referred to the minority under 21. For where there are mutual promises to marry between two persons, one of the age of 21, and the other under that age, the first is bound by the contract, and on the side of the minor it is voidable; or for a breach of the promise on the part of the person of full age, the minor may maintain an action, and recover damages; but no action can be maintained for a similar breach of the contract on the side of the minor. Stra. 937: Fitzgibb. 175, 275.

Another incapacity arises from want of consent of parents and guardians. By the Common Law, if the parties themselves were of the age of consent, there wanted no other concurrence to make the Marriage valid; and this was agreeable to the Canon Law; but by several statutes, viz. stats. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 6: 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 35, penalties of 100*l.* are laid on every clergyman who marries a couple either without publication of banns (which may give notice to parents or guardians) or without a licence, to obtain which, the consent of parents or guardians must be sworn to; and the man so married forfeits 10*l.* and the parish clerk, &c. assisting 5*l.* These statutes are confirmed by stat. 10 Ann. c. 19, and extended to privileged places; so that if a parson offending be a prisoner in any place, on conviction he shall be removed to the county gaol, there to remain in execution charged with the said penalty of 100*l.* &c. Before these statutes, an information was exhibited against certain persons for combination in procuring a clandestine Marriage in the night, without banns or licence, between a maid-servant and a young gentleman who was heir to an estate, the person being in liquor; and they were fined 100 marks, and ordered to be committed till paid; but it doth not appear that the Marriage could be made void. Cro. Car. 557.

But the evil of clandestine and improper Marriages is more fully restrained by the following statute commonly known by the name of The Marriage Act.

By stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 33, all Marriages are to be either in pursuance of banns published, of a licence, or of a special licence. A Marriage in pursuance of banns must be solemnized in one of the churches or chapels where the banns were published. A Marriage in pursuance of a licence (except a special licence) must be solemnized in such church or chapel as in the licence shall be named; all Marriages solemnized in any other place than a church or such chapel, unless by special licence, or without publication of banns or a licence of Marriage from a person having authority to grant the same, shall be void; and all Marriages solemnized by licence, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of twenty-one years, which shall be had without the consent of father, guardian, &c. shall be void. No parson, vicar, &c. shall be obliged to publish banns of matrimony, unless the persons to be married shall seven days before the time required for the first publication, deliver to him a notice in writing of their true names, and of the house or houses of their respective abode within such parish, &c. and of the time they have dwelt in such house or houses. All banns shall be published upon three Sundays, or holidays, next preceding the Marriage in the parish church, &c. where the persons to be married shall dwell. If they dwell in divers parishes, then in the parish church, &c. where each of them shall dwell; if in an extra-parochial place, then in the parish church, &c. adjoining.

After solemnization of any Marriage under a publication of banns, it shall not be necessary, in support of such Marriage, to give any proof of the actual dwelling of the parties in the respective parishes, &c. wherein the banns of Marriage were published, nor shall any evidence be received to the contrary, in any suit touching the validity of such Marriage.

No licence of Marriage shall be granted by any archbishop, bishop, &c. to solemnize any Marriage in any other church, &c. than in the parish church, &c. within which the usual place of abode of one of the parties shall have been, for four weeks immediately before the granting such licence: if both or either of the parties shall dwell in an extra-parochial place, then in some parish church adjoining. Nothing herein contained shall extend to prevent the archbishop of Canterbury from granting special licences.

Where any Marriage is by licence, it shall not be necessary to give any proof, that the usual place of abode of one of the parties, for four weeks as aforesaid, was in the parish, &c. where the Marriage was solemnized; nor shall any evidence be received to the contrary, in any suit touching the validity of such Marriage. All Marriages by licence, where either of the parties, not being a widower or widow, shall be under the age of twenty-one years, which shall be had without the consent of his or her father if living, or if dead, of his or her guardian, and if no guardian, of his or her mother if living and unmarried, and if no mother living and unmarried, then of the guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery, shall be void. If guardian or mother, or any of them where consent is made necessary, be non compos mentis, beyond sea, or refuse to consent, and the Lord Chancellor shall declare it to be a proper Marriage, that shall be as effectual as if the guardian or mother had consented.

All Marriages shall be solemnized in the presence of two or more witnesses besides the minister. No minister, &c. solemnizing Marriage between persons, both or one of whom shall be under the age of twenty-one years, after banns published, shall be punishable by ecclesiastical censure for solemnizing such Marriage without consent of parents or guardians, whose consent is required by law, unless such parson, &c. shall have notice of such dissent. And in case such parent or guardian shall openly declare in the church, &c. at the time of such publication, his dissent to such Marriage, such publication of banns shall be void.

If any person shall solemnize matrimony in any other place than a church, &c. where banns have been usually published, unless by special licence, or shall solemnize matrimony without publication of banns, unless licence of Marriage be first had and obtained from some person having authority to grant the same, every such person knowingly so offending, shall be transported for fourteen years. The prosecution to be within three years.

To make a false entry in a Marriage Register; to alter it when made; to forge or counterfeit such entry, or a Marriage licence; to cause, or procure, or act, or assist in such forgery; to utter the same as true, knowing it to be counterfeit; or to destroy, or procure the destruction of any register in order to vacate any Marriage, or subject any person to the penalties of this act; all these offences knowingly and wilfully committed, subject the party to the guilt of felony without benefit of clergy.

No suit shall be in any Ecclesiastical Court to compel a celebration of Marriage, by reason of any contract, whether per verba de presenti, or de futuro. This act not to extend to Jews, Quakers, or Scotland, nor to the Marriages of any of the Royal Family; as to which latter see this Dictionary, title King II.

The effect of the above act, as relates to the consent of parents, &c. may be thus shortly stated: The party under age marrying by licence, if a Minor, and not having been married before, must have the consent of a father if living; if he be dead, of a guardian lawfully appointed; if there be no such guardian, then of the mother if she is unmarried; if there be no mother, then of a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery. The guardian, whose consent is interposed between that of the father and that of the mother, must either be a testamentary guardian appointed by the father's will, or a guardian appointed by Chancery; or if there is no such guardian, and the Minor is under the age of 14, and has lands by descent, perhaps the consent of a socage guardian would be sufficient; though it might not be prudent to rely upon it alone, and such an early Marriage now seldom happens. 1 Comm. 438, in n.

In reading this statute it should be attended to; that the clause for annulling the Marriages of infants without the consent of parents or guardians, is restricted to Marriages by licence; so that the Marriage of an infant without such consent may still be good where banns are regularly published, unless a dissent is openly declared by the parent or guardian in the church or chapel at the time of publishing, in which latter case the statute makes the banns void. As to the Marriages without either licence or banns, which are usually termed clandestine, they are universally annulled by this statute. Scotland being expressly excepted out of this statute, in consequence of this, so much of the act as was calculated to defeat the Marriages of Minors without the consent of parents or guardians, hath been frequently evaded, by going into Scotland to be married there, and returning to England immediately afterwards. Indeed the validity of such Marriages was once questioned; and though, in general, Marriages are governed by the laws of the country in which they are celebrated, yet it was doubted whether the lex loci ought to be applied to a case, accompanied with circumstances so strongly marking the intent to evade the law of England. See 2 Burr. 1079. But this point seems now fully settled in favour of the Scotch Marriages by a decision of the Court of Arches, which was afterwards confirmed in the Court of Delegates. However, it may not be amiss to recollect, that there have been persons of authority, who will not allow such cases of apparent evasion of the law of any country to fall within the principle on which the lex loci is indulged. See 1 Inst. 796, in n.

The Marriage of a female bastard with the consent of her putative father is sufficient to gain a settlement although she was under age at the time of the Marriage. Const's Bott. ii. 85. pl. 121. On the same principle, a Marriage between two infants solemnized by means of a procured licence, and without the consent of either parents or guardians, is not sufficient to gain a settlement, although both the parties are illegitimate, for such Marriage is void by the Marriage-act. 1 Term Rep. 96.

As the above act requires that the Marriage should be celebrated in some parish church or public chapel where banns had been usually published (i. e. before 25 Mar. 1754); the Court of K. B. were obliged to declare a Marriage void which had been solemnized in a chapel erected in 1765. Doug. 659. And as there were many Marriages equally defective, an act of parliament immediately passed, which legalized all Marriages celebrated in such churches or chapels since the passing the Marriage-act, and indemnifying the clergyman from the penalties incurred. Stat. 21 Geo. 3. c. 53.

A fourth legal incapacity of contracting Marriage is want of reason, without a competent share of which, as no other so neither can the matrimonial contract be valid. 1 Rol. Abr. 257. See title Idiots and Lunatics IV.

Lastly, the parties must not only be willing and able to contract, but actually must contract themselves in due form of law, to make it a good civil marriage. Any contract made per verba de præsenti, or in words of the present tense, and, in case of cohabitation, per verba de futuro also, between persons able to contract, was, before the Marriage-act above stated, deemed a valid Marriage to many purposes, and the parties might be compelled in the Spiritual Courts to celebrate it in facie ecclesiæ. But these verbal contracts are now of no force to compel a future Marriage. It is held to be also essential to a Marriage, that it be performed by a person in orders. Salk. 119. See Burr. Set. Ca. 232: 1 Wils. 74; though the intervention of a priest to solemnize this contract is merely juris positivi, and not juris naturalis aut divini; it being said that the Pope Innocent III. was the first who ordained the celebration of Marriage in the church, before which it was totally a civil contract. Moor, 170. And in the times of the Grand Rebellion all Marriages were performed by the Justices of the Peace; and those Marriages were declared valid, without any fresh solemnization, by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 33.

On the whole, as the law now stands, it may be collected, that no Marriage by the Temporal Law is, ipso facto, void, that is celebrated—by a person in orders—in a parish church or public chapel; (or elsewhere by special dispensation;)—in pursuance of banns or a licence—between single persons—consenting—of sound mind—and of the age of 21 years—or of the age of 14 in males, and 12 in females, with consent of parents or guardians; or without, in case of widowhood. And no Marriage is voidable by the Ecclesiastical Law after the death of either of the parties; nor during their lives unless for the canonical impediments of pre-contract; (if that indeeds still exists;) of consanguinity, and of affinity, or corporeal imbecility subsisting previous to the Marriage. 1 Comm. 440.

In this place it will not be inapplicable to notice the offence of the Forcible Abduction and Marriage of Women; a crime vulgarly called Stealing an Heiress. By stat. 3 H. 7. c. 2, it is enacted, that if any person shall for lucre take any woman, being maid, widow, or wife, and having substance either in goods or lands, or being heir apparent to her ancestors, contrary to her will; and afterwards she be married to such misdoer, or by his consent to another, or defiled; such person, his procurers and abettors, and such as knowingly receive such woman, shall be deemed principal felons: and by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 9, the benefit of clergy is taken away from all such felons who shall be principals, procurers, or accessories before the fact. In the construction of this statute it hath been determined, 1st, That the indictment must alledge that the taking was for lucre, for such are the words of the statute. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 42. 2d, In order to show this, it must appear that the woman has substance either real or personal, or is an heir apparent. 1 Hal. P. C. 660: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 42. 3dly, It must appear that she was taken away against her will. 4thly, It must also appear, that she was afterwards married, or defiled. And though possibly the Marriage or defilement might be by her subsequent consent, being won thereunto by flatteries after the taking, yet this is felony, if the first taking were against her will. 1 Hal. P. C. 660. And so, vice versa, if the woman be originally taken away with her own consent, yet if she afterwards refuse to continue with the offender, and be forced against her will, she may from that time as properly be said to be taken against her will, as if she had never given any consent at all; for, till the force was put upon her she was in her own power. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 42. It is held, that a woman, thus taken away and married, may be sworn and give evidence against the offender, though he is her husband de facto, contrary to the general rule of law; because because he is no husband de jure, in case the actual Marriage was also against her will. 1 Hal. P. C. 661. In cases indeed where the actual Marriage is good, by the consent of the inveigled woman obtained after her forcible abduction, Hale seems to question how far her evidence should be allowed: but other authorities seem to agree that it should, even then, be admitted; esteeming it absurd that the offender should thus take advantage of his own wrong; and that the very act of Marriage, which is a principal ingredient of his crime, should, by a forced construction of law, be made use of to stop the mouth of the most material witness against him. See Cro. Car. 488: 3 Keb. 193: 5 State Tr. 455; and this Dictionary, title Baron and Feme I. 2.

An inferior degree of the same kind of offence, but not attended with force, is punished by stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 8, which enacts, that if any person above the age of 14, unlawfully shall convey or take away any woman child unmarried; (which is held to extend to bastards as well as legitimate children, Stra. 1162;) within the age of 16 years, from the possession and against the will of the father, mother, guardians, or governors, he shall be imprisoned two years, or fined at the discretion of the Justices; and if he deflowers such maid or woman child, or without the consent of parents contracts matrimony with her, He shall be imprisoned five years or fined at the discretion of the Justices, and She shall forfeit all her lands to her next of kin during the life of her said husband. But this latter part of the act is now rendered almost useless by the provisions of the Marriage Act, which make the Marriage [unless by banns] totally void. See 4 Comm. c. 15. pp. 208, 9.

These stolen Marriages under the age of 16 being usually upon mercenary views, this last act, besides punishing the seducer, wisely removed the temptation; [as to lands.] It has been decided in the Court of Exchequer that the woman in this case forfeits her lands only during the life of her husband. Ambl. 73. Though the more natural construction of the statute seems to be, that the next heir shall retain them during the life of the wife, even after the death of the husband. 1 Bro. C. R. 23.

An ancient stat. 31 H. 6. c 9, still appears on our Statute-books, to invalidate bonds and securities taken from women under duress of imprisonment by threats of forcible Marriage, &c.

Matrimonial causes, or injuries respecting the rights of Marriage, are one branch of the Ecclesiastical jurisdiction: though if Marriages are considered in the light of mere civil contracts, they do not seem to be very properly of spiritual cognisance. This, however, was effected by the usurpation of the church under the Catholic system; and causes matrimonial are now so peculiarly ecclesiastical, that the Temporal Courts will never interfere in controversies of this kind, unless in some particular cases: as, if the Spiritual Court do proceed to call a Marriage in question after the death of either of the parties; this the Courts of Common Law will prohibit, because it tends to bastardize and disinherit the issue; who cannot so well defend the Marriage as the parties themselves, when both of them living, might have done.

Of matrimonial causes one of the first and principal is, causâ jactitationis matrimonii; when one of the parties boasts or gives out, that he or she is married to the other, whereby a common reputation of their matrimony may ensue. On this ground the party injured may libel the other in the Spiritual Court; and unless the defendant undertakes and makes out a proof of the actual Marriage, he or she is enjoined perpetual silence on that head; which is the only remedy Ecclesiastical Courts can give for this injury. Another species of matrimonial causes was when a party contracted to another, brought a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court to compel a celebration of the Marriage in pursuance of such contract; but this branch of causes is now cut off entirely by the Marriage-Act above stated. The suit for restitution of conjugal rights is also another species of matrimonial causes; which is brought whenever either the husband or wife is guilty of the injury of subtraction, or lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it contrary to the inclination of the other. See 3 Comm. c. 7. p. 93, 4. Divorces and suits for Alimony are also subjects of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, as to which see this Dictionary, titles Baron and Feme XI: Divorce.

The Temporal Courts by the stat. 28 Hen. 8. c. 7, are to determine what Marriages are within or without the Levitical degrees; and prohibit the Spiritual Courts if they impeach any persons for marrying within these degrees. And it is said, were it not for that statute, we should be under no obligation to observe the Levitical degrees. Vaugh. 206: 2 Vent. 9.

Although matrimonial causes have been for a long time determinable in the Ecclesiastical Courts, they were not so from the beginning; for as well causes of matrimony as testamentary were civil causes, and appertained to the jurisdiction of the civil magistrate, until Kings allowed the clergy cognisance of them. Davis's Rep. 51. If persons married are infra annos nubiles, the Ecclesiastical Judges are to judge as well of the assent, whether sufficient, &c. as of the first contract; and where they have cognisance, the Common-Law Judges ought to give credit to their sentences, as they do to our judgments. 7 Rep. 23. See the Dutchess of Kingston's Ca. 11 St. Tr. 198.

Loyalty or lawfulness of Marriage is always to be tried by the Bishop's certificate: or inquisition taken before him, on examination of witnesses, &c. Dyer, 303. If the right of Marriage come naturally in question, as in dower, &c. the lawfulness of Marriage is to be tried by the Bishop's certificate: but in a personal action, where the right of Marriage is not in question, it is triable by a Jury at Common Law. 1 Lev. 41. Whether a woman is married, or she is the wife of such a person, is triable by a Jury: and in personal actions it is right to lay the matter upon the fact of the Marriage, to make it issuable and triable by a Jury, and not upon the right of the Marriage, as in real actions and appeals. 1 Inst. 112: 3 Salk. 64. If the Marriage of the husband is in question, Marriage, in right ought to be, and that shall be tried by certificate. 1 Leon. 53. But if on covenant to do such a thing to another upon the Marriage of a man's daughter, the party alledges that he did marry her, &c. this shall be tried per pais; for the Marriage is only in issue, and not whether he was lawfully espoused. Cro. Car. 102.

Conditions against marrying generally are void in law; and if a condition is annexed to a legacy, as where money

money is given to a woman, on condition that she marries with consent of such a person, &c. such a condition is void by the Ecclesiastical Law, because the Marriage ought to be free without coercion; yet it is said it is not so at the Common Law. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1162: Poph. 58, 59: 2 Lill. 192. See title Condition; Legacy.

Of the Effect of Marriage, by operation of law.—By Marriage with a woman the husband is entitled to all her estate real and personal; and the effects of Marriage are, that the husband and wife are accounted one person, and he hath power over her person as well as estate, &c. 1 Inst. 357.

The wife doth partake of the name, so of the nature and condition of the husband by the Marriage; for if she be an Earl's wife, she is a Countess; if a Knight's wife, a Lady; and if he be an alien and made a denizen, the wife is so likewise. 39 H. 6. 45: 4 H. 7. 31: Bro. 499.

There being divers advantages by Marriage, to the man and the woman; therefore on promise of Marriage, damages may be recovered, if either party refuse to marry; but the promise must be mutual on both sides, to ground the action. 1 Salk. 24. And if there be reciprocal promises of Marriage, as the woman's promise to the man is a good consideration to make his obligatory; so his promise to her is a sufficient consideration to make hers binding: and though no time for Marriage be agreed on, if the plaintiff prove tender and offer to marry defendant, and refusal by defendant, or if defendant marry another, whereby performance of the promise is, in law, rendered impossible, action lies, and damages are recoverable. Carthew, 467. These promises are not affected by the provisions of the Marriage Act, as relates to actions brought for their non-performance.

If a man and a woman make mutual promises of Intermarriage, and the man gives the woman 100*l.* which she accepts, in satisfaction of his promise of Marriage, it is a good discharge of the contract. Mod. Caf. 156. By the Statute of Frauds, stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3, no action shall be brought upon any agreement on consideration of Marriage, except it be put in writing, and signed by the party to be charged, &c. And where an agreement relating to Marriage must be in writing after a year, and when it need not, vide Skinn. 353. Observe the words, they are upon any agreement on consideration of Marriage, which is essentially different from mutual promises of the parties to marry each other. And which latter are not within the statute. See title Assumpsit II. A promise of a father by letter to give money in Marriage with his daughter, is a sufficient promise in writing, within the statute. 2 Vent. 361. Where a person promises to give his daughter wedding clothes on the Marriage, she shall have two suits, one for the wedding day, and the other for the time of feasting afterwards, according to the dignity of the person. Cro. Car. 53.

Contracts and bonds for money to procure Marriage between others, have been held void in equity: and wherever a parent or guardian insists upon private gain on the Marriage of children, covenant or obligation for it, shall be set aside in Chancery as extorted. 3 Lev. 411: 1 Salk. 156.

If a man before Marriage gives bond and judgment to the wife, to leave her worth 1000*l.* at his death, in consideration of a Marriage portion, this shall be made good out of the husband's estate, and be satisfied before any debts; provided a judgment be not obtained against him with her consent. An intended husband, in consideration of a Marriage, covenanted with the intended wife, that if she would marry him, and she should happen to survive him, he would leave her worth 500*l.* The Marriage took effect, and the wife survived, and he did not leave her worth that money; she married a second husband, and he brought an action of debt against the administrator of the first husband for the 500*l.* To which it was objected, that this being a personal action, it was suspended by the Marriage, which was a release in law, and so extinct; but the plaintiff had judgment, for the action is not suspended, because during the coverture there was no cause of action: nothing in this case is due whilst the coverture takes place, and the debt arises by the death of the husband. Palm. 99: 2 Sid. 58.

A bond was given by a man, reciting, he was to marry A. S. and that if the Marriage took effect, and he did survive her, then, within three months after her decease, he would pay to the obligee 300*l.* for such uses as the said A. S. by any writing under hand and seal, subscribed and published in the presence of two witnesses, should direct and appoint; this Marriage-bond was adjudged good. 3 Cro. 376: Yelv. 226, 227.

In case articles are entered into before Marriage, and afterwards a settlement is made different therefrom, the Court of Chancery will set up the articles against it; but where both are finished before the Marriage had, at a time when all parties are at liberty, such settlement will be taken as a new agreement between them: this is the general rule, unless the deed of settlement is expressly mentioned to be made in pursuance of the Marriage articles, &c. whereby the intent may still appear to be the same. Talb. 20. Articles of Marriage were made for settling lands on the husband and wife, and the heirs male and female of the body of the husband by the wife, &c. and a settlement was drawn contrary to these articles, long after which the husband suffered a recovery, and devised the land to others; it was here held to be no bar to the heirs female, who were decreed to have the land. 2 P. Williams, 349, 355. Yet it is said, where relief is to be given in equity on a settlement, it must be only to the persons who claim as purchasers, as the first and other sons; and all remainders after to the husband's heirs of his body, or his right heirs, are voluntary and not to be aided. Abr. Caf. Eq. 385.

Though a term to raise daughters portions, payable at the age of eighteen, or day of Marriage, in a Marriage settlement, is limited in remainder, to commence after the death of the father generally; or if it be in case he die without issue male of his wife, and she dies first without such issue, leaving a daughter, &c. In equity the term is saleable during the life-time of the father, when the daughter is eighteen years old, or married; because every thing hath happened and is past which is contingent, for it is impossible there should be issue male of the wife when she is dead; and as to the father's death, that is not contingent, but certain, by reason all men must die: but if there is a contingency not yet happened, as if the daughters are to be unmarried, or not provided for at the time of the father's death, &c. it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 159.

Upon

Upon Marriages, the Settlements generally made of the estate of the husband, &c. are to the husband for life, after his death to the wife for life for her jointure, and to their issue in remainder, with limitations to trustees to support contingent uses, and leases to trustees for terms of years, to raise daughters portions, &c. And they are made several ways, by lease and release, fine and recovery, covenant to stand seised to uses, &c. See the form of a complete Marriage Settlement in the Appendix to Blackstone's Analysis, with other useful forms relative thereto: See the same also, in the Appendix to the second volume of his Commentaries.

These settlements the law is ever careful to preserve, especially that part of them which relates to the wife, of which she may not be divested, but by her own fine: and if a woman about to marry, to prevent her husband's disposal of her land, conveys it to friends in trust, and they with the husband, after Marriage, make sale of the same, the Court of Chancery will decree the purchaser to reconvey to her. Vern. 43.

Where a woman on Marriage, by the man's consent, makes over her estate, to be at her own disposal, the product or increase thereof she can also dispose of: and if the wife has a separate maintenance settled on her by the husband, she may, by writing in the nature of a will, give away what she saves, if she dies before the husband; and shall have the same herself, in case she outlives him, and it shall not be liable to his debts. Preced. Canc 255, 44. But where a settlement is made on the wife, in consideration of her whole fortune and equivalent to it; here the wife's portion, though it be out on bonds, &c. which upon the death of the husband by law survive to the wife, shall in equity be subject to the husband's bond-debts, after his decease, to ease the real estate of the heir. Ibid. 63. And it has been likewise held, that if after the wife's death, debts of her's appear, the husband shall be answerable for the debts of the wife, so far as he had any money or estate of hers. Ibid. 256.

If a man in mean circumstances marry a woman of fortune, upon suggestion and proof of lunacy in the wife by her friends, the Court will order her estate to be so settled, that she may not be wrought on by her husband to give it to him from her children, by him or any other husband, &c. Skin. 110.

Marriage is dissolved by the natural death of the husband or wife, or by divorce; and where a Marriage is dissolved by the death of the husband, dower survives to the wife, where no settlement is made of the husband's lands. See this Dictionary, titles Baron and Feme; Chancery; Bankrupt; Dower; Jointure; &c.

MARROW, Was a Lawyer of great account in Henry VIIth's days, whose learned readings are extant, but not in print. Lamb. Eirenarch, lib. 1. cap. 10.

MARSHAL, Marescallus, Fr. Mareschal.] It seems to signify as much as Tribunus militum, with the ancient Romans: it has also been derived from the German marschalk, i. e. Equitum magister, which Hotoman in his Feuds, under verb. Marchalcus, derives from the old word march, which signifies a horse; others make it of the Sax. mar, i. e. Equus, & scalch, præfectus.

With us there are several officers of this name; the chief whereof is the Earl Marshal of England, mentioned in stats. 1 H. 4. c. 14: 8 R. 2. c. 5; 13 R. 2. st. 1. c. 2, &c. whose office consists especially in matter of war and arms, as well in this kingdom as in other countries This office is very ancient, having formerly greater power annexed to it than now; it has been long hereditary in the family of the Duke of Norfolk. Vide Lupanus de Magistratibus Franciæ, lib. 1. c. Marishallus; and Tilius, lib. 2. c. De Constabili Mariscallo, &c. and this Dictionary, titles Constable; Court of Chivalry; Court Martial.

The next is the Marshal of the King's house, otherwise called Knight Marshal; his authority is exercised in the King's palace, in hearing and determining all pleas of the Crown, and suits between those of the King's house and other persons within the verge, and punishing faults committed there, &c. See the ancient stats. 18 Ed. 3. c. 7: 27 Ed. 3. st. 2. c. 6: 2 H. 4. c. 13: Cromp. Jurisd. 192.

Fleta mentions a Marshal of the King's hall, to whom it belongs, when the tables are prepared, to call out those of the household and strangers, according to their rank and quality, and properly place them. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 15.

There are other inferior officers called Marshal, as Marshal of the Justice in Eyre. Anno 13 Ed. 1. cap. 19. Marshal of the King's Bench; see stat. 5 Ed. 3. cap. 8. who hath the custody of the prison called the King's Bench prison in Southwark. This officer gives attendance upon the Court, and takes into his custody all prisoners committed by the Court; he is fineable for his absence; and non-attendance is a forfeiture of his office. Hil. 21 & 22 Car. 2. By stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27, Grants of the King's Bench and Fleet prisons to be inrolled: and the office of Marshal and Warden of the King's Bench and Fleet, is to be executed by those who have the inheritance of those prisons. The power of appointing the Marshal of the King's Bench, which had been granted in fee by K. James I. was revested in the Crown by stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 17. and the office subjected to the controul of the Court of King's Bench.

There is also a Marshal of the Exchequer, to whom that Court commits the custody of the King's debtors, for securing the debts; he likewise assigns to sheriffs, customers and collectors, their auditors, before whom they shall account. Stat. 51 Hen. 3. stat. 5.

MARSHAL AND STEWARD OF THE KING's HOUSHOLD AND MARSHALSEA. Of what things they shall hold plea. Art. super Cartas, 28 Ed. 1. stat. 3. c. 3: 8 R. 2. c. 5.

MARSHALSEA, Marescaltia.] The court or seat of the Marshal; of whom see Cromp. Jur. 120. It is also used for the prison in Southwark; the reason whereof may be, because the Marshal of the King's house was wont perhaps to sit there in judgment, or keep his prison. See stats. 9 Rich. 2. c. 5: 2 Hen. 4. c. 23. King Charles the First erected a court by letters patent under the great seal, by the name of Curia Hospitii Domini Regis, &c. which takes cognizance more at large of all causes than the Marshalsea could; of which the Knight Marshal or his Deputy are Judges. Cowell. See title Court of Marshalsea.

MARSHES AND FENS, Laws concerning them. See title Fens.

MART, A great fair for buying and selling goods, holden every year. 2 Inst. 221. See titles Fair; Market.

MARTIAL LAW, The law of war, that depends upon the just but arbitrary power and pleasure of the King, or his Lieutenant; for though the King doth not make any laws laws but by common consent in Parliament, yet in time of war, by reason of the necessity of it, to guard against dangers that often arise, he useth absolute power, so that his word is a law. Smith de Repub. Angl. lib. 2. c. 4. This power, however, is now regulated by Act of Parliament. See this Dictionary, title Court Martial.

MARTILAGIUM, For Martyrologium. Monast. ii. 322.

MARTYROLOGY, Martyrologium.] A book of Martyrs, containing the lives, &c. of those men who died for their religion. Also a calendar or register kept in religious houses, wherein were set down the names and donations of their benefactors, and the days of their death, that upon every anniversary they might commemorate and pray for them: such benefactors usually made it a condition of their beneficence, to be inserted in the Martyrology. Paroch. Antiq. 189.

MASAGIUM, Anciently used for messuagium, a messuage. Pat. 16 R. 2.

MASKS. The penalty of selling or keeping visor masks. See the ancient stat. 3 Hen. 8. c. 9.

MASONS. To plot confederacies amongst Masons, was, by an obsolete stat. 3 H. 6. c. 1, declared felony; and such as assembled thereon were to suffer imprisonment, and make fine and ransom. This was when the nature and secrets of Masonry were known only to few. They are now known to many thousands who are members of the Society, and dispersed all over the Christian world. Many of the principal men of this and other countries are of the fraternity. Masons taken prisoners by the French in former wars, have met with great indulgencies from their brethren in foreign parts; though enemies in a national respect, as Masons they were friends. Dict.

MASS; See Papist.

MASSER, A priest that says mass. Blount.

MASS-PRIEST. In former times secular Priests, to distinguish them from the regulars, were called Mass-Priests, and they were to officiate at the Mass, or in the ordinary service of the church: hence Messe Preost in many of our Saxon canons, for the parochial minister; who was likewise sometimes called Messe Thegne, because the dignity of a priest in many cases was thought equal to that of a Thein, or lay lord. But afterwards the word Mass-Priest was restrained to stipendiaries retained in chantries, or at particular altars, to say so many Masses for the souls of the dead.

MAST, Glans, pessona.] The acorns and nuts of the oak, or other large tree.—Glandis nomine continentur glans, castanea, fagina, ficus et nuces, et alia quæque quæ edi et pasci poterunt præter herbam. Bract. lib. 4. Tempus pessonæ often occurs for Mast-time, or the season when Mast is ripe; which in Norfolk they call Shacking-time. —Quod habeat decem porcos in tempore de pesson in bosco meo. Mon. Angl. ii. 113, 231. There is a tree called Mast-tree. For Masts; see Ships and Stores.

MASTER, Magister.] Signifies in general a governor, teacher, &c. and also in many cases an officer. See Servant.

MASTER AND SERVANT. The relation between a Master and a Servant, from the superiority and power which it creates on the one hand, and duty, subjection, and, as it were, allegiance on the other, is, in many instances, applicable to other relations, which are in a superior and subordinate degree; such as lord and bailiff, principal and attorney, owners and masters of ships, merchants and factors, and all others having authority to enforce obedience to their orders, from those whose duty it is to obey them, and whose acts, being conformable to their duty and office, are esteemed the acts of their principals. See this Dictonary, title Servant; as also titles Apprentice; Labourer.

MASTER OF THE ARMORY, Magister Armorum et Armaturæ Regis.] An officer who hath the care of his Majesty's arms and armory, mentioned in the ancient stat. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

MASTER OF THE CEREMONIES, Magister Admissionum.] One who receives and conducts ambassadors and other great persons to audience of the King, &c. This office was instituted by King James I. for the more magnificent reception of ambassadors and strangers of the greatest quality.

MASTER OF, OR IN CHANCERY, Magister Cancellariæ.] In the Chancery there are Masters, who are assistants to the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, and Master of the Rolls: of these there are some ordinary, and some extraordinary; the Masters in ordinary are twelve in number, of whom the Master of the Rolls is chief; and some sit in Court every day during term, and have referred to them interlocutory orders for stating accounts, computing damages, and the like; they also administer oaths, take affidavits, and acknowledgments of deeds and recognizances: they also examine, on reference, the propriety of Bills in Chancery; which if they report to be scandalous or impertinent, such matter must be struck out, and the defendant shall have his costs. The extraordinary Masters are appointed to act in the country, in the several counties of England, beyond ten miles distance from London, by taking affidavits, recognizances, acknowledgments of deeds, &c. for the ease of the suitors of the Court.

By the stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 1, in the Appendix, a public Office was ordained to be kept near the Rolls, for the Masters in Chancery; in which they, or some of them, are constantly to attend, for the administring oaths, caption of deeds, and dispatch of other business: and their fees for taking affidavits, acknowledgment of deeds, exemplifications, reports, certificates, &c. are ascertained by that act; and to take more, incurs disability for such Master to execute his office, and a forfeiture of 100*l.* &c.

See stat. 5 Geo. 3. c. 28, to impower the High Court of Chancery to lay out upon government securities, a sum of money therein mentioned, out of the common and general cash in the Bank of England, belonging to the suitors of the said Court; and to apply the interest arising therefrom, towards augmenting the incomes of the Masters of the said Court: as also stat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 42, for building offices for them. See also this Dictionary, titles Chancellor; Chancery.

MASTER OF THE COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES, The chief officer of that Court, assigned by the King; to whose custody the seal of the Court was delivered, &c. as appears by the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 33. But as this Court was abolished by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24, this office of course dropped with it.

MASTER OF THE FACULTIES, Magister facultatum.] An officer under the Archbishop of Canterbury, who grants licences and dispensations, &c.

MASTER

MASTER OF THE HORSE, He who hath the ordering and government of the King's stables; and of all horses, racers, and breeds of horses belonging to his Majesty: he has the charge of all revenues appropriated for defraying the expence of the King's breed of horses, of the stable, litters, sumpter-horses, coaches, &c. and has power over the equerries and pages, grooms, coachmen, farriers, smiths, sadlers, and all other artificers working for the King's stables, to whom he administers an oath to be true and faithful; but the accounts of the stables, of liveries, wages, &c. are kept by the Avener; and by him brought to be passed and allowed by the Court of Green Cloth.

The office of Master of the Horse is of high account, and always bestowed upon some great nobleman; and this officer only has the privilege of making use of any horses, footmen, or pages belonging to the King's stables: at any solemn cavalcade he rides next to the King, with a led horse of state. He is the third great officer of the King's household, being next to the Lord Steward and Lord Chamberlain; and is mentioned in stats. 39 Eliz. c. 7: 1 Ed. 6. c. 5.

MASTER OF THE JEWEL OFFICE, An officer of the King's household, having the charge of all plate used for the King or Queen's table, or by any great officer at Court; and also of all the royal plate remaining in the Tower of London, and of chains and jewels not fixed to any garment. See stat. 39 Eliz c. 7.

MASTER OF THE HOUSEHOLD, Magister Hospitii Regis.] Otherwise called Grand Master of the King's Household, now stiled Lord Steward of the Household; which title this officer hath borne ever since Anno 32 H. 8. But under him there is a principal officer still called Master of the Household, who surveys the accounts, and has great authority.

MASTER OF THE KING's MUSTERS, A martial officer in the King's armies, to see that the forces are complete, well armed and trained; and to prevent frauds, which would otherwise waste the Prince's treasure, and weaken the forces, &c.

MASTER OF THE MINT, An officer who receives the silver of the goldsmiths, and pays them for it, and oversees every thing belonging to the Mint; he is at this day called Warden of the Mint.

MASTER OF THE ORDNANCE, A great officer to whose care all the King's ordnance and artillery is committed. See stat. 39 Eliz. c. 7.

MASTER OF THE POSTS, Was an officer of the King's Court, who had the appointing, placing, and displacing of all such through England, as provided post-horses for the speedy passing of the King's messages, letters, pacquets, and other business; and was to see that they kept a certain number of good horses of their own, and upon occasion that they provided others for furnishing those persons who had a warrant from him to take and use post-horses, either from or to the seas, or other places within the realm; he likewise paid their wages, settled their allowances, &c. See stat. 2 Ed. 6. c. 3.

This office is now superseded by the establishment of a regular Post-office; see that title. It has been thought necessary, however, to provide by the stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 25, That any person may let to hire chaises, or furnish horses for chaises at any stage upon any post-road, notwithstanding stat. 9 Ann. c. 10.

MASTER OF THE REVELS, An officer to regulate the diversions of dancing and masking, used in the palaces of the King, Inns of Court, &c. and in the King's Court, is under the Lord Chamberlain.

Eliz.* 566. So if a woman is convicted of a capital offence, and being condemned to suffer death, pleads in stay of execution, that she is pregnant, a Jury of Matrons is impanelled to inquire into the truth of the allegation; and if they find it true, the convict is respited until after her delivery. MATTER IN DEED, AND MATTER OF RECORD, Are often mentioned in law proceedings, and differ thus: the first seems to be nothing else but some truth or matter of fact to be proved by some specialty, and not by any record; and the latter is that which may be proved by some record. For example; if a man be sued to an exigent, during the time he was abroad in the service of the King, &c. this is Matter in Deed, and he that will alledge it for himself, must come before the scire facias for execution be awarded against him; but after that, nothing will serve but Matter of Record, that is, some error in the process appearing upon the Record. There is also a difference between Matter of Record and Matter in Deed, and nude matter; the last being a naked allegation of a thing done, to be proved only by witnesses, and not either by record or specialty. Old Nat. Br. 19: Kitch. 216.

MAUGRE, from the Fr. Mal, and gre, i. e. Animo iniquo.] Signifies as much as to say with an unwilling mind, or in despite of another; as where it is said, that the wife shall be remitted, maugre the husband, that is, whether the husband will or not. Litt. § 672: See Malo grato.

MAUPIGYRNUM, An old sort of broth or pottage. Cowell.

MAXIMS IN LAW, Positions and theses, being conclusions of reason, and universal propositions, so perfect, that they may not be impugned or disputed. Cowell; Co. Litt. 343.

A Maxim is a sure foundation or ground of art, and a conclusion of reason; so called quia maxima est ejus dignitas et certissima authoritas, atque quid maxime probetur, so sure and uncontroulable as that it ought not to be questioned; and what is elsewhere called a principle, and is all one with a rule, a common ground, postulatum or axiom. Co. Lit. 10. b; 11. a.

Maxims are the foundations of the law, and conclusions of reason; therefore ought not to be impugned, but always to be admitted; but they may by reason be conferred and compared the one with the other though they do not vary, or it may be discussed by reason which thing is nearest the Maxim, and the mean between the Maxims, and which is not; but the Maxims can never be impeached or impugned, but ought always to be observed, and held as firm principles and authorities of themselves. Plowd. 27. b.

The alterations of any of the Maxims of the Common Law are dangerous. 2 Inst. 210.

Maxims are principles and authorities, and part of the general customs or Common Law of the land; and are of the same strength as acts of parliament, when the Judges have determined what is a Maxim; which belongs to the Judges, and not a Jury. Terms de Ley: Doct. & Stud. Dial. 1. c. 8. A Maxim in law is said to be a proposition of all men confessed and granted, without argument or discourse. Maxims of the Law are holden for law; and all other cases that may be applied to them, shall be taken for granted. 1 Inst. 11, 67: 4 Rep: See 1 Comm. c. 68.

The Maxims in our books, which are many and various, are such as the following, viz. It is a Maxim, that land shall descend from the father to the son, &c. It is a Maxim, that as no estate can be vested in the King without matter of record, so none can be divested out of him but by matter of record; for things are dissolved as they are contracted. Rep. 1, Cholmey's case. Another, that an obligation, or other matter in writing, cannot be discharged by an agreement by word. Co. Lit. 141.

It is also a Maxim, that if a man have issue two sons by divers venters, and the one of them purchase lands in fee, and die without issue, the other brother shall never be his heir, &c. See title Descent.

MAYHEM. See Maihem.

MAYOR, Præfectus urbis, anciently meyr; comes from the Brit. miret, i. e. custodire; or from the old English word maier, viz. potestas; and not from the Lat. major.] The Chief Governor or Magistrate of a city or town-corporate, as the Mayor of London, the Mayor of Southampton, &c. King Rich. I. anno 1189, changed the bailiffs of London into a Mayor; and from that example King John made the bailiff of King's Lynn a Mayor, anno 1204. Though the famous city of Norwich obtained not this title for its chief magistrate, till the seventh year of King Hen. V. anno 1419, since which there are few towns of note, but have had a Mayor appointed for government. Spelm. Gloss.

Mayors of Corporations are Justices of Peace pro tempore, and they are mentioned in several statutes; but no person shall bear any office of magistracy concerning the government of any town, corporation, &c. who hath not received the sacrament according to the church of England, within one year before his election; and who shall not take the oaths of supremacy, &c. Stat. 13 Car. 2. st. 1. c. 1. See title Oaths; Dissenters; Conventicle. If any one intrudes into, and thereupon executes, the office of Mayor, a quo warranto information may be brought against him; and he shall be ousted and fined, &c. See title Quo Warranto.

A distinction is made in cases relative to Corporations between a mere Usurper, and an Officer de facto; though not de jure. An Usurper is a man who, without any colour of election, gets possession of the office, and acts in it: and the mere circumstance of being sworn into the office, makes no difference; but to make an officer de facto, at least the form of an election is necessary, though on legal objections it may afterwards be overturned. Notwithstanding this distinction, however, in point of form, it is doubtful whether there be any in the effect. Some acts, it is admitted, may be good if done by a Mayor de facto, or under his authority; but it does not appear whether the same acts would be good if done by a mere Usurper: some acts are certainly void if done by an Usurper; and probably so, if done by a Mayor de facto. Those acts which are good if done by a Mayor de facto, or under his authority, are such as he may be compelled to do in favour of a person who has a precedent right to have them done. All voluntary acts not necessary to carry on the business of the corporation seem to be void, whether done by an Usurper, or a Mayor de facto, or under the authority of either: some necessary acts are also void in both cases. See Andr. 116, 117, 163, 388: Hardw. 147—152: Lutw. 519: 2 Stra. 1090; 1109: 5 Burr. 2601, and Kyd's Law of Corporations, c. 3. § 7. But the above does not apply to acts in which strangers are interested. See Kyd.

Where an Infant is actually Mayor, or other Chief Officer of a Corporation, this shall not avoid the acts of the Corporation with respect to Strangers, because these acts are not the acts of the particular persons, but of the Body-corporate. But it seems, that where neither the provisions of the charter, nor the usage of the Corporation expressly authorize the election of an Infant into this or any other corporate office, an Infant is not capable of being elected; because, as Lord Hardwicke observed, "if an Infant is not fit to manage for himself, he is improper to be a Mayor for the Publick." See Hardw. 8: Cowp. 220.

The powers and duties of a Mayor, or other head officer of a Corporation depend in general on the provisions of the charters, or prescriptive usage, of the Corporation, or the express provisions of an act of Parliament. It is commonly one of his duties, as well as of his particular privileges, to preside at the corporate assemblies: but whether, in a Corporation by charter, this be necessarily incident to his office, where no express provision is made for that purpose, has been made a question, but never solemnly decided; and indeed all cases of such nature must chiefly depend on their own peculiar circumstances. See 3 Mod. 14: 2 Ld. Raym. 1237: 2 Burr. 370. In the case of a Corporation by prescription, this question can hardly ever arise; because there must necessarily be some usage one way or the other, to show what is the power and duty of the Mayor in this respect, in every such particular Corporation, independently of any general principle. In every other respect it may be safely asserted, that the Mayor, as well as the Aldermen, and other select bodies, have no other powers, authorities, or privileges, than those which they possess by charter, prescription, or act of Parliament. See Kyd on Corporations.

Where the Mayor's presence is necessary at a corporate assembly, his departure before a business regularly begun be concluded, will not invalidate that particular business: but the assembly cannot proceed to any thing else. 1 Barnard. 385. And on the death of the Mayor, or during the vacation of the office, the Corporation can do no corporate act, but that of choosing a new Mayor. 21 Ed. 4. 58. a.

By the provisions of some charters the Mayor or other chief officer is elected for a year, and till another be chosen; in which case, if no successor be chosen at the end of the year, the Mayor of the preceding year is said to hold over. But where a particular day is appointed for the election of a successor, which is generally the case, and a power of holding over is not expressly given, it does not exist by implication. Stra. 394. And the preamble of the stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, (see post,) manifestly shows, that the Legislature thought it was not implied; for it proceeds on the supposition, that for want of an election of a new Mayor on the charter day, the Corporation was dissolved; which could not have been the case if the Mayor of the preceding year had had a right of holding over. Kyd on Corporations.

Where there was a clause of holding over, it had become a practice with the Mayor and other Head Officers of the Corporations to avoid holding an election on the charter day; by which means they continued in office for several years together: In order to put an end to this practice, the stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. § 8, after reciting the inconvenience which had arisen from Head Officers of Corporations, to whom it belonged to preside at the election, and make return of Members to serve in Parliament, being elected for two years successively, enacted, "that no person or persons who had been or should be in such annual office for one whole year, should be capable of being chosen into the same office for the year immediately ensuing; and that where any such annual officer or officers was or were to continue for a year, and until some other person or persons should be chosen and sworn into such office, if any such officer or officers should voluntarily and unlawfully obstruct and prevent the choosing of another person, to succeed into such office, at the time appointed for making another choice, he should forfeit 100*l*." See 8 Mod. 111, 127, 132; and Kyd on Corporations.

By stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 4, if no Mayor or other Chief Officer be elected in a Corporation on the day appointed by charter, by the proper officers, or such election being made, it shall afterwards become void; the next in place is to hold a Court, and elect one the day following, &c. or, in default thereof, the Court of King's Bench may compel the electors to choose one, &c. by writ of mandamus, requiring the members who have a right to vote, to assemble themselves on a day prefixed, and proceed to election, or shew cause to the contrary; and Mayors, &c. voluntarily absenting on the day of election, shall be imprisoned six months, and be disabled to hold any office in the Corporation. See titles Mandamus; Quo Warranto.

The authority of Mayors, as to matters not relating to their Corporation, extends to the following other particulars:—The statute 2 Ed. 3. c. 3, gives power to Mayors to arrest persons carrying offensive weapons in fairs, markets, &c. to make affrays, and the disturbance of the peace.

By stat. 23 H. 8. c. 4, Mayors, &c. have power to set the price of ale and beer:—and they are authorised to convict persons selling ale without licence; and also to levy penalties on the offender by distress, &c. Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 3;—and they are to cause quart and pint pots for the selling of ale, to be examined whether they hold their full measure; and to mark them, under the penalty of 5*l.* Stat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 15.—Mayors, bailiffs, and lords of leets, are to regulate the assise of bread, and examine into the goodness thereof: and if bakers make unlawful bread, they may give it to the poor, and pillory the offenders, &c. 5 Hen. 3 st. 6. See title Bread and Beer.

Mayors, &c. are empowered to make enquiry into offences committed against stat. 1 Eliz. c. 2, which requires that the common prayer be read in churches; and that the churchwardens do their duty in presenting the names of such persons as absent themselves from church on Sundays, &c. Head officers of Corporations are to appoint and swear overseers or searchers to examine into defects of northern cloth, &c. and the overseers shall fix a seal of lead to cloths, expressing the length and breadth; and if they find any faulty, or sealed with a false seal, &c. they are to present the same at the next quarter sessions. Mayors, &c. neglecting their duty, are liable to a penalty of 5*l.* stat. 39 Eliz. c. 20. Mayors may determine whether coin offered in payment be counterfeited or not; and tender an oath to determine any question relating to it. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 21.

By stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9, Mayors, &c. may call before them and examine dyers, suspected to use logwood in dying; and, if they find cause, may bind them over to the quarter sessions, where, on conviction, they are liable to a forfeiture of 20*l.*—Under various statutes Mayor and Head Officers of Corporations are to punish drunkenness. See title Drunkenness.

Head Officers and Justices of Peace in Corporations, may enquire of forcible entries, commit the offenders, and cause the tenements to be seized, &c. within their franchises, in like manner as Justices of Peace in the county, Stat. 8 H. 6. c. 9. See title Forcible Entry II.

Mayors, &c. shall enquire into unlawful gaming, against the stat. 33 H. 8. c. 9. They are to search places suspected to be gaming-houses, and levy penalties, &c. and they have power to commit persons playing at unlawful games. See title Gaming.

Horses stolen, found in a Corporation, may be redeemed by the owner, making proof before the Head Officer of the Corporation of the property, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 12. See title Horses.

Mayors and Head Officers in corporate and market-towns, and lords of liberties and their stewards, are to appoint and swear two skilful persons yearly, to be searchers and sealers of leather; and they are to appoint triers of insufficient leather, and of leather wares: searchers not doing their duty to forfeit 40*s.* and triers, 5*l.* Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. See title Leather.

Persons robbing orchards, hedge-breakers, &c. are punishable by Mayors; and a person on conviction by the oath of one witness, shall pay to the person injured such damage as the Mayor, &c. shall think fit, or be whipped. Stat. 43 Eliz. c. 7. See title Trespass.

Mayors, &c. on receipt of precepts from sheriffs, (when writs are issued for elections) requiring them to choose burgesses or members of Parliament, by the citizens, &c. are to proceed to election, and make returns by indenture between them and the electors; and making a false return, shall forfeit 40*l.* to the King, and the like sum to the party chosen, not returned, &c. Stat. 23 H. 6. c. 14. See stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 24; and this Dictionary, title Parliament.

In time of sickness, a tax may be laid on inhabitants of Corporations, for relieving such persons as have the plague, by Mayors, &c. who are to appoint searchers and buriers of the dead: and if any infected persons shall go abroad with sores upon them, after an Head Officer hath commanded them to keep at home, it is felony; and if they have no sores about them, they are punishable as vagrants. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 31. See title Plague.

The stat. 43 Eliz. c. 2, which directs that the father, grandfather, mother, grandmother, and children, of every poor person, shall be assessed towards their relief by Justices, and which impowers Justices of Peace to order a poor's rate or tax, and overseers of the poor, &c. to place forth apprentices, and sets forth the office of overseers; gives the like authority to the Head Officers in corporate towns, as Justices of Peace have in their counties; which said Justices are not to intermeddle in Corporations for the execution of this law. See titles Poor; Justices of the Peace.

Mayor , Bailiffs, and other Head Officers of corporate towns, &c. are to make proclamation for rioters to disperse as follows: Our Sovereign Lord the King charges and commands all persons assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably depart to their habitations, upon pain of imprisonment, &c. And if the rioters, being twelve in number, do not disperse within an hour after, it is felony without benefit of clergy, &c. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 5. See title Riots.

Matters relating to servants, and apprentices, may be determined by Mayors; who have power to compel persons to go to service, &c. Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4. See titles Servants; Labourers; Apprentices. Mayors may arrest soldiers departing without licence; and they are to be present at musters; quarter and billet soldiers, &c. See title Soldiers. Stats. 18 Hen. 6. c. 18: 1 Geo 1. c. 47, &c. Persons using games on a Sunday forfeit 3*s*. 4*d*. to the use of the poor; carriers, &c. travelling on that day 20*s*. and persons doing any worldly labour thereon 5*s*. all leviable by warrant from Mayors and Head Officers of Corporations, as well as other Justices. See stats. 1 Car. 1. c. 1: 3 Car. 1. c. 2: 29 Car. 2. c. 7: and see this Dictionary, titles Holidays; Sundays.

In every city, town, &c. there is to be a common balance and sealed weights, under divers penalties: there is also to be a common bushel sealed. Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 5: 11 Hen. 6. c. 8. And Mayors, &c. are to provide a mark for the sealing of weights and measures, being allowed 1*d*. for sealing every bushel and hundred weight; and a halfpenny for every other measure and half hundred weight, &c. Mayors and Head Officers of Corporations, &c. shall view all weights and measures once a year, and punish offenders using false weights; and they may break or burn such weights and measures, and inflict penalties, &c. If they permit persons to sell by measures not sealed, they shall forfeit 5*l*. Sealing weights not agreeable to the standard, is liable to the same penalty; and refusing to seal weights and measures, subjects them a forfeiture of 40*s*. See stat. 31 Geo. 2. c. 17. § 9; and this Dictionary, title Weights and Measures. Mayors, &c. are to inspect and order the size of faggot, billet, tale-wood, &c. 43 Eliz. c. 14. MEAN OR MESNE, medius.] The middle between two extremes; and that either in time or dignity. In time it is the interim betwixt one act another, and is applied to Mean profits of lands between a disseisin and recovery, &c. See title Ejectment. As to dignity, there is a Lord Mean or Mesne, that holds of another Lord; and Mean tenant, &c. All the land in the kingdom is, by a fiction arising from the feudal origin of the English tenures, supposed to be holden mediately or immediately of the King, who is stiled the Lord Paramount, or above all. Such tenants as held under the King immediately, when they granted out portions of their lands to inferior persons, became also Lords with respect to those inferior persons, as they were still tenants with respect to the King; and thus partaking of a middle nature were called Mesne, or middle Lords. So that if the King granted a manor to A. and he granted a portion of the lands to B, now B. was said to hold of A., and A. of the King; or in other words, B. held his lands immediately of A. and mediately of the King. The King was therefore styled Lord Paramount: A. was both tenant and Lord, or was a Mesne Lord, and B. was called Tenant paravail, or the lowest tenant, being he who was supposed to make avail or profit of the land. 1 Inst. 296: 2 Comm. c. 5. p. 59. See this Dictionary, title Tenures.

The Writ of Mesne is in the nature of a writ of right, and lies when, upon any subinfeudation, the Mean or middle Lord suffers his under-tenant, or tenant paravail, to be distrained upon by the Lord Paramount, [whether the King or another,] for the rent due to him from the Mesne Lord. Booth, 136: F. N. B. 135.

In such case the tenant shall have judgment to be acquitted or indemnified by the Mesne Lord; and if he makes default therein, or does not appear originally to the tenant's writ, he shall be forejudged of his mesnalty, and the tenant shall hold immediately of the Lord Paramount himself. 2 Inst. 374.

If a man bring a writ of Mesne where he is not distrained, yet it is maintainable, but then he shall not have damages; for it is brought only to be acquitted, &c. And tenant for life, where the remainder is over in fee, shall have this writ against the Mesne. 7 H. 4. 12: 15 H. 6: New Nat. Br. 330. One brought a writ of Mesne against a man, because he did not acquit the plaintiff of a rent-charge demanded, &c. when he by his deed bound himself and his heirs to warrant and acquit him; and it was held good: and if a man have judgment to recover in this writ, if he be not afterwards acquitted, he may have a distringas ad acquietandum against the Mesne; and scire facias against the Lord. Stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 9: 14 Ed. 3.

MEASON-DUE, In Fr. Maison de Dieu, Domus Dei; a house of God, a monastery, religious house or hospital; the word is mentioned in stat. 39 El. c. 5. See Hospital.

MEASURE, mensura.] A certain quantity or proportion of any thing sold; and, in many parts of England, it is synonimous with a Bushel.

The regulation of Weights and Measures, for the advantage of the public, ought to be universally the same throughout the kingdom; being the general criterions which reduce all things to the same or an equivalent value. But as weight and Measure are things in their nature arbitrary and uncertain, it is therefore expedient that they be reduced to ſome fixed rule or ſtandard; which ſtandard it is impoſſible to fix by any written law, or oral proclamation; for no man can, by words only, give another an adequate idea of a foot rule, or a pound weight. It is therefore neceſſary to have recourſe to ſome viſible, palpable, material ſtandard; by forming a compariſon with which, all weights and Meaſures may be reduced to one uniform ſize: and the prerogative of fixing this ſtandard, our ancient law veſted in the Crown; as in Normandy it belonged to the Duke. This ſtandard was originally kept at Wincheſter: and we find in the laws of King Edgar, c. 8, near a century before the Conqueſt, an injunction that the one Meaſure, which which was kept at Wincheſter, ſhould be obſerved throughout the realm. Moſt nations have regulated the ſtandard of Meaſures of length by compariſon with the parts of the human body; as the palm, the hand, the ſpan, the foot, the cubit, the ulna, (or arm, ell,) the pace, and the fathom. But as theſe are of different dimenſions in men of different proportions, our ancient hiſtorians informs us, that a new ſtandard of longitudinal meaſure was aſcertained by King Henry the Firſt; who commanded that the ulna or ancient ell, which anſwers to the modern yard, ſhould be made of the exact length of his own arm. And, one ſtandard of Meaſures of length being gained, all others are eaſily derived from thence; thoſe of greater length by multiplying, thoſe of leſs by ſubdividing, that original ſtandard. Thus, by the ſtatute called compoſitio ulnarum et perticarum, five yards and a half make a perch: and the yard is ſubdivided into three feet, and each foot into twelve inches; which inches will be each of the length of three grains of barley.

Superficial Meaſures are derived by ſquaring thoſe of length; and Meaſures of capacity by cubing them.

The ſtandard of Weights was originally taken from corns of wheat, whence the loweſt denomination of weights we have is ſtill called a grain; thirty-two of which are directed by the ſtatute called compoſitio menſurarum, to compoſe a penny-weight, whereof twenty make an ounce, twelve ounces a pound, and ſo upwards. And upon theſe principles the firſt ſtandards were made; which, being originally ſo fixed by the Crown, their ſubſequent regulations have been generally made by the King in Parliament. Thus, under King Richard I. in his Parliament holden at Weſtminſter, A. D. 1197, it was ordained, that there ſhould be only one weight and one Meaſure throughout the kingdom; and that the cuſtody of the aſſiſe or ſtandard of weights and Meaſures ſhould be committed to certain perſons in every city and borough; from whence the ancient office of the King's Aulnager ſeems to have been derived, whoſe duty it was, for a certain fee, to meaſure all cloths made for ſale, till the office was aboliſhed by ſtat. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 20.

In King John's time this ordinance of King Richard was frequently diſpenſed with for money; which occaſioned a proviſion to be made for inforcing it, in the great charters of King John and his ſon. Stat. 9 Hen. 3. c. 25. Theſe original ſtandards were called pondus regis, and menſura domini regis; and are directed by a variety of ſubſequent ſtatutes to be kept in the Exchequer, and all weights and Meaſures to be conformable thereto. But, as Sir Edward Coke obſerves, though this hath ſo often by authority of Parliament been enacted, yet it could never be effected; ſo forcible is cuſtom with the multitude. 1 Comm. 274, &c.

Magna Charta, c. 25, ordains, "that there ſhall be but one meaſure throughout England, according to the ſtandard in the Exchequer:" which ſtandard, was formerly kept in the King's palace; and in all cities, market towns and villages, it was kept in the churches. 4 Inſt. 273. By ſtat. 16 Car. 1. c. 19, there is to be one weight and Meaſure, and one yard according to the King's ſtandard; and whoever ſhall keep any other weight or meaſure, whereby any thing is bought or ſold, ſhall forfeit for every offence 5*l.* And by ſtat. 22 Car 2. c. 8, water Meaſure, as to corn or grain, or ſalt, is declared to be within the ſtat. 16 Car. 1. c. 19. And by ſtats. 22 Car. 2. c. 8: 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 12, if any ſell or buy grain, or ſalt, &c. by any other buſhel, or Meaſure, than what is agreeable to the ſtandard in the Exchequer, commonly called Wincheſter Meaſure, he ſhall forfeit 40*s.* &c. and alſo the value of the grain or ſalt ſo ſold or bought; half to the poor and half to the informer. Notwithſtanding theſe ſtatutes, in many places and counties, there are different Meaſures of corn and grain; and the buſhel in one place is larger than in another; but the lawfulneſs of it is not well to be accounted for, ſince cuſtom or preſcription is not allowed to be good againſt a ſtatute. Dalt. 250.—And now it is ſettled that no practice or uſage can countervail the ſtats. 22 Car. 2. c. 8: 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 12, above mentioned. 4 Term Rep. 750: 5 Term Rep. 353.

There are three different Meaſures, viz. one for wine, one for ale and beer, and one for corn: in the Meaſure of wine, eight pints makes a gallon, eight gallons a firkin, ſixteen gallons a kilderkin half barrel or rundlet, four firkins a barrel, two barrels a hogſhead, two hogſheads a pipe, and two pipes make a tun. Stats. 15 R. 2. c. 4: 11 H. 7. c. 4: 12 H. 7. c. 5.

In meaſure of corn eight pounds or pints of wheat make the gallon, two gallons a peck, four pecks a buſhel, four buſhels a ſack, and eight buſhels a quarter, &c.

And in other Meaſure; three barley corns in length make an inch, twelve inches a foot, three feet a yard, three feet and nine inches an ell, and five yards and a half, which is ſixteen feet and a half, make the perch, pole, or rod. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 10.

Selling by falſe Meaſures, being an offence by the Common Law, may be puniſhed by fine, &c. upon an indictment at Common Law, as well as by ſtatute. See the ſtat. 11 Hen. 7. c. 4, which inflicts particular fines for offences; pillory, &c. The eaſier and more uſual way of puniſhment is, by levying, on a ſummary conviction by diſtreſs and ſale, the forfeiture impoſed by the ſeveral acts of Parliament adapted to particular frauds.

MEDIETAS LINGUÆ; A Jury de Medietate Linguæ, signifies a Jury or Inquest impanelled, whereof the one half consists of natives, and the other foreigners; and is used in pleas wherein the one party is a foreigner, the other a denizen: this manner of trial was first given by the stat. 28 Ed. 3. c. 13; before which, this was obtained by the King's grant. Staundf. P. C. lib. 3. c. 7. He that will have the advantage of trial per medietatem linguæ, must pray it; for, it is said, he cannot have the benefit of it by way of challenge. S. P. C. 158: 3 Inst. 127. In petit treason, murder, and felony, medietas linguæ is allowed; but for high treason, an alien shall be tried by the Common Law, and not per medietatem linguæ. H. P. C. 261. And a Grand Jury ought not to be de medietate linguæ, in any case. Wood's Inst. 263. It was thought necessary to exclude Egyptians, expressly by statute, from the benefit of this trial. See stats. 22 H. 8. c. 10: 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 4: and this Dictionary, title Egyptians. But we read, That Solomon de Standford, a Jew, had a cause tried before the Sheriff of Norwich, by a Jury which were sex probos et legales homines, et sex legales Judæos de Civitate Norwici, &c. Pasch. 9 Ed. 1.

A Jury de medietate is also allowed in some other cases; by analogy to this rule de medietate linguæ. As on a Jus Patronatus, the Jury must be of 6 clergymen, and 6 laymen. See that title. So also under the stat. 8 H. 6 c. 12, against embezzling records, the Jury shall consist of 6 persons, officers of any of the superior Courts, and 6 common Jurors. See title Records. So on a criminal trial in the University Courts, the Jury must be half freeholders of the county, and half matriculated laymen of the University. See 4 Comm. 278. See further title Jury II.

N. B.* 255. It has been held, that where an office is found against the King, and a melius inquirendum is awarded, and upon that melius, &c. it is found for the King; if the writ be void for repugnancy, or otherwise, a new melius inquirendum shall be had; but if upon the first melius it had been found against the King, in such case he could not have a new melius, &c. for then there would be no end of these writs. And if an office be found for the King, the party grieved may traverse it; and if the traverse be found against him, there is an end of that cause; and if for him, it is conclusive. 8 Rep. 169: 2 Nelf. 1008. If there is any defect in the points which are found in an inquisition, there may not be a melius inquirendum; but if the inquisition finds some parts well, and nothing is found as to others, that may be supplied by melius inquirendum. 2 Salk. 469. MERCENLAGE, See Merchenlage.

MERCHANT, Mercator.] One who buys and trades in any thing: and as merchandize includes all goods and wares exposed to sale in fairs or markets; so the word Merchant formerly extended to all sorts of traders, buyers, and sellers. But every one who buys and sells is not at this day under the denomination of a Merchant; only those who traffic in the way of commerce, by importation or exportation, or carry on business by way of emption, vendition, barter, permutation, or exchange; and who make it their living to buy and sell, by a continued assiduity, or frequent negotiation, in the mystery of merchandising, are esteemed Merchants. Those who buy goods, to reduce them by their own art or industry, into other forms, and then to sell them, are Artificers, not Merchants. Bankers, and such as deal by exchange, are properly called Merchants. Lex Mercat. 23.

Merchants were always particularly regarded by the Common Law; though the municipal laws of England, or indeed of any one realm, are not sufficient for the ordering and determining the affairs of traffic, and matters relating to commerce; merchandise being so universal and extensive that it is impossible; therefore of the Law Merchant (so called from its universal concern) all nations take special knowledge; and the common and statute laws of this kingdom leave the causes of Merchants in many cases to their own peculiar law. Lex Mercat. See 1 Comm. 75; and this Dictionary, title Bill of Exchange; Insurance; Custom of Merchants.

The custom of Merchants is part of the Common Law of this kingdom, of which the Judges ought to take notice; and if any doubt arise about the custom, they may send for merchants to know the custom; per Hobart, Ch. J.: Winch. 24.

The Lex mercatoria is allowed, for the benefit of trade, to be of the utmost validity in all commercial transactions: for it is a maxim of law, that "cuilibet in sua arte credendum est." See 1 Comm. 75.

The law of England, as a commercial country, pays a very particular regard to foreign Merchants in innumerable instances. By Magna Charta, c. 30, it is provided, That all merchants (unless publicly prohibited beforehand) shall have safe-conduct to depart from, to come into, to tarry in, and to go through, England, for the exercise of merchandize, without any unreasonable imposts, except in time of war; and, if a war breaks out between us and their country, they shall be attached (if in England) without harm of body or goods, till the King or his chief justiciary be informed how our Merchants are treated in the land with which we are at war; and, if ours be secure in that land, they shall be secure in ours. This seems to have been a common rule of equity among all the Northern Nations; but it is somewhat extraordinary, that it should have found a place in Magna Charta, a mere interior treaty between the King and his natural-born subjects; which occasions the learned Montesquieu to remark with a degree of admiration, "that the English have made the protection of foreign merchants, one of the articles of their national liberty." But indeed it well justifies another observation which he has made, that the English know better than any other people upon earth, how to value at the same time these three great advantages, RELIGION, LIBERTY, and COMMERCE. 1 Comm. 260. See also stats. 2 E. 3. c. 9: 25 E. 3. st. 4. c. 2: 27 E. 3. st. 2. cc. 13, 17, 19, 20: 28 E. 3. c. 13: 36 E. 3. c. 7: 2 Ric. 2. c. . : 11 R. 2. c. 7: 14 R. 2. c. 9: 5 H. 4. c. 9: 7 H. 4. c. 9; in all which, provisions are contained, for the accommodation of Merchants-strangers; which are now by long use become the known law of the land, allowing for the variations inevitably introduced by time and commerce.

In the reign of King Ed. IV. a Merchant-stranger made suit before the King's Privy Council, for several bales of silk feloniously taken from him, wherein it was moved, that this matter should be determined at Common Law; but was answered by the Lord Chancellor, that as this suit was brought by a Merchant, he was not bound to sue according to the law of the land. 13 Ed. 4. In former times it was conceived, that those laws that were prohibitory against foreign goods, did not bind a Merchant-stranger; but it has been a long time since ruled otherwise; for in the leagues that are now established between nation and nation, the laws of either kingdom are excepted; so that as the English in France, or any other foreign country in amity, are subject to the laws of that country where they reside; so must the people of France, or any other kingdom, be subject to the laws of England when resident here. 19 Hen. 7.

English Merchants are not restrained to depart the kingdom without licence, as all other Subjects are; they may depart, and live out of the realm, and the King's obedience; and the same is no contempt, they being excepted out of the statute 5 R. 2. st. 2. And by the Common Law, they might paſs the ſeas without licence; though not to merchandiſe. Dyer 206.

Merchant includes all ſorts of traders as well and as properly as Merchant-adventurers. Dy. 279. b. cites Spelm. Guilda. A Merchant taylor is a common term; per Holt. Ch J.: 2 Salk. 445.

There are Companies of Merchants in London for carrying on conſiderable joint trades to foreign parts, viz. The Merchant-Adventurers, (ſee title Hamburgh Company;) the Company eſtabliſhed in England for the improvement of commerce; which was erected by patent by King Ed. I. merely for the exportation of wool, &c. before we knew the value of that commodity, and at a time when we were in a great meaſure ſtrangers to trade. The next Company was that of the Barbary Merchants, incorporated in the reign of King Hen. VII. A Company of Merchants trading to the North, called the Muſcovy or Ruſſia Company, was eſtabliſhed by King Ed. VI, and encouraged with additional privileges, by Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, &c. See title Ruſſia Company. The Barbary Merchants decaying towards the latter end of Queen Elizabeth's reign, out of their ruins aroſe the Levant or Turkey Company; who firſt trading with Venice, and then with Turkey, furniſhed England that way with the Eaſt-India commodities: this Company hath very conſiderable factories, at Conſtantinople, Smyrna, Aleppo, &c. See title Turkey Company. From the flouriſhing ſtate of the Levant or Turkey Company, in the reign likewiſe of Queen Elizabeth ſprung the old Eaſt-India Company, who having fitted out ſhips of force, brought from thence at the beſt hand, the Indian commodities, formerly ſold to England by diſtant Europeans; and they having obtained many charters, and grants from the Crown, in their favour, were ſole maſters of that advantageous traffick; until at laſt a new Company was incorporated by King Will. Anno 9 W. 3, on their lending Government two millions of money; and both theſe Companies, after the expiration of a certain term, were by articles united. See title Eaſt-India Company.

In the 21ſt year of Queen Elizabeth, the Eaſtland Company of Merchants was erected; and in King Charles the Second's time, that Company was confirmed, with full power to trade in Norway, Sweden, Poland, and other Eaſtland countries. See title Eaſtland Company. The Royal African Company had their charter granted to them in the 14th year of King Charles II. And by ſtat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 26, they are to maintain all forts, &c. See title African Company.—King Charles II. alſo by commiſſion under the Great Seal of England, conſtituted his Royal Highneſs James Duke of York, (afterwards King James II.) Edward Earl of Clarendon, and others, to be a Council for the Royal Fiſhery of England, and declared himſelf to be the protector of it; and in the 29th year of his reign, he incorporated them into a Company. King William III. in the fourth year of his reign, eſtabliſhed a Greenland Company. See that title.

By ſtat. 9 Ann. c. 21, to pay the debts of the army, navy, &c. amounting to near ten millions, the South Sea Company of Merchants was erected; who having advanced that money, the duties upon wines, vinegar, tobacco, &c. were appropriated as a fund for payment of the intereſt, after the rate of 6*l.* per cent. &c. The Company was granted the ſole trade to the South Seas; and others trading thither ſhall forfeit their ſhips and goods, and double value; and the corporation is to continue for ever; but the funds are ſubject to redemption by Parliament. This Company had their capital ſtock very much enlarged in the reign of King George I. And to raiſe money lent, were empowered to make calls or take in ſubſcriptions, &c. as they thought fit; and on this foundation, the South Sea ſcheme was executed in 1720: but, to retrieve credit, afterwards part of the ſtock of the South Sea Company was ingrafted into the capital ſtock of the Eaſt India Company and the Bank of England; and after that half the ſtock was converted into annuities at 4*l.* per cent. Since which a farther reduction thereof hath been made. See title South Sea Company.

This ſhort Hiſtory of our Companies of Merchants, which have ever had many and great privileges, and are at length become of double uſe, to enlarge commerce and ſupply the neceſſities of the State, in ſome meaſure ſhews the progreſs and increaſe of our trade, and the wealth of the nation: though it muſt nevertheleſs be obſerved that they are a kind of monopolies erected by law; which if they become prejudicial, are generally reſtrained by Parliament, as has been the caſe with many of the Companies already ſpecified; and if the power granted them is abuſed, it becomes of fatal conſequence; for which we need only instance the ever memorable year 1720, when the Sub-governor and Directors of the South Sea Company incurred a forfeiture of their estates by statute, and were disabled to hold any offices, &c. for their vile conduct, which tended to the ruin of the public. Over and above these Companies, there are the Dutch Merchants; those who trade to the West Indies; the Canary Merchants; Italian Merchants, who trade to Leghorn, Venice, Sicily, &c. the French and Spanish Merchants, &c. See the several titles through this Dictionary, and particularly title Navigation Acts; which see also for the several regulations of Importation and Exportation by Merchants.

MERCHENLAGE, Merciorum Lex.] The law of the ancient kingdom of Mercia. Camden in his Britannia says, That in the year 1016, this kingdom was divided into three parts; whereof the West Saxons had one, governing it by the laws called West Saxon-lage, which contained Kent, Sussex, Surry, Berks, Hampshire, Wilts, Somerset, Dorset, and Devon: The Danes had the second, containing York, Derby, Nottingham, Leicester, Lincoln, Northampton, Bedford, Bucks, Hertford, Essex, Middlesex, Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridge, and Huntingdon; which was governed by the laws called Dane-lage: and the third part was in the possession of the Mercians, whose law was called Merchenlage; and contained Gloucester, Worcester, Hereford, Warwick, Oxford, Chester, Salop, and Stafford; from which three, King Wil. I. chose the best, and with other laws ordained them to be the laws of the kingdom. Camd. Brit. 94. See Molmutian laws.

MERCHET, Merchetum.] A fine or composition paid by inferior tenants to the Lord, for liberty to dispose of their daughters in marriage. No baron or military tenant, could marry his sole daughter and heir, without such leave purchased from the King, pro maritandâ filia. And many of our servile tenants could neither send their sons to school, nor give their daughters in marriage, without express licence from the superior Lord. See Kennet's Glossary in Maritagium, and this Dict. Marchet. Borough English.

MERCIA, Is used in many places in the Monasticon for amerciament.

MERCIMONIATUS ANGLIÆ, Was of old time used for the impost of England upon merchandise.

MERCURIES, Or vendors of printed books or papers. Vide Hawkers.

MERCY; See Misericordia.

MERGER, Is where a greater estate and a less coincide and meet in one and the same persons, without any intermediate estate; in which case the less is immediately annihilated, or in the law phrase is said to be merged, that is sunk or drowned, in the greater: as, if the fee comes to tenant for years or life, the particular estates are merged in the fee. 2 Rep. 60, 61: 3 Lev. 437. If a lessor, who hath the fee, marries with the lessee for years; this is no Merger, because he hath the inheritance in his own, and the lease in right of his wife. 2 Plowd. 418. And where a man hath a term in his own right, and the inheritance descends to his wife, as he hath a freehold in her right, the term is not merged or drowned. Cro. Car. 275. So if tenant for years dies and makes him, who hath the reversion in fee, his executor, whereby the term of years rests also in him, the term shall not Merge; for he hath the fee in his own right, and the term of years in right of the testator, and subject to his debts and legacies. See Plowd. 418: Cro. Jac. 275: Co. Lit. 338.

An estate-tail is an exception to this rule, for a man may have in his own right both an estate tail, and a reversion in fee; and the estate tail, though a less estate, shall not merge in the fee. 2 Rep. 61: 8 Rep. 74. For estates-tail are protected and preserved from Merger by the operation and construction, though not by the express words, of the statute de donis; which operation and construction have probably arisen upon this consideration; that in the common cases of Merger of estates for life or years, by uniting with the inheritance, the particular tenant hath the sole interest in them, and hath full power at any time to defeat, destroy, or surrender them to him that hath the reversion; therefore when such an estate unites with the reversion in fee, the law considers it in the light of a virtual surrender of the inferior estate. Cro. Eliz. 302. But in an estate-tail the case is otherwise; the tenant for a long time had no power at all over it, so as to bar or destroy it; and now can only do it by certain special modes, by a fine, a recovery, and the like. It would therefore have been strangely improvident to have permitted the tenant in tail by purchasing the reversion in fee to Merge his particular estate, and defeat the inheritance of his issue; and hence it has become a maxim, that a tenancy in tail, which cannot be surrendred, cannot also be merged in the fee. 2 Comm. c. 11. p. 178.

MERSCUM, A lake; from the Sax. mere, lacus. "Maneria, molendina, mersca, et merisca." Ingulph. p. 861.

MESNE PROCESS. Such Process as issues pending the suit upon some collateral interlocutory matter, as to summon Juries, witnesses, and the like; distinguished from original Process, which is founded on the writ. Finch, L. 346. Mesne Process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to final Process, or Process of Execution; and then it signifies all such Process as intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Comm. c. 19. p. 279.

MESSENGER, Is a carrier of messages, particularly employed by the Secretaries of State, &c. and to these commitments may be made of State prisoners; for though regularly no one can justify the detaining a person in custody out of the common gaol, unless there be some particular reason for it; as if the party be so dangerously sick, that it would hazard his life to send him thither, &c. yet it is the constant practice to make commitments to Messengers; but it is said, it shall be intended only in order to carrying the offenders to gaol. 1 Salk. 347: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. § 9. An offender may be committed to a Messenger, in order to be examined before he is committed to prison; and though such commitment to a Messenger is irregular, it is not void; and a person charged with treason, escaping from the Messenger, is guilty of treason, &c. Skin. 599. Messuagium.* In some places it is called the site of a manor. A præcipe lies not de domo, but de messuagio. Co. Litt. c. 8.

By the annual acts for punishing mutiny and desertion, if any officer or soldier shall excite or join any mutiny, or, knowing of it, shall not give notice to the commanding officer; or shall desert or list in any other regiment, or sleep upon his post, or leave it before he be relieved, or hold correspondence with a rebel or enemy, or strike or use violence to his superior officer, or shall disobey his lawful commands; such offender shall suffer such punishment as a court martial (established by the act) shall inflict, though it extend to death itself.

Exclusive of the before-mentioned statutes, desertion from the King's armies in time of war, whether by land or sea, in England, or in parts beyond the seas, is, by the standing laws of the land, and particularly by stats. 18 H. 6. c. 19: 5 Eliz. c. 5, made felony, but not without benefit of clergy. But by the stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6.

See title Wills.

MILITIA,

The NATIONAL SOLDIERY; the standing force of the nation.

It seems universally agreed by all historians, that King Alfred first settled a national Militia in this kingdom, and by his prudent discipline made all the Subjects of his dominions, soldiers; but we are unfortunately left in the dark as to the particulars of this celebrated regulation.

The feodal military tenures were established for the purpose of protection, and sometimes of attack against foreign enemies: (see this Dictionary, title Tenures:) For the further defence in cases of domestic insurrections or foreign invasions, various other plans have been adopted, all of them tending to unite the character of a citizen and soldier in one. First, The Assise of Arms, enacted 27 H. 2, and afterwards the stat. of Winchester, 13 E. 1. c. 6, obliged every man, according to his state and degree, to provide a certain quantity of such arms as were then in use; and it was part of the duty of Constables under the latter statute to see such arms provided. These weapons were changed by stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. c. 2, into more modern ones; but both these provisions were repealed by stats. 1 Jac. 1. c. 25: 21 Jac. 1. c. 28. While these continued in force, it was usual, from time to time, for our Princes to issue commissions of array; and send into every county officers in whom they could confide, to muster and array (or set in military order) the inhabitants of every district; and the form of the commission of array [illegible] in Parliament, [illegible] so as to [illegible] new penal clauses. [illegible] 275. &c. But it was [illegible] 1 E. 3. st. 2. cc. 5, 7: 25 E. 3. st. 5. [illegible] be compelled to go out of the kingdom [illegible] out of his shire, but in cases of urgent necessity; nor should provide soldiers unless by consent of Parliament. About the reign of King Henry VIII. or his children, Lieutenancy began to be introduced, as standing representatives of the Crown to keep the counties in military order; for we find them mentioned as known officers in the stat. 4 & 5 P. & M. [illegible] though they had then not been long in use, for [illegible] of them in the time of Queen Elizabeth, as extraordinary magistrates constituted only in times of difficulty and danger. But the introduction of these commissions of lieutenancy, which contained in substance the same powers as the old commissions of array, caused the latter to fall into disuse.

In this state things continued till the repeal of the statutes of armour in the reign of King James I; after which, when King Charles I. had, during his northern expeditions, issued commissions of lieutenancy, and exerted some military powers, which having been long exercised, were thought to belong to the Crown, it became a question in the Long Parliament, how far the power of the Militia did inherently reside in the King; being now unsupported by any statute, and founded only upon immemorial usage. This question, long agitated with great heat and resentment on both sides, became at length the immediate cause of the fatal rupture between the King and his Parliament: the two Houses not only denying this prerogative of the Crown, the legality of which might, perhaps, be somewhat doubtful; but also seising into their own hands the entire power of the Militia; the illegality of which step could never be any doubt at all.

Soon after the Restoration of King Charles II, when the military tenures were abolished, it was thought proper to ascertain the power of the Militia, to recognise the sole right of the Crown to govern and command them, and to put the whole into a more regular method of military subordination. And the order in which the Militia now stands by law is principally built upon the stats. 13 C. 2. c. 6: 14 C. 2. c. 3: 15 C. 2. c. 4, which were then enacted. It is true, the two last of them are apparently repealed, but many of their provisions are re enacted with the addition of some new regulations by the present Militia laws: the general scheme of which is to discipline a certain number of the inhabitants of every county chosen by lot formerly for three, but now (by stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107) for five years, and officered by the Lord Lieutenant, the Deputy Lieutenants, and other principal landholders, under a Commission from the Crown. They are not compellable to march out of their counties unless in case of invasion or actual rebellion within the realm, (or any of his Majesty's dominions or territories, stat. 16 Geo. 3. c. 3,) nor in any case compellable to march out of the kingdom. They are to be exercised at stated times; and their discipline in general is liberal and easy; but when drawn out into actual service, they are subject to the rigours of martial law, as necessary to keep them in order. This is the constitutional security which our laws have provided for the public peace, and for protecting the realm against foreign or domestic violence. See stats. 2 Geo. 3. c. 20: 9 Geo. 3. c. 42: 16 Geo. 3. c. 3: 18 Geo. 3. cc. 14, 59: 19 Geo. 3. c. 72: 26 Geo. 3. c. 107: and 1 Comm. 410, &c.

The last act passed reducing into one all the laws relating to the Militia is stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107. This mentions the particular quota of each county and district in England and Wales, the whole number amounting to 30,740. And it is by this act provided, that in cases of actual invasion or imminent danger thereof, and in cases of rebellion and insurrection, his Majesty may embody the Militia: and if Parliament is not then sitting, they are to meet by proclamation in 14 days: a measure which was adopted in December 1792, from the the dangerous aspect of affairs, owing to the proceedings of the French, aimed at that time not only against their own government, but against every Monarchy in Europe.

The pay and clothing of the Militia is provided for by a bill which passes annually.

By stats. 33 Geo. 3. c. 8: 34 Geo. 3. c. 47, a weekly allowance is ordered to be made by the parish overseers to the families of Militia-men, (and substitutes in certain cases,) during the time of their actual service; and the bounties to Militia-men mentioned in § 102 of the said stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 107, are repealed, and others given in their stead by the said stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 8, and by stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 16; which latter act was passed for a temporary augmentation of the Militia, in such proportions and for such time as the Lord Lieutenants of the county, by his Majesty's direction, shall appoint. See also stat. 34 Geo. 3. c. 47, allowing volunteers for such augmentation to be beat up for in any place.

The rank of officers of the corps of Fencibles in Scotland, and of those in the English Militia, where serving together, is settled by stat. 33 Geo. 3. c. 36. § 2.

The Militia of the city of London is regulated by stats. 34 Geo. 3. c. 81: 35 Geo. 3. c. 27. See also this Dictionary, title Trophy-money.

The toll shall be taken according to the strength of the water, Ordin. pro pistor. incerti temp. Prohibition shall not go in suit for tithe of a new Mill. Art. cler'. 9 Ed. 2. st. 1. c. 5.

farther progress; and said to be the use in Cornwall. 2 Vent. 342. per Wilde J. on a case referred to him by Lord Bridgman. 22 Car. 2.

It was said by the Solicitor General, that there was a great difference between pits and Mines; for if a Mine be opened, he that may work the Mine is not obliged to pursue the vein of ore under ground; but he may sink pits in pursuit of it which are necessary to come at the ore, and as many as he thinks proper; and Lord Chancellor said, it had been so resolved before Powell J. on great consideration, and consulting and examining the most able Miners. Cases in Equity in Lord King's time, 79.

Allum Mines belong of course to the persons in whose grounds they are; and therefore no privilege concerning them can be granted but in the King's own ground. 3 Inst. 185: See stat 21 Jac. 1. c. 3. § 11, 12.

MINES, In another signification, are caves or trenches dug under ground, whereby to undermine the walls of a city or fortification.

MINIMENTS; See Muniments.

MINISTERS. If a Minister is disturbed in the execution of his office in the church, the punishment upon conviction is a fine of 10*l.* and, upon non-payment, three months' imprisonment, &c. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 1. And disturbing any licensed dissenting minister incurs a forfeiture of 20*l.* by stat. 1 W. & M. stat. 1. c. 18. See titles Dissenters; Parson.

MINISTRI REGIS, Extend to Judges of the realm; as well as to those who have ministerial offices in the government. 2 Inst. 208.

MINOR, One under age; more properly an heir male or female, before they come to the age of twenty-one years; during which minority they are generally incapable to act for themselves. See title Infant.

MINORES, Friars Minorites, of the order of St. Francis, that had no prior; they washed each other's feet, and increased very much in the year 1207. Mat. West.

MINSTREL; Minstrellus et menest, allis, from the Fr. menestrier.] A musician, fidler, or piper; mentioned in the ancient stat. 4 H. 4. c. 27. Quod marifcalli et Ministrelli praedicti per se forent et esse deberent unum corpus et una communitas perpetua, &c. Upon a Quo-warranto, 14 H. 7, Laurentius Dominus de Dutton clamavit, quod omnes Minstrelli infra civitatem Cestriae et infra Cestriam commorantes, vel officia eadem exercentes, debent convenire coram ipso vel Senescallo suo apud Cestriam, ad festum Nativitatis St. Johannis Baptistae annuatim, et dabunt sibi ad dictum festum quatuor lagenas vini et unam lanceam; et insuper quilibet eorum dabit ei quatuor denarios et unum obolum ad dictum festum, et habere de qualibet meretrice infra comitatum Cestriae, et infra Cestriam manente, et officium suum exercente, quatuor denarios per annum ad festum praedictum, &c. Pat. [illegible] E. 4. And where, by the statute of 39 Eliz. c. 4. Fidlers were declared to be rogues, yet there a proviso was continued therein, exempting those in Cheshire licensed by Dutton of Dutton. See Claus. 9 Ed. 2. m. 26 Dorso. an ordinance [illegible] Scutiferorum et Menestrallorum. It was usual for these Minstrels, not only to divert princes, and the nobility, with sports, but also with musical instruments, and with flattering [illegible], in praise of them and their ancestors. The office and power of the King of the Minstrels is mentioned in [illegible] Monastic. 1 tom. 355. Cowell. See title Vagrants.

MINT; Officina monetaria; Monetarium.] The place where the King's money is coined; which is at present and long hath been in the Tower of London, though it appears by divers statutes, that in ancient times the Mint has also been at Calais, and other places. Stats. 2 R. 2. c. 16: 9 H. 5. c. 5 The Mint-master is to keep his allay, and receive silver at the true value, &c. stat. 2 H. 6. c. 12. Gold and silver delivered into the Mint is to be assayed, coined, and given out, according to the order and time of bringing in; and persons shall receive the same weight of coin, or so much as shall be finer or coarser than the standard, &c. Stat. 18 Car. 2. c. 5.—All silver and gold extracted by melting and refining of metals, shall be employed for the increase of monies, and be sent to the Mint, where the value is to be paid. Stat. 1 W. & M. c 30. See title Mines.—By stat. 18 Car. 2. 3000*l.* a year was granted out of certain duties on wine, beer, &c. imported, to defray the expence of the Mint; which sum was increased by stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 22; and is now settled by subsequent statutes, at a sum not exceeding 15,000*l.* per ann. for England and Scotland, &c. See this Dictionary, title Coin; ad finem.

The officers belonging to the Mint have not always been alike; they are now the following, viz. the Warden, who is the chief of the rest, and is by his office to receive the silver and bullion of the goldsmiths to be coined, and take care thereof, and he hath the overseeing of all the other officers. The Master-Worker receives the silver from the warden, and causes it to be melted, when he delivers it to the moniers, and taketh it from them again after made into money. The Comptroller, who is to see that the money be made to the just assise, and controul the officers if the money be not made as it ought. The Master of the Assay, who weigheth the silver, and examineth whether it be according to the standard. The Auditor takes account of the silver, &c. The Surveyor of the Melting, who is to see the silver cast out, and that it be not altered after the assay master hath made trial of it, and it is delivered to the melters. The Clerk of the Irons, who seeth that the irons be clean and fit for working. The Graver, whose office is to engrave the stamps for the money. The Melters, who melt the bullion, &c. The Blanchers to anneal and cleanse the money. The Moniers, who are some to shear the money, others to forge and beat it broad, some to round, and some to stamp or coin it. The Provost, to provide for all the moniers, and oversee them, &c. See title Money.

MINT, A pretended place of privilege in Southwark, near the King's Bench, put down by statute. If any persons within the limits of the Mint shall obstruct any officer in the serving of any writ or process, &c or assault any person therein, so as he receives any bodily hurt, the offenders shall be guilty of felony, and transported to the plantations, &c. Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. See titles Prisons; Privileged Places.

MINUERE, To let blood; minutio, blood-letting. This was a common old practice among the regulars, and the secular priests or canons, who were the most confined and sedentary men. In the Register of statutes and customs belonging to the cathedral church of St. Paul's in London, collected by Ralph Baldock, dean, about the year 1300, there is one express chapter De minutione. Cowell.

MINUTE

MINUTE TITHES, minutæ sive minores decimæ.] Small tithes, such as usually belong to the Vicar, as of wool, lambs, pigs, butter, cheese, herbs, seeds, eggs, honey, wax, &c. See title Tithes.

MIRACULA, A superstitious sport or play, practised by the popish clergy for gain and deceit; prohibited by Bishop Grosthead in the diocese of Lincoln. Cowell.

MIS: This syllable added to another word signifies some fault or defect; as, misprision; misdicere, i. e. to scandalize any one; misdocere, i. e. to teach amiss. Cowell.

MISA, A compact or agreement, a form of peace, or compromise. Cowell.

MISADVENTURE, Fr. mesaventure, Lat. infortunium.] The killing a man, partly by negligence and partly by chance. S. P. C. lib. 1. c. 8. Britton distinguishes between Adventure and Misadventure; the first he makes to be mere chance; as if a man being upon or near the water, be taken with some sudden sickness, and so fall in and is drowned; or into the fire, and is burnt; Misadventure he says is, where a person comes to his death by some outward violence, as the fall of a tree, the running of a cart-wheel, stroke of a horse, or such like. Brit. c. 7. Staundford construes Misadventure more largely than Britton understands it; and says, it is where one, thinking no harm, carelesly throws a stone, wherewith he kills another, &c. West defines Misadventure to be, when a man is slain by mere fortune, against the mind of the killer; and he calls it homicide by chance mixed, when the killer's ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance. West. Symb. § 48, 49. See title Homicide II. 1.

MISCASTING or MISCOMPUTING. Assumpsit to pay 12*l.* Jury found a promise to pay 7*l.* the judgment was reversed; because it is not the same assumpsit. Dyer, 219. b. Marg. pl. 11.

Debt; and declared, that the defendant had bargained with him to give him for the pasturing of every horse by the night 2*d.* and for every ox 1*d.* halfpenny, and sheweth, that he had pastured 70 horses and 300 oxen, Et ideo actio accrevit to demand, &c. and he demanded more than upon his own shewing it appeared he should have; for the number of the horses and oxen did not amount to the sum he had counted; and this was alleged in arrest of judgment, after verdict found for the plaintiff; but judgment was given for the plaintiff notwithstanding. Cro. Eliz. 22. In covenant for payment of rent, the miscasting of the sum due doth not make it ill; and if more be laid, it shall be abated as surplus; but it is otherwise in debt for rent. Dyer 55. See 15 Vin. Abr. 402, 403: and this Dictionary, titles Assumpsit; Amendment; Error.

MISCHIEF, Malicious. Malicious Mischief or damage, is a species of injury to private property, which the law considers as a public crime. This is such as is done, not animo furandi, or with an intent of gaining by another's loss, but either out of a spirit of wanton cruelty, or wicked revenge. In this latter light it bears a near relation to the crime of Arson, for as that affects the habitation, so does this the property, of individuals; and therefore any damage arising from this mischievous disposition, though only a trespass at the Common Law, is now, by several statutes, made severely penal. The general effect of these is shortly recapitulated by Blackstone, in order of time. See 4 Comm. c. 17.

By stat. 22 H. 7. c. 11, perversely and maliciously to cut down or destroy the powdike in the fens of Norfolk and Ely, is felony; and in like manner it is by many special statutes, enacted upon the several occasions, made felony to destroy the several Sea-banks, River-banks, public Navigations, and Bridges, erected by virtue of those Acts of Parliament.

By stat. 43 Eliz. c. 13, for preventing rapine on the northern borders, to burn any barn, or stack of corn, or grain; or to imprison or carry away any Subject, in order to ransom him, or make prey or spoil of his person or goods, upon any deadly feud, or otherwise, in the four northern counties of Northumberland, Westmorland, Cumberland, and Durham, or being accessory before the fact, to such carrying away or imprisonment; or to give or take any money or contribution, there called blackmail, to secure such goods from rapine, is felony without benefit of clergy. See titles Arson; False Imprisonment; Black-mail.

By stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7, Maliciously, unlawfully, and willingly, in the night time, to burn, or cause to be burnt or destroyed any ricks or stacks of corn, hay, or grain, barns, houses, buildings, or kilns; or to kill any horses, or other cattle, is felony; but the offender may make his election to be transported for seven years: and to maim or hurt such horses, sheep, or cattle, is a trespass for which treble damages shall be recovered. See titles Arson; Cattle; Burning.

By stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 23, to burn on any waste between Candlemas and Midsummer, any grig, ling, heath, furze, goss, or fern, is punishable with whipping and confinement in the house of correction.

By stat. 1 Ann. st. 2. c. 9, Captains and mariners belonging to ships, and destroying the same, to the prejudice of the owners, (and by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 12, of the insurers,) are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. See also stat. 11 Geo. 1. c. 29; and this Dictionary, title Insurance II. 4. And by stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 18, making any hole in a ship in distress, or stealing her pumps, or aiding or abetting such offence, or wilfully doing any thing tending to the immediate loss of such ship, is felony without benefit of clergy.

By stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48, maliciously to set on fire any underwood, wood, or coppice, is made single felony.

By stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23, the wilful and malicious tearing, cutting, spoiling, or defacing of the garments or cloaths of any person passing in the streets or highways, and the assaulting with intent so to do, is felony. This was occasioned by the insolence of certain weavers and others, who, upon the introduction of some Indian fashions, prejudicial to their own manufactures, made it their practice to deface them, either by open outrage, or by privily cutting, or casting aqua-fortis in the streets upon such as wore them.

By stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22, commonly called the Waltham Black Act, it was among other things enacted, that to set fire to any house, barn, or out-house, (extended by stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 29, to Mills; see that title:) or to any hovel, cock, mow, or stack of corn, (a parcel of corn is not a sufficient distinction under this Act,) straw, hay, or wood; or unlawfully and maliciously to break down the head of any fish-pond, whereby the fish shall be lost or destroyed; or in like manner to kill, maim, or wound any cattle, (from malice or revenge to the owner;) or cut down or destroy any trees planted in an avenue or growing in a garden, for ornament, shelter, or profit: all these malicious acts, or the procuring, by gift or promise of reward, any person to join therein, are felonies without benefit of clergy; and the hundred shall be charged with the damages, unless the offender be convicted. See this Dictionary, titles Black Act; Burning.

By stats. 6 Geo. 2. c. 37: 10 Geo. 2. c. 32, it is also made felony without benefit of clergy, maliciously to cut down any river or sea-bank, whereby lands may be overflowed or damaged; or to cut any hop-binds, growing in a plantation of hops; or wilfully and maliciously to set on fire any mine, pit, or delph of coal. See titles Mines; Coals, &c.

By stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 22, to use any violence in order to deter any persons from buying corn or grain; to seize any carriage or horse carrying grain or meal to or from any market or sea-port; or to use any outrage with such intent, is punishable for the first offence with imprisonment and public whipping; and the second offence, or destroying any granary, where corn is kept for exportation; or taking away or spoiling any grain or meal in such granary, or in any ship or vessel, intended for exportation, is felony, subject to transportation for seven years. See titles Corn; Riots.

By stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 19, to set fire to any goss, furze, or fern, growing in any forest or chase, is subject to a fine of 5*l.*

By stats. 6 Geo. 3. cc. 36, 48: 13 Geo. 3. c. 33, wilfully to spoil or destroy any timber or other trees, roots, shrubs, or plants, is for the two first offences liable to pecuniary penalties; and for the third, if in the day-time, and even for the first if at night, the offender shall be guilty of felony, and liable to transportation for seven years.

By stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 29, wilfully and maliciously to burn or destroy any engine or other machines belonging to Mines; or any fences for Inclosures, pursuant to any Act of Parliament, is made single felony, and punishable with seven years' transportation. See titles Mines; Common.

By stat. 13 Geo. 3. c. 38, the punishment of seven years' transportation was inflicted on such as should break into any house, &c. belonging to the Plate Glass Company, with intent to steal, cut, or destroy any of their stock or utensils; or should wilfully and maliciously cut or destroy the same.

By stat. 22 Geo. 3. c. 40, if any person shall break into any house or shop, with intent to cut or destroy any serge, woollen, velvet, silk, linen, or cotton goods, in the loom, or any stock of utensils used in the manufacturing such goods, the offender shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy.

These form the principal instances of Malicious Mischief punishable by statute; and which are here enumerated in one view, though noticed, for the most part, under various titles in this Dictionary.

MISCOGNISANT, Ignorant or not knowing. In the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9, against Champerty and Maintenance, it is ordained that proclamation shall be made twice in the year of that act, to the intent no person should be ignorant or miscognisant of the penalties therein mentioned, &c.

MISCOMPUTING; See Misnosing.

MISCONTINUANCE, Signifies the same with discontinuance. Kitch. 231. Though it is generally said to be, where a continuance is made by undue process. Jenk. Cent. 57.

MISDEMESNOR, or MISDEMEANOUR, A crime less than felony. The term Misdemeanour is generally used in contradistinction to felony, and comprehends all indictable offences which do not amount to felony; as Perjury, Libels, Conspiracies, Assaults, &c. See 4 Comm. c. 1. p. 5. in n.

A Crime or Misdemeanour, says Blackstone, is an act committed or omitted, in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it. This general definition comprehends both Crimes and Misdemeanours; which, properly speaking, are mere synonymous terms; though in common usage, the word Crimes is made to denote such offences as are of a deeper and more atrocious dye; while smaller faults, and omissions of less consequence, are comprised under the gentler name of Misdemeanours only.

In making the distinction between public wrongs and private, between Crimes and Misdemeanours, and civil injuries, the same Author observes, that public wrongs, or Crimes and Misdemeanours, are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties, due to the whole community, considered as a community in its social aggregate capacity. 4 Comm. 5.

This term may be considered as, and in fact is, a genus, which contains under it a great number of species, almost as various in their nature as human actions. See Hale's & Hawkins's Pleas of the Crown; and this Dictionary, title Misprision.

MISE, Fr. Lat. missum, misa.] Is a law term signifying expences, and it is so commonly used in the entries of judgments, in personal actions; as when the plaintiff recovers, the judgment is quòd recuperet damna sua to such a value, and pro misis et custagiis, for costs and charges, so much, &c. This word hath also another signification in law; which is where it is taken for a word of art, appropriated to a writ of right, so called because both parties have put themselves upon the mere right, to be tried upon the grand assize, so that what in all other actions is called an issue, in a writ of right is termed a Mise; but if in the writ of right a collateral point be tried, there it is called an issue. To join the Mise upon the mere right, is as much as to say, to join the Mise upon the clear right, i. e. to join upon this point, which hath the more right, the tenant or demandant. 1 Inst. 294: stat. 37 Ed. 3. c. 16. See 3 Comm. App. § 6.

MISES, Taxes or tallages, &c. An honorary gift or customary present, from the people of Wales to every new King and Prince of Wales, anciently given in cattle, wine, and corn, but now in money, being 5000*l.* or more, is denominated a Mise; so was the usual tribute or fine of 3000 marks, paid by the inhabitants of the county palatine of Chester, at the change of every owner of the said earldoms, for enjoying their liberties. And at Chester they have a Mise-book, wherein every town and village in the county is rated what to pay towards the Mise. The stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 26, ordains, that "Lands shall have all such Mises and profits of their lands as they had in times past, &c."

MESE is sometimes corruptly used for mese, in Law French mese, a messuage; thus a Mise-place in some manors is such a messuage or tenement as answers the lord a heriot at the death of the owner. 2 Inst. 528.

MISE-MONEY, Money given by way of contract or composition to purchase any liberty, &c. Blount. Ten. 162.

MISERERE, The name and first word of one of the penitential Psalms, and is most commonly that which the Ordinary gave to such guilty malefactors as were admitted to the benefit of clergy; being therefore called the Psalm of Mercy. See title Clergy, benefit of.

MISERICORDIA, An arbitrary or discretionary amerciament. See title Amerciament.

Sometimes Misericordia is to be quit and discharged of all manner of amerciaments that a man may fall into in the forest. See Cromp. Jur. 196. See title Moderata Misericordia; & stat. Westm. 1. cap. 15.

MISERICORDIA in cibis & potu, Exceedings, or over-commons, or any gratuitous portion of meat and drink given to the religious above their ordinary allowance. Mat. Par. Vit. Abb. S. Albani, p. 71. In some convents they had a stated allowance of these over-commons upon extraordinary days, which were called Misericordiæ regulares. Monast. Angl. i. 149. b.

MISERICORDIA COMMUNIS, Is when a fine is set on the whole county or hundred. Mon. Angl. i. pag. 976.

MISEVENIRE, To succeed ill; as, where a man is accused of a crime, and fails in his defence or purgation. Lex Canut. 78. apud Brompton.

MISFEASANCE, A misdeed or trespass. Jury to inquire of all purprestures and Misfeasance. Cro Car. 498.

MISFEASOR, A trespasser. 2 Inst. 200.

MISKENNING, miskenninga; from mis, and Sax. ecunan, i. e. citare. Leg. H. 1. c. 12.] Iniqua vel injusta in jus vocatio; inconstanter loqui in curia, vel invariare. It is mentioned among the privileges granted and confirmed to the monastery of Ramsey by S. Edward the Confessor. Mon. Angl. i. 237. Et in civitate London in nullo placito miskennagium. Chart. H. 2.

MISKERING; Vide Abishering.

MISNOMER, of the Fr. mes, amiss; and nomer, nominare.] The using one name for another; a misnaming. A name, Nomen, est quasi rei notamen, and was invented to make a distinction between person and person; and where a person is described, so that he may be certainly distinguished and known from other persons, the omission, or in some cases, the mistake of the name shall not avoid the grant. 11 Rep. 20, 21. A grant to a man by a wrong name may be good, si constat de persona, but the demonstratio personæ must appear upon the face of the grant. Ld. Raym. 304. Yet a grant to a knight, by the name of esquire, is void. Ib. 305. And if the name of a party is mistaken, the Judges ought to mould a small mistake therein, to make good a contract, &c. and so as to support the act of the party by the law. Hob. 125. But the Christian name ought always to be perfect; and the law is not so precise as to surnames, as it is of Christian names. Popb. 57: 2 Ld. Abr. 199. Misprisions of clerks in names, are amendable: Piers and Pierre have been adjudged one and the same name. Saunder and Alexander, and Garret and Gerald are but one name; but Randolph and Randulphus, Jeffrey and Godfrey, &c. are several names, and must be named rightly. 2 Rol. Abr. 135: 1 And. 211.

Where a Christian name is quite mistaken, as John for Thomas, &c. it may be pleaded that there was no such man in rerum natura. Dyer 349. Or, he may plead his having been christened by the name of Thomas, and always called and known by that name; and traverse his being called or known by the name of John. If a person pleads that he never was called by such a name, it is ill; for this may be true, and yet he might be of that name of baptism. 1 Salk. 6. One whose name is Edmund is bound in a bond by the name of Edward; though he subscribes his true name, that is no part of the bond. 2 Cro. 640; Dyer 279. If a person be bound by the name of W. R. he may be sued by the name of W. R. alias dictus W. B. his true name; not W. B. alias dictus W. R. 3 Salk. 258. If a person be indicted by two Christian and surnames, it will be quashed; for he cannot have two such names. 1 Ld. Raym. 562. A lady, wife to a private person, ought to be named according to the name of her husband, or the writ shall abate; so if the son of an Earl, &c. be sued as a Lord, and not as a private person by the name of his family. Dyer 761: 2 Salk. 451.

Misnomer of corporations may be pleaded in abatement. 1 Leon. 159: 5 Mod. 327: 2 Salk. 451. And if there be any mistake in the name of a corporation, that is material in their leases and grants; they will be void. 2 Bendl. 1: Amherst. 196. Judgment against a corporation by a wrong name is void. Ld. Raym 119. A defendant may avoid an outlawry by pleading a Misnomer of name of baptism or surname; or Misnomer as to additions of estate, of the town, &c. See title Outlawry.

Though Misnomer of a surname may not be pleaded on an indictment, in an appeal it may; but any other Misnomers, and defective additions, are as fatal in an indictment as an appeal. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25. § 68, 9. A Misnomer must be pleaded by the party himself who is misnamed. 1 Lutw. 35. Plea of Misnomer by attorney may be refused; but it is no cause of demurrer. Ld. Raym. 509. If defendant omits to plead a Misnomer, he may be taken in execution by the wrong Christian name. 2 Strange 1218. What words in a plea of Misnomer shall be considered as a special imparlance, see 1 Wils. 261.

If issue is joined on a plea in abatement for a Misnomer, in an action upon the case on promises, and found against the defendant, the judgment shall be peremptory, therefore the Jury ought to assess the damages. 2 Wils. 367.

What foundation will support a name by reputation, see Ld. Raym. 301, 304.—Note, names of persons not christened are surnames only. Ib. 305.

For the addition or omission of a letter or two, not making any material alteration in the sound, it is not proper to plead a Misnomer. The Courts of Law discourage (and that justly,) dilatory pleas, as much as they can, as tending to the delay of justice. See further Com. Dig. title Abatement, E. 18—22; F. 17—20; and this Dictionary, titles Abatement I. 3. b, and Amendment.

MISPLEADING. If, in pleading, any thing be [illegible], that is essential to the action or defence, as if the plaintiff does not merely state his title in a defective manner, but sets forth a title that is wholly defective in itself, itself, or if to an action of debt, (i. e. on bond, contract, &c.) the defendant pleads Not guilty instead of nil debet, these cannot be cured by a verdict for the plaintiff in the first case, or for the defendant in the second. Salk. 365: Cro. Eliz. 778.

When an issue is joined on an immaterial point, or such a point, as, after trial, the Court cannot give judgment, the Court regularly awards a repleader. See titles Pleading; Repleader.

MISPRISION,

Misprisio, from the Fr. mespris, contemptus.] A neglect, oversight, or contempt: as for example, Misprision of treason is a negligence in not revealing treason to the King, his Council, or a Magistrate, where a person knows it to be committed: so of felony. Staundf. P. C. lib. 1. c. 19. If a man knoweth of any treason or felony, and conceals the same, it is Misprision. In a larger sense, Misprision is taken for many great offences, which are neither treason nor felony, or capital, but very near them; and every great misdemeanour, which hath no certain name appointed by the law, is sometimes called Misprision. 3 Inst. 36: H. P. C. 127: Wood, 406, 408.

Misprisions are, in the acceptation of our law, generally understood to be all such high offences as are under the degree of capital, but nearly bordering thereon; and it is said that a Misprision is contained in every treason and felony whatsoever; and that if the King so please, the offender may be proceeded against for the Misprision only. Yearb. 2 R. 3, 10: Staundf. P. C. 32, 37: Kel. 71. 1 Hal. P. C. 374: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 20. § 1.

Misprisions are generally divided into two sorts; 1. Negative, which consists in the concealment of something which ought to be revealed; and 2. Positive, which consists in the commission of something which ought not to be done. 4 Comm. c. 9.

Of the first or negative kind, is what is called Misprision of Treason; consisting in the bare knowledge and concealment of treason, without any degree of assent thereto; for any assent makes the party a principal traitor: as indeed the concealment, which was construed aiding and abetting, did at the Common Law. Thus it is laid down, that when one knows another hath committed treason, and doth not reveal it to the King or his Privy Council, or some Magistrate, that the offender may be secured and brought to justice, it is high treason by the ancient Common Law; for delay in discovering treason was deemed an assent or [illegible] high treason. Bract. 118: S. P. C. [illegible]. But it is now enacted, by stat. 1 [illegible] c. 10, that a bare concealment of treason shall be only held a Misprision. The concealment becomes criminal if the party apprised of the treason does not, as soon as conveniently [illegible], reveal it to some Judge of Assise, or Justice of the Peace. 1 Hal. P. C. [illegible]. But if there be any [illegible] as if a man goes to a [illegible] that a conspiracy is intended [illegible] such [illegible] by [illegible] and [illegible] it [illegible] the [illegible] 1 Hawk. P. C. [illegible]

A person having notice of a meeting of conspirators against the government, goes into their company and hears their treasonable consultation and conceals it, this is treason; so where one has been accidentally in such company, and heard such discourse, if he meets such a company a second time; for in these cases, the concealment is attended with circumstances which shew an approbation thereof. H. P. C. 127: Kel. 17, 21.

A man who hath knowledge of a treason cannot secure himself by discovering generally that there will be a rising, without disclosing the persons intending to rise; nor can he do it by discovering these to a private person, who is no magistrate. S. P. C: H. P. C. 127. But where one is told in general, that there will be a rising or rebellion, and doth not know the persons concerned in it, or the place where, &c this uncertain knowledge may be concealed, and it shall not be Treason or Misprision. Kel. 22: 1 H. P. C. 36 If high treason is discovered to a clergyman in confession, he ought to reveal it; but not in case of felony. 2 Inst. 629. This was law, when the Roman Catholic religion was professed here as the religion of the land; the same may be still law. Dict

If a person is indicted of Misprision, as for treason; though he be found guilty, the Judges shall not give judgment thereon, he not being indicted of the Misprision. Jenk. Cent. 217 Information will not lie for Misprision of treason, &c. but indictment, as for capital crimes. There must be two witnesses upon indictments as well as trials of Misprision of treason, by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. See title Treason.

There is a negative Misprision of treason, created by Act of Parliament. By stat. 13 Eliz. c. 2, concealers of bulls of absolution from Rome are declared guilty of Misprision of treason A positive Misprision of treason is also created by stat. 14 Eliz. c. 3. which enacts that those who forge foreign coin, not current in this kingdom, their aiders, abettors, and procurers, shall all be guilty of Misprision of treason; for though the law would not put foreign coin upon quite the same footing as our own, yet if the circumstances of trade concur, the falsifying it may be attended with consequences almost equally pernicious to the public; and therefore the law has made it an offence just below capital, and that is all For the Punishment of Misprision of Treason, is loss of the profits of land during life, forfeiture of goods, and imprisonment during life. 1 Hal. P. C. 374: 3 Inst. 36, 218; which total forfeiture of the goods was inflicted while the offence amounted to principal treason, and of course included in it a felony by the Common Law; and therefore is no exception to the general rule, that whenever an offence is punished by such total forfeiture, it is felony at the Common Law. 4 Comm. c. 9. p. 120, 1.

Misprision of Felony, is the concealment of a felony which a man knows, but never assented to; for if he assented, this makes him either principal or accessory; and the punishment of this, in a public officer, by stat. Westm. 1. [illegible] is imprisonment for a year and a day; in a common person, for a less discretionary time; and in both, fine and ransom at the King's pleasure, as declared by the Judges in a Court of Justice. 1 Hal. P. C. [illegible]

Under the title of Misprision, that of Theftbote may be reduced, which is, where one knowing of a felony, takes his goods again, or amends for the same. 3 Inst.

3 Inst. 134, 139: H. P. C. 130. Though the bare taking goods again which have been stolen is no offence, unless some favour be shewn the thief. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 59. § 7. To take any reward to help any person to stolen goods, is made felony by stat. 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. And to advertise a reward for the return of things stolen incurs a forfeiture of 50*l.* by stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. The stats. Westm. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 9: 3 H. 7. c. 1, provide against concealments of felonies by sheriffs, coroners, and bailiffs, &c.

There is also another species of negative Misprision, namely, the concealing of Treasure-trove, which belongs to the King or his grantees by prerogative-royal; this concealment was formerly punishable by death, but now only by fine and imprisonment. Glanv. lib. 1. c. 2: 3 Inst. 133.

2. Misprisions which are merely positive, are generally denominated Contempts or High Misdemeanours; of which the first and principal is the Mal-administration of such high Officers as are in public trust and employment. This is usually punished by the method of parliamentary impeachment, wherein such penalties, short of death, are inflicted, as to the wisdom of the House of Peers shall seem proper; consisting usually of banishment, imprisonment, fines, or perpetual disability. Hitherto also may be referred the offence of Embezzling the Public Money, which is not a capital crime, but subjects the offender to a discretionary fine and imprisonment. 4 Comm. 122.

Other Misprisions are in general such contempts of the executive Magistrate, as demonstrate themselves by some arrogant and undutiful behaviour towards the King and Government; these are either against the King's Prerogative; the King's Person and Government; the King's Title; his Palaces, or Courts of Justice. With respect to the two first of these, see this Dictionary, titles Contempt; Government.

Contempts against the King's Title, not amounting to Treason or Præmunire, are, the denial of his right to the Crown, in common and unadvised discourse; for if it be by advisedly speaking, it amounts to a Præmunire; see that title. This heedless species of contempt is punished with fine and imprisonment. Likewise if any person shall in anywise hold, affirm, or maintain, that the Common Laws of this realm, not altered by Parliament, ought not to direct the right of the Crown of England; this is a misdemeanour by stat. 13 Eliz. c. 1; and punishable with forfeiture of goods and chattels. A contempt may also arise from refusing or neglecting to take the oaths appointed by statute for the better securing the Government, and yet acting in a public office, place of trust, or other capacity for which the said oaths are required to be taken, viz. those of allegiance, supremacy, and abjuration; which must be taken within six calendar months after admission. The penalties for this contempt, inflicted by stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 13, are very little, if any thing, short of those of a Præmunire; being an incapacity to hold the said offices, or any other; to prosecute any suit; to be guardian or executor; to take any legacy or deed of gift; or to vote at any election for Members of Parliament: and after conviction the offender shall also forfeit 500*l.* to any that will sue for the same. See this Dictionary, titles Dissenters; Non-conformists; Oaths. Members on the foundation of any colleges in the two Universities, who by this statute are bound to take the oaths, must also register a certificate thereof in the College Register, within one month after; otherwise, if the electors do not remove him, and elect another within twelve months, or after, the King may nominate a person to succeed him, by his great seal or sign manual. Besides thus taking the oaths for offices, any two Justices of the Peace may by the same statute summon, and tender the oaths to any person whom they shall suspect to be disaffected; and every person refusing the same, who is properly called a Non-juror, shall be adjudged a popish recusant convict, and subject to the same penalties as are inflicted on them; which in the end may amount to the alternative of abjuring the realm, or suffering death as a felon. 4 Comm. 124: See this Dictionary, titles Papist; Oaths; Præmunire.

Contempts against the King's Palaces or Courts of Justice have been always looked upon as high Misprisions; and by the ancient law, before the Conquest, fighting in the King's Palace, or before the King's Judges, was punished with death. 3 Inst. 140: Ll. Alured, cc. 7, 34. And at present, by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12, malicious striking in the King's Palace, wherein his royal person resides, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment, and fine at the King's pleasure; and also with loss of the offender's right hand: the solemn execution of which sentence is prescribed in the statute at length. See Sir Edm. Knevett's Ca. in Stowe; & 11 St. Tr. 16; & the Earl of Devonshire's; 11 St. Tr. 133.

But striking in the King's superior Courts of Justice in Westminster Hall, or at the assizes, is made still more penal than even in the King's Palace; the reason seems to be, that those Courts being anciently held in the King's Palace, and before the King himself, striking there included the former contempt against the King's Palace, and something more, viz. the disturbance of public justice. For this reason, by the ancient Common Law before the Conquest, striking in the King's Courts of Justice, or drawing a sword therein, was a capital felony. Ll. Inæ. c. 6: Ll. Canut. c. 56: Ll. Alured. c. 7: and our modern law retains so much of the ancient severity, as only to exchange the loss of life for the loss of the offending limb. Therefore a stroke or blow in such a Court of Justice, whether blood be drawn or not, or even assaulting a Judge sitting in the Court, by drawing a weapon, without any blow struck, is punishable with the loss of the right hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, and of the profits of the offender's lands during life. Staundf. P. C. 38: 3 Inst. 140, 1. A Rescue also of a prisoner from any of the said Courts, without striking a blow, is punished with perpetual imprisonment, and forfeiture of goods, and the profits of lands during life; 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 5; being looked upon as an offence of the same nature with the last; but only as no blow is actually given, the amputation of the hand is excused. For the like reason, an affray or riot near the said Courts, but out of their actual view, is punished only with fine and imprisonment. Cro Car. 373.

Not only such as are guilty of any actual violence, but of threatening, or reproachful words to any Judge sitting in the Courts, are guilty of a high Misprision, and have been punished with large fines, imprisonment, and corporal punishment. Cro. Car. 503. And even in the the inferior Courts of the King, an affray or contemptuous behaviour is punishable with a fine by the Judges there sitting; as by the Steward in a Court-leet, or the like. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. §§ 10, 11.

Likewise all such as are guilty of any injurious treatment to those who are immediately under the protection of a Court of Justice, are punishable by fine and imprisonment: as if a man assaults or threatens his adversary for suing him, a counsellor or attorney for being employed against him, a juror for his verdict, or a gaoler or other ministerial officer, for keeping him in custody, and properly executing his duty. 3 Inst. 141, 2.

Lastly, to endeavour to dissuade a witness from giving evidence; to disclose an examination before the Privy Council; or to advise a prisoner to stand mute; (all of which are impediments of justice;) are high Misprisions, and contempts of the King's Courts, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. And anciently it was held, that if one of the Grand Jury disclosed to any person indicted the evidence that appeared against him, he was thereby made accessory to the offence, if felony; and in treason, a principal. And at this day it is agreed that he is guilty of a high Misprision, and liable to be fined and imprisoned. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 21. § 15.

MISPRISIONS of Clerks, &c. Relate to their neglects in writing or keeping records; and here Misprision signifies a mistaking. See stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 6: and this Dictionary, title Amendment.

MISRECITAL of deeds or conveyances, will sometimes hurt a deed, and sometimes not. Hob. 18, 19, 129.

If a thing is referred to time, place, and number, and that is mistaken, all is void. Arg. Pl. C. 392. b. Trin. 13 Eliz. in the case of the Earl of Leicester v. Heydon.

Misrecital in an immaterial point, and where it is only an additional flourish in things circumstantial, shall not avoid a grant; as where the husband has a term in right of his wife, and this term is recited as made to the husband. A Misrecital in the beginning of a deed, which goes not to the end of a deed, shall not hurt; but if it goes to the end of a sentence, so that the deed is limited by it, it is vitious. Carth. 149. See titles Amendment; Deed; Lease.

MISSA, The Mass, at first used for the dismission or sending away of the people: and hence it came to signify the whole church service or Common Prayer; but more particularly the Communion-service, and the office of the Sacrament, after those who did not receive it were dismissed. Litt. Dict.

MISSAL, missale, The Mass-book, containing all things to be daily said in the Mass. Lindw. Provincial. l. 3. c. 2.

MISSATICUS, A messenger. Cowel. Domesd in Chesth.

MISSÆ PRESBYTER, A priest in orders. Blount.

MISSURA, Singing the Nunc Dimittis, and performing other ceremonies to recommend and dismiss a dying person. And in the statutes of the church of St. Paul in London, (collected by Ralph Baldock, dean about the year 1295, in the chapter de Fraternia, of the fraternity or brotherhood, who were obliged to a mutual communication of all religious offices,) it is ordained—Ut fiat commendatio & Missura & sepultura omnibus sociis condecentibus & astantibus. Liber Stat. Eccles. Paulina, M. S. fol. 25.

MISSURIUM, A dish for serving up meat to a table. Thorn's Chron. p. 1762.

MISTAKE, A negligent error in any deed, record, process, &c. As to which see this Dictionary, title Amendment; Deed; &c. Ignorance or Mistake is classed by Blackstone among defects of the will: as when a man intending to do a lawful act, does that which is unlawful. For here the deed and the will acting separately, there is not that conjunction between them which is necessary to form a criminal act. But this must be an ignorance or mistake of fact, and not an error in point of law. Thus, if a man intending to kill a thief or house-breaker in his own house, by Mistake kills one of his own family, this is no criminal action; but if a man thinks he has a right to kill a person excommunicated or outlawed, wherever he meets him, and does so, this is wilful murder; for a Mistake in point of law, which every person of discretion not only may, but is bound and presumed to know, is, in criminal cases, no sort of defence. 4 Comm. c. 2. p. 27.

MISTERIUM, for MINISTERIUM. Mon. Angl. 3 tom. p. 102.

MIS-TRIAL, A false or erroneous trial; where it is in a wrong county, &c. 3 Cro. 284. Consent of parties cannot help such a trial, when past. Hob. 5. See tit. Trial.

MISUSER, Is an abuse of any liberty or benefit; as, 'he shall make a fine for his Misuser.' Old Nat. Br. 149. By Misuser, a charter of a corporation may be forfeited; so also an office, &c. See titles Office; Condition, I. 1.

MITRED ABBOTS, Were those governors of religious Houses, who obtained from the Pope the privilege of wearing the mitre, ring, gloves, and crosier of a Bishop. The mitred Abbots, says Cowell, were not the same with the conventual prelates, who were summoned to Parliament as spiritual Lords, though it hath been commonly so held; for their summons to Parliament did not any way depend on their mitres, but on their receiving their temporals from the hands of the King. See title Abbot.

MITTA, from the Sax. mitten, mensura.] An ancient Saxon measure; its quantity doth not certainly appear, but it is said to be a measure of ten bushels. Domesday, Tit. Wirecscire. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 262. And Mitta, or Mitcha, besides being a sort of measure for salt and corn, is used for the place where the cauldrons were put to boil salt. Gale's Hist. Brit. 767.

MITTENDO MANUSCRIPTUM PEDIS FINIS, Was a judicial writ directed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, to search for, and transmit, the foot of a fine, acknowledged before Justices in Eyre, into the Common Pleas, &c. Reg. Orig. 14.

MITTIMUS, A writ for removing and transferring of records from one Court to another, as out of the King's Bench into the Exchequer, and sometimes by Certiorari into the Chancery, and from thence into another Court: but the Lord Chancellor may deliver such record with his own hand. Stats. 5 R. 2. st. 1. c. 15: 28 & 29 H. 8: Dyer 29, 32. Mittimus is also a precept in writing, under the hand and seal of a Justice of Peace, directed to the gaoler, for the receiving and safe keeping of an offender until he is delivered by law. 2 Inst. 590. See title Commitment.

MITTERE A LARGE, Is generally to set or put at liberty. Law Fr. Dict. And there is a Mittre le estate and de droit mentioned by Littleton, in case of releases of lands by jointenants, &c. which may sometimes pass a fee, without words of inheritance. 1 Inst. 273, 274. See title Release.

lands

MIXED ACTIONS, Suits partaking of the nature of real and personal, wherein some real property is demanded, and also personal damages for a wrong sustained. See title Action.

MIXED LARCENY, or Compound Larceny, Is such as hath all the properties of simple Larceny, but is accompanied with one or both the aggravations of a taking from one's house or person. See title Larceny.

MIXED TITHES, Are those of cheese, milk, and young beasts, &c. 2 Inst. 649. See title Tithes.

MIXTILIO; See Mestilo.

MIXTUM. This word is often mentioned by our monkish historians; it sometimes signifies a breakfast, but always a certain quantity of bread and wine. Cowel.

MOCKADOES, Stuffs made in England and other countries; mentioned in stat. 23 Eliz. c. 9.

MODERATA MISERICORDIA, A writ founded on Magna Charta, which lies for him who is amerced in a Court, not of record, for any transgression, beyond the quality or quantity of the offence: it is directed to the Lord of the Court, or his bailiff, commanding him to take a moderate amerciament of the parties. If a man be amerced in a Court-baron, on presentment by the Jury, where he did not any trespass, he shall not have this writ, unless the amerciament be excessive and outrageous; and if the Steward of the Court, of his own head, will amerce any tenant or other person without cause, the party ought not to sue for his writ of Moderata Misericordia, if he be distrained for that amerciament; but he shall have action of trespass. New Nat. Br. 167. When the amerciament which is set on a person is affeered by his peers, this writ of Moderata Misericordia doth not lie; for then it is according to the statute. See F. N. B. 76: 4to edit. 176.

MODIATIO, Was a certain duty paid for every tierce of wine. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 994.

MODIUS, A measure, usually a bushel; but various according to the customs of several countries.

MODIUS TERRÆ VEL AGRI, This phrase was much used in the ancient charters of the British Kings, and probably signified the same quantity of ground as with the Romans, viz. One hundred feet long, and as many broad. Mon Angl. iii. 200.

MODO ET FORMA, Words of art in law pleadings, &c. and particularly used in the answer of a defendant, whereby he denies to have done the thing laid to his charge, modo & forma declarata, in manner and form as declared by the plaintiff. Kitch 232.

Where Modo et Forma are of the substance of the issue, and where but words of form, this diversity is to be observed; where the issue taken goeth to the point of the writ or action, there Modo et Forma are but words of form, as in the case of the writ of entry in casu proviso. But otherwise it is, when a collateral point in pleading is traversed; as if a feoffment be alledged by two, and this is traversed Modo et Forma, and it is found the feoffment of one, there Modo et Forma is material. So if a feoffment be pleaded by deed, and it is traversed absque hoc quod feoffavit Modo et Forma, upon this collateral issue Modo et Forma are so essential as the Jury cannot find a feoffment without deed. Co. Lit. 281. b. See Br. Labourers, pl. 46. cites 38 H. 6. 22. So in breach of covenant, as for ploughing meadow land, a licence in writing, by several, intitled at the time to the reversion with the appurtenant; (or lands pro tempore,) may be traversed Modo et Forma, and a licence by parol, or by one or two, &c. and not by all, will not support the issue.

Modo et Forma do not put the day nor place in issue; but only the matter and substance of the plea. Reg. Plac. 188. a. 5.

Where a traverse is with a Modo et Forma, &c. that will put the manner, as well as the matter in issue, where the manner is material, as the time, the fact, and other circumstances, when they are the effect of the issue. Reg. Plac. 189. c. 5. See title Pleading.

MODUS DECIMANDI, Is when lands, tenements, or some certain annual sum, or other profit, hath been given time out of mind to a parson and his successors, in full satisfaction and discharge of all tithes in kind, in such a place. 2 Rep. 47: 2 Inst. 490; and see title Tithes.

A Modus Decimandi, commonly called by the simple name of a Modus only, is where there is by custom a particular manner of tithing allowed, different from the general law of taking tithes in kind, which are the actual tenth part of the annual increase. This is sometimes a pecuniary compensation, as 2*d.* an acre for the tithe of land; sometimes it is a compensation in work and labour, as that the parson shall have only the twelfth cock of hay, and not the tenth, in consideration of the owner's making it for him; sometimes in lieu of a large quantity of crude or imperfect tithe, the parson shall have a less quantity, when arrived to greater maturity, as a couple of fowls in lieu of tithe-eggs, and the like. Any means, in short, whereby the law of tithing is altered, and a new method of taking them is introduced, is called a Modus Decimandi, or special manner of tithing. 2 Comm. c. 3. p 29.

MOHAIR YARN; See titles Manufactures; Silk.

MOIETY, medietas, Fr. moitié, i. e. coaequa vel media pars.] The half of any thing; and to hold by Moieties is mentioned in our books, in case of joint-tenants, &c. Lit. 125. See title Joint-tenants.

MOLASSES; See Navigation Act.

MOLENDINUM, A mill of divers kinds. See Mill.

MOLENDUM, Corn sent to a mill, a grist. Chart. Abbat. de Rading, MS. fol. 116.

MOLITURA, Was commonly taken for the toll or multure paid for grinding corn at a mill; sometimes called molta, Fr. moulta—Molitura libera, free grinding or liberty of a mill, without paying toll; a privilege which the lord generally reserved to his own family. Paroch. Antiq. 236.

MOLLITER MANUS IMPOSUIT. Several justifications in trespass, i. e. actions of assault, are called by this name, from the words gently laid his hands upon him used in the plea; as where the defendant justifies an assault, by shewing that the plaintiff was unlawfully in the house of defendant, making a disturbance, and being requested to cease such disturbance, and depart, he refused, and continued therein, making such disturbance, he, the defendant, gently laid his hands on the plaintiff, and removed him out of the house. So in various other instances, as for separating two persons fighting, in order to preserve the peace; so in the legal exercise of an office, &c. See titles Pleading; Assault.

MOLMAN, A man subject to do service, applied to the servants of a monastery. Prior. Lewes. p. 21. Spelm Gloss.

MOLMUTIAN, or MOLMUTIN LAWS, The laws of Dunvallo Molmutius sixteenth King of the Britons, who began his reign above four hundred years before the birth of our Saviour: these were famous in this land till the time of William the Conqueror. This King was the first who published laws in Britain; and his laws (with those of Queen Mercia,) were translated by Gildas out of the British, into the Latin tongue. Usher's Primord. 126.

MOLNEDA, MULNEDA, A mill-pool or pond. Paroch. Antiq. 135.

MOLTA, The duty or toll paid to the lord by his vassals, to grind corn at his mill. Monastic. ii. 97. See Molitura.

MONARCHY, That form of government where the sovereign power is entrusted in the hands of a single person. See title Government.

MONASTERIES and ABBEYS; See title Abbot.

MONETAGIUM, A certain tribute paid by tenants to their lord every third year, that he should not change the money which he had coined, formerly when it was lawful for great men to coin money current in their territories; but not of silver and gold. It was abrogated by the stat. 1 Hen. 1. c. 2. The word Monetagium is likewise used for a Mintage, and the right of coining or minting money. Jus & artificium cudendi monetas.

MONEY, moneta.] That metal, be it gold or silver, which receives authority by the prince's impress to be current; for as wax is not a seal without a print, so metal is not Money without impression. Co. Litt. 207. Money is said to be the common measure of all commerce, through the world, and consists principally of three parts; the material whereof it is made, being silver or gold; the denomination or intrinsic value, given by the King, by virtue of his prerogative; and the King's stamp thereon. 1 Hale's Hist. P. H. 188.

It belongs to the King only, to put a value, as well as the impression, on Money; which being done, the Money is current for so much as the King hath limited. 2 Inst. 575. Any piece of Money coined is of value as it bears a proportion to other current Money, and that without proclamation; and though there is no act of parliament, or order of State for guineas, as they are taken; yet being coined at the Mint, and having the King's insignia on them, they are lawful Money, and current at the value they were coined and uttered at the Mint. 2 Salk. 446. It has been insisted that guineas were originally coined for 20*s.* according to the twenty shilling pieces of Money, and that legally, no more ought to be demanded for them: also that in legal proceedings, they should be mentioned as pieces of gold called guineas, of the value, &c. 5 Mod. 7. If an action is brought for damages, the value of guineas may be given in evidence to the Jury; but if the action be for so many guineas, the value ought to be set forth in the declaration, to ascertain the debt. Carthew. 255.

Gold and silver coin, &c. is not to be exported without licence, on pain of forfeiture. Stat. 9 Ed. 3. stat. 2. c. 1. Silver Money melted down, is to be forfeited, and double value. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 31. But by old statutes, foreign Money may be melted down; and no Money shall be current but the King's own, &c. See stats. 27 Ed. 3. c. 14: 17 R. 2. c. 1; this Dictionary, title Coin; and 1 Comm. c. 7. p. 276, 7. & n.

MONEY, LENDING IT ABROAD. By a temporary statute, 5 Geo. 2. c. 5, the King by proclamation might for one year, prohibit all his subjects from lending or advancing Money to any foreign Prince or State, without licence under the Great or Privy Seal; and if any person knowingly offended in the premises, he should forfeit treble the value of the Money lent, &c. two-thirds to the King, and the other to the informer; but persons might deal in foreign stocks, or be interested in any bank abroad, established before issuing his Majesty's proclamation.

MONEY INTO COURT. In law proceedings, Money demanded is oftentimes brought into Court, either by a rule of Court, or by pleading a profert in curiam of the Money on a tender. The practice of bringing Money into Court was first introduced in the time of Kelyng, Ch. J. to avoid the hazard and difficulty of pleading a Tender: and it is allowed in cases where an action is brought upon contract for the recovery of a debt, which is either certain, or capable of being ascertained by mere computation, without leaving any other sort of discretion to be exercised by a Jury. 2 Burr. 1120. In these cases, when the dispute is not whether any thing, but how much, is due to the plaintiff, the defendant may have leave to bring into Court any sum of Money he thinks fit; and the Court will make a rule, that unless the plaintiff accept of it, with costs, in discharge of the action, it shall be struck out of the declaration, and paid out of Court to the plaintiff, or his attorney; and the plaintiff, upon the trial, shall not be permitted to give evidence for the sum brought in: which rule should be accompanied with the general issue or other plea, to the residue of the demand. Tidd's Practice K. B. and the authorities there cited.

Thus in Assumpsit or Covenant for the payment of Money, the defendant may bring Money into Court; and in Covenant to find diet and lodging, or pay 10*l.* the Court allowed a defendant to bring in the 10*l.* In debt for rent, the defendant was formerly allowed to bring Money into Court, as is done in the Common Pleas and the Exchequer; but the Court of King's Bench has refused it, and said they never did it in debt. But there is a distinction between those actions of debt wherein the plaintiff cannot recover less than the sum demanded, as on a record, specialty, or statute, giving a sum certain by way of penalty; and those actions wherein the plaintiff may recover less, as in debt for rent, or on a simple contract. In the former the defendant cannot, though he may move to stay the proceedings, on payment of the whole debt and costs; as was the practice in cases of debt on bond, conditioned for payment of a lesser sum than the penalty, previous to stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16, which allows the defendant, pending an action on such bond, to bring the principal, interest, and costs into Court, and declares that such payment shall be a full satisfaction and discharge of the bond. But in the latter, the defendant has been allowed to bring Money into Court, because the plaintiff does not recover according to his demand, but according to the verdict of the Jury. Tidd.—By stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 37, the defendant may bring Money into Court, in debt, covenant, or other action, on a policy of assurance. See 3 Burr. 1773. In an action by an executor or administrator, the plaintiff not being liable to costs, the defendant was not formerly allowed to bring Money into Court; but now it is otherwise, and the effect of the rule will be, not to make the plaintiff pay, but only to lose his subsequent costs. See 2 Salk. 596: 2 Stra. 796.

In trover the defendant cannot bring the goods and costs into Court. 1 Wils. 23. In an action for the mesne profits after a recovery in ejectment, the defendant shall not have leave to pay Money into Court. 2 Wils. 115.

In a plea of tender, with a profert in curiâ, the sum tendered must be paid to the signer of the writs, and if not so paid, the plaintiff may consider the plea as a nullity, and sign judgment. 1 Stra. 638. And as a tender cannot be pleaded, so the defendant cannot bring Money into Court, in an action for general damages upon a contract, or for a tort or trespass. But in action on assumpsit against a carrier, for not delivering goods, the defendant having advertised that he would not be answerable for any goods beyond the value of 20*l.* unless they were entered and paid for accordingly, the Court of King's Bench allowed him to bring the 20*l.* into Court. And where, in an action for general damages, the bringing of Money into Court is irregular, if the plaintiff takes it out, he thereby waves the irregularity, and cannot afterwards have a verdict, unless he recover more than the sum brought in. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

By stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. § 4, (which seems to be the first statute allowing Money to be brought into Court in an action for general damages;) stats. 20 Geo. 3. c. 70. § 33; 24 Geo. 3. st. 2 c. 47. § 35; in actions against Justices of the Peace, or Officers of the Excise or Customs, for any thing done in the execution of their offices, "In case the defendants shall have neglected to tender any, or shall have tendered insufficient, amends, before the action brought, they may, by leave of the Court at any time before issue joined, pay into Court such sum of money as they shall see fit; whereupon such proceedings, orders, and judgments shall be had, made, and given, in and by such Court, as in other actions where the defendant is allowed to pay Money into Court."

Where there are several counts or breaches in the declaration, and as to some of them the defendant may bring Money into Court, but not as to the others; he may obtain a rule for bringing it in specially, upon some of the counts or breaches only. Thus where an action of covenant was brought upon a lease, for non-payment of rent, and repairing, &c. the Court made a rule, that upon payment of what should appear to be due for rent, the proceedings as to that should be stayed; and as to the other breaches, that the plaintiff might proceed as he should think fit. So in covenant upon a charter party, the defendant has been allowed to bring Money into Court upon two of the breaches only, viz. for freight and demurrage. If a defendant thus bring Money into Court upon some of the counts, and the plaintiff take it out, the latter is only entitled to the costs of those counts. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

The motion for leave to bring Money into Court, is a motion of course, and should regularly be made before plea pleaded; but it is frequently made, and in some cases expressly authorised by statute, after plea, on obtaining a Judge's order for that purpose. And if there has been no delay, the Court will give the defendant leave to withdraw the general issue, in order to bring Money into Court, and plead it in payment of costs. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

Bringing Money into Court is an acknowledgment of the right of action to the amount of the sum brought in; which the plaintiff (on producing an office-copy of the rule) is entitled to receive at all events, whether he proceed in the action or not; and even though he be nonsuited, or have a verdict against him, and bring an acknowledgment on record, the party can never recover it back again, though it afterwards appear that he paid it wrongfully. Tidd's Pract. K. B. But if the defendant brings Money into Court, upon a tender and uncore prist, and the plaintiff takes issue upon the tender, and it is found against him, then the defendant shall have the Money out of Court. 2 Salk. 597. And beyond the amount of the sum brought in, bringing Money into Court is no acknowledgment of the right of action, and therefore if the plaintiff proceed further, it is at his peril. If he proceed to trial, otherwise than for the payment of costs, and do not prove more to be due to him than the sum brought in, the plaintiff, on producing the rule, shall be nonsuited, or have a verdict against him, and pay costs to the defendant; but if more appear to be due to him, he shall have a verdict for the overplus and costs. Where the plaintiff proceeds further without going on to trial, he shall have his costs to the time of bringing Money into Court; and if the plaintiff proceed to trial, and a Juror is withdrawn by consent, the plaintiff is not entitled to costs up to the time of bringing the Money into Court. Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the authorities there cited. And see also on this subject, Impey's Pract. K. B.

MONGER, A little sea vessel which fishermen use. See Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 11. When a word ends with monger, as ironmonger, &c. it signifies merchant, from the Sax. manger, i. e. Mercator.

MONIERS or MONEYERS, Monetarii; Are ministers of the Mint, who make and coin the King's money. Reg. Orig. 262: 1 Ed. 6. 15: See Mint. It appears in ancient authors that the Kings of England had Mints in several counties, and those who had the conduct of them appear to have been called Monetarii, Moniers. In the tract in the Exchequer, written by Oakham, it is said, that whereas sheriffs were usually obliged to pay into the King's Exchequer the King's sterling money, for such debts as they were to answer; those of Cumberland and Northumberland were admitted to pay in any sort of money, so it were silver: and the reason there given, is, because those two shires Monetarios de antiqua institutione non habent; quod abbas & monachi praedicti habeant unum monetarium & unum cuneum apud Rading ad monetam ibidem, tam ad obolos & sterlingos quam ad sterlingos prout moris est fabricand. & faciend. Memorand. Scac de Anno 20 Ed. 3. inter record de Trin. Rot. Of later days, the title of Moniers hath been given to bankers, that is, such as make it their trade to deal in monies upon returns. Cowel.

MONK, Monachus, from the Gr. Μόνος, solus quia soli, i. e. Separati ab aliorum consortio vivant, because the first Monks lived alone in the wilderness.] They were after divided into three ranks; Cenobitarium, i. e. a society living in common in a monastery, &c. under the

the government of a single person; and these were under certain rules, and afterwards called Regulars: Anachoretæ, or Eremitæ, those Monks who lived in the wilderness on bread and water; and Sarabitæ, Monks living under no rule, that wandered in the world.

MONOPOLY, From Μόνος solus & πωλέω vendo.] A licence or privilege allowed by the King, by his grant, commission, or otherwise, to any person or persons, for the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using of any thing; by which other persons are restrained of any freedom or liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful trade. 3 Inst. 181: 4 Comm. 159. It is defined to be where the power of selling any thing is in one man alone; or where one shall ingross and get into his hands such a merchandise, &c. as none may sell or gain by them but himself. 11 Rep. 86.

A Monopoly, it is said, hath three incidents mischievous to the public: 1. The raising of the price. 2. The commodity will not be so good. 3. The impoverishing of poor artificers. 11 Rep. 86. All Monopolies are against the ancient and fundamental laws of the realm: A by-law, which makes a Monopoly, is void; so is a prescription for a sole trade to any one person or persons, exclusive of all others. Moor, 591. Monopolies by the Common Law are void, as being against the freedom of trade, and discouraging labour and industry; and putting it in the power of particular persons to set what prices they please on a commodity. 1 Hawk. P. C. Upon this ground it hath been held, that the King's grant to any corporation of the sole importation of any merchandise, is void. 2 Rol. Abr. 214: 3 Inst. 182. The grant of the sole making, importing, and selling of playing-cards, was adjudged void. 11 Rep. 84: Moor, 671. And the King's grant of the sole making and writing of bills, pleas, and writs in a Court of Law, to any particular person, hath been resolved to be void. 1 Jones, 231: 3 Mod. 75.

The King may grant to particular persons the sole printing of the holy scriptures, and law books. 1 Hawk. P. C. All matters of this nature ought to be tried by the Common Law, and not at the Council-table, or any other Court of that kind; and the making use of or procuring any unlawful Monopoly, is punishable by fine and imprisonment at Common Law. 3 Inst. 181, 182.

These Monopolies had been carried to an enormous height during the reign of Queen Elizabeth; but were in a great measure remedied by stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3, by which all Monopolies, grants, letters patent, and licences, for the sole buying, selling, and making of goods and manufactures, are declared void, except in some particular cases; and persons grieved by putting them in use, shall recover treble damages and double costs, by action on the statute; and delaying such action before judgment, by colour of any order, warrant, &c. or delaying execution after, incurs a Præmunire: but this does not extend to any grant or privilege granted by act of Parliament; nor to any grant or charter to corporations or cities, &c. or to grants to companies or societies of merchants, for enlargement of trade; or to inventors of new manufactures, who have patents for the term of fourteen years; grants or privileges for printing; or making gunpowder, casting ordnance, &c.

As to inventors of new manufactures, &c. it has been adjudged on this statute, that a manufacture must be substantially new, and not barely an additional improvement of any old one, to be within the statute; it must be such as none other used at the granting the letters patent; and an old manufacture in use before, cannot be prohibited in any grant of the sole use of any such new invention. 3 Inst 184. Yet a grant of Monopoly may be to the first inventor, by the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3; notwithstanding the same thing was practised before beyond sea; because the statute mentions new manufactures within the realm, and intended to encourage new devices useful here; and it is the same thing whether acquired by experience or travel abroad, or by study at home. 2 Salk. 447. It is said, a new invention to do as much work in a day by an engine, as formerly used to employ many hands, is contrary to the statute; by reason it is inconvenient, in turning so many men to idleness. 3 Inst. 184. But experience seems in favour of such inventions, as they tend to lessen the price of manufactures, and enable us to undersell foreigners, both at home and abroad

Combinations among victuallers or artificers to raise the price of provisions or any commodities, or the rate of labour, are commonly called Monopolies; and are in many cases severely punished by particular statutes; and in general by stat. 2 & 3 E 6. c. 15, with the forfeiture of 10*l.* or twenty days' imprisonment, with an allowance of only bread and water, for the first offence; 20*l.* or the pillory, for the second; and 40*l.* for the third, or else the pillory, loss of one ear, and perpetual infamy. See 4 Comm. 159.

MONSTER, One who hath not human shape, and yet is born in lawful wedlock: and such may not purchase or retain lands; but a person may be an heir to his ancestor's lands, though he be deformed in some part of his body. Co. Lit. 7. See title Descent.

Shewing a Monster for money is a misdemeanour.—It was a child that had four legs and four arms, and two heads, and but one belly, where the two bodies were conjoined; the child died and was embalmed to be kept for shew, but was ordered by the Lord Chancellor to be buried in a week. 2 Ch. Ca. 110.

MONSTRANS DE DROIT, A shewing a right.] A writ out of Chancery to be restored to lands and tenements that are a man's, in right, though by some office found to be in the possession of one lately dead; by which office the King would be entitled to the said lands, &c. Staunf. P. C. c. 21: 4 Rep 54.

The Common-law methods of obtaining possession or restitution from the Crown, of either real or personal property, are, 1. By Petition de droit, or petition of right, which is said to owe its original to K. Edward I. 2. By Monstrans de droit, manifestation or plea of right; both of which may be preferred or prosecuted either in the Chancery or Exchequer. Skin. 609.

The former is of use where the King is in full possession of any hereditaments or chattels, and the petitioner suggests such a right as controverts the title of the Crown, grounded on facts disclosed in the petition itself: in which case he must be careful to state truly the whole title of the Crown, otherwise the petition shall abate.

abate. Finch L. 256. And then, upon this anſwer being indorſed or underwritten by the King, "ſoit droit fait al partie—let right be done to the party;" a commiſſion ſhall iſſue to enquire the truth of this ſuggeſtion: after the return of which the King's Attorney is at liberty to plead in bar, and the merits ſhall be determined upon iſſue or demurrer, as in ſuits between Subject and Subject. Skin. 608: Raſt. Entr. 461. Thus if a diſſeiſor of lands which are holden of the Crown die ſeiſed without any heir, whereby the King is prima facie entitled to the lands, and the poſſeſſion is caſt on him either by inqueſt of office, or by act of law without any office found; now the diſſeiſee ſhall have remedy by petition of right, ſuggeſting the title of the Crown, and his own ſuperior right before the diſſeiſin made. Bro. Ab. Petition, 20: 4 Rep. 58.

But where the right of the party, as well as the right of the Crown, appears upon record, there the party ſhall have Monſtrans de droit, which is putting in a claim of right, grounded on facts already acknowledged and eſtabliſhed; and praying the judgment of the Court, whether upon thoſe facts, the King or the Subject hath the right. As if, in the caſe before ſuppoſed, the whole ſpecial matter is found by an inqueſt of office, (as well the diſſeiſin as the dying without any heir,) the party grieved ſhall have Monſtrans de droit at the Common Law. 4 Rep. 55. But as this ſeldom happens, and the remedy by Petition was extremely tedious and expenſive, that by Monſtrans was much enlarged, and rendered almoſt univerſal by ſeveral ſtatutes; particularly ſtat. 36 E. 3. c. 13: 2 & 3 E 6. c 8; which alſo allow inquiſitions of office to be traverſed or denied, wherever the right of a Subject is concerned, except in a very few caſes. Skin. 608. Theſe proceedings are had in the Petty-bag Office, in the Court of Chancery; and if upon either of them the right be determined againſt the Crown, the judgment is quod manus Domini Regis amoveantur; & poſſeſſio reſtituatur petenti: ſalvo jure Domini Regis: which laſt clauſe is always added to judgments againſt the King, to whom no laches is ever imputed, and whoſe right, till it was otherwiſe provided by ſtatute, was never defeated by any limitation or length of time. See ſtats. 21 Jac. 1. c. 2: 9 Geo. 3. c. 16: and this Dictionary, title King, V. 2.

By the above judgment the Crown is inſtantly out of poſſeſſion, ſo that there needs not the indecorous interpoſition of his own officers, to transfer the ſeiſin from the King to the party aggrieved. Finch L. 459: See 3 Comm. c. 17. p. 256, 7.

Leſſee of an outlaw cannot maintain treſpaſs, but muſt be relieved by Monſtrans de droit. Ld. Raym. 307.

MONSTRANS DE FAITS ou RECORDS. Shewing of deeds or records is thus; upon an action of debt brought upon an obligation, after the plaintiff hath declared, he ought to ſhew his obligation, and ſo it is of Records. And the difference between Monſtrans de faits and oyer de faits, is this; he that pleads the deed or record, or declares upon it, ought to ſhew the ſame; and the other againſt whom ſuch deed or record is pleaded, may demand oyer of the ſame. Cowel.

Where a man pleads a deed, which is the ſubſtance of his plea or declaration, if he doth not plead it with a profert in curiâ, his plea or declaration is bad upon a ſpecial demurrer, ſhewing it for cauſe; and if he doth plead it with a profert in curiâ, if the other party demands a ſight of it, he cannot proceed till he hath ſhewn it; and when the defendant hath had a ſight of it, if he demands a copy of the ſame, the plaintiff may not proceed until a copy is delivered unto him. See Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16: 2 Lil. Abr. 201, 202: and this Dictionary, titles Pleading; Profert in Curiâ.

MONSTRAVERUNT, Is a writ which lies for tenants in ancient demeſne, who hold land by free charter, when they are diſtrained to do unto their lords other ſervices and cuſtoms than they or their anceſtors uſed to do. Alſo it lieth where ſuch tenants are diſtrained for the payment of toll, &c. contrary to their liberty, which they do or ſhould enjoy. F. N. B. 14: 4 Inſt. 269. This writ is directed to the ſheriff, to charge the lord that he do not diſtrain them for ſuch unuſual ſervices, &c. And if the lord nevertheleſs diſtrains his tenants, for other ſervices than of right they ought to do, the ſheriff may command the neighbours, who dwell next the manor, or take the power of the county, to reſiſt the lord, &c. And the tenants in ſuch caſe, may likewiſe ſue an attachment againſt their lord, returnable in C. B. or B. R. to anſwer the contempt and recover damages. New Nat. Br. 32.

But the lord ſhall not be put to anſwer the writ of attachment ſued againſt him upon the Monſtraverunt, before the Court is certified by the Treaſurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, from the book of Domeſday, whether the manor be ancient demeſne; ſo that it is requiſite that the plaintiff in the Monſtraverunt, do ſue forth a ſpecial writ for the certifying of the ſame. Ibid. 35. The writ of Monſtraverunt may be ſued for many of the tenants, without naming any of them by their proper names, but generally Monſtraverunt nobis homines de, &c. But in the attachment againſt the lord the tenants ought to be named; though one tenant may ſue it in his own name, and the name of the other tenants by general words, Et homines, &c. 2 H. 6. 26. See titles Ne injuſte Vexes; Ancient Demeſne.

MONTH or MONETH, Sax. Monath, Menſis, à menſione lunæ curſus.] Signifies the time the ſun goes through one ſign of the zodiac, and the moon through all twelve; properly the time from the new moon to its change, or the courſe or period of the moon, whence it is called Month from the moon. Lit. Dict. A Month is a ſpace of time containing by the week twenty-eight days; by the Calendar ſometimes thirty, and ſometimes thirty-one days: Julius Cæſar divided the year into twelve Months, each Month into four weeks, and each week into ſeven days.

The ſpace of a year is a determinate period, conſiſting commonly of 365 days; for though in Biſſextile or Leap Years, it conſiſts properly of 366; yet by ſtat. 21 H. 3, de anno Biſſextili, the increaſing day in the Leap-year, together with the preceding day, ſhall be accounted for one day only. That of a Month is more ambiguous; there being in common uſe, two ways of calculating Months, either as lunar, conſiſting of twenty-eight days, the ſuppoſed revolution of the moon, thirteen of which make a year; or as calendar months of unequal lengths, according to the Julian division in our common almanacks, commencing at the calends of each month, whereof in a year there are only 12. A Month in law is a lunar month, or 28 days; unless otherwise expressed; not only because it is always one uniform period, but because it falls naturally into a quarterly division by weeks. Therefore a lease for 12 Months is only for 48 weeks: but if it be for a twelvemonth in the singular number, it is good for the whole year. 6 Rep. 61. For herein the law recedes from its usual calculation, because the ambiguity between the two methods of computation ceases; it being generally understood, that by the space of time called thus, in the singular number, a twelvemonth, is meant a whole year, consisting of one solar revolution. 2 Comm. 141.

The Month by the Common Law is but twenty-eight days: and in case of a condition for rent, the Month shall be computed at twenty-eight days; so in the case of inrolment of debts, and generally in all cases where a statute speaks of Months: but where the statute accounteth by the year, half-year, or quarter of a year, then it is to be reckoned according to the Calendar. 1 Inst. 135: 6 Rep. 62: Cro. Jac. 167.

A twelvemonth in the singular number includes the whole year, according to the Calendar: but twelve Months, six Months, &c. in the plural number, shall be accounted after twenty-eight days to every Month; except in case of presentations to benefices, to avoid lapse, &c. which shall be in six calendar Months. 6 Rep. 61: Cro. Jac. 141. But if an agreement is to pay fifty shillings for the interest of one hundred pounds at the end of six Months; the computation must be by calendar Months; because, if it was by lunar Months, the interest would exceed the rate allowed by the statute. So in bills of exchange and promissory notes, a Month is always a calendar Month; as if a bill or note is dated on the 10th of January and made payable one Month after date, it is due (the 3 days of grace being added) on the 13th of February.

It is somewhat remarkable that the difference between six calendar Months and half a year, does not seem to have been considered by legal writers. Coke says, half a year consists of 182 days. 1 Inst. 135. But six calendar Months will be 2 or 3 days less or more than such a half year, accordingly as February is reckoned or not one of the six. Coke in his Report of Catesby's case, clearly considers the tempus semestre to be six calendar Months. 6 Co. 61: yet Croke in his report of that case states it, as confidently, to consist of 182 days; Cro. Jac. 141, 166; and in neither report is the difference taken notice of. 2 Comm. 141, in n.

From the cases in 3 Wils. 21: 1 Term Rep. 159, it seems as if notice to a tenant from year to year to quit the premises, must be half a year, and not six calendar Months; though the computation by the latter would be more simple and convenient, and was understood to be the proper notice by the Court of C. P. See 2 Black. Rep. 1224.

MONUMENT. An heir may bring an action against one that injures the Monument, &c. of his ancestor; and the coffin and shroud of a deceased person belong to the executors or administrators; but the dead body belongeth to none. 3 Inst. 202, 203. See title Heir III. 3.

MOORS, In the Isle of Man, who summon the Courts for the several sheadings, are the lords bailiffs, called by that name; and every Moor has the like office with our bailiff of the hundred. King's Descrip. Isle of Man.

MOOT, from the Sax. Motian, placitare, to treat or handle.] A term in the Inns of Court, signifying the exercise of arguing of cases; which young barristers and students used to perform at certain times, the better to enable them for the practice and defence of clients causes. The place where Moot cases were argued, was anciently called the Moot-hall; and in the Inns of Court there is a bailiff of the Moot yearly chosen by the benchers, to appoint the Mootmen for the Inns of Chancery; and keep accounts of the performances of exercises, both there and in the house. *Orig. MORA MUSSA, A watery or boggy moor; a morass; and such in Lancashire they call mosses; morosta is used in the same sense. Mon. Angl. tom 2. p. 306.

MORATUR IN LEGE, Is the same with demoratur, and signifies as much as he demurs; because the party goes not forward in pleading, but rests or abides upon the judgment of the Court, in a certain point, as to the sufficiency in law of the declaration or plea of the adverse party; who deliberate and take time to argue and advise thereupon, and then determine it. *Co. MORGANGINA or MORGANGIVA, from Sax. morgen, the morning, and gifan, to give.] The gift on the wedding day. Dower, or rather dowry—Si sponsa virum suum supervixerit, dotem et maritationem suam, cartarum instrumentis, vel testium exhibitionibus et traditam, perpetualiter babeat et morganginam suam. LL. Hen. 1. c. 11, 70. In some books it is writ morgangiba, morgingab. &c. In Leg. Canuti apud Brompton, it is writ morgagifa, c. 99. It signifies literally donum matutinale; and it is what we now call dowry money, or that gift the husband presents to his wife on the wedding-day. MORTGAGE, Mortgagium, vel mortuum vadium; from mort, mortuus and gage, pignus.] A pawn of land or tenement, or any thing immoveable, laid or bound for money borrowed, to be the creditor's for ever, if the money be not paid at the day agreed upon; and the creditor holding land and tenement upon this bargain, is called Tenant in Mortgage. Of this we read in the Grand Cuſtumary of Normandy, c. 313, which ſee. Glanvil likewiſe, lib. 10. c. 6, defineth it thus: Mortuum vadium dicitur illud, cujus fructus vel redditus interim percepti in nullo ſe acquietant. So that it is called a dead gage, becauſe whatſoever profit it yieldeth, yet it redeemeth not itſelf by yielding ſuch profit, except the whole ſum borrowed be paid at the day. See Skene de verb. ſignif. verbo Mortgage. He who pledgeth this pawn or gage, is called the Mortgagor, and he who taketh it the Mortgagee. Weſt. Symbol. p. 2. title Fines, § 145. This if it contain exceſſive uſury, is forbidden by ſtat. 37 H. 8. c. 9. But it is called Mortgage, becauſe, if the money is not paid at the day, the land moritur to the debtor, and is forfeited to the creditor. Cowell.

I. Of the Origin, Nature, and ſeveral Kinds of Mortgages.
II. What ſhall be deemed a Mortgage, or an Eſtate redeemable; and of the diſtinct Intereſts of Mortgagor and Mortgagee.
III. Of the Equity of Redemption and Foreclosure; and of the Manner of redeeming and foreclosing.

I. The notion of mortgaging and redemption ſeems to be of Jewiſh extraction, and from them derived to the Greeks and Romans; the plan of the Moſaic law conſtitutes a juſt and equal Agrarian, that the lands may continue in the ſame tribes and families, and the people might not be diverted by any exotic arts and inventions from the exerciſe of agriculture, in which innocent employment they were to be continually educated; therefore whoever were compelled by want to ſell, could transfer no eſtate in the lands, farther than to the next general jubilee, which returned once in fifty years; wherefore they computed till the jubilee, that, according to the diſtance from thence, ſuch was the intereſt that could be transferred to the buyer; but the vendor had power at any time to redeem, paying the value of the lands to the jubilee; but though he did not redeem it at the year of jubilee, yet the lands came back again free to the vendor and his heirs. Cumæus, 11, 12.

But our notion of mortgaging and redemption ſeems to have come more immediately from the civil law; therefore it will be neceſſary herein to conſider the diſtinctions in that law between pledges and things hypothecated. Juſtin. 592.

The pignus or pledge was, when any thing was obliged for money lent, and the poſſeſſion paſſed to the creditor.

The hypotheca was, when the thing was obliged for money lent, and the poſſeſſion remained with the debtor. Now in caſe of goods pignorated, the creditor was obliged to the ſame diligence in keeping them, as he uſed about his own; ſo that if the goods were loſt by the negligence of the creditor, an action lay as for a depoſite; for the property being transferred to the creditor for a particular purpoſe, he was to keep them as his own. See this Dictionary, title Bailment.

If the debtor did not redeem the thing pledged, the creditor was to foreclose the redemption of the debtor; and if the money was not paid, the creditor had his actio pignoritia, or hypothecaria; which, when he had purſued, and obtained ſentence thereon, he might ſell as his own property; but there was this difference between the actio pignoritia and hypothecaria; that the actio pignoritia was only againſt the perſon of the debtor to foreclose him, becauſe the pignus was already in the poſſeſſion of the creditor; but the actio hypothecaria was tam in rem, quam in perſonam, and was given ad pignus proſequendum, contra quemcunque poſſeſſorem; becauſe herein the creditor had not the poſſeſſion of the pledge, but it remained to the debtor; and until ſentence was obtained in theſe actions, the creditor could not obtain the property of the pledge; and if the money was paid before ſentence, the pledge was ſubject to redemption: and where the ſame thing was pledged to ſeveral, thoſe were ſaid to be potiores in pignore, to whom the things were firſt hypothecated. Digeſt. lib. 20. tit. 6: Corvin. 269, 270, 271.

If the money was tendered or paid to the creditor, the contract of pignoration was diſſolved, and the debtor might have the pledge back, as a thing lent; which ſeems to have introduced the notion among us of the debtor's right to redemption; and with them the uſucaption, or the right of preſcription, did not extinguiſh the pledge, unleſs a ſtranger had held it for thirty years, or the debtor had held it for forty years. Digeſt. lib. 20. tit. 6.

In the feudal law the rule was, Feudalia, invito domino, aut agnatis, non recte ſubjiciuntur hypothecæ, quamvis fructus poſſe eſſe receptum eſt; and the reaſon of this rule was, becauſe the feud was filled with a tenant from the lord's original bounty, on whom he depended for his perſonal ſervice in war and peace; therefore the feudatary could not obtrude a tenant on him without his leave, who might be leſs capable of thoſe ſervices; for which reaſon, as the tenant could not originally aliene without licence, ſo he could not mortgage. Corvin. 268. See Fonblanque's Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 1. § 1.

But when a licence of alienation was given about the time of Hen. III, and it became a maxim in law, that the purity of a fee-ſimple imported a power of diſpoſing of it as the owner pleaſed; there were two ways of mortgaging lands introduced, which Littleton diſtinguiſhes by the names of vadium vivum, living pledge, and vadium mortuum, dead pledge. 9 H. 3. 32: 18 Ed 1.

Blackſtone claſſes theſe eſtates held in pledge among eſtates defeaſible on condition ſubſequent, and divides them as above into vivum and mortuum vadium. See 2 Comm. c. 10; III. p. 157.

Vivum vadium, or living pledge, is, when a man borrows a ſum, ſuppoſe 200*l*, of another, and grants him an eſtate, as of 20*l. per ann.* to hold, till the rents and profits ſhall repay the ſum ſo borrowed. This is an eſtate conditioned to be void as ſoon as ſuch ſum is raiſed.

And in this case the land or pledge is said to be living; it subsists and survives the debt, and immediately on the discharge of that, results back to the borrower. This seems to be the ancient way of pledging lands; for they held, that lands could not be hypothecated; therefore they used to subject the usufructus, which continued originally during the life of the feudatary; but when there was a free liberty given of alienation, then the feudatary could pledge the usufructus of the land at pleasure; but because, by this way of pledging, the lender received his money by degrees, and in small parcels, which was very troublesome; and those that lend money to usury, are generally willing to receive the whole in a gross sum; therefore this way of pledging is now out of use. Co. Litt. 205: See Madd. Formal. 136.

But mortuum vadium, a dead pledge, or Mortgage, (which is much more common than the other,) is where a man borrows of another a specific sum, e. g. 200*l.* and grants him an estate in fee, on condition, that if he, the mortgagor, should repay the mortgagee the said sum of 200*l.* on a certain day mentioned in the deed, that then the mortgagor may re-enter on the estate so granted in pledge; or, as is now the more usual way, that then the mortgagee shall re-convey the estate to the mortgagor. 2 Comm. 158.

The vadium mortuum is so called by Littleton, because it is doubtful, whether the feoffor will pay the money at the day limited or not; and if he do not pay, then the land, which is but in pledge upon condition, for the payment of the money, is, in strictness of law, taken from him for ever, and so dead to him; and the mortgagee's estate in the lands is then no longer conditional, but absolute; and if he do pay it, then the pledge is dead to the tenant of the land. Litt. § 332: Co. Litt. 205.

So long as the estate of the mortgagee continues conditional, that is, between the time of the lending the money and the time allotted for payment, the mortgagee is called Tenant in Mortgage. Litt. § 332. But as it was formerly a doubt, whether by taking such estate in fee it did not become liable to the wife's dower, and other incumbrances of the Mortgagee; though that doubt has been long ago over-ruled by our Courts of Equity; (see post III;) it therefore became usual to grant only a long term of years by way of Mortgage; with condition to be void on repayment of the Mortgage-money; which course has been since pretty generally continued; principally because on the death of the mortgagee such term becomes vested in his personal representatives, who alone are entitled in equity to receive the money lent, of whatever nature the Mortgage may happen to be. 2 Comm. 158.

Of these Mortgages therefore we see there are two sorts; 1st, Of the freehold and inheritance; and 2dly, Of terms for years. Maddox, 318, 319.

1st, Of the freehold and inheritance; and here the ancient way was to make a charter of feoffment, on condition that if the feoffor or his heirs paid the sum to the feoffee or his heirs, he should re-enter and re-possess; and sometimes the condition was contained in the charter of feoffment, and sometimes it was defeasanced by another charter, as may be seen in the old forms. Maddox, 318, 319.

For as a man might annex a condition to his feoffment, for cujus est dare, ejus est disponere, so he might annex a condition by another deed, bearing date, and executed at the same time; for, being executed at the same time, it is really but one and the same disposition, quæ incontinenti fiunt inesse videntur; but a defeasance or condition annexed after the feoffment executed comes too late; because the livery coram paribus attesting the infeudation, in which there is no condition, the tenant must hold the land according to the tenure of the investiture: but rents, annuities or warranties that are things executory, may be defeated by defeasances made at the time of their creation, or any time after; because there is not any necessity of the notoriety of livery to make an investiture; therefore being created by deed only, they may be defeated or destroyed by deed alone. Co. Litt. 226, 227.

These sorts of conveyances were subject to some inconveniences; as if the money were not paid at the day, so that the estate became absolute, the estate was thenceforth subject to the dower of the feoffee, and all other his real charges and incumbrances; for though if the feoffor performed the condition, then he might re-enter, and re-possess himself in his former estate, and consequently was in above all the charges and incumbrances of the feoffee; yet if he did not literally perform the condition by payment of the money at the day, then the estate was legally subject to the charges and incumbrances of the feoffee, though the money was afterwards paid to, and the estate re-conveyed by the feoffee. Co. Lit. 221, 222.

But the Courts of Equity, as they grew in power, have set this matter right; and have maintained the right of redemption, not only against tenant in dower, and the persons who come in under the feoffee, but even against the tenant by the curtesy, and lord by escheat, that are in the post; because the payment of the money doth, in the consideration of equity, put the feoffor in statu quo; since the lands were originally only a pledge for the money lent. Hard. 465. See post III.

2d, As to Mortgages by way of creating terms, this was formerly by way of demise and re-demise. As for example; A. borrowed money of B. thereupon A. would demise the lands to B. for a term of 500, &c. years absolutely, with common convenants against incumbrances, and for farther assurance; and then B. would, the day after, re-demise to A. for 499 years, with condition to be void on non-payment of the money at the day to come; this manner of mortgaging came in after the 21 H. 8. for falsifying recoveries, when there was a fixed interest settled in terms for years; and was esteemed best for the mortgagor, to avoid all manner of pretension from the incumbrances and dower of the feoffee in Mortgage; and was reputed best for the mortgagee, to avoid the wardship and feudal duties of the tenure; and was only inconvenient in this, that if the second deed were lost, there appeared to be an absolute term in the mortgagee. 3 New Abr. 633.

And this is now the common method, viz. by a demise of the land for a term, under a condition to be void on the payment of the Mortgage money and interest; and a covenant is inserted at the end of such deeds, that, till default shall be made in the payment of the money, that the mortgagor shall receive the rents, issues and profits without account. 3 New Abr. 633.

This has been ruled to create a tenancy at will to the mortgagor; but if the mortgagor dies, the tenancy at will is determined till there is a receipt of interest from the the heir, which seems to make him also tenant at will to the mortgagee. Raym. 147. In a late case however it was held, that the mortgagor has no interest in the premises but by the mere indulgence of the mortgagee: he has not even the estate of a tenant at will, for he may be prevented from carrying away the emblements or the crops which he himself hath sown. Moss v. Gallimore, Dougl. 266, (279): Keech v. Hall, Id. 21. See post II.

3d, But now the last and best improvement of Mortgages seems to be, that in the Mortgage deed of a term for years, or in the assignment thereof, the mortgagor should covenant for himself and his heirs, that if default be made in the payment of the money at the day, that then he and his heirs will, at the costs of the mortgagee and his heirs, convey the freehold and inheritance of the mortgaged lands to the mortgagee and his heirs, or to such person or persons (to prevent merger of the term) as he or they shall direct and appoint; for the reversion, after a term of years, being of little worth, and yet the mortgagee for want thereof continuing but a termor, and subject to forfeiture, &c. and not capable of the privileges of a freeholder, therefore where the mortgagor cannot redeem the land, it is but reasonable the mortgagee should have the whole interest and inheritance of it, to dispose of as absolute owner. 3 New Abr. 633.

II. Whatever clauses or covenants there are in a conveyance, though they seem to import an absolute disposition or conditional purchase, yet if, upon the whole, it appears to have been the intention of the parties, that such conveyance should only be a Mortgage, or pass an estate redeemable, a Court of Equity will always construe it so. 1 Vern. 183, 268, 394. And the mortgagor shall be allowed to redeem, notwithstanding any condition that it should, in any future event, operate as a purchase. 2 Vern. 84: 1 Vern. 488. 476: 1 Ch. Ca. 1: Finch. Rep. 376. But see 1 P. Wms. 268: 2 Atk. 494: Tasburgh v. Ecclin, Bro. P. C.: and Powell on Mortgages, 31. A Mortgage will not however be easily presumed, against an absolute conveyance, especially if the possession has gone along with the conveyance. Forrest. 61. But parol evidence is admissible to show or explain the real intention and purpose of the parties, though the conveyance be absolute. See Pre. Ch. 526: 2 Atk. 98: 3 Atk. 388.

Where the condition of a Mortgage is, that the mortgagor should redeem during his life, or that the mortgager, and the heirs of his body, should redeem, yet equity will admit the general heir of such mortgagor to a redemption; because this can be no purchase, since there is a clause of redemption; and when the land was originally only a pledge for money, if the principal and interest be offered, the land is free; and it would be very hard, that it should be in the power of the scrivener, or griping usurer, by such impertinent restrictions, to elude the justice of the Court. 1 Vern. 33, 190: 2 Chan. Ca. 147.

But if a man borrows money of his brother, and agrees to make him a Mortgage, and that, if he has no issue male, his brother should have the land; such an agreement, made out by proof, will be decreed in equity. 1 Vern. 193.

A. in consideration of 1000*l.* made an absolute conveyance to B. of the reversion of certain lands after two lives, which, at that time, were worth little more; and by another deed, of the same date, the lands were made redeemable any time during the life of the grantor only, on payment of 1000*l.* and interest; A. died, not having paid the money; and it was held by Lord K. Nottingham, that his heir might redeem, notwithstanding this restrictive clause, and that it was a rule, Once a Mortgage, and always a Mortgage; and that B. might have compelled A. to redeem in his life-time, or have foreclosed him; but, on a re-hearing, Lord North reversed the decree on the circumstances of this case; for it appeared by proof, that A. had a kindness for B. and that he married his kinswoman, which made it in the nature of a marriage-settlement: he likewise held, that B. could not have compelled A. to redeem during his life, which made it more strong. 1 Vern. 7, 192, 214, 232: 2 Vent. 364. S.C. where it is said, that Lord North's decree was affirmed in the House of Lords. See also Hard. 511.

If A. mortgage lands to B. worth 15*l. per ann.* for securing 200*l.* and at the same time B. enters into a bond, conditioned, that if the 200*l.* and interest is not paid within a year, then he to pay A. his executors or administrators, the further sum of 78*l.* in full for the purchase of the premises, &c. and A. dies within the year, and the money is paid the next day after, the Mortgage is forfeited to his administrator; yet A.'s heir may redeem paying the 200*l.* and likewise the 78*l.* that was paid to the administrator. 1 Vern. 488.

So where A. for 550*l.* made an absolute assignment of a church lease for three lives to B, and B. by writing under his hand agreed, that if A. paid 600*l.* at the end of the year, B. would convey; B. died, leaving C. his son and heir; two of the lives died, and the lease was twice renewed by C. and his father; and though it was near twenty years since the conveyance was made, yet the Master of the Rolls decreed a redemption on payment of 550*l.* and the two fines. 2 Vern. 84.

A. lends money to B. to carry on certain buildings, and takes a Mortgage from him to secure 1600*l.* with interest; and by another deed, executed at the same time, takes a covenant from B. that he should convey to him, if he thought fit, ground-rents to the value of 1600*l.* at the rate of 20 years' purchase; and, on a bill brought to redeem, the Master of the Rolls decreed a redemption on payment of principal, interest, and costs, without regard to that agreement, but set aside the same as unconscionable; for a man shall not have interest for his money, and a collateral advantage besides for the loan of it, or clog the redemption with any by-agreement. 2 Vern. 520.

But though these and such like restrictions are relieved against, to make them answer the primary intention of the parties; yet if A. on a Mortgage lends money at 5*l. per cent.* but agrees in the deed, that if the money were paid within three months after it became due, that he would accept of 4*l. per cent.* and the mortgagor neglects to pay the interest within the time, equity will not relieve him, but he must pay 5*l. per cent.* for though the Court relieves against unreasonable penalties, yet this is not so, for the mortgagee might have refused to lend his money under 5*l. per cent.* Preced. Chanc. 160: 1 P. Wms. 653. See post III. ad finem.

So if the mortgagee devises that the mortgagor should be remited part of his Mortgage money, provided he pays the principal and interest within three days after his decease; if the condition be not performed, the remittance is lost; because, being a voluntary bounty, and not ex debito justitiæ, the party must take it as it is limited, for cujus est dare, ejus est disponere; and the Court cannot relieve in this case, after the day. 1 Chan. Ca. 52.

But where in a Mortgage there was a proviso, that if the interest was behind six months, that then the interest should be accounted principal, and carry interest; this by Lord Cowper was decreed to be a vain clause, and of no use; and he said, that no precedent had ever carried the advance of interest so far, and that an agreement made at the time of the Mortgage, will not be sufficient to make future interest principal; but, to make interest principal, it is requisite that interest be first grown due, and then an agreement concerning it may make it principal. 2 Salk. 499.

The mortgagor, before forfeiture, and whilst it remains uncertain, whether he will perform the condition at the time limited or not, hath the legal estate in him; also after forfeiture he hath an equity of redemption; so that he is still considered as owner and proprietor of the estate, until the equity of redemption be foreclosed; therefore may make leases or any settlement thereof, which will bind his equity of redemption. (But they will not bind the mortgagee, unless he is a party to the lease, &c.) See ante I.

It is said, that a tenant in tail of an equity of redemption may devise it for payment of debts. 1 Vern. 41. Turner v. Gwim.

If a man mortgages his land, and (as is usual) still continues in possession, and levies a fine, and five years pass, yet the mortgagee is not barred; for though the mortgagee be in reality out of possession, yet when that is done by consent of both parties, and the nature of the contract requires it should be so; while the interest is paid, it is against the original design of the contract, that any act of the mortgagor (except the payment of the money) should deprive the mortgagee of his security; and is no less than fraud, which the law will not countenance. 1 Sid. 460: 1 Vent. 82: Carth. 101, 414: 2 Keb. 522.

As the mortgagor, being considered only as tenant at will (or rather like a tenant at will) to the mortgagee, cannot, by his act, defeat the interest of the mortgagee, otherwise than by payment of the Mortgage-money; so neither can the mortgagee defeat the mortgagor of his equity of redemption; therefore if a mortgagee in fee suffers a recovery, this, even at law, shall not bind the mortgagor's right of entry, upon performance of the condition; but if the mortgagor had been a party to the recovery, then his right had been bound, not only on account of the recompence in value, but because he is estopped by the recovery to claim the land against the recoveree or his heirs, when he was called in, before the judgment given, to defeat his title, and could not do it. Palm. 135: Cro. Jac. 593.

So if a mortgagee be disseised, and the disseisor levies a fine, and five years pass after the proclamations, though the mortgagee is hereby barred, yet if the mortgagor pays or tenders his money, he has five years to prosecute his right, by the second saving in the statute 4 Hen. 7. c. 24, because his title did not accrue till payment of the money. Plow. 373. a. See title Fines.

As to the nature of the estates of the mortgagor and mortgagee; it seems to be at length settled, that as the mortgagee is considered as holding the estate, merely in the nature of a pledge or security for payment of his money, a Mortgage, though in fee, (the legal estate in which descends to the heir at law,) is considered, in equity, only as personal estate. Fonbl. Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 1. § 3 & 13, in n.

Hence as the mortgagor, till the equity of redemption be foreclosed, is considered as owner of the land, it was ruled, where a bill for redemption was brought against a mortgagee in possession, and a decree accordingly, that the mortgagee, before the account taken, having presented to a church that became void, should revoke his presentation, and present such a person as the mortgagor or his vendee (he having contracted to sell) should appoint. Preced Chanc. 71: 2 Vern. 401. So even though nothing but the advowson is mortgaged, and the deed contain a covenant that on any avoidance the mortgagee should present. 3 Atk. 559. For, in such case, though the presentation is not deemed the subject of value, and therefore cannot be brought into the account, it might be a benefit beyond the securing of the principal debt and lawful interest thereon; which decision over-rules that in 2 P. Wms. 403. The mortgagee may however grant leases of the premises, and avoid such leases as have, since his Mortgage, been granted without his consent by the mortgagor. Treat Eq. lib. 3. c. 1 § 3.

As to the estate of the mortgagor, though formerly doubted whether he had more than a right of redemption, it is now established that he hath an actual estate in equity, which may be devised, granted, and entailed, and of which there is a possessio fratris, and a tenancy by the curtesy. 1 Atk. 603.

By stat. 7 W. 3. c. 25, it is enacted, " That no person or persons shall be allowed to have any vote in election of members to serve in parliament, for or by reason of any trust-estate or Mortgage, unless such trustee or mortgagee be in actual possession, or receipt of the rents and profits of the same; but that the mortgagor, or cestui que trust in possession, shall and may vote for the same, notwithstanding such Mortgage or trust.

And by stat. 9 Ann. c. 5, which requires, that knights of the shire should have 600*l.* per ann. and every other member 300*l.* per ann. it is enacted, " That no person shall be qualified to sit in the House of Commons, within the meaning of the act, by virtue of any Mortgage, whereof the equity of redemption is in any other person; unless the mortgagee shall have been in possession of the mortgaged premises for seven years before the time of election."

III. As soon as the estate is created the mortgagee may immediately enter on the lands: but is liable to be dispossessed, upon performance of the condition by payment of the Mortgage-money at the day limited. And therefore the usual way is to agree that the mortgagor shall hold the land till the day assigned for payment; when, in case of failure whereby the estate becomes absolute, the mortgagee may enter upon it, and take possession without any possibility at law of being afterwards evicted by the mortgagor, to whom the land is now for ever dead. But here the Courts of Equity interpose, and though a Mortgage be thus forfeited, and the the estate absolutely vested in the mortgagee, at the Common Law, yet they will consider the real value of the tenements, compared with the sum borrowed; and if the estate be of greater value than the sum lent thereon, they will allow the mortgagor, at any reasonable time to recall or redeem his estate, paying to the mortgagee his principal, interest, and expences. And by stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 20, after payment or tender by the mortgagor of principal, interests, and costs, the mortgagee can maintain no ejectment, but may be compelled to re-assign his securities. See the statute at length, post, at the end of this division.

This reasonable advantage, allowed to mortgagors, is called The Equity of Redemption; and this enables a mortgagor to call on the mortgagee, who has possession of his estate, to deliver it back, and account for the rents and profits received, on payment of his whole debt and interest; thereby turning the mortuum into a kind of vivum vadium. But on the other hand, the mortgagee may either compel the sale of the estate in order to get the whole of his money immediately; or else call upon the mortgagor to redeem his estate presently, or in default thereof to be for ever foreclosed from redeeming the same; that is, to lose his equity of redemption without possibility of recall. It is not, however, usual for mortgagees to take possession of the mortgaged estate, unless where the security is precarious or small, or where the mortgagor neglects even the payment of interest; when the mortgagee was frequently obliged to bring an ejectment and take the lands into his own hands, in the nature of a pledge, or the pignus of the Roman law already alluded to; ante I. But it has now been determined that the mortgagee is not obliged to bring an ejectment to recover the rents and profits of the estate; for where there is a tenant in possession by a lease prior to the Mortgage, the mortgagee may at any time give him notice to pay the rent to him, and he may distrain for all the rent which is due at the time of the notice, and also for all that accrues afterwards. Moss v. Gallimore, Doug. 266, (279). See Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 1. § 8, in n.

In general, if the mortgagee has been 20 years in possession, the Court of Chancery, in conformity to the time of bringing an ejectment, will not permit a mortgagor to redeem; unless during part of the time such mortgagor has been an infant or a married woman; or unless the mortgagee admits he holds the estate as a Mortgage, or there is some other special circumstance which forms an exception to the general rule. 1 Eq. Abr. 313, B: 2 Bro. C. R. 399. See Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 1. § 7.

Where two different estates are mortgaged by the owner to the same person, one cannot be redeemed without the other. Ambl. 733. So of other securities given by the mortgagor to the mortgagee. See Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 1. § 9.

Although, after breach of the condition, an absolute fee-simple is vested at Common Law in the mortgagee; yet a right of redemption being still inherent in the land, till the equity of redemption be foreclosed, the same right shall descend to and is vested in such persons as have a right to the land, in case there had been no Mortgage or incumbrance whatsoever; and as an equitable performance as effectually defeats the interest of the mortgagee, as the legal performance doth at Common Law, the condition still hanging over the estate, till the equity is totally foreclosed; on this foundation it hath been held, that a person who comes in under a voluntary conveyance, may redeem a Mortgage: and though such right of redemption be inherent in the land, yet the party claiming the benefit of it, must not only set forth such right, but also shew that he is the person entitled to it. Hard. 465: 1 Vern. 182, 193.

The right of redemption is not confined to the mortgagor, his heirs, executors, assignees, or subsequent incumbrancers; but extends to all persons claiming any interest whatever in the premises as against the mortgagor: therefore a person claiming under a deed void (as being voluntary) against a subsequent mortgagee, may redeem; for the deed, though void as to the mortgagee, is binding on the mortgagor. 1 Ch. Ca. 59: 1 Vern. 193. A fortiori may any person who has acquired for valuable consideration an interest in the land; as a tenant under the mortgagor; or a judgment-creditor having previously sued out a writ of execution; or a tenant by elegit, statute merchant, or staple, or tenant by the curtesy or in dower; or a jointress; the Crown may also redeem estates mortgaged, and afterwards forfeited by the treason, &c. of the mortgagor. Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 1. § 8, in n. and the authorities there cited.

As the heir at law is regularly entitled to the benefit of redemption, he is also entitled to the assistance of the personal estate of the mortgagor for that purpose; according to the doctrine established in the Courts of Equity, that the personal estate, in the hands of the executor, shall be employed in ease of the heir, by whatever means the heir becomes indebted as heir; for the personal estate having received the benefit by contracting the debt, the real is considered only as a pledge for it; according to the common rule, Qui sentit commodum sentiri debet & onus. Prec. Chanc. 477. See Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 2. § 1; and this Dictionary, title Executor V. 6.

And on this foundation it hath been frequently held, that if a man mortgage lands, and covenants to pay the money, and dies, the personal estate of the mortgagor shall, in favour of the heir, be applied in exoneration of the Mortgage. 2 Salk. 449.

Also it is held by some opinions, that this benefit shall not only extend to the heir at law, or hæres natus, but also to an hæres factus; from a presumption, that it is the intention of the testator, that he should have all the privileges of the hæres natus: and it has been even held, that an ordinary devisee shall have this benefit; 1 Vern. 37; but as to this last point it hath been held otherwise; and that if a man mortgages his land, and devises it to J. S. or A. for life, the remainder in fee, to B. that there the charge doth pass with the estate, there appearing no intention of the testator, that he should have it discharged. 2 Chan. Ca. 84: 1 Chan. Ca. 271. This distinction however, between an hæres factus and a particular devisee, has been long since over-ruled, and the opinion in 1 Vern. 37, is now established law. 2 Atk. 436. And the devisee of a particular estate shall not only have his devised estate exonerated out of the personal estate, but if there be another estate expresly devised for payment of debts, and the personal estate be excepted or exhausted, he may also resort to such devised estate; and that although the particular estate devised vised to him be devised subject to the incumbrances thereon. 2 P. Wms. 385. So if the personal estate be exempt or exhausted, and there be no real estate expresly devised for payment of debts, but there be a descended estate, the devisee of a particular estate shall have it exonerated out of the descended estate. 2 Atk. 430. See title Executor V. 6.

So if the mortgagor conveys away the equity of redemption, the purchaser shall not have the benefit of the personal estate, but must take it cum onere. 2 Salk. 450: 1 Vern. 37.

It has likewise been held, that the heir of the mortgagor shall have the benefit of the personal estate to pay off the Mortgage, though there be no covenant in the Mortgage-deed for the payment thereof; because the Mortgage-money is a debt, whether there be any express covenant for the payment of it or not. 2 Salk. 449: 1 Vern. 436: Preced. Chanc. 61: Because the personal estate received the benefit.

But where a Mortgage in fee was made redeemable at Mich. 1702, or any other Mich. day following on six months' notice; and there was no covenant for payment of the Mortgage-money; it was held by Lord Chancellor Cowper, that the mortgagor having devised his personal estate to his wife and daughter, and having during his life paid the interest of the Mortgage, the personal estate should not be applied in ease and exoneration of the real estate for the benefit of the heir at law; for, being no covenant for paying of the money, there was no contract at all between them, neither express nor implied; nor would any action lie against the mortgagor to subject his person, to compel him to pay this money; but this was in nature of a conditional purchase, subject to be defeated on payment by the mortgagor, or his heirs, of the sum stipulated between them, at any Mich. day, at the election of the mortgagor, or his heirs: for here was an everlasting subsisting right of redemption, descendible to the heirs of the mortgagor, which could not be forfeited at law like other Mortgages; therefore there could be no equity of redemption, or any occasion for the assistance of this Court; but the plaintiffs might, even at law, defeat the conveyance, by performing the terms and conditions of it; which were not limitted to any particular time, but might be performed on any Michaelmas day, to the end of the world; and since there was no covenant or contract, either express or implied, to charge the personal estate of the mortgagor, he thought there was no reason to lay the load of this debt upon that which was given to other persons. Preced. Chanc. 423: 2 Vern. 701.

There is one case in which the Legislature has thought proper to take from the mortgagor the equity of redemption, and to give the mortgagee an absolute estate in the land; that is, where the former is guilty of a fraud upon the latter by concealing prior incumbrances. For by stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 16, it is enacted, that if any person shall borrow any money, and for payment thereof, or for any other valuable consideration, shall voluntarily give a judgment, statute, or recognizance, and shall afterwards borrow any other sum of another, or for other valuable consideration become indebted to such other, and for securing the repayment and discharge thereof shall mortgage lands, or any part thereof, to the second lender, &c. or to any other in trust for or to the use of such second lender, &c. and shall not give notice to the said mortgagee, of such previous judgment, &c. in writing under his hand, before the execution of the said Mortgage or Mortgages; unless such mortgagor or his heirs, upon notice given by the mortgagee, his heirs, &c. in writing, &c. attested by two witnesses, of any such former judgment, &c. shall within six months pay off the said judgment, &c. and all interest and charges, and procure the same to be vacated, &c. then the mortgagor or his heirs, &c. shall have no benefit or remedy against the said mortgagee or his heirs, &c. in equity or elsewhere, for redemption; but the mortgagee shall hold the lands, &c. for such estate and term as was granted to the mortgagee, against the mortgagor, and all persons claiming under him, freed from equity of redemption, &c.

And if any person who shall once mortgage lands for valuable consideration, shall again mortgage the same lands or any part thereof, to any other person for valuable consideration, (the former Mortgage being in force,) and shall not discover to the second mortgagee, the former Mortgage, in writing under his hand, such mortgagor, his heirs, &c. shall have no relief or equity of redemption against the second or after mortgagee, &c. And such second or third mortgagees may redeem any former Mortgage, upon payment of the principal debt, interest, and costs of suit, to the proper mortgagee, &c.

But the statute does not bar any widow of any mortgagor from her dower, who did not legally join with her husband in such Mortgage, or otherwise lawfully exclude herself.

It hath been held, that this statute extends to assignees of a mortgagee; and that if a man mortgages certain lands to one man, and mortgages those lands with some others to another, though this seems to be a case omitted out of the above statute against clandestine Mortgages; yet if it appears to be a contrivance to evade it, as if an acre or two of land were only added, this will not exempt it; also a person, who will take advantage of the statute, must be an honest mortgagee; therefore, if a man has used any fraud or practice in obtaining a second Mortgage, he shall not have the benefit of the statute. 2 Vern. 589, 590.

It has been said to be an established rule of equity, that a second mortgagee who has the title-deeds without notice of any prior incumbrance, shall in all cases be preferred; because if a mortgagee lend money upon real property without taking the title-deeds, he enables the mortgagor to commit a fraud. 1 Term Rep. 762 But Lord Thurlow C. afterwards observed upon this, that he did not conceive that the not taking the deeds was alone sufficient to postpone the first mortgagee; if it were so, there could be no such thing as a Mortgage of the reversion; and he held, that a second mortgagee in possession of the title deeds was preferred only in cases where the first had been guilty of fraud or gross negligence. 2 Bro. C. R. 652. It seems however, that fraud or gross negligence would be presumed, unless the mortgagee could show that it was impossible for him to obtain possession of the title-deeds, or that he had used the due and necessary diligence for that purpose. 2 Comm. 160, in n. See Treat. Eq. lib. 1. c. 3. § 4; where the rule of equity is thus stated on the ground of a solemn judgment ment in the Court of Exchequer; that nothing but a voluntary, diſtinct, and unjuſtifiable concurrence on the part of the firſt mortgagee, to the mortgagor's retaining the title-deeds, ſhall be a reaſon for poſtponing his priority.

Whatever may be the value of the eſtate, it is of great importance to thoſe who lend money upon real ſecurity, to be certain that there is no prior Mortgage upon the eſtate; for it has been long ſettled, that if a third mortgagee, who at the time of his Mortgage had no notice of the ſecond, purchaſes the firſt Mortgage, even pending a bill filed by the ſecond to redeem the firſt, both the firſt and third Mortgages ſhall be paid out of the eſtate before any ſhare of it can be appropriated to the ſecond; the reaſon aſſigned is, that the third, by thus obtaining the legal eſtate, has both law and equity on his ſide, which ſuperſede the mere equity of the ſecond. And even Lord Hale held it right, that the third, ſhould thus ſeize what he called tabula in naufragio, a plank in the ſhipwreck, and ſo leave the ſecond to periſh. See 2 Ventr. 337: 1 C. C. 162, 36, 149. But among mortgagees, where none has the legal eſtate, the rule in equity is qui prior eſt tempore potior eſt jure. 2 P. Wms. 491: 1 Bro. C. R. 63. See alſo 2 Vern. 81, 29, 525: 2 Atk. 52, 347. If however the ſecond or meſne incumbrancer has obtained a decree for an account, a ſubſequent incumbrancer cannot, by buying in the firſt incumbrance, defeat the effect of ſuch decree. 3 Atk. 809. See Fonblanque's Treatiſe of Equity, lib. 1. c. 4. § 25. Some reflections have been made by Mr. Chriſtian on the above doctrine, 2 Comm. 160, in n; but it ſeems perfectly conſiſtent with the maxim of law, vigilitantibus non dormientibus ſervit lex. See Treat. Eq. lib. 3. c. 3. § 1.

It is well obſerved by Blackſtone, that in Glanvil's time, when the univerſal method of conveyance was by livery of ſeiſin, or corporal tradition of the lands, no gage or pledge of lands was good, unleſs poſſeſſion was alſo delivered to the creditor, for which the reaſon given is, to prevent ſubſequent and fraudulent pledges of the ſame land. Glanv. lib. 10. c. 8. And the frauds which have ariſen, ſince the exchange of thoſe public and notorious conveyances for more private and ſecret bargains, has well evinced the wiſdom of our ancient law. 2 Comm. c. 10. p. 160.

The ſtat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 20, before alluded to, enacts, That where any action ſhall be brought on any bond for the payment of the money ſecured by Mortgage, or performance of the covenants therein contained; or where any action of ejectment ſhall be brought by any mortgagee, &c. for the recovery of the poſſeſſion, and no ſuit ſhall be then depending in equity, for foreclosing or redeeming ſuch mortgaged lands; if the perſon having right to redeem ſhall appear and become defendant in ſuch action, and ſhall, at any time pending ſuch action, pay unto ſuch mortgagee, or in caſe of his, her, or their refuſal, ſhall bring into court where ſuch action ſhall be depending, all the principal money and intereſt due on ſuch Mortgage, and alſo all ſuch coſts as have been expended in any ſuit at law or in equity upon ſuch Mortgage, (ſuch money for principal, intereſt, and coſts, to be aſcertained and computed by the Court where ſuch action is or ſhall be depending,) the monies ſo paid, &c. ſhall be deemed and taken to be in full ſatisfaction and diſcharge of ſuch Mortgage; and the Court ſhall diſcharge every ſuch mortgagor or defendant of and from the ſame accordingly; and ſhall, by rule of the ſame Court, compel ſuch mortgagee, at the coſts of ſuch mortgagor, to aſſign, ſurrender, or re-convey ſuch mortgaged lands, and deliver up all deeds, &c. relating to the title.

And that where any bill or ſuits ſhall be filed, or brought in equity by any perſon having or claiming any eſtate, right or intereſt in any lands, &c. by virtue of any Mortgage to compel the defendant to pay the plaintiff the principal money and intereſt, together with any ſum due on any incumbrance or ſpecialty, charged or chargeable on the equity of redemption; and in default of payment to foreclose ſuch defendant's right of equity of redeeming ſuch mortgaged lands, &c. upon his admitting the right and title of the plaintiff, ſuch court of equity ſhall, at any time before ſuch ſuit ſhall be brought to hearing, make ſuch order or decree therein, as it might or could have made therein, in caſe the ſame had been regularly brought to hearing; and all parties to ſuch ſuit ſhall be bound by ſuch order or decree, to all intents and purpoſes, as if the ſame had been made at or ſubſequent to the hearing of the cauſe.

This act not to extend to any caſe, where the perſon againſt whom the redemption ſhall be prayed, ſhall (by writing under his hand, or the hand of his attorney, &c. to be delivered, before the money ſhall be brought into Court at law, to the attorney or ſolicitor for the other ſide) inſiſt either that the party praying a redemption has not a right to redeem, or that the premiſes are chargeable with other or different principal ſums than what appear on the face of the Mortgage, or ſhall be admitted on the other ſide; nor to any cauſe where the right of redemption to the mortgaged lands ſhall be controverted or queſtioned, by or between different defendants in the ſame cauſe; nor ſhall be any prejudice to any ſubſequent mortgagee, or ſubſequent incumbrancer.

It was heretofore held, that if a contract were made in England for a Mortgage of a plantation in the Weſt Indies, no more than legal intereſt might be paid; and that a covenant in ſuch Mortgage for payment of 8 per cent. intereſt would be within the ſtatute of uſury, notwithſtanding this were the rate of intereſt where the lands lay. But now this point is ſettled by ſtat. 14 Geo. 3. c. 79. § 2; which enacts, "that none of his Majeſty's Subjects in Great Britain, ſhall be ſubject or liable to any of the penalties or forfeitures inflicted by ſtat. 12 Ann. ſt. 2. c. 16, againſt uſury, by receiving or taking intereſt for any ſum or ſums of money really and bona fide lent on any Mortgage, &c. of lands in Ireland, or in the colonies or plantations in the Weſt Indies, the ſecurities for which are made and executed in Great Britain; ſo as the intereſt ſo to be received or taken do not exceed the rate of ſix per cent. See Powell on Mortgages, v. 2. c. 5.

A diſtinction is made in Chancery between an agreement, that the intereſt ſhall be raiſed, if not punctually paid, and for abatement thereof upon punctual payment. For in the former caſe it is conſidered as a penalty which the Courts of Equity will relieve againſt: but in the latter as a condition, which muſt be ſtrictly adhered to; in which caſe the debtor cannot have relief in equity after the day of payment elapſed; becauſe the abatement is to be upon a condition which is not performed. 3 Burr. 1374-5.

If

If the mortgagee assign the Mortgage, with the concurrence of the mortgagor, all money really and bona fide paid by the assignee, that was due to the mortgagee, shall be considered as principal, and the assignee shall have interest upon the interest then due, and paid by him, as well as upon the principal originally lent. 2 Ch. Ca. 67, 68, 258: 1 Vern. 169: 2 Vern. 135. As to the other cases in which interest shall become principal, see Powell on Mortgages, ii. c. 5.

A remainder-man can force the tenant for life to keep the interest down if the land be charged; but cannot directly compel him to redeem, though indirectly he may, by purchasing in the Mortgage; when the tenant for life must pay one third, or part with the possession. Rep. Eq. 69.

MORTMAIN, manus mortua, from the Fr. mort, mors and maine, manus—Cowell, Skene, Hottoman.] An alienation of lands and tenements to any guild, corporation or fraternity, and their successors, as bishops, parsons, vicars, &c; which could never be done without the King's licence, and that of the lord of the manor, or of the King alone, if it be immediately holden of him. The reason of the name may be deduced from hence; because the services, and other profits due, for such lands, as escheats, &c. should not without such licence come into a dead hand, or into such a hand as it were dead, and so dedicated unto God, or pious uses, as to be abstractedly different from other lands, tenements, or hereditaments, and never to revert to the donor, or any temporal or common use. Magna Charta, c. 36.

Polydore Virgil, in the seventeenth book of his Chronicles, mentions this law, and gives this reason of the name; Et legem hanc manum mortuam vocarunt, quod res semel datæ collegiis sacerdotum, non utique rursus venderentur velut mortuæ, hoc est, usui aliorum mortalium in perpetuum adeptæ essent. Lex diligentur servatur, sic, ut nihil possessionum ordini sacerdotali à quoquam detur, nisi regis permissu; but the statutes of Mortmain are in some manner abridged by stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5, by which the gift of lands, &c. to hospitals is permitted, without obtaining licences in Mortmain. But see post.

Hottoman, in his Commentaries, De verbis Feudalibus, verbo Manus mortua, hath these words; Manus mortua locatio est, quæ usurpatur de iis, quorum possessio (ut ita dicam) immortalis est, quia nunquam hæredem habere desinunt: Qua de causa res nunquam ad priorem dominum revertitur, nam manus pro possessione dicitur mortua per antiphrasin pro immortali, &c. Petrus Belluga in speculo Principum, fol. 76.—Jus amortizationis est licentia capiendi ad manum mortuam: to the same effect read Cassan. de Consuet. Burgund. p. 348, 387, 1183, 1185, 1201, &c. Skene de verb. signif. saith, Dimittere terras ad manum mortuam est idem atque dimittere ad multitudinem sive universitatem, quæ nunquam moritur, idque per antiphrasin, seu à contrario sensu, because commonalties never die. Cowell.

William the Conqueror demanding the cause why he conquered the realm by one battle, which the Danes could not do by many; Frederick, abbot of St. Alban's, answered, that the reason was, because the land, which was the maintenance of martial men, was given and converted to pious employments, and for the maintenance of holy votaries: to which the Conqueror said, that if the clergy were so strong, that the realm were enfeebled of men for war, and subject by it to foreign invasion, he would aid it. Therefore he took away many of the revenues of the abbot, and of others also. Speed. 418, b. See 1 Inst. 2: 2 Inst. 75.

The foundation of all the statutes of Mortmain was Magna Charta. By c. 36, it is declared, "That it shall not be lawful for any to give his lands to any religious house, and to take the same land again to hold of the same house, &c. upon pain that the gift shall be void, and the land shall accrue to the lord of the fee." This statute is interpreted to extend to lands which a religious house kept in their own hands, though they gave them not back again to hold of the same house. 2 Inst. 75.

But ecclesiastical persons found means to creep out of the statute, by purchasing lands holden of themselves, or by making leases for a long term of years, &c. wherefore by stat. 7 Ed. 1, commonly called the Statute of Mortmain, or de religiosis, no persons religious or others whatsoever, shall buy or sell any lands or tenements, or under the colour of any gift or lease, or by reason of any other title, receive the same, or by any other craft shall appropriate lands in anywise to come into Mortmain, on pain of forfeiture; and within a year after the alienation, the lord of the fee may enter; and if he do not, then the next immediate lord, from time to time, may enter in half a year; and for default of all the lords entering, the King shall have the lands so alienated for ever, and may enfeoff others by certain services, &c.

As this statute extended only to gifts, alienations, &c. made between ecclesiastics and others, they found out an evasion also of this statute; for pretending a title to the land which they meant to gain, they brought a feigned action against the tenant of the land, and he, by consent and collusion was to make default, and thereupon they recovered the land, and entered by judgment of law: so that the statute West. 2. 13 Ed. 1 c. 32, was thought necessary; by which it is to be inquired by the country whether the demandant had a just title to the land, and if so, then he shall recover seisin; but if otherwise, the lord of the fee shall enter, &c.

And by stat 34 Ed. 1. st. 3, lands shall not be aliened in Mortmain, where there are mean lords, without their consent declared under hand and seal; nor shall any thing pass where the donor reserves nothing to himself.

Notwithstanding all these statutes, ecclesiastical persons (not being able to get lands, by purchase, gift, lease, or recovery) procured lands to be conveyed by feoffment, or in other manners, to divers persons and their heirs, to the use of them and their successors, whereby they took the profits. 2 Inst. 75. To bar this, the stat. 15 R. 2. c. 5, was made, which statute enacts, "that no feoffment, &c. of any lands and tenements, advowsons or other possessions, to the use of any spiritual persons, or whereof they shall take the profits, shall be made without licence of the King, and of the Lords, &c. upon pain of forfeiture." And by stat. 23 H. 8. c. 10, against superstitious uses, forfeitures, fines, recoveries, grants, devises, &c. of lands, in trust to the use of any parish church, or to have perpetual obits, or a continual service of a priest for ever, or for sixty years, &c. to the prejudice of the King and other lords, as in case of lands alienated in Mortmain, shall be void: though this last act extends not to corporations, where there is a custom to devise lands in Mortmain; as in London, a freeman that pays scot and lot, may devise all his lands, in the city, in Mortmain, without licence. 1 Rol. Abr. 556.

And notwithstanding this, previous to stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, any man might give lands, tenements, &c. to any persons and their heirs, for finding a preacher, maintenance of a school, reparation of churches, relief of the poor, &c. or for any like charitable uses; though it was said to be good policy on every such estate to reserve a small rent to the feoffor and his heirs, when the feoffees should be seised to their own use, and not to the use of the feoffor; or if a consideration of a small sum be expressed, the 23 H. 8. cannot by any pretence make void the use. 1 Rep. 24: 11 Rep. 70: Wood's Inst. 303: but see post.

A more clear and concise account of the rise, progress, and effect of these statutes will be found to be contained in the following extract from the Commentaries; vol. 4. c. 18.

Alienation in Mortmain, is an alienation of lands or tenements to any corporation, sole or aggregate, ecclesiastical or temporal. But these purchases having been chiefly made by religious houses, in consequence whereof the lands became perpetually inherent in one dead hand, this hath occasioned the general appellation of Mortmain to such alienations, and the religious houses themselves to be principally considered in forming the statutes of Mortmain.

By the Common Law any man might dispose of his lands to any other private man at his own discretion, especially when the feodal restraints on alienation were worn away; yet in consequence of these, it was always and still is necessary for corporations to have a license in Mortmain from the Crown to enable them to purchase lands; for as the King is the ultimate lord of every fee, he ought not, unless by his own consent, to lose his privilege of escheats and other feudal profits, by the vesting of lands in tenants who can never be attainted or die. See F. N. B. 121. And such licenses of Mortmain seem to have been necessary among the Saxons, above sixty years before the Norman conquest. Seld. Jan. Angl. l. 2. § 45. But besides this general license from the King, as lord paramount of the kingdom, it was also requisite, whenever there was a mesne or intermediate lord between the King and the alienor, to obtain his license also, (upon the same feodal principles) for the alienation of the specific land. And if no such license was obtained, the King or other lord might respectively enter on the lands so aliened in Mortmain, as a forfeiture. The necessity of this license from the Crown was acknowledged by the Constitutions of Clarendon, c. 2. (A. D. 1164) in respect of advowsons, which the monks always greatly coveted, as being the ground-work of subsequent appropriations. Yet such were the influence and ingenuity of the clergy, that notwithstanding this fundamental principle, the largest and most considerable dotations of religious houses happened within less than two centuries after the Conquest. And when a license could not be obtained, the contrivance seems to have been this: that as the forfeiture for such alienations accrued in the first place to the immediate lord of the fee, the tenant who meant to alienate, first conveyed his lands to the religious house, and instantly took them back again, to hold as tenant to the monastery; which kind of instantaneous seisin was probably held not to occasion any forfeiture: and then, by pretext of some other forfeiture, surrender, or escheat, the society entered into those lands, in right of such their newly acquired seigniory, as immediate lords of the fee. But when these dotations began to grow numerous, it was observed that the feodal services ordained for the defence of the kingdom, were every day visibly withdrawn; that the circulation of landed property from man to man began to stagnate; and that the lords were curtailed of the fruits of their seigniories, their escheats, wardships, reliefs, and the like; and therefore, to prevent this, it was ordered by the second of King Henry III.'s Great Charters, and afterwards by that printed in our common Statute-book, that all such attempts should be void, and the land forfeited to the lord of the fee. See stat. 9 H. 3. c. 36.

But as this prohibition extended only to religious Houses, Bishops and other Sole Corporations were not included therein; and the aggregate ecclesiastical bodies found many means to creep out of this statute, by buying in lands that were boná fide holden of themselves as lords of the fee, and thereby evading the forfeiture; or by taking long leases for years, which first introduced those extensive terms, for 1000 or more years, which are now so frequent in conveyances. This produced the statute de Religiosis, stat. 7 Ed. 1, which provided that no person, religious or other, whatsoever, should buy or sell, or receive, under pretence of a gift, or term of years, or any other title whatsoever, nor should by any art or ingenuity appropriate to himself any lands or tenements in Mortmain; upon pain that the immediate lord of the fee, or on his default for one year, the lords paramount, and in default of all of them, the King, might enter thereon as a forfeiture.

This seemed to be a sufficient security against all alienations in Mortmain; but as these statutes extended only to gifts and conveyances between the parties, the religious Houses now began to set up a fictitious title to the land, which it was intended they should have, and to bring an action to recover it against the tenant, who by fraud and collusion made no defence; and thereby judgment was given for the religious House, which then recovered the land by sentence of law, upon a supposed prior title: and thus they had the honour of inventing those fictitious adjudications of right which are since become the great assurance of the kingdom, under the title of Common Recoveries. See this Dictionary, titles Fines and Recoveries. But upon this the stat. Westm. 2. 13 E. 1. c. 32, enacted that in such cases a Jury shall try the true right of the demandants or plaintiffs to the land, and if the religious house or corporation be found to have it, they shall still recover seisin, otherwise it shall be forfeited to the immediate lord of the fee, or else else to the next lord, and finally to the King, upon the immediate or other lord's default. And the like provision was made by the succeeding chapter, 33 of the same statute, in case the tenants set up crosses on their lands, (the badges of Knights Templars and Hospitallers,) in order to protect them from the feodal demands of their lords, by virtue of the privileges of those religious and military orders. So careful indeed was this Prince to prevent any future evasions, that when the statute of Quia Emptores, 18 Ed. 1, abolished all sub-infeudations, and gave liberty for all men to alienate their lands, to be holden of their next immediate lord, a proviso was inserted, that this should not extend to authorise any kind of alienation in Mortmain. See stat. 18 E. 1. st. 1. c. 3: 2 Inst. 501. And when afterwards the method of obtaining the King's license by writ of ad quod damnum, was marked out by stat. 27 Ed. 1. st. 2, it was further provided by stat. 34 Ed. 1. st. 3, that no such license should be effectual without the consent of the mesne or intermediate lords.

Yet still it was found difficult to set bounds to ecclesiastical ingenuity; for when they were driven out of all their former holds, they devised a new method of conveyance, by which the lands were granted not to themselves directly, but to nominal feoffees to the use of the religious houses; thus distinguishing between the possession and the use, and receiving the actual profits, while the seisin of the lands remained in the nominal feoffee; who was held by the Courts of Equity (then under the direction of the clergy) to be bound in conscience to account to his cestuy que use for the rents and emoluments of the estate. And it is to these inventions that our practisers are indebted for the introduction of uses and trusts, the foundation of modern conveyancing. But they did not long enjoy the advantage of their new device, for the stat. 15 R. 2. c. 5, enacts that the lands which had been so purchased to uses, should be amortised by license from the Crown, or else be sold to private persons; and that for the future, uses shall be subject to the statute of Mortmain, and forfeitable like the lands themselves. And whereas the statutes had been eluded by purchasing large tracts of land adjoining to churches, and consecrating them by the name of church-yards, such subtile imagination is also declared to be within the compass of the statutes of Mortmain. And civil or lay corporations, as well as ecclesiastical, are also declared to be within the mischief, and of course within the remedy provided by those salutary laws. And lastly, as during the times of Popery, lands were frequently given to superstitious uses, though not to any corporate bodies; or were made liable in the hands of heirs and devisees, to the charge of obits, chaunteries, and the like, which were equally pernicious in a well-governed State, as actual alienations in Mortmain; therefore at the dawn of the Reformation the stat. 23 H. 8 c. 10, declares, that all future grants of lands for any of the purposes aforesaid, for a longer term than 20 years, shall be void.

During all this time, however, it was in the power of the Crown, by granting a license of Mortmain, to remit the forfeiture, so far as related to its own rights, and to enable any spiritual or other corporation to purchase and hold any lands or tenements in perpetuity; which prerogative is declared and confirmed by the stat. 18 Ed. 3. st. 3. c. 3. But as doubts were conceived at the time of the Revolution, how far such license was valid, since under the Bill of Rights, the King had no power to dispense with the statutes of Mortmain by a clause of non obstante, which was the usual course, though it seems to have been unnecessary: (See Co. Lit. 99.) and as by the gradual declension of mesne seigniories, through the long operation of the statute of Quia Emptores, the rights of intermediate lords were reduced to a very small compass; it was therefore provided by stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 37, that the Crown for the future, at its own discretion, may grant licenses to aliene or take in Mortmain, of whomsoever the tenements may be holden.

After the dissolution of monasteries under Hen. VIII. though the policy of the next Popish successor affected to grant a security to the possessors of abbey-lands, yet in order to regain so much of them as either the zeal or timidity of their owners might induce them to part with, the statutes of Mortmain were suspended for 20 years by stat. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8; and during that time, any lands or tenements were allowed to be granted to any spiritual corporation without any license whatsoever.

By the stat. 39 Eliz. cap. 5, The gift of lands, &c. to Hospitals is permitted without obtaining licenses of Mortmain. See title Hospitals.

Long afterwards, for a much better purpose, the augmentation of poor livings, it was enacted by the Stat. 17 Car. 2. c. 3, that appropriators may annex the great tithes to the vicarages; and that all benefices under 100*l.* per ann may be augmented by the purchase of lands, without license of Mortmain in either case; and the like provision hath been since made in favour of the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty. Stat. 2 & 3 Ann. c. 11. § 4. See also Stat. 15 Car 2. c. 17, as to the incorporation of Commissioners for Bedford Level; and Stat. 22 C. 2. c. 6: and other statutes for the sale of the fee-farm rents of the Crown. It hath also been held, that the Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 10, before-mentioned, did not extend to any thing but superstitious uses, and that therefore a man may give lands for the maintenance of a school, an hospital, or any other charitable use. 1 Rep. 24. But as it was apprehended from recent experience, that persons on their death-beds might make large and improvident dispositions even, for these good purposes, and defeat the political end of the statutes of Mortmain; it is therefore enacted by stat. 9 Geo. 2. c 36, that no lands or tenements, or money to be laid out thereon, shall be given for, or charged with, any charitable uses whatsoever, unless by deed indented, executed in the presence of two witnesses, twelve calendar months before the death of the donor, and enrolled in the Court of Chancery, within six months after its execution; (except stocks in the public funds, which may be transferred within six months previous to the donor's death;) and unless such gift be made to take effect immediately, and be without power of revocation: and that all other gifts shall be void. The two Universities, their Colleges, and the Scholars upon the foundation of the Colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, are excepted out of this act; but such exemption was granted with this proviso, that no College shall be at liberty to purchase more advowsons than are equal in number to one moiety of the fellows; or, where there are no fellows, one moiety of the students upon the respective foundations; and, under § 5, the advowsons annexed to headships are not to be computed. See 2 Comm. c. 18.

It

It has been declared since this last Mortmain act, that there is no restriction whatsoever upon any one, from leaving a sum of money by will, or any other personal estate, to charitable uses; provided it be to be continued as a personalty, and the executors or trustees are not obliged, or under a necessity of laying it out in land, by virtue of any direction of the testator for that purpose. 2 Burn. Ecc. 509, title Mortmain.

Money left to repair parsonage-houses, or to build upon land already in Mortmain, is held not to be within the statute. 1 Bro. C. R. 444: Ambl. 373, 651. But a legacy to the Corporation of Queen Anne's Bounty, is void, as by the rules of the Corporation it must be laid out in land. 1 Bro. C. R. 13, in n.

The words of the above stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, are, "That no manors, lands, tenements, rents, advowsons, or other hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, whatsoever, nor any sum or sums of money, goods, chattels, stocks in the public funds, securities for money, or any other personal estate whatsoever, to be laid out or disposed of in the purchase of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall be given, granted, aliened, limited, released, transferred, assigned or appointed, or any ways conveyed or settled to or upon any person or persons, bodies politic or corporate, or otherwise, for any estate or interest whatsoever, or any ways charged or incumbered by any person or persons whatsoever, in trust, or for the benefit of any charitable uses whatsoever; unless such gift, appointment, conveyance, or settlement, of any such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, sum or sums of money, or personal estate, (other than stocks in the public funds,) be and are made by deed indented, sealed and delivered in the presence of two or more credible witnesses, 12 calendar months at least before the death of such donor or grantor, (including the days of the execution and death,) and be inrolled in his Majesty's High Court of Chancery, within six calendar months next after the execution thereof; and unless such stocks be transferred in the public books usually kept for the transfer of stocks, six calendar months at least before the death of such donor or grantor, (including the days of the transfer and death): and unless the same be made to take effect in possession for the charitable use intended immediately from the making thereof; and be without any power of revocation, reservation, trust, condition, limitation, clause, or agreement whatsoever, for the benefit of the donor or grantor, or any person or persons claiming under him." § 1 And the fourth section of the said act declares all gifts and dispositions, settlements, incumbrances, &c. otherwise made, to be void to all intents and purposes.

It is incident to every corporation to have a capacity to purchase lands for themselves and successors; and this is regularly true at the Common Law. 10 Rep. 30. But they are excepted out of the statute of Wills, stat. 34 H. 8. c. 5; so that no devise of lands to a corporation was then good, except for charitable uses, by stat 43 Eliz. c. 4, which exception is again greatly narrowed by the above stat 9 Geo 2. c. 36. So that now a corporation, whether ecclesiastical or lay, cannot purchase, without license from the Crown, though that capacity seems to be vested in them by the Common Law. And such charities which have not this license, which is now granted by act of parliament; charter of incorporation, or letters patent, are reduced to the necessity of choosing from among themselves certain persons to be trustees, and to purchase in their names, and to take the lands in trust for the charity; for if they were bought in the name of the institution, not being incorporated, they would instantly vest in the Crown, as a forfeiture in Mortmain. Highmore on Charitable Uses.

It frequently happens that a Donor or Testator is not readily furnished with the correct title of the hospital or institution to whose charitable designs he wishes to contribute; to obviate this difficulty, it appears that a statute was passed, stat. 14 Eliz. c. 14, evidently made for the benefit of Christ's Hospital, St. Thomas's, and St. Bartholomew's; but including also all other hospitals, declaring "that all gifts and legacies, by will, feoffment, or otherwise, for relief of the poor in any hospital, then remaining and being in esse, shall be as valid, according to the true meaning of the Donor, as if the said corporation had been rightly named." The same act then recites one preceding, and explains "that the words Master or Guardian of any hospital mentioned therein, were intended and meant of all hospitals, Maison-dieus, bead-houses, and other houses ordained for the sustentation or relief of the poor; and shall be so expounded and taken for ever." It has been decided that the stat. 13 Eliz. c. 10, to which this refers, extends to all manner of hospitals, whether incorporated by name of Master or Warden, or any other name; or whether a sole corporation, or aggregate of many. 5 Co. 14, b.: 11 Co. 76, a.: Palmer 216. See Highmore on Charitable Uses.

The said stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, has been uniformly construed by our Courts of Law and Equity, so as to give it its full force and effect; and by no means to give way to those subtleties which by degrees overturned the former Mortmain acts: at the same time that all proper encouragement has been given to such gifts and bequests to charities, as did not manifestly appear to be against the policy of this statute.

The statute was not meant solely to restrain devises of lands, or money to be laid out in lands, to charities; but has also been construed to the prohibition of any devise of lands to trustees, to sell them and convert the produce of the sale to such purposes; for this mode, though it does not seem so directly within the mischief intended to be provided against by the act, might open a door to much fraud and evasion. See 1 Vez. 108: 2 Vez. 52: and Attorney Gen. v. Tindal, A. D. 1764, cited in Highmore's Charitable Uses.

Although, however, the statute prohibits the gift of money or personal estate, to be laid out in lands for charitable uses, yet, as has been already hinted, money, &c. given generally, is not forbidden: so also the residue of a personal estate hath been decreed not to be within the act; and if money be given to be laid out "in lands or otherwise" to a charitable use, such devise is good; by reason of the option thereby given to lay it out in personal securities, which are not restrained by the statute, unless they are converted into land. See Soresby v. Hollins, A. D. 1740: Grimmett v. Grimmett, A. D. 1754, cited in Highmore's Charitable Uses.

A devise of a mortgage, or of a term of years, or of a rent-charge on lands, to a charity, is not good. It has been urged that the words of the statute, "that the lands shall not be conveyed or settled for any estate or interest interest whatsoever, or any ways charged or incumbered," relate merely to the case of a person charging his own lands for the benefit of a charity, and not to prevent the bequeathing a mortgage made to secure a personal debt: but it has been always held that the devise of a mortgage passeth the lands so mortgaged, for the equity of redemption may ultimately vest in the mortgagee; but a charity is precluded from a right of foreclosure; and therefore the bequest of a real security to a charity is in its nature void. See Cro. Car. 37: Atk. 605: 2 Vez. 547, 44: 1 Bro. C. R. 271: and Highmore Cha. Uses: as to the indirect way in which this may be in some manner affected, by marshalling the assets, so as to pay the debts out of the mortgage, and leave the personal estate free to answer the legacy to the charity; a matter in which the Courts of Equity are very nice and careful.

Courts of Equity have by several decisions favoured devises if made for intended charities, though they were not in esse at the time of the making the will. See Highm. Char. Uses.

By the exemption in the 4th section of the statute, in favour of the Universities, any land, or personal estate to be laid out in land, may still be disposed of in trust for their benefit, or for any colleges therein, as it might have been before the making of the act. But the extension to the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, seems confined to any disposition "for the better support and maintenance of the scholars only upon those foundations," so that a devise to those colleges for any other purpose would apparently be declared void. Highm. Char. Uses.

Section 5 of the statute was made to prevent successions in colleges from happening so rapidly, as that fit members might not be left either to govern the college or to succeed to the vacant benefices. The extent and effect of this clause, as well as of the whole statute, underwent a very full discussion before Lord Keeper Henley, in the case of Mr. Tancred's will. See 1 Black. Rep. 90.

The concluding section of the statute exempts all estate real or personal in Scotland from the restraints imposed on those in England. A case has occurred where an estate in Ireland was devised to charitable uses in Ireland. 1 Bro. C. R. 27. There does not appear any case where estates either in Scotland or Ireland were devised to charities in England; though it may be concluded if the charities were incorporated, and so became capable of taking, such a devise would not be void. Upon the same principles a devise of lands, or of a rent-charge on lands, in the West Indies, to a charity in England is good. Instances of the latter have actually occurred, and the executors or heirs at law never thought of contesting the devise against the charity. Highm. Char. Uses.

In the case of a legacy in South-Sea annuities bequeathed for the maintenance of poor labourers in Edinburgh and towns adjacent, the Court of Chancery was of opinion, that no directions could be given there as to the distribution of the money; that belonging to another jurisdiction; viz. to some of the Courts in Scotland; and therefore directed that the annuities should be transferred to such persons as the plaintiffs should appoint, to be applied to the uses of the will. See Ambl. 236.

MORTUARY, Mortuarium, mortarium.] A gift left by a man, at his death, to his parish church, for the recompence of his personal tithes and offerings not duly paid in his life-time. A Mortuary is not properly and originally due to ecclesiastical incumbents from any, but those only of his own parish, to whom he ministers spiritual instruction, and hath right to their tithes. But by custom in some places of this kingdom, they are paid to the parsons of other parishes, as the corpse passes through them.

Mortuarium (says Lindewode) sic dictum est quia relinquitur ecclesiæ pro anima defuncti. Custom did so prevail, that Mortuaries being held as due debts, the payment of them was enjoined as well by the statute De circumspecte agatis, 13 Ed. 1. st. 4, as by several constitutions, &c.

The stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 4, enacts, That a prohibition shall not lie for Mortuaries, in places where Mortuaries used to be paid.

A Mortuary was anciently called Saule-sceat, which signifies pecunia sepulchralis, or symbolum animæ. After the Conquest it was called a cors-present, because the beast was presented with the body at the funeral; and sometimes a principal; of which see a learned discourse in the Antiquities of Warwickshire, fol. 679; and Selden's Hist. of Tithes, p. 287: Ll. Canuti, c. 13.

There is no Mortuary due by law, but by custom. 2 Inst. 491: see Spelm. de Concil. tom. 2. 390: Fleta, lib. 2. c. 600. par. 30. See Nonagium, Principal, and Pretium sepulchri. In the Irish canons it is called Pretium sepulchri, and Sedatium, viz. Omne corpus sepultum habet in jure suo vaccam & equum & vestimentum & ornamenta lecti sui, &c. Canon. Hibern. lib. 19. c 6. And in another place, Rogat principem loci, (i. e. the bishop,) ut basilicum ejus foderit, &c. & reddat amicus pretium ejus & sedatium commune.

The word Mortuarium was sometimes used in a civil as well as an ecclesiastical sense, and was payable to the lord of the fee, as well as to the priest of the parish. Debentur domino (i. e. mannerii de Wrechwyke) nominibus heriotti & mortuarii duæ vaccæ pret. xii sol.—Paroch. Antiq. 470: Cowell.

Selden says, that the usage anciently was, bringing the Mortuary along with the corpse when it came to be buried, and to offer it to the church as a satisfaction for the supposed negligence and omission, the defunct had been guilty of, in not paying his personal tithes, and from thence it was called a corse present; a term which bespeaks it to have been once a voluntary donation. Selden's History of Tithes, 287. c. 10.

Mortuaries are, in fact, a sort of Ecclesiastical Heriots; being a customary gift claimed by, and due to, the minister in very many parishes on the death of his parishioners. 2 Comm. c. 28. p. 425.—They seem originally to have been like lay-heriots, only a voluntary bequest to the church; being intended, as above-mentioned, and as Lindewode states, from a constitution of Archbishop Langham, as a kind of expiation and amends to the clergy, for the personal tithes and other ecclesiastical duties, which the laity in their life-time might have neglected or forgotten to pay. For this purpose, after the Lord's heriot or best good was taken out, the second best chattel was reserved to the Church as a Mortuary. Co. Lit. 185: Lindew. Provinc. l. 1. tit. 3.

In

In Bracton's time, so early as Henry III. this was rivetted into an established custom; insomuch that the bequests of heriots and Mortuaries, were held to be necessary ingredients in every testament of chattels, and that the Lord should have the best good left him as an heriot, and the Church the second best as a Mortuary. See Bracton, l. 2. c. 26: Fleta, l. 2. c. 57. See this Dictionary, title Heriot.

This custom still varies in different places, not only as to the Mortuary to be paid, but the person to whom it is payable. In Wales, a Mortuary or Corse present, was due upon the death of every clergyman, to the Bishop of the diocese; till abolished upon a recompence given to the Bishop, by stat. 12 Ann. st. 2. c. 6. And in the archdeaconry of Chester, a custom also prevailed, that the Bishop, who is also Archdeacon, should have, at the death of every clergyman dying therein, his best horse or mare, bridle, saddle, and spurs, his best gown or cloak, hat, upper garment under his gown, and tippet; and also his best signet or ring. Cro. Car. 237. But by stat. 28 Geo 2. c. 6, this Mortuary is directed to cease, and an equivalent is settled upon the Bishop in its room.

The King's claim to many goods on the death of all prelates in England, seems to be of the same nature; though Coke apprehends that this is a duty due upon death, and not a Mortuary; a distinction seemingly without a difference. For not only the King's ecclesiastical character, as supreme Ordinary, but also the species of the goods claimed, which bear so near a resemblance to those in the archdeaconry of Chester, which was an acknowledged Mortuary, puts the matter out of dispute. The King, according to the record vouched by Sir Edward Coke, is entitled to six things, the Bishop's best horse or palfrey, with his furniture; his cloak or gown and tippet; his cup and cover; his bason and ewer; his gold ring; and lastly, his muta canum, his mew or kennel of hounds. See 2 Inst. 491: 2 Comm. 426, 7.

This variety of customs, with regard to Mortuaries, giving frequently a handle to exactions on the one side, and frauds or expensive litigations on the other, it was thought proper, by stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 6, to reduce them to some kind of certainty. For this purpose, it is enacted, "That all Mortuaries, or Corse-presents, to parsons of any parish, shall be taken in the following manner; viz. for every person who does not leave goods to the value of 10 marks (6*l.* 13*s* 4*d.*) nothing; for every person who leaves goods to the value of 10 marks, and under 30*l.*, 3*s.* 4*d.*; if above 30*l.* and under 40*l.*, 6*s.* 8*d.*; if above 40*l.* of what value soever they may be, 10*s.* and no more. And no Mortuary shall throughout the kingdom be paid for the death of any feme covert; nor for any child; nor for any one of full age that is not a housekeeper; nor for any wayfaring man, but such wayfaring man's Mortuary shall be paid in the parish to which he belongs.

"No person shall pay Mortuaries in more places than one, or more than one Mortuary; and no Mortuary shall be demanded of any but in such places where Mortuaries are due by custom, and have used to have been paid: also in places where Mortuaries have been of less value than as aforesaid, no person shall pay any more than has been accustomed.

"If a parson, vicar, &c. take or demand more than is allowed by the statute for a Mortuary, he shall forfeit all he takes beyond it, and 40*s.* more, to the party grieved, to be recovered by action of debt, &c."

Since this statute, whereby Mortuaries are reduced to a certainty, and on which stands the law of Mortuaries to this day, an action of debt will lie upon the said statute in the Courts of Common Law, for recovery of the sum due for a Mortuary, being by custom as aforesaid, although before that statute they were recoverable only in the Spiritual Court: but as such actions have never been brought, it is said, they are still recoverable in that Court only. Wats. Clergym. Law, 475.

Where by custom a Mortuary hath not been usually paid, if a person be libelled in the Spiritual Court, he shall have a prohibition by virtue of the statute 21 H. 8. c 6. And upon a prohibition the custom may be tried, &c. 2 Lutw. 1066: 3 Mod. 268.—No suit in equity lies for a Mortuary. 2 Strange 715.

MOTE, Mota, Sax. gemote.] Curia, placitum, conventus: as Mota de Hereford, i. e. Curia vel placita comitatûs de Hereford. In the charter of Maud the Empress, daughter of King Henry the First, we read thus; Sciatis me fecisse Milonem de Gloucest. Comitem de Hereford, & dedisse ei motam Herefordiæ cum toto castello, &c. Hence Burgmote, curia vel conventus burgi; Swainmote, curia vel conventus ministrorum, scil forestæ, &c. From this also we draw our word mote and moot, to plead. The Scots say, to mute, as the Mute hill at Scone, i. e. Mons placiti de Scona. See Folc-mote.

The word moot was usually applied to that arguing of cases used by young students in the Inns of Court and Chancery. In the charter of peace between King Stephen and Duke Henry, afterwards King, it is taken to signify a fortress, as Turris de London, & mota de Windsor, the tower of London, and fortress of Windsor. Mote also signifies a standing pool of water to keep fish in.

It likewise signifies a great ditch encompassing a castle or dwelling-house. Chart. Antiq

MOTION IN COURT, An occasional application to the Court, by the parties or their counsel, in order to obtain some Rule or Order of Court, which becomes necessary in the progress of a cause. 3 Comm. 304.

A Motion is either for a Rule absolute in the first instance, which is sometimes moved for in open Court; and sometimes merely drawn up on a Motion-paper signed by Counsel, and delivered to the Clerk of the Rules; or it is only for a Rule to show cause, or, as it is commonly called, A Rule nisi, i. e. unless cause be shown to the contrary; which is afterwards moved to be made absolute. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

In stating the different Motions, in the following extract from Tidd's Practice, the letter A, is used to denote that the rule is absolute, in the first instance—A. S. that it is drawn up absolute on the mere signature of counsel; (these are called Motions of Course)—A. C. that it cannot be had without consent—N. that in the first instance it is only a rule Nisi.

Motions are of a civil or criminal nature. Of the latter kind is the Motion for an attachment, which may be moved for on account of contemptuous words, spoken of the Court, A; or its process, N; for a rescue, N; or disobedience to a subpœna, or other process, N; against a Sheriff, for not returning the writ, or bringing in the body, A; against an attorney, for not performing his undertaking, or otherwise misbehaving himself, N.; against other persons, for non-payment of costs, on the Master's Allocatur, A; for the non-payment of money generally, N; or not performing an award, &c. N.

An attachment for misbehaviour is commonly preceded by a Motion for a Rule to answer the matters of the Affidavit; and the party being taken on the attachment, either remains in custody or puts in bail before a Judge, (for he is not bailable before the Sheriff,) to answer interrogatories to be exhibited against him; which interrogatories must be signed by counsel; and if judgment be not given the same term, the name of the cause should be inserted in the list of Motions appointed to come on peremptorily in the ensuing term. R. M. 34 Geo. 3; 5 T. Rep. 474; Tidd's Pract. K. B.

Motions of a civil nature are made on behalf of the plaintiff or of the defendant. On behalf of the Plaintiff, they are either, 1 for something to be done in the common and ordinary course of the suit, as to increase issues, A; for a concilium, A. S; or judgment on demurrer, special verdict, or writ of error, A; for leave to enter up judgment on an old warrant of attorney, A; or nunc pro tunc, N; to enter up judgment and take out execution after an award, where a verdict has been taken for the plaintiff's security, N; or after a verdict for the plaintiff against one of several underwriters, where the rest have agreed to be bound by it, N; or to take out execution pending a writ of Error, N; to amend the pleadings or other proceedings in the course of a suit, N; or to set aside a judgment of Non pros, or of Non-suit; N; or a verdict, or inquisition, N: Or, 2. they are for something to be done out of the common and ordinary course of the suit; as for the defendant to abide by his plea, A. S; to refer it to the Master to assess the damages, without a writ of inquiry, N; for the execution of a writ of inquiry before a Judge, N; or to have a good Jury upon the execution of such writ, A; for a trial at bar, or in an adjoining county, N; for a view in trespass, A. S; in other cases, N; or special jury, A S; to have witnesses examined on interrogatories, A. C; or for leave to inspect and take copies of books, court-rolls, &c. or to have them produced at the trial, N.

On behalf of the Defendant motions may be considered as they arise and succeed one another in the course of the suit. Before declaration: they are, to quash the writ, N; justify bail, A; reverse an outlawry, N; or, after several rules for time to declare, that the plaintiff declare peremptorily, A.—After declaration: they are, to set aside an interlocutory judgment for irregularity; as being signed contrary to good faith, or upon an affidavit of merits, N; to set aside or stay proceedings in actions upon bail-bonds or in other actions if irregular or unfounded, N; and if the defendant is a prisoner to discharge him out of custody upon common bail, N; or if the proceedings are regular, to stay them upon terms, N; to compound penal actions, A. C; change the venue, A; consolidate actions, N; or strike out superfluous counts, N; for time to plead or reply, &c. under special circumstances, N; to plead several matters, or pay money into Court, A. S; to withdraw the general issue and plead it de novo, with a notice of set-off; or upon paying money into Court, to add or withdraw special pleas, all these are generally, A; but sometimes, N; to pay the issue money into Court in a qui tam action, N; (see Penal Action;) to put off a trial if the defendant is not ready, N; or if the plaintiff will not proceed to trial, A; or inquiry, A; or for judgment as in case of a nonsuit, N; in arrest of judgment, N; or for a suggestion after verdict to entitle the defendant to costs, N; to set aside an execution and discharge the defendant, or restore to him the money levied, or to retain it in the Sheriff's hands, N.

The defendant also as well as the plaintiff may move for a concilium, A. S, or judgment, A, on a demurrer, special verdict, or writ of error: to amend, N; for a trial at bar, or in an adjoining county, N; for a view or special jury, A. S; to have witnesses examined on interrogatories, A. C; or for leave to inspect and take copies of books, court-rolls, &c. or have them produced at the trial, N; to set aside a verdict or inquisition, N: either party may likewise move to make a Judge's order, submission to arbitration, or order of Nisi prius, a Rule of Court, A; to enlarge the time for making an award, A. C; to set aside an award or Judge's order, N; for the Master to make his report, A; or review his taxation, N.

There are some Motions peculiar to the action of Ejectment, such as for judgment against the casual ejector; generally A. S; but where there is any thing peculiar in the service of the declaration, it should be mentioned to the Court; and where the affidavit of service is defective, they will give leave to file a supplemental one;—that service on the tenant's son, daughter, &c. may be deemed good service, N; for the landlord to be admitted defendant instead of the tenant, A. S; or for leave to take out execution in such case against the casual ejector after the landlord has failed in his defence, N. See this Dictionary, title Ejectment.

There are also other motions not necessarily connected with any action; as to set aside an annuity, and deliver up the securities to be cancelled, &c. N. See Tidd's Pract. K. B.

An attachment for non-payment of costs, and against the Sheriff for not returning the writ, may be moved for the last day of term. 1 Burr. 651 : 5 Burr. 2686. But a Motion to answer the matters of an affidavit cannot be made on that day. 4 Burr. 2502; or any Motion which would operate as a stay of proceedings, unless it appear to the Court that, under the circumstances, it could not have been made earlier.

A Motion is in general accompanied with an affidavit, and sometimes preceded by a notice. The affidavit should be properly intitled, and contain a full statement of all the circumstances necessary to support the application; and the rather as it is a rule not to receive any supplementary affidavit on shewing cause. 2 Term Rep. 644. Motions and affidavits for attachments in civil suits, are proceedings on the civil side of the Court, until the attachments issue, and are to be intitled with the names of the parties. 3 Term Rep. 253. But as soon as the attachments issue, the proceedings are on the Crown side; and from that time the King is to be named as the prosecutor. 3 Term Rep. 133, 253. And where a submission to an award is made a Rule of Court, under the statute, there being no action, the affidavits on which to apply for an attachment for disobeying the award, need not be intitled in any cause, but the affidavit in answer must. 3 Term Rep. 601. An affidavit sworn before the attorney in the cause cannot be read, except for the purpose of holding the defendant to special bail. Tidd. And where an affidavit is made before a commissioner by a person who from his signature appears to be illiterate, the commissioner taking the affidavit shall certify, or state in the jurat, that it was read in his presence, to the party making the same, who seemed perfectly to understand it, and wrote his signature in the presence of the commissioner. R. E 31 G 3. 4 Term Rep. 284. The notice of Motion though seldom necessary, is frequently given, in order to save time and expence; by affording the adverse party an opportunity of shewing cause in the first instance, or by inducing the Court to disallow the costs of proceedings taken after the notice, and before the Motion. The stat. 14 Geo 2. c. 17, requires notice of Motion, for judgment as in case of a nonsuit; but in the Court of K. B. the Rule to shew cause is deemed a sufficient notice. Lofft. 65. But it is otherwise in C. B. See 1 H. Black. 527.

The Rule to shew cause is drawn up for a particular day in term, previous to which it should be duly served. To bring a party into contempt, a copy of the Rule must be personally served, and the original at the same time shewed to him; in other cases the same degree of strictness is not required in the service of the Rule, but it is sufficient, without shewing the original, to leave a copy of it with any person representing the party, at his dwelling house or place of abode. 3 Term Rep. 351. And when a Rule is obtained to set aside proceedings for irregularity, and to stay proceedings in the mean time, the proceedings are suspended for all purposes till the Rule is discharged. 4 Term Rep. 176.

On the day appointed for that purpose, the Counsel for the party, called upon by the Rule, may shew cause against it, either upon or without an affidavit as circumstances require. But an office-copy must be first taken of the Rule, and of the affidavit upon which it was granted; or otherwise Counsel cannot be heard. Previous to shewing cause, it is usual to deliver over the affidavit against the Rule to the Counsel for the Rule, who has a right to make any objection appearing on the face of it; and if a doubt arises, upon the statement of the facts contained in the affidavit, it is inspected by the Judges, or read by the officer of the Court: when an affidavit has been made use of, but not before, it may be filed, in order that, if it be not true, the party may be indicted for perjury. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

If cause be not shewn on the day appointed, the Counsel for the party obtaining the Rule may move, the next day, to make it absolute; which is done as a matter of course, if no cause be shewn, on an affidavit of service. But it frequently stands over by consent of the parties, or for the accommodation of Counsel, till a subsequent day, when the Counsel on either side may bring it on, by moving to make the Rule absolute, or to discharge it; though if not brought on, or enlarged during the same term, it falls to the ground. When the Counsel for the party obtaining the Rule is not ready to support it, he may move to enlarge the Rule till a future day in the same or next term, which is pretty much of course, when it is in his own delay; but otherwise the Court will not enlarge the Rule without consent, or some evident necessity; and they will never enlarge the plaintiff's Rule, when it would have the effect of continuing the defendant in custody. In like manner, when the Counsel for the party called upon by the Rule is not prepared to shew cause against it, he may apply to enlarge the Rule till a future day, which is a matter of right if the Rule was not served in time, so as to give the party an opportunity of answering it; but otherwise the Court may impose upon him what terms they think proper, and they commonly require him to file his affidavits, so as to give the adverse party an opportunity of inspecting them, previous to the day appointed for shewing cause. In cases of urgency, the Court, towards the end of the term, will sometimes enlarge the Rule till a day in the vacation, when it is to be brought on before a Judge at Chambers. Tidd's Pract. K. B.

On shewing cause against the Rule, the Court either make it absolute, or discharge it, and that either with or without the costs of the application; or such costs are directed to abide the event of the suit; according to the discretion of the Court under all the circumstances of the case.

In hearing Motions, the course formerly was, to begin every day with the senior Counsel within the bar, and then to call to the next senior, in order, and so on, as long as it was convenient to the Court to sit, and to proceed again in the same manner, upon the next and every subsequent day, although the bar had not been half, or perhaps a quarter gone through, upon any one of the former days: so that the juniors were very often obliged to attend in vain, without being able to bring on their Motions for many successive days. 1 Burr. 57. This practice bearing hard upon junior Counsel, Lord Mansfield introduced a different Rule, which has ever since been adhered to; of going quite through the bar, even to the youngest Counsel, before he would begin again with the seniors; even though it should happen to take up two or more days, before all the Motions, which were ready at the bar upon the first day, could be heard. 1 Burr. 57.

Particular

Particular days are appointed for certain business, as Tuesday and Friday, which are called paper days, for going through the paper of causes, wherein conciliums have been moved for, on the civil-side; and Wednesday and Saturday for transacting business on the Crown-side. All Motions or Rules, in matters of length or consequence, are appointed for particular days, and called on first. Special causes are to be argued in the same order they are entered in the paper, and not to be entered anew or put off, without a special application to the Court; and all enlarged rules must come on, peremptorily during the first week of the term. If a Rule be made absolute, or discharged, by surprise, the Court will open it; and if by mistake it be drawn up wrong, they will order it to be set right. See Tidd's Pract. K. B. and the various authorities there cited.

Monday is a special day for Motions in B. R. by the ancient course; but they are made upon any day, as the business of the Court will permit. 2 Lil. 208, 210.

In the Chancery, during term, every Thursday is a day for sealing, and Motions; and Tuesdays and Saturdays are days for Motions, as are the first and last days of the term: in vacation, only seal days appointed by the Lord Chancellor, are days of Motion.

After Motion in arrest of judgment, no Motion shall be for a new trial; but after Motion for a new trial, one may move in arrest of judgment. 2 Salk. 647. See titles Trial; Arrest of Judgment.

In B. R. one ought not to move the Court for a Rule for a thing to be done, which by the common Rules of practice may be done without moving the Court: nor shall the Court be moved for doing what is against the practice of the Court: one ought not to move for several things in one Motion; and where a Motion hath been denied, the same matter may not be moved again by another Counsel, without acquainting the Court thereof, and having their leave for the same. Every person who makes a solemn argument at the bar is allowed by the Court a Motion for his argument. 2 Lil. Abr. 209, 210. But Counsel cannot move for his argument in a matter of course in the paper, in B. R. 1 Wils. 76.

If there be divers Rules of Court made in a cause, and the party intends to move thereon, he must produce the Rule last made in the cause, and move upon that: but it is necessary to have all the Rules and copies of the affidavits, to satisfy the Court how the cause hath been proceeded in, and how it stands in Court; though the last Rule is the most material: and where a Motion is made to set aside a Rule grounded on an affidavit, a copy of the affidavit must be produced, that the Court may be informed upon what grounds the Rule was made, and judge whether there be cause shewn upon the Motion sufficient to set aside the Rule. Pasch. 13 Car. B. R. Hil. 1649.

If any thing be moved to the Court upon a record, the record is to be in Court, or the Court will make no Rule upon such Motion. Hil. 22 Car. B. R.

For the reasons of the several Motions as arising from the progress of a cause through the Courts from the commencement of the action to execution; which Motions form the greatest part of the visible practice of Courts of Law; See Eunomus. Dial. 2. § 26—40: and this Dictionary, title Practice. See also Vin. Abr. title Motion.

MOVEABLES. All sorts of things moveable are included under the name of things personal, or are personal estate, i. e. all those things which may attend a man's person wherever he goes. See 2 Comm. c. 24.

MULCT, Mulcta.] A fine of money set upon one, for some fault or misdemeanor; fines laid on ships or goods by a company of trade, to raise money for the maintenance of consuls, &c. are called Mulcts. Merch. Dict.

MULIER, As used in our law, seems to be a word corrupted from melior, or the Fr. meilleur; and signifies the lawful issue, born in wedlock, though begotten before, preferred before an elder brother born out of matrimony. See stat. 9 Hen. 6. c. 11: Smith's Repub. Angl. lib. 3. c. 6. But by Glanvil, lawful issue are said to be Mulier, not from melior, but because begotten è muliere, and not ex concubinâ; for he calls such issue filios mulieratos, opposing them to bastards. Glanv. lib. 7. c. 1. It appears to be thus used in Scotland also; Skene saying, mulieratus filius is a lawful son, begotten of a lawful wife.

If a man hath a son by a woman before marriage, which is a bastard and unlawful, and after he marries the mother of the bastard, and they have another son, this second son is Mulier and lawful, and shall be heir to his father, but the other cannot be heir to any man; and they are distinguished in our old books with this addition, Bastard eigné, and Mulier puisné. Co. Lit. 170, 243.

Where a man has issue by a woman, if he afterwards marries her, the issue is Mulier by the civil law; though not by the laws of England, 2 Inst. 99: 5 Rep. 416. Of ancient time, Mulier was taken for a wife, as it is commonly used for a woman, particularly one not a maid; and sometimes for a widow; but it has been held, that a virgin is included under the name Mulier. See Co. Lit. 170, 243: 2 Inst. 434: this Dictionary, title Bastard: and 2 Comm. 248.

MULNEDA, A place to build a water-mill. Mon. ii. p. 284.

MULTÆ, or MULTURA EPISCOPI, Is derived from the Latin word mulcta, for that it was a fine given to the King, that the Bishop might have power to —ake his last will and testament, and to have the pro- te of other men's, and the granting administrations. Inst. 491.

MULTIPLICATION OF GOLD AND SILVER, Was prohibited and declared to be felony by stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 4. Which statute was made on a presumption that persons skilful in chemistry, could multiply or augment augment these metals, by changing other metals into gold or silver; and the endeavours of some persons in making use of extraordinary methods for the producing of gold and silver, and finding out the philosopher's stone, were found to be so prejudicial to the public, from the lavish waste of many valuable materials, and the ruin of many families by such useless expences, that they occasioned the above statute. But the restraint thereby having no other effect, from the unaccountable vanity of those who fancied those attempts practicable, than to send them beyond sea to try their experiments with impunity in other countries, the stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 4. was at last repealed by stat. 1 W. & M. c. 30. See Dyer 88: 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 18. § 12.

This repeal, it is said, was obtained by the learned and celebrated Robert Boyle; who was himself an excellent chemist, and in some measure a favourer of what is called Alchymy, or the art of obtaining the Philosopher's Stone, for the transmutation of metals.

MULTITUDE, multitudo.] According to some authors must be ten persons or more: but Sir Edw. Coke says, he could never find it restrained by the Common law to any certain number. Co. Lit. 257. See title Riot.

MULTO FORTIORI, or A MINORI AD MAJUS, Is an argument often used by Littleton, and is framed thus: "If it be so in a feoffment passing a new right, much more it is for the restitution of an ancient right, &c." See Co. Lit. 253. See 260, a.

MULTONES AURI, Pieces of gold money imprest with an Agnus Dei, a sheep or lamb on the one side, and from that figure called Multones. This coin was more common in France, and sometimes current in England, as appears by a patent, 33 Ed. 1. cited by Spelman; though he had not then considered the meaning of it. Cowel.

MULTURE, molitura vel multura.] The toll that the miller takes for grinding corn. Cowel.

MUM, A strong liquor brewed from wheat, oats, and ground beans.—It is one of the articles subject to the regulation of the Excise-laws. See that title; and stat. 27 Geo. 3. c. 13. imposing the duty on Mum made or imported. Brunswick is the most celebrated place for brewing this liquor.

MUMMING, from Teuton. Mummen, to mimick.] Antic diversions in the Christmas holidays, to get money and good cheer. Mummers to be imprisoned, stat. 3 Hen. 8. c. 9.

MUNDBRECH, from Sax. mund, munitio, defensio, & brice, fractio.] This is mentioned among divers crimes, as pacis fractio, læsio majestatis, &c. Spelm Gloss. Some would have Mundbrech to signify an infringement of privilege; though of later times it is expounded clausarum fractionem, a breach of mounds, by which name ditches and fences are called in many parts of England; and we say, when lands are fenced in and hedged, that they are mounded. See the next article.

MUNDE, Peace; hence Mundebrece a breach of it. Leg. H. 1. c. 37.

MUNDEBURDE, Mundeburdum, from Sax. mund, i. e. tutela, and bord or borh, i e. fidejussor. A receiving into favour and protection. Cowel.

MUNDICK; See Metal.

MUNICIPAL LAW, Is defined by Blackstone, (1 Comm. Introd.) "A rule of civil conduct prescribed by the Supreme Power in a State;" and for this definition he gives his reasons at large, to which we refer the reader. See also this Dictionary, title Law.

MUNIMENT-HOUSE, Munimen.] In cathedral and collegiate churches, castles, colleges, or public buildings, is a house or little room of strength; purposely made for keeping the seal, evidences, deeds, charters, writings, &c. of such church, college, &c. Such evidences of title to estates, whether of public bodies or private persons, being called Muniments, (corruptly miniments,) from munio, to defend; because inheritances and possessions are defended by them. 3 Inst. 170: Law Terms: Stats. 5 R. 2. c. 8: 15 H. 6. c. 37.

MURAGE, Muragium.] A reasonable toll, to be taken of every cart and horse coming laden through a city or town, for the building or repairing the public walls thereof, due either by grant or prescription; it seems to be a liberty granted to a town by the King for the collecting of money towards walling the same. See stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 30: 2 Inst. 222. The service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle, was called murorum operatio; and when this personal duty was commuted into money, the tax so gathered was called Murage. Paroch. Antiq. 114. In the city of Chester, there are two ancient officers called Murengers; being two of the principal aldermen, yearly chosen to see the walls kept in good repair; for the maintenance of which they receive certain tolls and customs.

MURORUM OPERATIO, The service of work and labour done by inhabitants and adjoining tenants in building or repairing the walls of a city or castle. From which duty some were exempted by special privilege. So King Henry II. granted to the tenants within the honour of Wallingford, Ut quieti sint de operationibus castellorum & murorum. Paroch. Antiq. 114. When this personal duty was commuted into money, the tax so gathered was called Murage. Cowel. See Murage.

Oxon.* was held —Per serjeantiam mutandi unum aspericum domini regis, &c. Paroch. Antiq 560. The Mews (Muta Regia) near Charing Cross, London, now the King's stables, was formerly the falconry or place for the King's hawks.

MUTATORIUS, Change of apparel. Mat. Par. Ann. 1107.

MUTATUS ACCIPITER, A mewed hawk. Cowel.

MUTE, [Mutus.] One dumb, who cannot or refuses to speak. And by our law a prisoner may stand Mute two ways;

1. When he speaks not at all; in which it shall be inquired whether he stand Mute out of malice, or by the act of God; and if by the latter, then the Judge ought to inquire whether he be the same person, and of all pleas which he might have pleaded in his defence, if he had not been Mute. 2. When the prisoner does not plead directly, or will not put himself upon the inquest, to be tried; and a person feigning himself mad, and refusing to answer, shall be taken as one who stands Mute. 2 Inst. H. P C. 226.

If a prisoner on his trial peremptorily challenge above the number of jurors allowed by law, this being an implied refusal of a legal trial, he shall be dealt with as one who stands Mute, and according to some opinions be hanged. H. P. C. 259: Kel. 36: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30.

It seems now clearly settled, that a prisoner thus perversely and obstinately offending, is, in high treason, ipso facto, attainted. 2 Hale 268: 4 Comm. c. 25. p. 325: c. 27. p. 354. And in felony the challenge shall be overruled. 2 Hale 376.

Regularly a prisoner is said to stand Mute, when being arraigned for treason, or felony, he either, 1. Makes no answer at all; or, 2. Answers foreign to the purpose, or with such matter as is not allowable, and will not answer otherwise: or, 3. Upon having pleaded not guilty, refuses to put himself upon the country. 2 Hal. P. C. 316. If he says nothing, the Court ought ex officio to impanel a Jury to inquire whether he stands obstinately Mute, or whether he be dumb ex visitatione Dei. If the latter appears to be the case, the Judges of the Court (who are to be of Counsel for the prisoner, and to see that he hath law and justice) shall proceed to the trial, and examine all points as if he pleaded not guilty. But whether judgment of death can be given against such a prisoner, who hath never pleaded, and can say nothing in arrest of judgment, is a point (says Blackstone) yet undetermined. See 2 Hal. P. C. 317: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 7.

If he be found to be obstinately Mute, (which a prisoner hath been held to be, that hath cut out his own tongue, ibid.) then if it be on an indictment of high treason, it hath long been clearly settled, that standing Mute is equivalent to a conviction, and he shall receive the same judgment and execution. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 9: 2 Hal. P. C. [illegible]. And as in this the highest crime, so in the lowest species of felony, viz. in petit larceny, and in all misdemesnors, standing Mute hath always been equivalent to conviction. But upon appeals or indictments for other felonies, or petit treason, the prisoner was not by the antient law looked upon as convicted, so as to receive judgment for the felony, but should for his obstinacy have received the terrible sentence of penance, or peine (probably a corrupted abbreviation of prisone) forte et dure.

Before this was pronounced the prisoner had not only trina admonitio, but also a respite of a few hours, and the sentence was distinctly read to him, that he might know his danger; and after all, if he continued obstinate, and his offence was clergyable, he had the benefit of his clergy allowed; even though he was too stubborn to pray it. 2 Hal. P. C. 320, 321: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 24. Thus tender was the law of inflicting this dreadful punishment; but if no other means could prevail, and the prisoner (when charged with a capital felony) continued stubbornly Mute, the judgment was then given against him without any distinction of sex or degree. A judgment which was purposely ordained to be exquisitely severe, that by that very means it might rarely be put in execution.

The rack or question, to extort a confession from criminals, is a practice of a different nature: this having been only used to compel a man to put himself upon his trial, that being a species of trial in itself. See title Torture.

The judgment of penance for standing Mute was as follows: that the prisoner be remanded to the prison from whence he came; and put into a low, dark chamber, and there be laid on his back, on the bare floor, naked, unless where decency forbids; that there be placed upon his body as great a weight of iron as he could bear, and more; that he have no sustenance, save only on the first day three morsels of the worst bread; and on the second day three draughts of standing water, that should be nearest to the prison door; and in this situation this should be alternately his daily diet, till he died, or (as anciently the judgment ran) till he answered. Britt. cc. 4, 22: Flet. lib. 1. c 34. § 33.

It hath been doubted whether this punishment subsisted at the Common Law, or was introduced in consequence of stat. West. 1. 3 E. 1. c. 12; which latter seems to be the better opinion. 2 Inst. 179: 2 Hal. P. C. 322: 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 13. Staundf. P C. 149: Barr. 82. For not a word of it is mentioned in Glanvil or Bracton, or in any antient author, case, or record (that hath yet been produced) previous to the reign of Edward I; but there are instances on record in the reign of Henry III. where persons accused of felony, and standing Mute, were tried in a particular manner, by two successive juries, and convicted; and it is asserted by the Judges in 8 Hen. 4, that by the Common Law, before the statute, standing Mute on an appeal, amounted to a conviction of the felony. This statute of Edward I. directs such persons "as will not put themselves upon inquests of felonies, before the Judges at the suit of the King, to be put into hard and strong prison (soient mys en la prisone forte et dure) as those which refuse to be at the Common Law of the land." And immediately after this statute, the form of the judgment appears in Fleta and Britton to have been only a very strait confinement in prison, with hardly any degree of sustenance; but no weight is directed to be laid upon the body, so as to hasten the death of the sufferer: and indeed any surcharge of punishment on persons adjudged to penance, so as to shorten their lives, is reckoned by Horne in the Mirror as a species of criminal homicide. Mirr. c. 1. § 9. It also clearly appears, by a record of 31 E. 3, that the prisoner might then possibly subsist for forty days under this lingering punishment. It seems, therefore, that the practice of loading him with weights, or as it was usually called, pressing him to death, was gradually introduced between 31 E. 3, and 8 Hen. 4, at which last period it first appears upon our books; being intended as a species of mercy to the delinquent, by delivering him the sooner from his torment; and hence it seems also that the duration of the penance was then first altered; and instead of continuing till he answered, it was directed to continue till he died, which must very soon happen under an enormous pressure. Yearb. 8 Hen. 4. 1, 2.

The uncertainty of its original, the doubts that were conceived of its legality, and the repugnance of its theory (for it rarely was carried into practice) to the humanity of the laws of England, all concurred to require a legislative abolition of this process, and a restitution of the ancient Common Law, whereby the standing Mute in felony, as well as in treason and in trespass, amounted to a confession of the charge. Or, if the corruption of the blood, and the consequent escheat in felony had been removed, the judgment of peine forte et dure might perhaps have still innocently remained, as a monument of the rapacity with which the tyrants of feodal antiquity hunted after escheats and forfeitures; since no one would ever have been tempted to undergo such a horrid alternative. For the law was, that by standing Mute, and suffering this heavy penance, the judgment, and of course the corruption of the blood and escheat of the lands were saved in felony, and petit treason, though not the forfeiture of the goods; and therefore this lingering punishment was probably introduced, in order to extort a plea, without which it was held that no judgment of death could be given, and so the lord lost his escheat. But in high treason, as standing Mute is equivalent to a conviction, the same judgment, the same corruption of blood, and the same forfeitures always attended it as in other cases of conviction. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 30. § 9. And now, to the honour of our laws, it is enacted by stat. 12 Geo. 3. c. 20, that every person who, being arraigned for felony or piracy, shall stand Mute or not answer directly to the offence, shall be convicted of the same; and the same judgment and execution (with all their consequences in every respect) shall be thereupon awarded, as if the person had been convicted by verdict or confession of the crime. Standing Mute, therefore, at present, in all cases, amounts to a constructive confession. Two instances have occurred, since the passing this statute, of persons who refused to plead, and who were in consequence condemned and executed; one at the Old Bailey for murder in 1778, the other for burglary at the summer assizes at Wells in 1792. See 4 Comm c. 25. p. 324—329. & n.

Although this subject is now become matter of curiosity rather than instruction, the following further particulars as to this terrible punishment, are preserved for the satisfaction of the inquiring student.

It is said by Sir Matth. Hale, that an appellee of felony standing Mute shall be executed, and not have judgment of penance; but the contrary hath been held by others. H. P. C. 226: S. P. C. 150: 2 Inst. 178: Kel. 37. One who stands Mute shall have the benefit of clergy, unless it be otherwise specially provided by some statute. And although it be enacted by stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9, that if any person shall be indicted of any offence, for which, by virtue of any former statute, he is excluded from the benefit of his clergy, if he had been thereof convicted by verdict or confession, if he stand Mute he shall not be admitted to the same; yet appeals, and offences excluded from the benefit of clergy, by subsequent statutes, seem not within that act and a statute taking away the benefit of clergy generally from those who are convicted of a crime, doth not take it away from those who stand Mute on an indictment or appeal. 2 Hawk. c. 30. But see the statutes 25 H. 8, c. 3, and 5 & 6 Ed. 3. c. 10; whereby it is enacted, that those who are indicted of offences for which the benefit of clergy is not to be allowed, shall not have their clergy if they stand Mute, &c. and this Dictionary, title Clergy, Benefit of.

Hawkins, in his description of the peine forte et dure, says; that the manner of inflicting this punishment may be best found from the books of entries and other law books; all of which generally agree, that the prisoner shall be remanded to the place from whence he came, and put into some low dark room, and there laid on his back without any manner of covering, except for the privy parts; and that as many weights be laid upon him as he can bear, and more, and that he shall have no manner of sustenance but the worst bread and water, and that he shall not eat the same day in which he drinks, nor drink the same day on which he eats, and that he shall so continue till he die. But that it is said that anciently the judgment was not, that he should continue until he should die, but until he should answer; and that he might save himself from the penance by putting himself upon his trial, which he cannot do at this day after judgment of penance once given. 2 Hawk. P. C. cap. 30. s. 16.

And there in the margin, the Serjeant, as to the remanding him to the place whence he came, cites H. P. C. 227: S. P. C. 150. (E): Keilw. 70. a: 4 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 18: 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17: Abr. Br. Corone 160: 2 Inst. 178: Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 17: 8 Ed. 4. 1. pl. 2.

And as to the words in some low dark room, he says, that this clause is omitted in Keilw. 70, a: 4 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 18. but is mentioned in all the other books above cited, but with this difference, that 14 Ed. 4. 11. pl. 17, says only he shall be put in a chamber, without adding that it shall be low or dark.

And as to the words there laid on his back, &c. he says, that in this all the books above cited seem to agree. And 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17, and S. P. C. 150. (E), and 2 Inst. 178, add, that he shall lie without any litter or other thing under him, and that one arm shall be drawn to one quarter of the room with a cord, and the other to another, and that his feet shall be used in the same manner. But that these clauses are wholly omitted in all the other books above cited, except H. P. C. which takes notice of the latter of them only. And Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 2. adds, that an hole shall be made for the head. And Keilw. 70, a. says, that the head shall not touch the earth: but none of the other mention either of these clauses.

And as to the words, that as many weights shall be laid upon him as he can bear, and more, &c. he says, that in this all the books above cited agree.

And

And as to the word bread, he says that 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17: S. P. C. 150. (E), and 2 Inst. 178, are, that he shall have three morsels of barley bread a day. Keilw. 70. a. that he shall have only rye bread, and Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 2. and 2 Hen. 4. 1. pl. 2, generally, that he shall have the worst bread.

And as to the word water, he says, that in 14 Ed. 4. 8. pl. 17: S. P. C. 150. (E): 2 Inst. 178, and 8 Hen. 4. 1. pl. 2, and Keilw. 70, a. are, that he shall have the water next the prison, so that it be not current; but Ra. Ent. 385. pl. 5, is general, that he shall have the worst water.

And as to the words, not eat the same day on which he drinks, nor drink the same day on which he eats, &c. he says, this is omitted in Keilw. 70, a. and in 8 Hen 4. 1, pl. 2.

And as to the words till he die, he says, this is omitted in none of the books above cited, except 14 Ed. 5. [4.] 11. and H. P. C 227. But that neither of these books give the whole judgment at large. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. c. 30.

NATIONAL DEBT, The money owing by Government, for which it pays interest, part to our own people, part to foreigners, and which forms our National Funds. After the Revolution, when our new connections with Europe introduced a new system of foreign politics, the expences of the nation, not only in settling the new establishment, but in maintaining long wars, as principals, on the continent, for the security of the Dutch barrier, reducing the French monarchy, settling the Spanish succession, supporting the house of Austria, maintaining the liberties of the Germanic body, and other purposes, increased to an unusual degree; insomuch that it was not thought adviseable to raise all the expences of any one year by taxes to be levied within that year, lest the unaccustomed weight of them should create murmurs among the people. It was therefore the policy of the times to anticipate the revenues of their posterity, by borrowing immense sums for the current service of the State, and to lay no more taxes upon the Subject than would suffice to pay the annual interest of the sums so borrowed; by this means converting the principal debt into a new species of property, transferable from one man to another, at any time and in any quantity. A system which seems to have had its original in the State of Florence, A. D. 1344, which Government then owed about 60,000*l.* sterling; and being unable to pay it, formed the principal into an aggregate sum, called metaphorically a Mount or Bank, the shares whereof were transferable like our stocks, with interest at 5*l. per cent.* the prices varying according to the exigencies of the State. This laid the foundation of what is called the National Debt: for a few long annuities created in the reign of Charles II. will hardly deserve that name. And the example then set has been so closely followed during the long wars in the reign of Queen Anne, and since, that the capital of the National Debt has by degrees increased to the wonderful sum of between 250 and 300 millions sterling, to pay the interest of which, and the charges for management, the extraordinary revenues of the kingdom (excepting only the land-tax and annual malt tax) are in the first place mortgaged, and made perpetual by parliament; redeemable, however, by the same authority that imposed them: which, if at any time it can pay off the capital, will abolish those taxes which are raised to discharge the interest. See 1 Comm. c. 8, and Mr. Christian's notes there; as to the policy and effect of this National Debt; a subject adapted more to the discussion of the Politician than the Law Student.

By stat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 31, the annual sum of one million was vested inalienably in Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt; in which act every possible precaution was taken, that could be devised, for preventing this fund from being diverted at any future time; and for carrying to the account of the Commissioners, for the purpose of the act, the interest of such stock as should be purchased, and such temporary annuities as should fall in.

Under the provisions of this statute, about ten millions of the capital of the National Debt had been purchased; and the annual sum applicable to the reduction of it was near one million and a half; previous to the war which commenced in 1793.

See the ſtat. 32 Geo. 3. c. 55, for rendering the said ſtat. 26 Geo. 3. c. 31, more effectual; and for providing for the diſcharging of any increaſe of the National Debt through new loans; and Stats 33 Geo. 3. c. 22: 34 Geo. 3. c. 48, for furthering the ſame purpoſes.

NAVIGATION-ACTS.

THOSE Statutes which have from time to time been made for the encouraging and increaſing of SHIPPING and NAVIGATION.

The following is a general view of the preſent ſtate and effect of the laws which the Legiſlature has ſeen fit to provide for this purpoſe; and is extracted and abridged from Reeves's Hiſtory of that branch of the law.

This ſyſtem is a ſeries of reſtrictions and prohibitions, and it tends to the eſtabliſhing of monopoly; but it is a plan of regulation which our anceſtors, who were more verſed in the practical philoſophy of life than the ſpeculative one of the cloſet, thought neceſſary for the welfare and ſafety of the kingdom. Reaſoning from the ſelf-preſervation of an individual to the ſelf-preſervation of a people, they conſidered the defence of this iſland from foreign invaſion, as the firſt law in national policy; and judging that the dominion of the land could not be preſerved without poſſeſſing that of the ſea, they made every effort to procure to the nation a maritime power of its own. They wiſhed that the merchants ſhould own as many ſhips, and employ as many native mariners as poſſible. To induce, and ſometimes to force them to this application of their capital, reſtrictions and prohibitions were deviſed. Theſe affected not only foreigners but but natives. The interests of commerce were often sacrificed to this object. Trade was considered principally as the means of promoting the employment of ships, and was encouraged chiefly as it conduced to the one great national object, the Naval strength of the Country.

This policy was pursued by those who came after them in directing the public councils; and in the last century, when many institutions of our ancestors fell a sacrifice to the rage of reformation, the wisdom of the Navigation System was respected; measures were even taken for rendering it more narrow and restrictive.

If the wisdom of any scheme of policy is to be measured by its effects and consequences, our Navigation System is entitled to the praise of having attained the end for which it was designed. Whether we regard the primary or inferior objects in this system, whether it is the increase of shipping, the extension of our foreign trade, or the strength of our navy, they have all advanced to a degree of consideration unexampled, and they owe that advancement to this system.

The increase of our trade and Naval strength has kept pace with that of our shipping and Navigation. We can reflect with pride, that our foreign trade, combined with our manufactures and domestic industry, enables us to raise annually sixteen millions of money with more ease, than four millions were raised during the reign of King William; and this upon a people, who, in their different ranks, enjoy more riches, more competency, and more comfort, than any people in Europe; and who are more industrious, because they are better protected by a Constitution, which has been progressively improving, both in the theory and practice of it, to the present time.

The first grand scheme for establishing English Shipping and Navigation on a footing of distinction, that had never been before attempted, was brought forward by the famous Act of Navigation, passed by the Usurpation-Parliament, 9th of October 1651. In this act we may see principles, which had been gradually developing in former laws, (and which had been enforced, repealed, or qualified, according as different opinions prevailed, and circumstances allowed,) now adopted and expanded to their full extent, in one system of regulation, that has subsisted, without any material change in its substance, to the present day.

One principal object of jealousy at the time of passing this act, was the immense carrying trade possessed by the Dutch; and the title of the act is suited to this leading idea, "Goods from foreign parts, by whom to be imported." Vide Scob. Acts, ann. 1651. c. 22. p. 132. The portion of the carrying trade with our colonies, which the Dutch had obtained, was the most serious grievance, and that which the nation bore with least patience.

The next main object was, the Fisheries, in which the rivalship and success of the Dutch had been long regarded as a national loss and disgrace.

From these two motives arose the scheme of Navigation, which the bold reformers of that day designed, for increasing the naval strength and consideration of this country. It may be said to have originated in jealousy, and to have caused the decline and diminution of a neighbouring nation; but it was founded in a policy, which the necessities and the advantages of an insular situation suggested; and the nation having, from supineness, or ignorance, permitted an active neighbour so long to take a share in the fisheries and foreign trade which belonged to us, thought itself justified in asserting, at length, its rights, and carrying them into full effect by this legislative act. And although this measure brought upon the country an obstinate and bloody war, and though the authority on which it was founded was unconstitutional and usurped, yet a plan so wise and solid was strenuously maintained by those who formed it; and it was not suffered to pass away with the transient government from which it derived its origin; the leading features of it were adopted by the lawful government, at the restoration of Ch. II. when a new act of Navigation was passed.

The present condition of our Marine (says Blackstone) is in a great measure owing to the salutary provisions of the statutes called the Navigation Acts; whereby the constant increase of English shipping and seamen was not only encouraged, but rendered unavoidably necessary. By stat. 5 R. 2. c. 3, in order to augment the navy of England, then greatly diminished, it was ordained, that none of the King's liege people should ship any merchandize out of or into the realm, but only in ships of the King's ligeance, on pain of forfeiture In the next year, by stat. 6 R. 2. c. 8, this wise provision was enervated, by only obliging the merchants to give English ships (if able and sufficient) the preference. But the most beneficial statute for the trade and commerce of these kingdoms is that Navigation Act, the rudiments of which were first framed in 1650, with a narrow partial view; being intended to mortify our own sugar islands, which were disaffected to the Parliament, and still held out for Charles II.; by stopping the gainful trade which they carried on with the Dutch; and at the same time to clip the wings of those our opulent and aspiring neighbours. This prohibited all ships of foreign nations from trading with any English plantations, without licence from the Council of State. In 1651, the prohibition was extended also to the mother country; and no goods were suffered to be imported into England, or any of its dependencies, in any other than English bottoms; or in the ships of that European nation, of which the merchandize imported was the genuine growth or manufacture. At the Restoration, the former provisions were continued by stat. 12 Charles II, c. 18, with this very material improvement, that the master and three-fourths of the mariners shall also be English subjects; under forfeiture of the ship, and all goods imported or exported. 1 Comm. c. 13. p. 417.

This STAT. 12 CAR. II. c. 18, is intitled "AN ACT FOR THE ENCOURAGING AND INCREASING OF SHIPPING AND NAVIGATION;" which pursues the policy and detail of the one made in 1651, using sometimes its very words. It has made however some alterations, and has, as already remarked, added considerably to the scope of the former act.

Having thus slightly traced the history of these celebrated laws, we shall proceed by endeavouring to separate such matter as is repealed or become obsolete; and to extract so much as constitutes the law of the present day; not indeed the whole particulars of it, but such an outline as may easily be filled up by a reference to the statutes, and Mr. Reeves's excellent digest of them on this subject. To assist the reader's mind, these principles are condensed into certain RULES and the EXCEPTIONS to them; and to each rule and exception are subjoined joined the grounds and reasons on which they are respectively founded.
